This obviously relevant and important question was objected to and was actually disallowed by the learned Judge. It must be remembered in this connection that in his evidence in the case P. W. No. 23 had implicated a number of accused and the case for the defence was that as a matter of fact the witnees had not mentioned any of these accused to the Police when questioned immediately after the occurrence. It was certainly relevant and important to elicit the fact whether as a matter of fact the witness had mentioned the names of any of the culprits to the Sub-Inspector at 1 o'clock that is to say, almost immediately after the occurrence. There was in my opinion no justification for exclusion of evidence of this kind; the question was overruled and the the evidence was excluded by the learned Judge. A somewhat similar question was put to P. W. No. 24, namely "Did you tell the Sub-Inspector that your brother paid Rs. 50 and your wife paid Rs. 15 ?' This was in connection with the allegation made in the evidence of the witness that these sums of money had been extorted from these people under threat of instant hurt. It is difficult to understand the reason for the objections to a question like this. Section 162, Criminal P. C., does not certainly stand in the way of such evidence being given. Apparently, by reason of the objection being sustained in reference to this question by the learned Judge, similar questions were not asked of the other witnesses for the prosecution. I may mention, however, in this connecution that similar questions appear to have been asked of P. W. No. 27 and disallowed : vide p. 107 of the printed record. It is apparent, therefore, that there has been a serious exclusion of evidence which was perfectly relevant and which might have materially helped the defence in throwing doubt on the veracity of important posecution witnesses.

I have said enough to show that the convictions of the appellants in this case cannot stand. There has been no proper trial ; the trial that was held was not according to law; there was a wrongful exclusion of material evidence by wrongful disallowance of relevant and material questions which must have prejudiced the appellants' defence and there was throughout in the charge a failure to put points which were favourable to the accused before the jury. The judgment itself apart from the record of the case, clearly establishes the fact that in this case there has been no attempt to consider the case as against each of the accused, and the jury must have been considerably confused and misled by the defects in the charge. I am therefore of opinion, that the appeal must to allowed. The convictions and the sentences on the appellants are hereby set aside and in view of the fact that the appellants have been in jail pending trial, some for six months or thereabouts and others for as long as ten months or so, it is in my opinion unnecessary to direct a retrial. Even otherwise I am of opinion after considering the evidence for myself that it is hopelessly lacking in quality and it is not likely that there would be a conviction if a retrial is held according to law. I therefore acquit the appellants and direct that the bail bonds executed by them be discharged.

Appeal No. 142 of 1938

Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), ss. 7, 9—S. 7 governs all provisions of Act—Court not exercising discretion under s. 8—S. 9, if comes into operation—Concluding sentence of s. 9, meaning explained.

The scheme of the Act is perfectly clear and shows that the provisions of s. 7 govern all the provisions of this Act, that is to say, in no case can a Court pass a decree for an amount of interest greater than the amount of the principal less any sum which has been paid or recovered on account of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit.

Section 9 only comes into operation where the Court exercises the discretion vested in it by s. 8. When the Court does not choose to re-open the transaction the provisions of s. 9 will never come into operation.

The concluding sentence of s. 9 means that where the Court has exercised the discretion under s. 8 and reduced the rate of interest to 9 per cent. thereby relieving the debtor of all liability in respect of interest in excess of 9 per cent. per annum simple in the case of a secured loan or in excess of 12 per cent. per annum simple in the case of an unsecured loan, and if the limit provided by s 7 has not been reached and there is still an excess out of the amount left in deposit with the transferee of the equity of redemption then the mortgagee shall be entitled to recover that excess in addition to the amount which he may otherwise be entitled to recover, but always within the limit fixed by s. 7.

A. from the original decree of the Sub-Judge, Arrah, dated May 30, 1938.

Messrs. Mahabir Prasad, and Tarkeshwar Nath, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Sarjoo Prasad, P. Misra, P. N. Gour and Ray Parasnath, for the Respondents.

Manohar Lall, J.—This is an appeal by the dfendants third party, who have purchased the equity of redemption from the mortgagors after the mortgage bond in suit, against the decision of the learned subordinate Judge of Arrah by which he decreed the suit instituted by the respondents to enforce their dues on the mortgage bond executed on May 27, 1923. The sole question for determination in this appeal is the extent to which the appellants can obtain relief under the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transations) Act, 1939. It is sufficient to state that themortgage bond in suit was executed on May 27, 1923 to secure a sum of Rs. 3,000, which carried interest at 12 per cent. per annum to be compounded annually. On June 21, 1930 the appellants obtained a transfer of the equity of redemption from the mortgagors for a sum of Rs. 13,000. Out of the consideration a sum of Rs. 6,685 was left with the appellants to pay off the amount of principal and interest which then fell due on the mortgage claculated at the bond rate. The appellants paid a sum of Rs. 1,261-10-0 in August 1931 and a further sum of Rs. 1,350 in June 1938 to the mortgagee, that is to say, a total of Rs. 2,611-10-0. The present suit was filed on April 30, 1937. The learned Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit for a sum of Rs. 11,748-9-0 with interest pendente lite up to the expiry of the period of grace at 12 per cent. simple per annum besides costs. It is not denied by the respondents and indeed it is obvious that the provisions of s. 7, Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, forbid the Court from passing a decree for an amount of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit which together with any amount already realised as interest through the Court or otherwise, is greater than the amount of loan advanced upon the mortgage bond in suit. Applying the rule laid down by this section, the plaintiffs would be entitled to a decree for a sum of Rs. 3,000 being the principal together with a sum of Rs. 388-6-0 on account of interest, they having already realized Rs 2,611-10-0 from the hands of the appellants.

But it was suggested relying upon s. 9 of the Act that as a sum of Rs. 1 073-6-0 was still in deposit with the appellants in respect of interest for the period preceding the date of transfer for payment to the mortgagee, the portion of this amount so left in deposit which is in excess of the amount which would have been payable as interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum simple for such period is available to the plaintiffs-mortgagees in addition to any amount which may be awarded to them. In my opinion, this argument is fallacious. The scheme of the Act is perfectly clear and shows that the provisions of s. 7 govern all the provisions of this Act, that is to say, in no case can a Court pass a decree for an amount of interest greater than the amount of the principal less any sum which has been paid or recovered on account of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit. Again if s. 9 is carefully read, it will be obvious that this only comes into operation where the Court exercises the discretion vested in it by s. 8. When the Court does not choose to re-open the transaction the provisions of s. 9 will never come into operation.

If the argument of the learned Advocate for the respondents were accepted it would lead to startling results; for instance, if the Court chose to re-open the transaction under s. 8 then notwithstanding that it relieved the debtor of all liability in respect of interest in excess of 9 per cent. per annum in the case of a secured loan as in the present case the amount due on account of interest may still be large (owing to the long time that elapsed between the date of the mortgage and the date of the institution of the suit) so that the debtor would still be liable to pay an amount of interest which would be greater than the principal so that instead of getting any relief the debtor is actually worse off by having to pay more than what would be recoverable by the mortgagee by the operation of s. 7. There is no difficulty in understanding the concluding sentence of s. 9 which was also relied upon on behalf of the respondents. These words, on a proper construction, mean that where the Court has exercised the discretion under s. 8 and reduced the rate of interest to 9 per cent. thereby relieving the debtor of all liability in respect of interest in excess of 9 per cent. per annum simple in the case of a secured loan or in excess of 12 per cent. per annum simple in the case of an unsecured loan, and if the limit provided by s. 7 has not been reached and there is still an excess out of the amount left in deposit with the transferee of the equity of redemption then the mortgagee shall be entitled to recover that excess in addition to the amount which he may otherwise be entitled to recover, but always within the limit fixed by s. 7.

The result is that the plaintiff will be entitled to a mortgage decree for the amount of Rs. 3,388-6-0. The plaintiff is also entitled to interest pendente lite on the sum of Rs. 3,000. In the circumstances I think it would be fair that the plaintiff should recover interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum simple as was decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge himself in the present case. The interest at the rate of 12 per cent. simple will run pendente lite, and during the period of grace which is fixed at two months from to day. The decretal amount will carry interest at 6 per cent., thereafter till the date of realization. As regards costs, the plaintiff will be entitled to the amount of court fee which he has paid upon his plaint but the other costs of the Court below will be calculated on the amount to which the plaintiff is now being held entitled. As regards the costs of the appeal, the appellant has succeeded in getting the decree reduced by about Rs. 7,000 In these circumstances the appellant will be entitled to costs in proportion to his success in this Court. Let a usual mortgage decree be prepared in the terms indicated above.

Harries, C. J.—I agree.

LIZZIE JANE LOBO—RESPONDENT

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 7, 18, 19—Jurisdiction—Parties belonging to Mangalore, married there and husband having house of his own at that place —Husband in service at Rangoon—Husband and wife last residing at Mangalore when husband was on leave—Husband having no house or flat in Rangoon during this period—On husband's departure to Rangoon wife staying behind and presenting petition under ss 7, 18, 19 in Mangalore—Mangalore Court held had jurisdiction to entertain it.

Where there is a residence, it is possible to regard a person as residing there though he is not actually present in the flesh at that place. But where there is no place of residence, this fiction is not available, and the person must be deemed to be residing in the place where he actually lives.

The parties were married at Mangalore to which place they belonged and the husband had a house of his own at that place. The husband was, however, in service in Rangoon and the parties resided there for some years. The wife presented an application under ss. 7, 18, 19 of the Divorce Act at Mangalore on the ground that the parties last resided there when the husband was on leave. The husband had no house of his own or a rented house or flat in Rangoon during this period and the evidence showed that he had wound up the establishment at Rangoon before he left that place. On the expiry of the leave the husband went to Rangoon and the wife remained behind at Mangalore:

Held, that during the period of leave when the husband was living with his wife in Mangalore in his own house, he had no place in Rangoon which he could call his residence. Merely because he had a lien, on his post during his leave, he could not be regarded as a resident of Rangoon even during the time when he was spending his leave at Mangalore with his wife in his own house. The Court at Mangalore had, therefore, jurisdiction to entertain the application.

C. R. P. under ss. 115 of Act V of 1908 and 224 of the Govt. of India Act praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of South Kanara dated July 6, 1939, and made in O. P. No. 55 of 1938.

Messrs. E. Antony Lobo and A. Viswanathna, for the Petitioner.

Mr. G. A. Pais, for the Respondent.

Order.—This petition raises a question of jurisdiction, namely whether the District Court of South Kanara had jurisdiction to entertain the application presented to it by the respondent in the present petition under ss. 7, 18 and 19 of the Indian Divorce Act for a declaration that the marriage of the petitioner with the respondent is null and void and for maintenance, etc. The petition was by the wife against her husband both of them are natives of South Kanara and as would appear from the entry in the marriage register relating to their marriage in 1932, both are parishioners of the same parish in Mangalore. It appears however from the evidence that the respondent, i. e., the husband, has been employed for many years in the Telegraph department in Burma and has been residing most of the time at Rangoon. The petition was however put in, in 1938, in the District Court of South Kanara on the ground that both the parties had last resided together at Mangalore in South Kanara in the respondent's own house at Jeppu. This fact, namely, that the husband and the wife lived together from at least February 1938 to the beginning of April 1938, in the respondent's house at Jeppu is not denied, and it is further clear that this was the period during which the two last resided together, because, thereafter the husband went away to Rangoon and the wife remained behind at Mangalore till the petition was filed in July 1938. The learned District Judge after taking evidence was satisfied that the husband and the wife did last reside together in Mangalore till the respondent left Mangalore for Rangoon on April 5, 1938, and that therefore he had jurisdiction to entertain and deal with the application.

The only question that is argued in this petition is that the finding of the District Judge is wrong on the admitted facts of the case. As observed already the admitted facts of the case show that the parties not only belong to Mangalore but were married in Mangalore and were living in Mangalore on more than one occasion. They lived together on two occasions after the marriage in Mangalore, once in 1934, and a second time during the end of 1937 till April 1938, and on the latter occassion they lived together in the respondent's own house at Jeppu. A number of rulings have been quoted but it is not possible to say that the facts of the present case are clearly covered by any one of them. While it is obvious that a person who has no fixed residence elsewhere can be regarded as residing in any place in which he is actually found, nevertheless, where there is a fixed place of residence, a temporary sojourn in another place for a few days would not make him a resident of that place and give jurisdiction to the Court having jurisdiction over that place to entertain application under the Act. In the present case, however, it is not established that the present petitioner (i. e., the husband) had a fixed residence in Rangoon at the time when he was actually living together with his wife in Mangalore from February 1938 to April 1938. It is not established that he had any house of his own or a rented house or flat in Rangoon during this period. In fact, the evidence contained in his own letter to his wife would show that he had wound up the establishment and left his "Chokra" at the house of a friend and perhaps a few belongings also and it is clear that even for some time before he actually left Rangoon, he was getting his food from outside. It would seem therefore that during this period when he was living with his wife in Mangalore in his own house, he had no place in Rangoon which he could call his residence. In these circumstances, can it be said that merely because he had a lien, so to say, on his post in the Telegraph Office during his leave, he must be regarded as a resident of Rangoon even during the time when he was spending his leave at Mangalore with his wife in his own house. I am of opinion that the answer to this must be in the negative. It is possible to regard a person as residing in a place where he is physically not present when he has got a permanent place of residence, but where he has no permanent palce of residence or any place of residence which he can call his own available to him at all time, it is impossible to adopt the idea of fictional residence at a place where he is not. In other words, where there is a residence, it is possible to regard a person as residing there though he is not actually present in the flesh at that place. But where there is no place of residence, this fiction is not available, and the person must be deemed to be residing in the place where he actually lives. It is impossible to allow the contention that during this particular period the respondent did not reside anywhere at all. He actually lived in Mangalore during this period and this was the period during which the couple lived together for the last time. Unless it is shown that the respondent must be deemed to have resided in a different place in the eye of the law, the actual facts established in the case—and in fact admitted—are more than sufficient to show that the couple resided together in Mangalore for the last time during the period in question. As observed already, the petitioner has failed to show that during this period he could be reasonably regarded as having resided in Rangoon or in any place other than Mangalore. In the view I have taken, it is unnecessary to deal with the different states of facts which arose in the various cases that were quoted to me. The only principle that I can discover from the decisions is that a person cannot be said to reside at a place where he spent only a day or two when he has got a fixed place of residence elsewhere; but where a person has no fixed place of residence, the place where he actually lives must be taken to be a place where he resides. This general principle which can be gathered from the case that were quoted to me is sufficient to cover the present case because it has not been shown that, during the period that the couple lived together at Mangalore in the petitioner's own house for the last time, the petitioner can be regarded as having resided elsewhere.

The petition therefore fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Master and servant—Employment of servant on basis of special contract—Pension rules subsequently framed by employer—Rules, when can be imported into contract—Pension, when cannot be claimed as of right.

Where a person has been employed on the basis of a special contract the provisions of the pension rules, framed by the employer subsequently cannot be imported into it unless there is any indication in the contract itself that the rules were to be considered as incorporated in the contract.

In the absence of a contract between the employer and the employee, the employee cannot as of right claim the pension for past services. Nor can the pension which is granted as a matter of grace be claimed as of right.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. C. Mahajan, Shamsher Bahadur and Raj Narain, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff Amir Singh was employed as treasurer by the defendant, National Bank of India After serving for about 25 years, he was granted a pension of Rs. 217 per mensem, but subsequently it appears that the Bank suffered a loss of about Rs. 77,500 as a result of the action of a firm of the joint Hindu family to which the plaintiff belonged. The defendant Bank thereupon stopped the pension. The plaintiff therefore instituted the present suit for recovery os Rs. 1,953 as arrears of pension for nine months. The main issue in the case was whether the plaintiff was entitled to pension as of right or the pension was granted to him as a matter of grace. The Courts below have found the issue against the plaintiff and dismissed his suit. From this decision the plaintiff has preferred a second appeal.

It has been found by the learned District Judge that the contract on the basis of which the plaintiff was employed as a treasurer did not contain any provision for the grant of a pension to him on his retirement. Learned Counsel for the appellant has not shown that this finding of the learned District Judge is wrong. Not only the original contract between the parties of the year 1906 did not contain any provision for the grant of a pension to the plaintiff, but even the subsequent contracts between the parties right up to the year 1928 did not contain any such provision. It has not been shown that any rules for the grant of pension even existed in the year 1906 when the plaintiff was first employed as a treasurer. It is alleged that rules for the grant of pension were framed in the year 1920 and as these rules govern the Indian staff, the plaintiff should be held to be entitled to pension on the basis of these rules. The rules themselves however provide that they will not affect any agreement between the Bank and the employees, if any. In the present instance the plaintiff had been employed on the basis of a special contract and therefore the provisions of the rules cannot be imported into it unless there is any indication in the contract itself that the rules were to be considered as incorporated in the contract. In none of the contracts is there any indication that the rules as regards pension were to be considered as part of the contracts relating to the employment of the plaintiff. I therefore see no reason to differ from the finding of the learned District Judge that the grant of pension was not a part of the contract on the basis of which the plaintiff was employed.

The next contention of the learned Counsel was that the Bank having granted a pension to the plaintiff was not competent to withdraw it subsequently. It was contended that past services were a good consideration for the grant of pension under the Indian Law. There seems to me to be no force in this contention although past services may form a good consideration for a contract under the Conract Act. In the present instance, the past services had been remunerated by the grant of salary and commission to the plaintiff and there was therefore no question of compensating the plaintiff for past services. The pension appears to have been granted to the plaintiff as a matter of grace and the application made by the plaintiff for the grant of pension also shows that he was cognisant of the fact. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

C. A. against an order of the Additional District Judge, dated June 4, 1940

Sh. Allah Bakhsh, for the Appellant.

Sh. Mohd. Shafi, for the Respondent (Vendee).

Judgment.—Sardar Mohd. Ali Jan brought a suit for pre-emption of a house situated in Peshawar City on payment of Rs. 2,800. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge who heard the suit dismissed it on the ground that the plaintiff was a minor and had sued without a next friend. He, however, came to the decision on all the issues amongst which are the following:

No. 4. Was the price Rs. 3,000 fixed or paid in good faith?

He found that it had been so paid.

No. 5. If, not what is the market value?

He found the market value to be, Rs. 3,000.

No. 7. Was the defendant entitled to make any improvements and is he therefore, entitled to compensation? If so what?

He found that the defendant was entitled to receive compensation of Rs. 3,100 on account of improvements.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge who returned the appeal for presentation in this Court on the ground that the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction was Rs. 6,100 i. e., Rs. 3,000 market price of the house and Rs. 3,100 on account of improvements. Against that order the plaintiff has appealed to this Court. He has also put in subsidiary application praying that if the appeal is decided against him, the original appeal be heard in this Court and he be given an extension of time to bring it within the period of limitation.

Under the provisions of s. 30, N.-W. F. P. Courts Regulation, the appeal lies to the Court of the District Judge in a suit of value not exceeding Rs. 5,000. The question of the valuation of suits for possession of houses is not covered by the Suits Valuation Act, nor by any rules which have been made. In the tabular statement which is given in the "instructions on the subject of Suits Valuation Act, VII of 1887 and the rules made thereunder for determining the value of certain classes of suits for purposes of court-fees and jurisdiction" issued by the Chief Court, Punjab and published as an appendix to the Court Fees and Suits Valuation Act of Sabharwal, and Anand, it is stated that the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction in such cases is "the market value presumably but this must be left to judicial decision" and it is on the basis of judicial decisions of the Lahore High Court that the learned Additional Judge came to the conclusion that the suit was of the value of Rs. 6,100. The cases to which he referred were Ilahi Jan v. Rahmat Ullah (1), Jaswant Ram v. Moti Ram (2) and Sis Ram v. Sohan Lal (3). Those cases, learned Counsel for the appellant before me seeks to distinguish from the present case, and he, in his turn relies upon Chiragh Din v. Seraj Din (4) which cites with approval two earlier cases Dharam Chand v. Girdhari Lal (5) and Lal Hussain v. Hassa Khan (6). Of the cases which were relied upon by the learned Additional Judge Ilahi Jan v. Rahmat Ullah (1) did not contain any question of compensation for improvements. The plaintiff in that case had sued to pre-empt certain property for Rs. 2,000 although 7,000 had been stated in the sale deed. It was decreed by the original Court on payment of Rs. 7,000. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge who held that the market price was Rs. 2,000 and he therefore entertained the appeal. It was held by the High Court that the value for purposes of jurisdiction was that which was found by the trial Court and not that which the plaintiff had stated in his plaint. It also referred to Chiragh Din v. Seraj Din (4). Jaswant Ram v. Moti Ram (2) was a Full Bench ruling but it related to a suit for redemption and in this connection learned Counsel points out that the amount which is to be paid on a redemption of mortgage is not based on any equitable considerations, as is the amount to be paid as compensation for improvements in a pre-emption suit. Sis Ram v. Sohan Lal (3) also did not raise any question of compensation for improvements. It may further be noted at this stage that when the learned Additional Judge was dealing with the case reported in Ilahi Jan v. Rahmat Ullah (1) he quoted a passage which was itself quoted from the 1926 case [Jaswant Ram v. Moti Ram (2)] in which the words "pre-emption of a mortgage" occur. It is however obvious that the word "pre-emption" is a misprint for the word "redemption" and this may have influenced the learned Additional Judge in coming to his conclusion.

The case relied upon by learned Counsel for the appellant namely Chiragh Din v. Seraj Din (4) is a direct authority on the problem now before me. In that case the plaintiff had sought pre-emption on payment of Rs. 60 and he was granted a decree on payment of Rs. 60 as the pre-emption price and on payment of Rs. 71 as compensation for improvements. The appeal was heard by a Senior Subordinate Judge who would not have jurisdiction to hear it had the value of the suit been Rs. 131 but who had jurisdiction to hear it if the value of the suit was Rs. 60. It was held by the learned Judges who decided the question in the High Court that the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction should not include any amount awarded as compensation for improvements. It was pointed out that the claim of the plaintiff was not to take over the improvements but to be substituted for the vendee as owner of the property as it was when it was sold to the vendee, that the grant of compensation for improvements was discretionary, that the vendee might

I accept the reasoning given in this judgment and hold that this appeal lay to the District Court and not to this Court. The appeal is therefore accepted and the memorandum of appeal will be returned to the District Judge for disposal on its merits. The subsidiary application no longer arises and is accordingly dismissed. There will be no order for costs on that application and the costs of the main appeal in this Court will be costs in the District Judge's Court. Pleader's fees Rs. 32.

The article of Lim. Act applicable to applications under s. 144, Civil P. C., is Art. 181. Where the pre-emption decree of the trial Court is reversed in appeal by the original vendee, the right to apply for restitution in respect of the amount withdrawn by the vendee before the appellate decree from out of the deposit made in Court by the pre-emptor decree-holder for payment to the vendee, accrues at the moment when the first Court's decree is drawn up and the limitation runs from that time. The right to apply for restitution is not suspended because a second appeal is preferred by the pre-emptor. In respect of the amount withdrawn by the vendee after the decree of the first Appellate Court, limitation for restitution in respect of that amount runs from the date on which the amount was withdrawn. 141 Ind. Cas. 121 (1) and 150 Ind. Cas. 1096 (2), relied on.

Proceedings under s. 144, Civil P. C., cannot be taken against a person who was not a party to the suit.

Ex. S. A. from the decision of the Civil Judge, Farrukhabad, dated September 3, 1938.

Mr. Babu Ram Avasthi, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal. It arises in this way. One Dhyan Singh, the father of the present plaintiff-appellant, had occasion to bring a suit for pre-emption. On January 18, 1930 a decree was passed in favour of Dhyan Singh for pre-emption upon payment of a sum of Rs. 1,500. This sum was payable as to Rs. 469 to the vendor, Gaya Singh, and as to Rs. 1,031 to Likha Singh who was the original purchaser. The reason why those payments were to be made in that way was, apparently, that out of the original purchase price of Rs. 1,500 a sum of Rs. 469 still remained due to the original vendor. There then follows the sequence of events which have given rise to this appeal. This appeal turns entirely on a point of limitation and it is, therefore, necessary to observe the dates with some care. The original decree was passed, as I have said, on January 18, 1930. The payments into Court were made immediately afterwards. In due course Likha Singh filed a first appeal against the pre-emption decree and on January 9, 1931, that appeal was allowed and a decree was passed dismissing the original suit. Now, at that point the position was that there was no pre-emption and, accordingly, subject to anything that might have intervened, Dhyan Singh would have been entitled to get back the monies he paid into Court.

Several things, however, had happened in the meantime. On January 30, 1930 and again in December 1930, Likha Singh had withdrawn an aggregate sum of Rs. 384-3-0 out of Court. It will be noticed that both those dates are prior to the decision of the first appeal. The way in which Likha Singh withdrew those monies was this. It will be remembered that out of the total sum of Rs. 150 originally paid into Court Rs 469 stood in Court to the credit of Gaya Singh, while Rs. 1,031 stood in Court to the credit of Likha Singh. Likha Singh happened to have a money decree against Gaya Singh on another account altogether. In execution of that money decree, Likha Singh attached and ultimately obtained payment out of Court of this sum of Rs. 384-3-0 out of Rs. 469 standing to the credit of his judgment-debtor, Gaya Singh.

On February 24, 1931, which was after the decision of the first appeal, another person named Daya Mahesh, who is defendant-respondent No. 2 to the present appeal, withdrew Rs. 1,63-8-0 out of Rs. 1,031 standing in Court to the credit of Likha Singh. Daya Mahesh had a decree against Likha Singh and he executed it by attaching Likha Singh's money in Court to the extent of Rs. 163-8-0. Meanwhile Dhyan Singh had filed a second appeal in the suit. This was dismissed by the High Court on November 23, 1933. On November 23, 1936, exactly three years after the date of the dismissal of the second appeal Dhyan Singh's son, the present plaintiff-appellant, made the present application under s. 144, Civil P. C., for the recovery from Likha Singh of the sum of Rs. 547-11-0 made up, as to Rs. 384-3-0 of the sum withdrawn in the year 1930 by Likha Singh and, as to Rs. 163-8-0, of the sum withdrawn by Daya Mahesh in February, 1931 which sum had gone to discharge a judgment debt for which Likha Singh was liable. To this application under s. 144, Civil P. C., both Likha Singh and Daya Mahesh were made respondents.

As regards Daya Mahesh, he can be disposed of in a very few words. He was never a party to the suit and, accordingly, it is conceded that as against him the proceedings under s. 144, Civil P. C., are misconceived. The suit as against him must be dismissed with costs. As regards Likha Singh, however, the matter is not so easy. The defence raised by Likha Singh was one of limitation. The point can be put very shortly. He says that the proper article of limitation is Art. 181 which allows a period of three years from the time "when the right to apply accrues." He says that the right to apply for restitution under s. 144, Civil P. C., first accrued, as regards Rs. 384-3-0 when the first appeal was allowed on January 9, 1931 and, as regards the sum of Rs. 163-8-0 on February 24, 1931 when it was withdrawn by Daya Mahesh. He says, accordingly, that this application was well out of time and must be dismissed. That view of the matter has commended itself to both the lower Courts and it is from their orders dismissing the application that this second appeal has come to me.

It has been very ably argued by Mr. Baleshwari Prasad who concedes that the proper article of limitation is Art. 181. Indeed, he is compelled to concede that because he cannot withstand the volume of authority which exists in this Court to that effect. It is true that among the High Courts in India there is an unfortunate conflict of opinion on this matter, the High Courts of Madras, Bombay and Lucknow taking one view and the High Courts of Calcutta, Patna and Allahabad taking the opposite view. It is sufficient for me to say that it is well-settled in this Court at any rate that the proper article of limitation is Art. 181 and I need not, I think, discuss that aspect of the matter any further. But Mr. Baleshwari Prasad goes on to say that that does not dispose of the matter. He says in the first place, that, even accepting Art. 181 as the correct article to apply, the period of limitation must be taken from the date of the decision of the second appeal in this Court and not from the date of the decision of the first appeal.

I regret that I do not agree with him as regards this. We have, after all, in this case simply to apply to the best of our ability the words of the article. No words could be simpler. They are "when the right to apply accrues." Now, it seems to me, at any rate as regards the sum of Rs. 384-3-0, that the right to apply to have that sum restored to him under s. 144 arose the moment the first appeal was decided, perhaps it would be more accurate to say at the moment the decree consequent upon the first appeal was drawn up. The practical result of the first appeal was that no pre-emption remained and no moneys need, or ought to have been paid into Court by Dhyan Singh. Had he chosen to do so, he could at once have claimed to get those moneys back. If he had tried to, he would have discoverd that a part of this money still remained in Court, whereas a part of it had been paid out to Likha Singh and Daya Mahesh. As Mr. Baleshwari Prasad rightly points out, no application under s. 144, Civil P. C., would have been necessary in respect of the money still remaning in Court. But as regards those moneys which had found their way into the hands of Likha Singh and Daya Mahesh respectively the right to apply under s. 144 immediately arose. The only distinction between the sum of Rs. 384-3-0 withdrawn by Likha Singh and the sum of Rs. 163-8-0 withdrawn by Daya Mahesh is that the latter sum was not drawn until February 1931, whereas the former sum had already been withdrawn when the first appeal was allowed. In the latter case therefore the terminus a quo for limitation would be the date when it was actually withdrawn, whereas in the former case the date would be the date of the decision in the first appeal.

Then Mr. Baleshwari Prasad goes on to say that this cannot be so because at all relevant times his client was in complete ignorance of the payment having been made out of Court to Likha Singh and Daya Mahesh respectively. He points out, as regards the payment out of Court to Daya Mahesh, that it was to put it at its lowest—most improperly made, because at that date the first appeal had already been allowed and the money in Court was no longer the money of Likha Singh. It was either the money of the plaintiff or else was in suspense pending the hearing of the second appeal. Upon either view, it is extremely difficult to understand how any Court could have allowed it to be attached. In both cases the plaintiff says that these payments out of Court were made without notice to him and that he was in ignorance of them. But, allowing for all these circumstances in the appellant's favour, I still do not see how it affects the matter. What we have to consider is when his "right to apply accrued." Now, a man's "right" is one thing and his opportunity to take advantage of that right is another thing altogether. A person may possess a right although he is in complete igorance of it. A relative may have died a month ago, leaving a person a legacy by his or her will. Can it be said that the right of the legatee does not exist because he has remained in ignorance of the testator's death? Analogies are unsafe I know, but it seems to me that it must be conceded here that the appellant's right to get his money back existed notwithstanding that he did not know, or may not have known, that the money had ever been paid out of Court.

The next argument addressed to me is that it was impossible for the appellant to have made an application under s. 144 pending his own second appeal. It is pointed out with considerable force that to have applied to get his money back pending the appeal would have been inconsistent with the appeal itself. Whatever may be the truth of that, I think there are at least two answers to it. The first is that there was nothing in the world to compel Dhyan Singh to appeal at all. It must always be remebered that what we are considering is when the right accrued. If the right once existed it is, in my view, neither defeated nor postponed, by the exercise by Dhyan Singh quite voluntarily of an option to appeal. It would have been quite open to Dhyan Singh to say "I am now content with matters as they stand and I will try to get my money back." Instead of that he appealed. But that does not alter the fact that his right to get his money back had accrued. That is one answer. Another answer, equally satisfying to my mind, is that I do not believe there was any inconsistency at all. If Dhyan Singh had wanted to recover this Rs. 547-11-0 from the persons into whose hands it had got, he could surely have made an application for its restitution, not perhaps by payment to himself, but by payment of it back again into Court. The Court has ample power under s. 144 to make all such orders as the nature of the case may require and, if the Court had felt that there was any difficulty or inconsistency about ordering payment to the appellant himself, the Court could very well have ordered that the money should be paid back into Court where it came from pending the hearing of the second appeal. I do not believe that as a practical matter there was any real difficulty at all.

Apart altogether from aurhority, I should have felt litte or no difficulty in this case. But there is a substantial volume of authority in the Court, of which I only purpose to refer to two cases. The first is Dhapo v. Baqridi (1). That is a decision of Mukherji and Bennet, JJ., in which the exact point was decided. It was held, in precisely similar circumstances to these, that the proper article of limitation was Art. 181 and that the period of three years prescribed by the article was to be counted from the date of the lower Appellate Court's decree reversing the decree of the trial Court and not from the date of the High Court's decree confirming that of the lower Appellate Court. The learned Judges in this case say:

"To this application of Baqridi Art. 181 applies. This is the view taken in this Court. Then the limitation of three years begins to run from the date on which the right to apply accrues... .....The right to apply for restitution accrued as soon as Baqridi's appeal succeeded in the first Appellate Court. That right to apply for restitution was not in any way suspended by the fact that Ramji Lal filed a second appeal. It has been argued that Baqridi took the precaution of waiting to see how the second appeal fared.....We have the simple words of the third column of Art. 181 to interpret, and the only way in which we can interpret it is to say that the right to apply accrued as soon as the decree in favour of Ramji Lal was reversed."

The other case to which I desire to refer is the Full Bench case in Parmeshar Singh v. Sitladin Dube (2). This was a Full Bench case to which Sir Shah Sulaiman, C. J. and Mukerji and King, JJ. were parties. It is unfortunate perhaps that on two of the questions involved the decision is by a majority. But it is all the same a decision binding on me. It concludes that the proper article of limitation is Art. 181, Lim. Act, and it concludes, moreover, that in a simple case such as the one before me the terminus a quo from which limitation runs is the date of the lower Appellate Court's decree by which the first Court's decree is reversed. An elaborate argument had been addressed to the Full Bench in that case to the effect, if I have understood it rightly, that where an appeal is brought either from an original decree or from a prior appellate decree, it is only the decree of the ultimate Appellate Court that conclusively and once and for all decides the rights of the parties. For that reason it was suggested that in a case such as the present one you have to look at the point of time when the right, the accrual of which is the starting point of limitation, was finally and conclusively established. That could only be done by the final and conclusive decree in the prceedings, that is to say, the decree of the second Appellate Court. So the argument ran and it found favour with the then learned Chief Justice. He says in a dissenting judgment :

"I am therefore of opinion that the expression 'where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed' which occurs in s. 144, must mean where the decree is reversed either temporarily or finally. No doubt a succeesful party is entitled to apply for restitution immediately after there is a temporary or provisional reversal, but if he chooses to wait till the reversal is complete and absolute he would nevertheless be in time if he comes in within the prescribed time from the date when the decree is finally declared to be reversed without any further question or doubt."

The learned Chief Justice was prepared, therefore, to hold that limitation ran from the date of the decree in second appeal. The opposite view, which was the decree of the Court, is expressed in the following passage from the judgment of Mukerji, J. He says :

"The argument at the Bar however, was that it is the final decree that is the principal decree in the case and it is that decree alone which can be executed. There can be no doubt that the proposition is true, but only so far as it goes. We are not considering whether the final decree is not (sic "now") the decree which finally defines the rights of the parties ; but the fact remains that it was open to the defendants to apply for restitution on an earlier date and, unless the law postpones that right and gives a fresh right, the limitation must begin to run from the date when the right to apply first accrues."

If I am at liberty to express my own view, I should with great respect prefer the view which found favour with a majority of the Court in this case. For all these reasons, in my judgment, the view of the lower Courts is correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs. I have been asked for leave to appeal under the Letters Patent, but it is not a case in which I feel justified in granting leave.

BAZLEY KARIM FAZLEY MOULA, —PLAINTIFF AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 85—Default by purchaser to pay balance—Sale becomes a nullity—Practice—Case raised in plaint—No denial in written statement—Question not agitated in trial Court—Appellate Court, if can consider and decide it.

Whether the deposit made under r. 85, O. XXI, Civil P. C., be forfeited or not, the purchaser shall forfeit all claim to the property if he makes default of payment of the balance of the purchase money and the sale becomes a nullity.

Where the case was clearly made out in the plaint that defendant had failed to deposit the balance of the purchase money and there was no denial of the assertion in the written statement the facts necessary to be established must be taken to be admitted facts. Consequently the lower Appellate Court would be justified in considering the question and giving a decision thereon even though the question had not been agitated in the Court of first instance.

A. from the appellate decree of the Sub-Judge, Zillah Birbhum, dated August 11, 1938.

Mr. Gopendra Nath Das, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Satindra Nath Mookerjee and Ramendra Ch. Roy (for Deputy Registrar), for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title to certain lands and for recovery of possession of the same. The material facts briefly are as follows : The plaintiff in the suit and defendant No. 1 jointly obtained a decree for rent against one Khatun Bibi in the presence of other pro forma defendants in the year 1931. Defendant No. 1 was found entitled to Rs. 8 odd and the plaintiff to Rs. 15 in that decree. In the year 1933 defendant No. 1 took out execution of that decree, had the property of the judgment debtor put to sale and purchased it on November 27, 1933. At the time of the sale, defendant No. 1 applied to set off his decretal amount against the purchase money. This was allowed. Thereafter apparently through oversight, the balance of the purchase money was not deposited by defendant No. 1. But in spite of his failure, the sale was confirmed. The bid made by defendant No. 1 at which the sale was confirmed was for Rs. 35-8-6 and his claim under the decree was only about Rs. 16. Defendant No. 1 appears to have taken possession after his purchase. In the following year, the plaintiff took out execution proceedings of the same decree, had the property put to sale and on July 10, 1934, purchased the property. Thereafter the plaintiff instituted the present suit for declaration of his title to the lands and for recovery of possession and for mesne profits asserting that he had been dispossessed by defendant No. 1 in the year 1935. Both the Courts below decreed the plaintiff's suit. In the original Court it was held that the decree was a rent decree and that the sale at which the plaintiff purchased had the effect of a rent sale, whereas the sale at which defendant No. 1 purchased had the effect only of a money sale. In the lower Appellate Court it was found that the decree itself had the effect only of a money decree and that both sales in execution had the effect of money sales. The lower Appellate Court held that defendant No. 1 having failed to deposit the balance of the purchase money, her purchase in 1933 was a nullity and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. Against that decision, defendant No. 1 has appealed.

On behalf of the appellant it has been pointed out that this question was not considered in the Court of first instance and it has been argued that the lower Appellate Court ought not to have decreed the plaintiff's suit on this ground. It is true that there is no discussion on this point in the judgment of the learned Munsif; but it appears in para. 4 of the plaint that the case was clearly made out therein that defendant No. 1 had failed to deposit the balance of the purchase money. There is no denial of the assertion in the written statement and the facts necessary to be established before this question can be decided must be therefore taken to be admitted facts. Such being the case, the lower Appellate Court was justified in considering this question and giving a decision thereon even though the question had not been agitated in the Court of first instance. It has been argued that under the amended r. 86 of O. XXI, the Court may, if it thinks fit, refrain from forfeiting the deposit made under r. 85 and that therefore the effect of the failure to deposit the balance of the purchase money is that the sale is not a nullity and that the property is a security for payment of the balance of the purchase money. The only case on this point to which my attention has been drawn is the case in Mohamad Ali Mia v. Kibria Khatun (1), where it was held under the Code of 1882 that where the balance of the purchase money is not paid, the sale is a nullity and not merely an irregular sale for which remedy may be had by an application under s. 244 or s. 311 of that Code.

The learned Advocate for the appellants has contended that under the old Code, the Court had no option and was bound to forfeit the deposit made under s. 306 of the Code and that consequently when default was made for payment of the balance, it must be taken that in law no payment whatever had been made for the property and that consequently the sale was a nullity. It is true that r. 86 has been amended and the words "the deposit.....shall be forfeited to Govt." have been replaced by the words "the deposit may, if the Court thinks fit...be forfeited to the Govt," But the concluding words of the rule have remained unaltered and that part lays down that the defaulting purchaser shall forfeit all claim to the property. It follows that whether the deposit made under r. 85 be forfeited or not, the purchaser shall forfeit all claim to the property if he makes default of payment of the balance of the purchase money. In my opinion, the amendment of the rule does not make any alteration in the law regarding the effect of the failure to deposit the balance of the purchase money and the decision in Mohamad Ali Mia v. Kibria Khatun (1), referred to above must be taken to be still good law. Following that decision I hold that the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that the sale at which defendant No. 1 purchased was a nullity and consequently he was right in decreeing the plaintiff's suit as he did. The appeal accordingly fails and must be dismissed with costs payable to plaintiff-respondent No. 1.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Suit No. 1491 of 1939
February 5, 1940
BLACKWELL, J.

J. C. ENO, LTD.—PLAINTIFFS

VISHNU CHEMICAL Co—DEFENDANTS

Trade mark—Infringement—Imitation of words—Tests—Copy of words used as trade-mark in any other language intended to deceive or likely to deceive, can be restrained — Words "Fruit salt" distinctive mark of plaintiff's saline—Defendant selling saline under name "Falaxar", meaning in Marathi "Fruit Salt"—Defendants held could be restrained from using that word—Defendant's goods colourable imitation of plaintiff's goods—Actual deception, if must be proved—Passing-off action—Plaintiff can make choice of either account and payment of profits gained by defendant or enquiry as to damage occasioned to plaintiff.

If traders in India have acquired in any language the exclusive right to the use of certain particular marks not merely as descriptive of but as distinctive of their goods, they have the right to restrain another trader from copying those words for use in connection with a similar class of goods in any other language in India. If traders attempt to deceive by mis-spelling or distorting any word in any shape or form, it being obvious what word they are in fact intending to indicate, they are in fact attempting to deceive. This is the real test which has got to be applied not only to the use of words in the same language, but to the use of words in any other language which may be a colourable imitation of words in the language from which the evidence may establish that they were in fact taken. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the use of the words in a foreign language was an intention to deceive and in fact was likely to deceive, then the Court ought to restrain the use of such words. [p 395, col. 1; p. 396, col. 1.]

The plaintiff's saline was well-known in India and was very commonly asked for as "Fruit Salt" the words "Fruit Salt" were well-known in the trade to belong exclusively to the plaintiff's saline, and those words were not merely descriptive of, but were a distinctive mark of, the plaintiff's saline. The defendants had been selling and offering for sale in Bombay and other places in India saline not of the plaintiffs' manufacture under the name "Falaxar", and that word was the Marathi equivalent of the plaintiffs' mark "Fruit Salt":

Held, that the word "Falaxar" was the Marathi equivalent of the mark "Fruit Salt", and the defendants could therefore be restrained from using such name. Though any one may use the word "Fruit" and the word "Salt" in any language in India as he pleases, yet he is not permitted to use those words as indicative of a class of goods similar to the plaintiffs' goods, the reason being that those words in the English language had become distinctive of their goods, and if those words were used in any other language in India in connection with a similar class of goods, the use of the words might be liable to cause deception: [p. 396, col. 2.]

Held, further that it could not be said that any one could possibly have sought to register in England in connection with goods similar to the plaintiffs' goods the words "Fruit Salt" in any foreign language, In re Trade Mark of John Dewhurst & Sons, Ltd. (1), Eastman Photographic Moterials Co. v. Comtroller General of Patents Designs and Trade mark (3), Eno v. Dunn (4) and Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog (5), relied on. [ibid.]

Where defendants' goods are colourable imitation of the plaintiff's goods, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove actual deception especially when the defendants sold their goods not openly in shops but in a hole and corner manner by canvassers and by a lorry upcountry.

In a passing off action the plaintiff is entitled to make his choice of either an account and payment to him of the profits which the defendant has gained by his wrongful conduct, or an enquiry as to, and payment of, the damages occasioned to the plaintiff by reason of it. 181 Ind. Messrs. K. T. Desai and A. A. Peerbhoy, for the Defendants.

Judgment.—This is a passing-off action. The plaintiffs have over a long period of time manufactured and sold in the Indian markets and elsewhere in large quantities a saline under the names "Eno" and 'Fruit Salt.' That saline is sold in octagonal shaped bottles packed in cardboard cartons enclosed in wrappers. Exhibit (C) is a specimen of the plaintiffs' goods, and I will discuss the get-up thereon later. The plaintiffs' case is that their saline so manufactured and sold, and bearing the marks "Eno" and "Fruit Salt," has acquired a very wide reputation throughout India, and that the marks "Eno" and "Fruit Salt" are well known to the trade and the public as denoting saline of the plaintiffs' manufacture, and that such saline is commonly asked for by purchasers by the name "Fruit Salt" or "Eno's Fruit Salt." The plaintiffs complain that the defendants have been selling and offering for sale in Bombay and other places in India saline not of the plaintiffs' manufacture under the name "Falaxar," and that that word is the Marathi equivalent of the plaintiffs' mark "Fruit Salt" and that the defendants are and have been selling and offering for sale "Falaxar" packed in bottles of the same size and shape as those of the plaintiffs and packed in cartons wrapped in wrappers so contrived as to be a colourable imitation of the plaintiffs' wrappers. Exhibit (E) is a specimen of the defendants' goods, and I will discuss the get-up thereon later. The plaintiffs allege that they have acquired a right to the exclusive user of the marks "Eno" and "Fruit Salt" as applied to their saline, and that the defendants' mark "Falaxar" is a colourable imitation of the plaintiffs' mark "Fruit Salt," and is calculated to deceive purchasers into the belief that the defendants' saline bearing the mark "Falaxar" is saline of the plaintiffs' manufacture. The plaintiffs further allege that the get-up of the defendants' saline is a colourable imitation of the get-up of the plaintiff's saline and is calculated to mislead purchasers into the belief that the defendants' saline so got-up is saline of the plaintiffs' manufacture.

By their written statement the defendants admit that the saline manufactured and sold by the plaintiffs in bottles bearing both the marks 'Eno" and "Fruit Salt" has acquired a wide reputation and commands a large sale in the market in the principal cities of India. They admit that the mark "Eno" is well-known to the trade and the public as denoting the saline of the plaintiffs, but deny that the words "Fruit Salt" by themselves are known to the trade or the public as denoting the saline of the plaintiffs' manufacture. They allege that the saline manufactured by the plaintiffs is commonly called and asked for by purchasers by the name of "Eno" or "Eno's Fruit Salt" and not by the name "Fruit Salt." They admit that they have been selling and offering for sale in Bombay and other places in India since the year 1931 a saline manufactured by them under the name 'Falaxar." They deny that "Falaxar" is the Marathi equivalent of the mark "Fruit Salt." They deny the alleged colourable imitation and say that the floral design and pictorial representation of fruits on their wrappers is common to the trade. They deny that the plaintiffs have acquired a right to the exclusive use in India of the mark "Fruit Salt," and say that these words have acquired merely a descriptive meaning in the Indian market. They say further that the plaintiffs' claim is barred by the law of limitation. [His Lordship then set out the issues and proceeded.] The plaintiffs had used the words 'Eno" and "Fruit Salt" in England in connexion with their saline for many years. They registered "Fruit Salt" as their trade-mark in England on April 2, 1906, Ex. (G). They have to prove in this case that they have used those words in India and have acquired an exclusive right to use them in connexion with their saline, and that those words have become distinctive marks in connexion with their saline.

The reputation of the plaintiffs' saline in India and the wide extent of their sales is admitted in para. 3 of the written statement, and is established by the evidence. Mr. E. L. C. Gwilt, who is now the Managing Director of F. J. Foster & Co. Ltd., came out to India in November 1922, as an employee of Messrs. Joseph Nathan & Co. Ltd., and as the representative both of the Company and of Mr. Foster, he attended to the interests of the plaintiffs in regard to the sale of their Fruit Salt in India until June 1924, and during that period visited the principal cities in India, where the plaintiffs' fruit salt was being sold. He said that the sales increased in volume from £30,000 in value in 1922, to £50,000 in value by June 1924. The get-up of the wrapper upon Ex. (C) had, he said, the same appearance to the best of his recollection as it had in 1924. His recollection was not challenged in cross-examination. He said further that no product in India was called "Fruit Salt" except the plaintiffs', and no product was asked for, or accepted, by anybody in the trade, or connected with the trade, as "Fruit Salt" except the plaintiffs' fruit salt during the period in which he represented the plaintiffs in India.

Mr. R. N. Katrak is now and has been for the last nine years the sole sale representative of the plaintiffs in the Bombay Presidency. From 1912 to 1917 he attended in Bombay to the sales of the plaintiffs' fruit salt. He said that the get-up, as it now appears on Ex. (C), was the same between 1912 and 1917, and since 1931 as it is now as far as he could recollect. His recollection also was not challenged in cross-examination. Mr. W. V. Pendharkar, one of the defendants' witnesses, stated that he used to sell the plaintiffs' fruit salt some eighteen years ago at Bhandara in the Central Provinces, where his father carried on business, and where the witness assisted him. He said further that he had known the plaintiffs' bottles for many years with the same carton and wrapper upon them which are upon them now. One G. V. Tole, another of the defendants' witnesses, stated that he had read about Eno's Fruit Salt before he began to sell Ex. (E), and that he had never heard or read of any Fruit Salt except Eno's Fruit Salt. The admission of the defendants in their written statement and this evidence clearly establish the reputation in India and the extent of the plaintiffs' sale.

Next arises the question whether the plaintiffs' saline was well-known and commonly asked for as "Fruit Salt." The oral evidence and the written orders which have been produced establish that the plaintiffs' saline was asked for both as "Eno's" and as "Eno's Fruit Salt," and very frequently simply as "Fruit Salt."

In addition to the evidence of Messrs. Gwilt and Katrak upon this point, there is the evidence of Mr. Marshall, a qualified chemist and representative in India of Messrs. Burroughs Welcome & Co. He has sold thousands of bottles, and said that it is perfectly understood in the trade that by "Fruit Salt" is meant the plaintiffs' "Fruit Salt," and that those words are well-known in the trade to belong exclusively to the plaintiffs' products. Evidence was also given on the point by three persons in the trade who had sold the plaintiffs' saline over a long period of years, and by two members of the public who had purchased it. I find on the evidence that the plaintiffs' saline was well-known in India and was very commonly asked for as "Fruit Salt," that the words "Fruit Salt" are well-known in the trade to belong exclusively to the plaintiffs' saline, and that those words are not merely descriptive of, but are a distinctive mark of, the plaintiffs' saline. [His Lordship then considered the evidence relating to the meaning of the word "Falaxar" and proceeded.] I find that the words Fala and Kshar are of common use in Marathi, and would be well-understood as meaning 'Fruit' and 'Salt' and in combination "Fruit Salt." [His Lordship next went through the defendants' oral evidence and proceeded.]

I turn now to the question whether the defendants had the right to use the word Falaxar. It was argued for the defendants that the plaintiffs have offered no evidence that they themselves have ever used that word, or that they have acquired by user a right to the exclusive use of that word, and that the plaintiffs could only seek to restrain the use of words in a foreign language which they had themselves used and by the user thereof had acquired an exclusive right to that user.

The question whether it was permissible to seek registration of words in a foreign language which might be deceptive having regard to the fact that there was already registered a symbolic trade-mark conveying a similar meaning to that which would be conveyed by the words in the foreign language sought to be registered, was discussed in In re Trade-mark of John Dewhurst & Sons, Ltd. (1). In that case the applicants sought to register as part of the trade-mark on one of three panels on a label certain Burmese characters the meaning of which was "The Golden Fan Brand." There were already on the register several trade-marks containing fans and one of them, which was applied to the same class of goods as the trade-mark sought to be registered, had a golden fan. The owners of those trade-marks all consented to the application. The Court of Appeal, however held, reversing the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine, that the Comptroller of Patents, Designs and Trade Marks, was justified in refusing to register a trade-mark containing as an essential part of it, words amounting to a verbal description of a mark already on the register, on the ground that their use would be calculated to deceive, though the words were in the Burmese language and character, which are little known out of Burma. In the course of the argument Lindley, L. J. said (p. 144*):

"The difficulty in your way is this—you could not register 'Golden Fan Brand' in English, nor, I suppose, in any ordinary European language. Can you then do it because the language in which you propose to register it is an out of the way language which few people here know?"

Pausing here for a moment, Counsel for the defendants actually went to the length of contending that it would be open to the defendants to procure registration in England of the Marathi word Falaxar, although the plaintiffs there have got on the register the words Fruit Salt as their registered trade-mark. In my opinion, the suggestion that the defendants would be entitled to register in England the word Falaxar is completely met by the observations of their Lordships in the case to which I am referring. I am clearly of opinion that they would not be entitled or permitted to register the word Falaxar in England. They would be asked what it meant, and if they were honest they would have to concede that in fact it was intended to convey the words Fruit Salt. In the course of his judgment Lindley, L. J. said (page 146*):

"Now the way in which it strikes me has been already pointed out in the course of the argument. Could Messrs. Dewhurst require the Comptroller to register their mark if these hieroglyphics were expressed in language intelligible to Englishmen? In other words, if instead of the hieroglyphics you had their equivalent, 'The Golden Fan Brand,' ought the Court to compel the Comptroller to put such a mark on the register? I say that unquestionably the Court ought not to do so. The objection to it would be that the words must be calculated to deceive because they only express in words what the golden fan of Mr. Boyd expresses to the eye. That is the principle upon which the Star Case, In re Trade-mark of La Societe Anonyme des Verreries de l'Etoile (2), proceeded, and I do not think that any evidence which could be adduced would get over that objection, because we know perfectly well that if you once put upon the register a golden fan in the shape of a picture like Mr. Boyd's and you also put upon the register a mark called "The Golden Fan," although without a golden fan, the two must mislead the public, and Mr. Boyd's consent is no answer to that."

Counsel for the defendants pointed out, as was the fact, that in that case there was a symbol upon the register and what was sought to be registered were certain words. He sought to distinguish that case from a case in which words might be upon the register and an application might then be put forward to put on the register words having an equivalent meaning. In my opinion, no such distinction as is sought to be drawn can in fact be drawn. Indeed the case would have been, in my opinion, still stronger if instead of a golden fan being already upon the register the words "Golden Fan Brand" had been registered. I am clearly of opinion as was indicated by their Lordships in that case that no one would have been allowed to register in England words conveying a meaning similar to "Golden Fan Brand." Lopes, L J. in the course of his judgment said (p. 151*):

"But it is said here that these words, being in Burmese, would not be calculated to mislead or to deceive. Now, if we were to hold that the mere fact that the words in question were in the Burmese language was sufficient to rebut the probablity of deception, I ask, where are we to stop? What would be said with regard to French? What would be said with regard to German? What would be said with regard to Welsh? In point of fact, if we pushed that matter to its logical conclusion we should have to go the length of holding that the fact of the words being in any foreign language would be sufficient to rebut the probability of deception. In my opinion that cannot be done."

It is true that their Lordships in that case were dealing with a registered trade-mark. In my opinion, however, the principle there laid down is equally applicable in a country where there is in fact no register of trade-marks, and where traders have to rely on long user of certain marks and on having acquired by long user the exclusive right to the use of particular marks. In my judgment, if traders in India have acquired in any language the exclusive right to the use of certain particular marks not merely as descriptive of but as distinctive of their goods, they have the right to restrain another trader from copying those words for use in connection with a similar class of goods in any other language in India and the reason for my opinion is that there are in India, as is well-known, a very large number of languages, and that a very large number of persons in India know several languages. Many persons who know Marathi know English, many persons who know Urdu know English, many persons who know Gujarati know English, and so on. Accordingly, a person knowing a number of languages would very likely be deceived if a trader translated into one of the languages which that person knew the trade-mark acquired by long user by a trader in another language with which that person was familiar, and affixed that trade-mark so translated to a similar class of goods.

In Eastman Photographic Materials Co. v. Comptroller General of Patents Designs, and Trade-mark (3), Lord Halsbury in the course of his judgment quoted with approval the report of the Commission appointed to enquire into trade-marks and designs. In the course of their report as appears at p. 576* of the judgment the Commissioners say:

"We would add upon this point that we think that where any English word would be rejected as not entitled to registration, no person ought to be permitted to register its translation into any other language. The question has been raised whether a word having the same sound as one entered on the register, though differently spelt and with a different meaning, should be registered The quetion in such a case would seem to be whether the resemblance between the old mark and that applied for was such as to be calculated to deceive; if it were it ought, of course, to be rejected."

Lord Halsbury said in reference to that report (p. 575*):

"My Lords, I think no more accurate source of information as to what was the evil or defect which the Act of Parliament now under construction was intended to remedy could be imagined than the report of that Commission."

There is one other passage in Lord Halsbury's judgment to which I will refer, and that is the passage at the bottom of p. 577* where his Lordship said:

"Of course also words which are merely misspelt, but which are nevertheless, in sound, ordinary English words, and the use of which may tend to deceive, ought not to be permitted."

Although those observations were made in a trade-mark case, they appear to me to be equally pertinent in a country where there is no registration of trade-marks and where a trader's only remedy may be a passing off action. If traders attempt to deceive by mis-spelling or distorting any word in any shape or form, it being obvious what word they are in fact intending to indicate, they appear to me to fall within the principle to which Lord Halsbury was drawing attention, and they are in fact attempting to deceive. This is, in my judgment the real test which has got to be applied not only to the use of words in the same language, but to the use of words in any other language which may be a colourable imitation of words in the language from which the evidence may establish that they were in fact taken. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the use of the words in a foreign language was an intention to deceive and in fact was likely to deceive, then, in my opinion, the Court ought to restrain the use of such words.

Both the plaintiffs and the defendants relied upon Eno v. Dunn (4). The respondent had applied to register the words "Dunn's Fruit Salt Baking Powder" as a trade-mark for baking powder. The appellant, who had for many years used the words "Fruit Salt" as his trade-mark for a powder used in producing an effervescing drink, opposed the application. It was held by Lords Watson, Herschell, Macnaghten (Lord Halsbury, L. C. and Lords Morris, dissenting) that upon the evidence the proposed words as a matter of fact were calculated to deceive the public, that the case therefore fell within s. 73, Patents Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883, and that the trade-mark ought not to be registered. It may here be pointed out that although the appellant had in fact the words (Fruit Salt) registered as his trade-marks, being unable upon the hearing of the summons to prove that Fruit Salt had been used as a trade-mark before the passing of the Act, 1875, he submitted to an order to remove his trade mark from the register, and confined his opposition to his second ground, viz., that the use of the term 'Fruit Salt' as proposed by the respondent was calculated to deceive. That case therefore proceeded upon the footing that the words 'Fruit Salt' had not been registered as a trade-mark, just as the case before me proceeds on the basis that there is no registration in India. Some of the judgments contain useful observations as to the right to use particular words, such as, 'Fruit Salt.' At p. 257* Lord Waston said:

"I do not think it necessary to refer to the evidence in detail. It appears to me to establish conclusively that although the words "fruit" and "salt" are in common use wherever the English tongue is spoken, they have in combination no technical or scientific meaning, and before the respondent entered the field, were never applied, in popular language, to any known substance other than the article manufactured and sold by the appellant under the name of Eno's 'Fruit Salt.' That circumstance does not give the appellant a right of property in the words "Fruit Salt," or entitle him to use them, by themselves in a registered trade-mark; but it is nevertheless a material circumstance in considering whether the use which the respondent proposes to make of them in his trade-mark would be calculated to mislead.

I have come to the conclusion that the proposed use of the term "Fruit Salt" by the respondent might and in many instances probably would, have the effect of deceiving the public."

Lord Macnaghten at p. 263* said as follows:

"In the present case the evidence shows that the expression 'Fruit Salt' has come to mean Mr. Eno's preparation, that at present it means nothing else, and that Mr. Eno's preparation is well-known and very popular. Mr. Dunn adopts the expression 'Fruit Salt', and gives it a prominent position among the words he seeks to register. I have no doubt that those words are calculated to deceive. They are claculated, and I think designed, to create a confusion in the minds of those persons to whom Mr. Dunn's advertisements are addressed, and to lead the ordinary run of such persons to suppose that his baking powder is in some way or other connected with Mr. Eno's preparation. The object I think was—and if Mr. Dunn's application were successful the result, I am convinced, would be in, some cases at any rate—to induce people to buy under an impression 'not founded in truth,' and not perhaps the less misleading because it is vague and indefinite, and incapable, it may be, of bearing the very slightest examination. Mr. Eno has not and cannot have any exclusive property in the expression 'Fruit Salt' The words of which it is composed are common English words; anybody may use them in any manner and in any connection he pleases, provided the use to which they are applied is not calculated to deceive"

Applying the principle laid down by their Lordships in this case to the case before me any one may use the word "Fruit" and the word "Salt" in any language in India as he pleases. But what, in my opinion, he is not permitted to do is to use those words as indicative of a class of goods similar to the plaintiffs' goods, the reason being that those words in the English language have become distinctive of their goods and if those words are used in any other language in India in connexion with a similar class of goods, the use of the words may be liable to cause deception. After the observations of their Lordships in In re Trade-mark of John Dewhurst & Sons Ltd. (1) to which I have referred it cannot, in my opinion, be suggested that any one could possibly have sought to register in England in connexion with goods similar to the plaintiff's goods the words "Fruit Salt" in any foreign language. As was said by James, L. J., in Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog (5) at p. 412 the observations being quoted at p.

1 of 6th Edn. of Kerly on Trade Mark:

".....no man is entitled to represent his goods as being the goods of another man; and no man is permitted to use any mark sign or symbol device or other means, whereby, without making a direct false representation himself to a purchaser who purchases from him, he enables such purchaser to tell a lie or to make a false representation to somebody else who is the ultimate customer."

I have already pointed out that very many peoples in India know English as well as different vernacular languages. But even if an Indian does not know English but knows only some vernacular language, if a trader is permitted to use in that language words which have become associated with the goods of another trader in another language and are distinctive of the goods of that other trader, he is thereby putting it into the power of unscrupulous dealers to mislead and practise a deception upon the individual knowing only the one language, in that he may thereby be enabled to pass off upon that unsuspecting person goods as and for the goods of the other trader to which those particular words in another language have by long user become attributed.

It was argued for the defendants that an educated person knowing both Marathi and English would read the whole label on Ex. (E) and could never be deceived. He would, it was said, see the words at the bottom "Manufactured by 'Vicco'—Vishnu Chemical Company, Bombay." But unfortunately the world is full not of careful but of careless persons, and of people who frequently are not careful to read the whole of everything they ought to read, and in my opinion looking at the general get-up of Ex. (E), and seeing the word (Falaxar) there on, even an educated person might be misled into thinking that he was getting the plaintiff's fruit salt. It is in evidence before me that illiterate persons frequently bring chits to Chemists' shops and to the shops of persons who sell such preparations as Exs. (C) and (E), and that on such chits the word "fruit salt" is written. Such chits may be given to them either by their doctor, or by their master. Suppose, an illiterate person knowing no English were to bring such a chit to an unscrupulous dealer who was desirous of selling Ex. (E), the dealer might give a bottle of Ex. (E) to the illiterate person, who might very easily say, "Is this fruit salt?" having been told by his master or doctor that what he was to get was fruit salt. He might easily use those words even if he knew no English and did not understand them. It would then be open to the dealer if his would-be purchaser knew Marathi to point to Ex. (E) and say, "Cannot you read the word Falaxar? That means fruit salt." That is the sort of thing which, in my opinion, might happen over and over again if traders were permitted to do what the defendants have done in this case, viz., use a coined Marathi word which does not in fact exist in Marathi, but which would convey the meaning "fruit salt" I hold on the evidence before me that the plaintiffs have acquired a right to the exclusive use of the words "fruit salt" in connection with their saline, that those words are a distinctive mark, and that no one has a right to use those words in any language in connection with similar goods as being likely to deceive.

I turn now briefly to discuss the get-up of the defendants' goods as contrasted with the get-up of the plaintiffs' goods. One Dayalji Girdhar was called by the defendants, and he produced a number of preparations of salines put up in wrappers by various manufacturers with a view to showing that the use of fruit and leaves on such wrappers were common to the trade. None of the wrappers on the bottles produced in my opinion bore any resemblance to Ex. (C), except a fruit laxative manufactured by the Alembic Chemical Works, Ltd., Ex. (N). The witness said that the Alembic Fruit Laxative which he had been selling was Ex. (13), which does not resemble Ex. (C). He admitted that he might have been selling Ex. (N) before 1934, but he did not know whether the plaintiffs objected to the get-up of Ex. (N), and whether it was changed in 1935 to Ex (13). As regards a product, Cipla Sanasalt, Ex. (14), he knew that it had formerly been sold as Cipla Frutsal and that it was no longer sold as such. The use of fruit and leaves is no doubt common to the trade upon wrappers for various laxative productions, but none of those produced by the witness which are in actual use of the material times bear any resemblance to Ex (C). There are no doubt minor differences between Exs. (E) and (C), but there is a striking resemblance between them, and the defendants' witness, Tolaji, was himself deceived in the witness box as I have already mentioned. I have already pointed out in the course of the judgment the fact that the words on Ex. (E) "Health giving, pleasant, cooling and invigorating" are also to be found on Ex. (C). The back-ground of the same is black and is very similar. The red lines at the top and bottom of both are also very similar.

The leaves and fruits proceeding from the top on the right hand side and going right round the left hand side, although different in colour, are extremely similar in general characteristics. Diamonds are to be found on both Exs. (E) and (C), and words written within those diamonds. I have already expressed the opinion that Pendharkar in preparing the design Ex. (E) had in fact before him the design on Ex. (C). I hold that the get-up of Ex. (E) is a colourable imitation of Ex. (C), and is calculated to deceive.

It was argued by defendants' Counsel that there was no evidence of actual deception. But the evidence establishes that the plaintiffs only came to know in March or April 1939, that the defendants were putting Ex. (E) upon the market. The evidence establishes that the defendants sold their goods not openly in shops but in a hole and corner manner by canvassers and by a lorry upcountry. In my opinion, therefore, it would have been very difficult for the plaintiffs to prove actual deception, and no inference ought to be drawn from the fact that they have not been able to prove deception that Ex. (E) is not in fact calculated to deceive.

Then it was argued that the plaintiffs were disentitled to relief because of their delay in taking proceedings, the evidence being that the defendants' goods had been sold since 1931 without a carton and a wrapper and under a different label, but in its present form since 1933. The plaintiffs came to know that the defendants were selling Ex. (E) for the first time in 1939, March or April, and they at once put the matter in the hands of their Solicitors, Messrs. Payne & Co. As a result of enquiries by Messrs, Payne & Co., the plaintiffs came to know two months later through Messrs. Payne & Co., that the defendants were the manufacturers. Then there was an interview, and certain letters were written by Messrs. Payne & Co, Ex. (F) the last of which was written in September 1939, and the suit was filed on October 18, 1939. On this evidence I hold that there has been no unreasonable delay. The defendants raised an issue as to whether the plaintiffs' claim for accounts and/or damages is barred by the Law of Limitation. Mr. Engineer expressed on behalf of the plaintiff their willingness to confine their claim for an account of profits to three years before the institution of the suit. On that Mr. K. T. Desai for the defendants gave up the issue of limitation.

The next question is whether the plaintiffs have a right to ask for an account of profits. On the authority of Gujarat Ginning and Manufacturing Co. Ltd. v. Swadeshi Mills Co. Ltd. (6), Counsel for the defendants submitted that substantial damages could only be awarded on proof of actual damage, that no special damage had been pleaded and no evidence of actual damage sustained had been offered, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to ask for an account of profits without proving that their sales had fallen off by reason of the defendants' piracy. In my opinion, the case relied on is not an authority for the principle for which Mr. Desai contends. It would seem from the judgment that in that case the plaintiffs were not asking for an account of profits, but were asking only for damages, and the observations of the Court must be, in my opinion, restricted to a case where a claim for damages only is put forward. Although in the plaint in that case the plaintiffs had asked for full and detailed accounts of the purchase and sale by the defendants of the imitation dhoties, issues Nos. (3) and (4) which were raised were directed only to damages, namely (3) "Do the plaintiffs prove that they have suffered any loss on account of the said infringement?" and (4) "Are the plaintiffs entitled to any damages? If yes, what amount?". The trial Judge ordered an account to be taken by Commissioners to ascertain the loss sustained by the plaintiffs in the manner suggested in Juggi Lal Kamlapat v. Swadesh Mills Co. Ltd (7). In the latter case the plaintiffs gave up their claim to an account of profits and claimed only damages. The case in Gujarat Ginning and Manufacturing Co. Ltd. v. Swadeshi Mills Co, Ltd. (6), appears to have proceeded upon the same footing Indeed in his judgment at p. 190* Broomfield, J. said:

"It has been conceded in this case however that in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Juggi Lal Kamlapat v. Swadesh Mills Co., Ltd. (7), the criterion is whether there has been any falling off in the plaintiffs' own sales of these dhoties by reason of the defendants having pirated their number."

facturing Co. Ltd. v. Swadeshi Mills Co. Ltd. (6), lay down that a plaintiff is not entitled to an account of profits if he gives up his claim for damages. In Edn. 6 of Kerly on Trade Mark, at p. 517, it is said that the plaintiff may, in general, make his choice of either an account and payment to him of the profits which the defendant has gained by his wrongful conduct, or an enquiry as to, and payment of, the damages occasioned to the plaintiff by reason of it, and Weingarten Bros. v. Charles Bayer & Co. (8), is relied upon in support of that proposition. Towards the end of his judgment at p. 351*, Lord Macnaghten said :

"Ever since the case in Edelsten v. Edelsten (9), it has been the established rule that a plaintiff succeeding in a case of this sort may at his option take an inquiry as to damages or an inquiry as to profits. I do not see any ground for departing from that practice in the present case."

In the case before me the plaintiffs have elected, as they have a right to do, to claim an account of profits and not to ask for damages. On the assumption that they were entitled to do so the parties have agreed the amount of profits made by the defendants at the sum of Rs. 2,000. (After recording findings on issues, his Lordship concluded.) I pass a decree for an injunction in terms of prayer (a) of the plaint. The defendants to be at liberty to use bottles of the size and shape which they are now using without the labels now appearing thereon. Decree for Rs. 2,000 the sum agreed upon between the parties as the profits derived by the defendants, and order for delivery up in terms of prayer (e) of the plaint except as to the bottles. The defendants to deliver up all labels of the type now appearing on their bottle Ex. (8). The plaintiffs will have the costs of the suit and interest on judgment at six per cent. per annum. Though the plaintiffs do not concede that the subject-matter of this suit is below Rs. 10,001, in order to avoid any dispute upon the question, by virtue of the power conferred upon the Court by High Court r. 548 (ii) (h), I sanction the employment of two Counsels in this case having regard to the importance of the case.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Civil Revision Petition No. 269 of 1937

February 2, 1940

ABDUR RAHMAN, J.

PULIYATH GOVINDA NAIR—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

PAREKALATHIL ACHUTHAN NAIR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25 (3)—Agreement by A to release B's brother from liability which is enforceable at time of agreement is good consideration for new agreement between A and B—Words "by the person to be charged therewith", scope of — Whether limited to person who was indebted from beginning—Promise referred to in s 25 (3) must be express — Promise to pay portion of barred debt—If can be sued for whole debt.

An agreement by the plaintiff to release the defendant's brother from liability if it was legally enforceable at the time when the agreement was reached is quite a good consideration for the new agreement between the parties to the suit. But if the plaintiff's claim against the defendant's brother was barred by limitation on the date on which this agreement was arrived at and the contract was not reduced to writing as required by s. 25 (3), Contract Act, it would remain unenforceable.

The words 'by the person to be charged therewith" in s. 25, Contract Act, are wide enough to cover the case of a person who agrees to become liable for the payment of a debt due by another and need not be limited to the person who was indebted from the beginning.

The promise referred to in s. 25, sub-cl. (3) of the Contract Act must be an express one and cannot be held to be sufficient if the intention to pay is unexpressed and has to be gathered from a number of circumstances. In other words there must be a distinct promise to pay before the document can be said to fall within the provisions of this section.

If a person promises to pay a portion of a barred debt, he can only be sued for that portion alone and not for the whole debt.

C. R. P. under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Ottapalam in S. C. S. No. 322 of 1936.

Mr. P. Govinda Menon, for the Petitioner.

Mr. N. R. Sesha Ayyar, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—A suit was instituted by the petitioner for the recovery of Rs. 288 and odd being the price of paddy alleged to have been due by the respondent's brother and verbally agreed to be paid by the respondent. The lower Court found in favour of the agreement but refused to give effect to it as it was held to be without consideration. The plaintiff has consequently come up in revision.

It may not be quite correct to say that the agreement between the parties to the suit was without any consideration. The agreement by the plaintiff to release the defendant's brother from liability if it was legally enforceable at the time when the agreement was said to have been reached was quite a good consideration for the new agreement between the parties to the suit. But if the plaintiff's claim against the defendant's brother was barred by limitation on the date on which this agreement was arrived at and the contract was not reduced to writing as required by s. 25 (3) of the Indian Contract Act, it would remain unenforceable. Mr. Govinda Menon contends however, that this section has no application to an agreement which was entered into between the parties to the present suit but must be confined in its operation to the agreement arrived at between the original parties thereto, if attempted to be enforced by the original creditor against the original debtor. Section 25 of the Indian Contract Act, so far as it is relevant to the present case, reads as follows :—

"An agreement made without consideration is void unless it is a promise made in writing and signed by the person to be charged therewith or by his agent generally or specially authorised on that behalf, to pay, wholly or in part, the debt of which the creditor might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitation of suits".

The words "by the person to be charged therewith" are wide enough to cover the case of a person who agrees to become liable for the payment of a debt due by another and need not be limited to the person who was indebted from the beginning. This difficulty seems to have been recognised on behalf of the plaintiff and a letter Ex. (c) was produced by him at the trial. This was written by the defendant on May 20, 1933 to the plaintiff asking him to come and receive 50 paras of paddy "towards what was due to be given to" him. A perusal of this letter shows that although it contains a definite request to receive 50 paras of paddy, yet there was nothing in it which could be said to disclose an express promise to deliver the remaining paddy; and in the absence of an express promise, this letter cannot be held to comply with the requirements of the section. The promise referred to in s. 25, sub-cl. 3 of the Indian Contract Act must be an express one and cannot be held to be sufficient if the intention to pay is unexpressed and has to be gathered from a number of circumstances. In other words there must be a dinstinct promise to pay before the document can be said to fall within the provisions of this section. See Ramaswami Pillai v. Kuppuswami Pillai (1), Govind Das v. Sarju Das (2), Maniram Seth v. Seth Rup Chand (3) and Mukhi Lal Chand v. Gul Muhammad (4). Reliance was placed by the learned Counsel for the petitioner on Appa Rao v. Suryaprakasa Rao (5) and Maidens Hotel, Delhi v. Willnot (6). But they do not bear out his contention. It was held in the first case that a document sufficiently complies with s. 25 of the Contract Act, if an intention to pay a debt wholly or in part has been expressed therein in such a way as to constitute a promise and the debt is sufficiently identifiable although the amount promised to have been paid remain unstated. This is not the same thing as saying that the promise to pay the debt need not have been expressed or that an implied promise was enough for the purpose of this section. The Lahore case lays down nothing more than that a letter containing a promise to pay a debt which was barred by the law of limitation is itself an agreement enforceable in law. This follows directly from the language of the section but renders no assistance to the petitioner's case.

It was then urged by Mr. Govinda Menon that the express promise to pay a portion of the debt due was quite enough to bring the case within the s. 25 (3) and that after such a promise not only could the portion of the debt so promised to be sued for, but that had provided a good cause of action even in regard to the portion for which there was no express promise in the document. The contention that if a person promised to pay a part of the debt, he should be taken to have promised to pay the whole of the debt had, in my opinion, no substance. If a person promises to pay a portion of a barred debt, he can only be sued for that portion alone and not for the whole debt. If on the other hand, he promises to pay the whole of the barred debt in writing he could be sued for the whole of the debt. Illustration (e) given in the section would show what the legislature really meant by use of the words "wholly or in part of the debt". If the contention raised by Mr. Govinda Menon were expected it would lead to startling results. If a person promises to pay only a portion of the debt which is barred by limitation, he would according to Mr. Govinda Menon's construction of the section become liable to pay the balance of the debt as well which he had not promised to pay and which apparently he had no intention to pay. This could never have been intended by the legislature and this would be the inevitable conclusion if this contention were accepted. It must, therefore, be held that inasmuch as the letter Ex. C contains no express promise to pay the portion of the debt now sued for, it is of no value to the plaintiff in this suit.

In the end it was contended that there was no proof on the record that the debt in regard to which the defendant had made a promise was barred by limitation. But the plaintiffs own statement, if read in extenso, leaves no room for doubt that it was.

The result is that this revision fails and is dismissed. But having regard to the fact that the plea in regard to s. 25 (3) was not raised on behalf of the defendant specifically I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

First Appeal No. 69 of 1936
February 20, 1940

GAJADHAR PRASAD AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
UDAICHAND—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 19, 20—Explanation 2 to s. 19—Deposition of party admitting liability for claim reduced to writing and signed by Judge—Judge, if agent for purposes of s. 19—Difference between s. 19 and s. 20—Specific performance—Agreement to mortgage.

Explanation 2 to s. 19, Lim Act means not only that the agent must be duly authorised to sign the document in question but that he must be authorised to sign for the purpose which the section contemplates, that is to say he must be authorised to sign on behalf of the person sought to be made liable for the purpose of acknowledging liability. The authorisation need not necessarily be direct. It can be implied, as for instance from the nature of the employment, but the authorisation, whether it be express or implied, must be to acknowledge the liability in question and not merely to sign the document. Though a Judge of a Court is authorised, and indeed required by law, to sign the statements which he records, he is authorised to do so for the purpose of authenticating the depositions and not for the purpose of acknowledging liability. He is in no sense the agent of the witness. He is merely fulfilling a statutory duty which is imposed upon him by O. XVIII, r. 5 of the Civil P. C., in order to bring into play the presumption raised by s. 80 of the Evi. Act. The fact that the witness is a party and consequently goes into the box voluntarily does not make any difference. 153 Ind. Cas. 957 (4), relied on. [p. 402, col. 2, p. 403, col. 1.]

[Case-law discussed.]

There is a fundamental difference between the ss. 19 and 20, Lim. Act. Under s 20 all that is necessary is that an acknowledgment of the payment, (or, under the old section as it stood before the amendment: "the fact of payment"), should appear in the handwriting of, or be signed by the person making the payment. If the person making the payment is a Judge of the Court, and an acknowledgment of the payment, (or the fact of payment if the unamended section applies) appears in his handwriting or is signed by him, then that is enough. But that is not enough under s. 19. [p. 404, col. 1.]

Obiter.—Specific performance of an agreement to mortgage can be granted. 107 Ind. Cas. 337 (1), referred to.

F. A. from the decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Jubbulpore, dated April 27, 1936.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellants.
Rai Bahadur M. B. Kinkhede with him Mr. A. R. Kulkarni, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs appeal. Their case is that there was a partnership between the parties which was dissolved by mutual consent. It was known that on a taking of accounts the defendant would owe the plaintiffs a sum of money exceeding Rs. 8,000. Therefore on February 3, 1929 the defendant agreed to mortgage one of his houses for Rs. 8,000 and he agreed to pay the balance which would be found due on the taking of accounts as a personal liability. Accounts were subsequently taken and it was discovered that the defendant owed the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 10,060. This formed the subject-matter of a previous litigation in which the plaintiffs had sued for a dissolution of partnership and for rendition of accounts. It was found there by the Appellate Court that the accounts had already been settled and that on that settlement the defendant owed the plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 10,060. It was also held that as the accounts had already been settled the suit did not lie in that form and that the plaintiffs would have to sue separately on the settled account.

That suit has now been brought and the appeal arises out of it. In the lower Court the plaintiffs sued for specific performance of the agreement to mortgage to the extent of Rs. 8,000 and for a money decree for the balance, and in the alternative, if the prayer for specific performance was not allowed, then for a decree for Rs. 10,000.

Dealing first with the prayer for specific performance a question was raised as to whether specific performance of an agreement to mortgage can be granted. As we do not think that the agreement has been proved, we need not deal with this at length. It is enough to say that, in our opinion, their Lordships of the Privy Council have decided the matter in favour of the view for which the plaintiff contends. That decision is Jewan Lal Daga v. Nilmani Chaudhuri (1). (Their Lordships examined certain facts and evidence on the question whether agreement had been proved and arrived at the conclusion that it had not been proved). That leaves the alternative case for consideration. It is admitted on both sides that the facts that there was a settlement of accounts and that the amount found due by the defendant to the plaintiffs was Rs. 10,060 is concluded by the previous judgment and that the matter is res judicata. But it was argued on behalf of the defendant-respondent that the present claim ought to have been included in the previous suit and that therefore the present suit is barred by O. II, r. 2. We need not examine this in detail because, in our opinion, the claim is barred by time in any event. We are of the opinion, however, that O. II, r. 2, is not a bar because the causes of action are different.

The real question is one of limitation. It is accepted on all hands that the claim is barred from the date on which the settlement sued on is said to have been made, but the plaintiffs contend that time can be extended for a variety of reasons. They rely first of all upon a deposition of the defendant in the previous suit in which he had admitted liability for the present claim. That deposition was reduced to writing and was signed by the Judge who recorded the evidence. It is argued that the Judge was an agent of the defendant within the meaning of s. 19 of the Lim. Act. If this is so, then admittedly the claim is within limitation. But we do not think he is.

Section 19 requires that the acknowledgment should be in writing and that it should be "signed by the party against whom the right is claimed, or by some person through whom he derives title or liability."

Explanation II to that section states that:

"For the purposes of this section 'signed' means signed either personally or by an agent duly authorised in this behalf."

We understand this to mean not only that the agent must be duly authorised to sign the document in question but that he must be authorised to sign for the purpose which the section contemplates, that is to say he must be authorised to sign on behalf of the person sought to be made liable for the purpose of acknowledging liability. We do not mean by this that the authorisation must necessarily be direct. It can be implied, as for instance from the nature of the employment, but the authorisation, whether it be express or implied, must be to acknowledge the liability in question and not merely to sign the document. See Narain Rao Kalia v. Manni Kunwar (2).

In Beti Maharani v. The Collector of Etawah (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council were concerned to see whether an agent appointed under a general power-of-attorney to manage lands could be said to have the authority required by s. 19, and they held that he had not because his authority was to manage lands and not to acknowledge personal liabilities. The question their Lordships posed at p. 207* was:

"Whether he was 'an agent duly authorised in that behalf' within the meaning of s. 19 of the Lim. Act."

And again

"The question then is, first, whether Raj Kuar herself was an agent duly authorised to acknowledge Pirthi's liability; and secondly, whether Ajudhia was so authorised."

What they searched for was not merely authority to sign the document but authority to acknowledge liability.

Now we think it is beyond doubt that though a Judge of a Court is authorised, and indeed required by law, to sign the statements which he records, he is authorised to do so for the purpose of authenticating the deposition and not for the purpose of acknowledging liability. He is in no sense the agent of the witness. He is merely fulfilling a statutory duty which is imposed upon him by O. XVIII, r. 5, of the Civil P. C. in order to bring into play the presumption raised by s. 80 of the Indian Evi. Act.

The learned Counsel for the appellant asks us to draw a distinction between a witness who is summoned, and thus compelled to appear, and one who is a party and who consequently goes into the box voluntarily. He argues that in the latter case the witness voluntarily subjects himself to examination and in that case authorises Counsel to examine and cross-examine him, and authorises the Judge to record and sign his deposition. We do not think that this makes any difference. The kind of authorisation contemplated by s. 19 implies the conferral of powers on a person who does not already possess them. A voluntary subjection to jurisdiction confers no powers. They exist apart from the act of submission.

The authority to record and sign the deposition of any witness who enters the box is conferred by statute and not by the witness. Once the witness is there his power of independent action is lost. He cannot leave the box without permission. He cannot refuse to answer questions, however awkward they may be, unless they tend to incriminate him. He cannot evade the consequences of not telling the truth. The final test of the kind of authority contemplated here, namely that which flows from the voluntary act of a person, is its power of recall. A witness who has entered the box cannot recall the Judge's powers. He has no locus penitentiæ in which to resile.

Moreover the authority required by the section is an authority to sign. A voluntary entrance into the witness box does not confer that. If it can be said to give the Judge any power which he did not possess before it would be the power to question and to examine and the power to insist upon truthful replies. The remainder of the Judge's action, namely the recording and the signing of the depositions, do not derive their force from, nor do they spring out of, the witness's action. They are derived from statute, and that statute does not empower the Judge to sign for the purposes of s. 19. Therefore, in our opinion, in no sense can the Judge be regarded as the agent contemplated by Expln. II to s. 19.

This, we think, is the view of the Rangoon High Court in U Po Yin v. U Ba Chit (4). There the deposition was signed by the Judge and a certificate at the end certifying that the deposition had been read over to the witness was signed by the clerk of Court. It was held that neither signature brought the matter within the purview of s. 19.

As regards the case cited on behalf of the appellant. In Venkata v. Parthasaradhi (5) the witness himself had signed the deposition and it was that which, according to the decision, brought the acknowledgment within the purview of s. 19. Periavenkan Udaya Tevar v. Subramanian Chetti (6) and Daia Chand v. Sarfraz (7) turned on the same fact. In the former case a witness had signed his own deposition and in the latter the defendant, or her fore-fathers, had signed the Record of Rights.

Annapagauda Tammangauda v. Sangadigyapa (8) was the case of a guardian appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act, and the Full Bench held that the authority contemplated by s. 19 need not spring out of contract. But it was made clear that the authority, however conferred, must empower the person signing to act on behalf of the one sought to be made liable, and to that we would add that it must also either be wide enough to embrace the kind of act contemplated by s. 19 or be specific in that behalf. That type of case is now covered by s. 21 of the Lim. Act.

Reference was made in that ruling to a decision of the House of Lords in Chinnery v. Evans (9) and this was also relied on by the learned Counsel for the appellants, but we do not think that this carries the matter any further. A receiver had been appointed there in a mortgage suit at the instance of a mortgagee. He made certain payments of the interest due on the mortgage to mortgagee and the question arose whether he could in these circumstances be considered to have been acting as an agent of the mortgagor. Their Lordships held that he could. They said that the person legally liable to pay the interest was the mortgagor, and the person entitled to receive it was the morrtgagee. Therefore, any person making the payments in pursuance of the legal obligation which existed between the parties did so on behalf of the person legally bound to pay. In our opinion, the defendant here was not under any legal obligation to make an acknowledgment of liability, nor, for the reasons given, do we think that the Court can be said to have been acting on his behalf in recording and signing his deposition. We do not think that that case has any bearing on this.

In Swaminatha Odayar v. Subbarama Ayyar (10) the question considered was whether the language used in a certain deposition could be said to constitute an acknowledgment of subsisting liability, and it was held that it could, and that therefore the deposition could be used to save limitation under s. 19. The question of signing was not raised at all, and as both Counsel and the learned Judges referred to Venkata v. Parthasaradhi (5), where the deposition had been signed by the witness, we take it that that was probably the case here as well. In any case, as it stands, the ruling is not authority for the proposition contended for before us.

Govindasami Pillai v. Dasai Goundan (11) was concerned with a matter of payment under s. 20 of the Lim. Act and not of an acknowledgment under s. 19. A payment had been made into Court there and the money was paid over to a mortgagee by the Court. It was held that this was sufficient to extend limitation under s. 20. But there is a fundamental difference between the two sections. Under s. 20 all that is necessary is that an acknowledgment of the payment, (or, under the old section as it stood before the amendment: "the fact of payment"), should appear in the handwriting of, or be signed by the person making the payment. If the person making the payment is a Judge of the Court, and an acknowledgment of the payment, (or the fact of payment if the unamended section applies), appears in his handwriting or is signed by him, then that is enough. But that is not enough under s. 19.

Reliance was also placed upon s. 20 (2) but as there was no mortgage in this case, and, on our findings, not even an agreement to mortgage, the question does not arise.

The appeal dismissed with costs.

Custom (Punjab)—Kharals of Montogomery District governed by Customary Law—Succession—Non-ancestral property—Daughters v. collaterals—Gift by daughter—Collaterals, if can contest it—Position of grand daughter.

According to the custom prevailing among the Kharals governed by the Customary Law of the Montgomery District in the Punjab, daughters are preferred to collaterals in the matter of succession to non-ancestral property and hence the collaterals cannot contest a gift by the daughter.

Daughters and grand daughters, however, stand on the same footing. 109 Ind. Cas. 590 (1), relied on.

Messrs. Yashpal Gandhi and L. Saunders, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Barkat Ali, Shaukat Ali, Inder Dev Dua and Durga Das Jain, for the Respondents.

Din Mohammad, J.—On April 20, 1937, Mst. Fateh Bibi, widow of one Qaim, a Kharal governed by the Customary Law of the Montgomery district, gifted 593 kanals 17 marlas of land along with a residential site occupied by kacha houses to her daughter, Mst. Sahib Bibi. Thereupon, the plaintiffs, Sanata and Mohammad, instituted a suit for a declaration that the gift would not affect their reversionary rights as well as those of the other reversionary heirs after the death of Mst. Fateh Bibi. The suit was resisted on various grounds. It was contended inter alia that the land in suit was not ancestral and consequently the gift in favour of Mst. Sahib Bibi could not be impugned by the plaintiffs. It was further averred that the parties were not governed by Customary Law, but this objection was withdrawn at a later stage of the cause. The Subordinate Judge found the questions at issue in favour of the defendants and dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiffs have appealed. The principal questions involved in this case are (1) whether the land is ancestral; and (2) even if it is found to be non-ancestral, whether the plaintiffs can attach the gift?

In respect of question No. 1, Counsel for the appellants has relied mainly on the wajib ul-arz, Ex. P-8, printed at p. 92 of Vol. I of the paper book. The wajib-ul-arz relates to Mauza Danaban and it is stated there that the village was founded by one Dana Beg Mughal but later Umar, a Kharal, migrated from Mauza Mahlo and took possession of the area lying desolate a few centuries ago. It is also mentioned therein that some of the proprietors were descended from Masta, who was married to the sister of Mamura, and that the latter sent for Masta and settled him in the village. Three chaks were formed, viz., chak Haibo, chak San and chak Salat, and they were all situated in the Govt. jungle in that village. It is, however, added there that no regard was paid to ancestral shares as the proprietors attached very little importance to the land they owned and cared more for the cattle they reared. The measure of ownership depended upon the contribution each proprietor made in sinking the wells. The tenure of the village was stated to be pattidari-chahwar-ghair mukammal. The next document relied upon by the appellants' Counsel is a copy from the revenue papers relating to wells situated at Mauza Danabad. That document shows that the well in relation to which the copy was produced was sunk by Lal. The names of the sharers in the well were given as (1) Baghela, (2) Bibi Rani and (3) sons of Masta. The well in question was described as Haiboka. The third document referred to by the appellants' Counsel is Ex. D-18, which is a copy of the pedigree table of the proprietors of village Haiboka. It is stated there that, formerly, this area was included in the village Ganeshpura and, during the last settlement, it was included in the area of "Jungle Sarkar." Eight years ago, the proprietors of Haiboka and Baghela left the village Ganeshpura and chak Haiboka respectively and obtained permission of the Deputy Commissioner on October 26, 1864, to sink a well and to found a village there.

It may be stated that the land in suit is described in the deed of gift as partly situated in chak Haiboka and partly in Ganeshpura. These documents, however, conclusively establish that Ilayas, the alleged common ancestor of the parties, had never occupied the land. On the other hand, so far as Ganeshpura land is concerned, the documents unequivocally establish that it was Baghela who originally acquired it and so far as chak Haiboka land is concerned, Lal was the founder of the village and the pedigree table relied upon by the plaintiffs themselves shows that Lal was a brother of Maina and Sher, the ancetors of the plaintiffs and not their ancestor. There can be no doubt therefore that the land is non-ancestral qua the plaintiffs. This conclusion is further supported by the statement of Sadat (P. W. No. 21) who has admitted that, while the branch of Misri, the fourth brother of Lal owns 30 squares, the branch of Maina owns only 5 squares and that of Sher only 1 square. Nur Mohammad (D. W. No. 1) the husband of Mst. Sahib Bibi, has also sworn to the same effect. We have no hesitation therefore in holding that the land is non-ancestral qua the plaintiffs.

The next question is whether in these circumstances the plaintiffs can attack the gift. It is admitted that there is no recorded instance favouring the plaintiffs. There has been no judicial decision in connection with this matter nor any copy from the revenue records has been produced in support of the assertion. Reliance is placed only on the oral evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1, 2, 4, 25, 27, 29, 30 and 31, but none of the instances cited by them is supported by any document and most of them are beside the point. For example, the instance of Torej deposed to by Sanata (P. W. No. 1) and Muhammad Hussain (P. W. No. 29) relates to occupancy rights in colony land and there can be no question of a daughter succeeding there as the course of succession in such cases is determined by the Collector. The instance cited by Nanusher Khan (P. W. No. 2) is mere hearsay as he admits that he was not present when the mutation was effected. The instance referred to by Bagga (P. W. No. 4) also relates to colony land where proprietary rights had not been acquired from Govt. From the similar defect suffers the instances cited by Sadiq Mohammad (P. W. No. 25). The instance referred to by Jahangir Khan (P. W. No. 27) is inconclusive as the land belonged to his paternal uncle Muhammad Khan and is said to have been mutated in the name of the witness's father on the marriage of Muhammad Khan's daughter to his own brother. This was a family arrangement in which the daughter did not suffer. The instance deposed to by Shana (P. W. No. 30) relates to ancestral land and so does the instance referred to by Shukru (P. W. No. 21). There is therefore not an iota of documentary evidence on the record to support the plaintiff's contention and the oral evidence does not lend much support to their case.

The defendants on the other hand have produced as many as 97 witnesses, mostly belonging to the Kharal tribe, who have definitely stated that among them daugters are preferred to collaterals in the matter of non-ancestral property. Their assertion is supported by a recorded instance Ex. D-13. It clearly shows that, on the death of Bahadur the land was mutated in the name of his daughter Jowai and when she married, the collaterals claimed the land. It was, however, decided by the revenue authorities that as the land was the self-acquired property of the deceased the collaterals were not entitled to oust the daughter under the Customary Law prevailing in the tribe. The record as it stands is more in favour of the defendants than in that of the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge has disposed of the case on the basis of Mst. Sahib Bibi being a grand-daughter of Baghela rather than the daughter of Qaim on the ground that some of the witnesses had stated that Qaim had succeeded Beghela. Counsel for the appellants admits that daughters and grand-daughters stand on the same footing as was decided in Kaman v. Ghafoor Ali (1) and, consequently, the matter is immaterial whether the case is disposed of on the basis of Mst. Sahib Bibi being a daughter of Qaim or on that of Mst. Sahib Bibi being a grand daughter of Baghela. Holding therefore that the plaintiffs have failed to discharge the onus that lay upon them of proving that, under the Customary Law governing the parties, they were entitled to oust the daughter even in the case of non-ancestral land, we affirm the decision of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), s. 15—S. 15, if can be invoked in favour of tenant whose rent is payable to assignee of rent from Malabar Jenmi.

Section 15 of the Mad. Act IV of 1938 cannot be invoked in favour of a tenant whose rent is payable to an assignee of rent from a Malabar Jenmi.

The terms "Jenmi" and "Intermediary" used in s. 3 and in the succeeding ss. 16 and 17 are not extended by any words in the Act so as to include an assignee of the right to collect rents, and the definitions in the Malabar Tenancy Act do not cover such an assignee.

C. R. P. under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Calicut, dated August 30, 1938, and passed in I. A. No. 1362 of 1938 in S. C. No. 281 of 1937.

Mr. K. Kuttykrishna Menon, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. P. Raman Menon, for the Respondents.

Wadsworth, J.—This Civil Revision Petition raises a question whether s. 15 of the Mad. Act IV of 1938 can be invoked in favour of a tenant whose rent is payable to an assignee of rent from a Malabar Jenmi. The petitioners here were the applicants in the Court below and they were the judgment-debtors. The suit was brought by the 1st plaintiff as assignee of the rent for the period from 1929-30 to 1936-37 assignor being the second plaintiff, the Jenmi. The assignment was dated February 17, 1937, and there was a decree dated October 9, 1939, in favour of the 1st plaintiff, the assignee, alone. Defendants applied under ss. 19 and 15 of Act IV of 1938 to scale down this decree.

Section 15 (1) of the Act begins as follows:—

"All rent payable by an agriculturist to a landholder or an under-tenure holder under the Mad. Estates Land Act, or to a Jenmi or intermediary under the Malabar Tenancy Act, 1929, which has accrued for the Fasli year 1345 and prior Faslis and which is outstanding on the date of the commencement of this act shall be deemed to be discharged....."

Mr. Kuttikrishna Menon for the petitioners has contended that the effect of these orders is to give to the tenant a right to scale down the rent, whether or not it is due to Jenmi or intermediary on the date of the commencement of the Act, provided that in its origin it partakes of the character of rent due to a Jenmi or intermediary. It is quite clear that the definitions of the words "Jenmi" and "Intermediary" in s. 3 (K) and 3 (J) of the Malabar Tenancy Act do not include an assignee of the right to collect rents, though under the corresponding provision, s. 3 (5) of the Mad. Estates Land Act, the term "landholder" does include the person entitled to collect rent. It is not very apparent why the assignee of the right to collect rent in Malabar should have been treated differently from an assignee of the right to collect rent in other parts of the presidency; but the fact remains that the terms "Jenmi", and "Intermediary" used in this section and in the succeeding ss. 16 and 17 are not extended by any words in the Act so as to include an assignee of the right to collect rents, and the definitions in the Malabar Tenancy Act do not cover such an assignee. It seems to us apparent that, reading s. 15 (1) in its plain terms, there must be rent outstanding on the date of the commencement of the act, which rent must be, as on that date, payable by an agriculturist to a landholder or an under-tenure holder or to a Jenmi or Intermediary. If these conditions are not satisfied. the section had no application. It may be that the omission of any provision relating to an assignee of a right to collect rent in the case of a Malabar tenancy is a lacuna due to the inadvertence of those who drafted the Act, but, even so, the remedy is the amendment of the Act. Dealing with an expropriatary measure we cannot extend the language so as to expropriate more persons than those actually comprised within its terms. In the present case it seems to us clear that as the arrears with which we are concerned were not outstanding as rent payable to a Jenmi or Intermediary on the date of the commencement of the Act, the petitioners are not entitled to the benefit of s. 15 of the Act.

We may add that to read the term "Jenmi" or "Intermediary" in s. 15 (1) as including an assignee of the right to collect rent would lead to the difficulty that under s 15 (4) there is no provision for notice to such an assignee, and in ss. 16 and 17 the same terms are repeated with reference to safeguarding of certain rights of the landholder and with reference to limitation, which also have not been extended to cover an assignee.

In the result, therefore, we dismiss the Civil Revision Petition with costs.

N.-S. Petition dismissed.

Lease—Construction—Lease originally granted for building and manufacturing purposes at fixed annual rent—Lessee and his successors in possession for long time during which transfers taking place without objection by zamindar—Lease must be deemed to be perpetual with transferable and heritable rights—Mere fact of land being subsequently cultivated does not affect nature of original lease.

Where a semindar has originally leased a land on a fixed annual rental for building and manufacturing purpose and the lessees and their successors have remained in possession of the land for a long time during which period the land has been the subject of numerous transfers without any exception even having been taken by the semindar, the lease must be deemed to be a perpetual lease with heritable and transferable rights. The mere fact of the land being brought under cultivation subsequently cannot nullify the original lease and alter the position of the lessee and his successors to that of agricultural tenants. F A. No. 60 of 1924, A. Caspers v. Kader Nath Sarbadhikari (1) and Naba Kumari v. Behari Lal (2), relied on.

S. A. from the decision of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated July 10, 1936.

Messrs. B. Malik and D. Sanyal, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. L. Misra, for the Respondents.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—The subject of dispute in the suit out of which this appeal arises was an area of 15.427 acres of land described as "Ahata Godam Nil" situated in village Bahadurpur in the district of Azamgarh. The plaintiff-respondents originally claimed a declaration that they were the owners of the land in dispute and were entitled to have their names recorded in the khewat. This relief was however not granted to the plaintiffs by the trial Court and, in the lower Appellate Court the plaintiffs confined their claim to a declaration that they were entitled to possession and to make collections and appropriate the produce of the plots in dispute. They also prayed for an injunction restraining defendants second and third parties from causing interference in the plaintiffs' collection of rent and appropriation of the produce of the plots in dispute. In the alternative the plaintiffs had claimed possession of the area in dispute. The plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to the reliefs mentioned above on the basis of a sale-deed dated July 31, 1928, executed under circumstances hereinafter mentioned. Defendants second and third parties were the zamindars of the village and defendants first party were the vendors of the plaintiffs. The suit was contested by defendants second party who maintained that the area in dispute was agricultural land and the position of the vendors of the plaintiffs was at best that of occupancy tenants. They therefore maintained that the vendors of the plaintiffs had no right to transfer the area in dispute to the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs had not acquired any title to the area in dispute by virtue of the purchase made by them. The trial Court dismissed the suit. But on appeal by the plaintiffs the lower Appellate Court passed a decree declaring that the plaintiffs held the land in dispute

"under a permanent tenure subject to the payment of Rs. 88-2-0 to the zamindars and their right is transferable and heritable."

The history of the area in dispute is involved in some obscurity, but it is common ground that this land was originally let and was utilized for the purpose of building and running an indigo factory. This happened either towards the close of the eighteenth or the beginning of the nineteenth century. It appears from the Gazetteer of Azamgarh District (vide p. 56) that one Mr. Crommelin, Commercial Resident of the East India Company at Azamgarh, erected an indigo factory on the plots of land in dispute in the year 1807, and that at the time of the mutiny the factory was owned by one Mr. Venables. There was a steady decline in the indigo industry since 1877 and all the indigo factories in Azamgarh, whether owned by Europeans or by Indians, had fallen on evil days. There are no copies of the village records available concerning this area of land prior to the year 1874. A certified copy of an extract from the khasra of 1874 was, however, filed by the plaintiffs and one Mr. Goutier is recorded in that document in the tenants' column as an occupancy tenant of 30 years standing.

An extract from the khatauni of 1876 was also filed by the plaintiffs, but as that document was incomplete, we, with the consent of the appellants' Counsel, permitted the Counsel for the respondents to produce a certified copy of the khatauni with respect to all the plots in dispute. The respondents' Counsel has accordingly filed to-day a copy of the jamabandi of 1876 with respect to all the plots in dispute. It appears from this document that the area in dispute was described in the village papers as "ahata godam Goutier Saheb." The area of the ahata is shown in the jamabandi to be 26 bighas 2 biswas 16 dhurs. Out of this area an area of about 5 bighas was under cultivation in 1876 and the rest was parti land. As against the area under cultivation the names of certain shikmi tenants were entered in the jamabandi and the rent payable with respect to the same was entered as Rs. 16-7-6. The parti plots were also specified in the jamabandi and the area of the same was entered as 20 bighas 17 biswas odd and the rent payable with respect to that area was shown as Rs. 63-14-3. The rent on account of the cultivated and the parti area was then totalled together and was shown as Rs. 80-5-9. There is a note in the remark column of the jamabandi that the "wasuli" is Rs. 88-2-0.

There has been some controversy in this Court over the question as to whether the rent entered in the jamabandi on account of the cultivated portion was payable by the shikmis, whose names are entered in the jamabandi, or was payable direct by Mr. Goutier to the zamindars, but in the view that we take it is unnecessary to decide that question. It is enough to say that the jamabandi of 1876 shows that a sum of Rs. 88-2-0 was payable by Mr Goutier to the zamindars on account of the rent of the plots in dispute. It appears that Mr. Goutier had mortgaged the ahata in question along with the buildings, indigo tanks etc., to Sheo Dayal and Har Dayal. The mortgagees put their mortgage into suit and having obained a decree, put to sale the ahata along with the bungalow, indigo tanks etc., and purchased the same on December 12, 1882. The sale certificate, Ex. 1 shows that not only the buildings in the ahata but the ahata itself was put to sale and was purchased by the mortgagee decree-holders. Sheo Dayal and Har Dayal sold the ahata along with the buildings to one Mr. Fox in March 1883. The area of the ahata was shown in the sale-deed as 33 bighas odd. In the year 1887 Mr. Fox sold the ahata to one Mr. F. Foutier. Mr.

Foutier in his turn executed a simple mortgage with respect to the ahata in 1887 in favour of one Raja Ram. Raja Ram filed a suit for sale on the basis of the mortgage in 1889 and, having obtained a decree, put the ahata to sale and purchased the same himself. Raja Ram having died, his rights and interests in the ahata passed to his two sons, named Radha Raman and Badri Prasad. Radha Raman and Badri Prasad executed the sale-deed dated July 31, 1926, in favour, of the plaintiffs to which reference has already been made. Radha Raman was defendant No. 1 and Badri Prasad's son, Sugan Chand, was defendant No. 2 in the present litigation and they were impleaded as defendants first party.

Having obtained the sale-deed just mentioned, the plaintiffs filed an application in the Revenue Court praying that their names be recorded as proprietors in the khewat. The application was opposed by defendants second and third parties who, as stated before, are the zamindars of the village. The Assistant Collector considered that the owners of the factory had enjoyed an absolute and heritable right in the land and accordingly ordered that the names of the plaintiffs should be recorded as proprietors. The zamindars appealed to the Collector who held that the position of the plaintiffs and of their predecessors-in-title was not that of proprietors, and, as such their names could not be entered in the khewat. He observed that the matter was one which would ultimately have to be settled by the Civil Courts. He however ordered that the names of the vendors of the plaintiffs should continue to be shown in the revenue papers and a note should be made in the column of remarks to the effect that the property has been sold.

Both the Assistant Collector and the Collector felt considerable difficulty in deciding about the nature of the tenure of the ahata in question. The zamindars being dissatisfied with the order of the Collector, appealed to the Commissioner who was also puzzled about the case. He considered that the present plaintiffs had failed to prove that they had any proprietary rights in the land, and, as such, their names could not be entered as proprietors. He also noted that as tenancy rights could not be sold the names of the plaintiffs could not be entered as tenants. He however observed that the status of the plaintiffs was "something superior to ordinary tenant's rights." The zanindars eventually filed an appeal in the Board of Revenue against the order of the Commissioner and the appeal was disposed of by a judgment delivered by Mr. Oppenheim, Senior Member of the Board of Revenue, with whose judgment the Junior Member, Mr. Walton, agreed. Mr. Oppenheim noted in the course of the judgment that he was "somewhat puzzled about the correct entry to be made," but he held that he was > "satisfied that the entry which shows as tenants people who have severed all connection with the land and who do not now claim to have any connection with it is an entry which leaves things too much in the air."

He considered that there was much to be said in favour of the view entertained by the Assistant Collector, and that the status of the occupiers of this land was not dissimilar from the status of under-proprietors in Oudh. He however observed that "in the absence of a decision of a Civil Court" it was "not desirable that the Revenue Court should commit itself to the extent of finding that the respondents have proprietary rights." He noted the fact that "the land was always treated as tenancy land, whether rightly or wrongly it is impossible to say." He also took note of the fact that at the settlement the land was treated 'for the purposes of enhancement as occupancy land." In view of these reasons he concluded that the Commissioner and the Collector were right in holding that it was not for the Revenue Court to "make an entry in the khewat about the respondents." As a result of his findings he ordered the names of the present plaintiffs to be recorded in the khatauni in certain columns. The plaintiffs being dissatisfied with the order of the Board of Revenue, filed the suit giving rise to the present appeal. The cardinal question that arose for decision in the case was as to what was the nature of the tenure of the ahata in question. In the trial Court the plaintiffs claimed absolute proprietary title to the land on the basis of the alleged adverse possession themselves and of their predecessors-in-title for a period of over 12 years. This contention of the plaintiffs was overruled by the trial Court on the ground that it was a matter of admission that the zamindars all along realized rent of the ahata in question, and, as such, the possession of the occupiers could not be deemed to be adverse. In arriving at this finding the trial Court took note of the entries in the revenue papers in which all along the occupiers were shown as mere tenants. In the trial Court at a late stage of the case the plaintiffs claimed that their position, in any case, was that of under-proprietors. This contention of the plaintiffs was also overruled by that Court. But, in view of the various transfers of the ahata in question, to which reference has already been made, the trial Court concluded that originally the ahata was given on a lease "for building and manufacturing purposes." It, however, went on to observe that as the ahata had now assumed the character of agricultural land, the vendors of the plaintiffs were

"no longer lessees under the general law but agricultural tenants amenable to tenancy law and as such incompetent to make the transfer which is, consequently, invalid."

Having arrived at the conclusion that the status of the vendors of the plaintiffs was that of mere tenants the trial Court dismissed the suit. As already stated, the plaintiffs abandoned their claim to proprietary rights in the Appellate Court, but maintained that their tenure was permanent and that they had a transferable and heritable right in the same. The Appellate Court acceded to this contention of the plaintiffs and passed a decree accordingly.

We have noted at the very inception of this judgment that it is difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain with precision the origin of the tenure of this ahata and the terms and the conditions subject to which the tenure was created. It is, however, clear that in the year 1807 there was an indigo factory with appurtenant buildings in this ahata and that till the year 1874 the major portion of the ahata was uncultivated. After the manufacture of the indigo dwindled or ceased, portions of the area of the ahata were brought under cultivation year after year. It appears from the revenue papers that by the year 1900 the major portion of the ahata was under cultivation, and so it is at present. The occupiers of the ahata were all along entered as occupancy tenants but the rent payable to the zamindars was the fixed and invariable amount of Rs. 88-2-0. It is obvious that so long as a negligible area of the ahata was under cultivation the occupiers of the ahata could not be correctly described as occupancy tenants of the entire ahata. Further, it is clear that occupancy tenants could not exercise the right of transfer, whereas in the present case we find that the ahata in question was the subject of numerous transfers and no exception to those transfers was ever taken by the zamindars. The zamindars all along remained content with the receipt of the rent mentioned above and it is worthy of note that this rent was payable to the zamindars even when practically the whole of the ahata was devoid of cultivation. On these facts the conclusion is irresistible that originally the ahata was given by the zamindars to an indigo manufacturer on a perpetual lease at a fixed rental for building and manufacturing purposes. It must further be held on the facts stated above that the rights conferred on the indigo manufacturer were heritable and transferable. The position of the lessee and of his successors could not, therefore, be of agricultural tenants, nor can the mere fact of the ahata being brought under cultivation nullify the lease originally granted by the zamindars. It follows that the view taken by the lower Appellate Court is correct and ought to be affirmed.

The view that we take receives support from an unreported decision of this Court in F. A. No. 60 of 1924 decided on April 14, 1927. That appeal arose out of a pre-emption suit. In that case one Mr. Dodsworth describing himself as the proprietor of an indigo factory, and the land appertaining thereto, in the District of Azamgarh, sold the same to certain persons. Some of the zamindars of the village then brought a suit for pre-emption. The vendees pleaded in defence that no proprietary interest was possessed by Mr. Dodsworth and a claim for pre-emption could not, therefore, be maintained in accordance with the provisions of the Agra Pre-emption Act. This contention of the vendees was accepted both by the Court below and by this Court. In deciding the appeal this Court made the following observations :

"The land appears to have been let to his (Mr. Dodsworth's) predecessors-in-title for the purpose of building and running an indigo factory. A rent was reserved which has been regularly paid to the zamindars. The interest possessed by the occupier cannot therefore be proprietary interest but is analogous to that of a lessee of land for building purposes."

Although the origin of a tenancy may not be known, yet if it is proved that the tenant and his ancestors were in possession of the tenure for a long time and had built a pucca house on the same and from time to time the tenure had been transferred by succession and purchase without protest by the landlord, a Court is justified in presuming that the tenure is of a permanent nature. This was the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in A. Casperz v. Kedar Nath Sarbadhikari (1) and by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Naba Kumari v. Behari

(1) 28 C 738; 5 C W N 858.

Lal (2). For the reasons given above we dismiss this appeal. But in view of the fact that the plaintiffs ultimately abandoned the case as originally put forward by them in the trial Court and the relief eventually granted to them by the Appellate Court was not the relief prayed for by them in the plaint, we direct the parties to bear their own costs of this litigation in all the Courts.

Second Appeal No. 318 of 1938
May 1, 1940
FAZAL ALI AND MEREDITH, JJ.
GANSU RAM AND OTHERS—
APPELLANTS
Mst. PARVATI KUER—RESPONDENT

Execution sale—Decretal amount substantially reduced in appeal after sale—Judgment-debtor found not in position to pay up even reduced amount before date of sale or within 30 days from sale—Sale proceeds less than final decretal amount—S. 144, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), held did not apply and sale could not be set aside—Evidence—Duty of party—Party not producing best evidence—Court can draw inference unfavourable to party.

In execution of a decree, the property of the judgment-debtors was sold and purchased by the decree-holder. Subsequently, the amount of the decree was reduced substantially by the High Court in second appeal. The sale proceeds were less than he final decretal amount. It was found that the judgment-debtors were not in a position to pay up the whole decretal amount and thereby avoid the sale of their property, even if the decretal amount had been reduced before the sale was held or within 30 days from the date of sale;

Held, that as the judgment-debtors could not have paid up even the reduced decretal amount and the sum realised by the sale was less than the reduced decretal amount, the situation would not have been altered in any way, had the decree been modified before instead of after the sale and hence this was not a case to which s. 144, Civil P. C., was applicable and the sale could not be set aside. 137 Ind. Cas. 269 (1) and 68 Ind. Cas. 516 (3), relied on.

It is for a party to prove his case by the best evidence available to support the contentions put forward. Where, therefore, a money-lender is examined by a party wishing to prove a money transaction but fails to get his account books produced, the Court is entitled to draw an adverse inference against him.

S. A. from the appellate order of the District Judge, Patna, dated September 6, 1938.

Mr. B. P. Sinha, for the Appellants.
Mr. C. P. Sinha, for the Respondent.

Meredith, J.—This is miscellaneous second appeal by the judgment-debtors and comes before us after a remand for an additional finding of fact, this finding having now been received. The respondent obtained a decree for Rs. 963-12 15 dams, against the appellants. In execution of that decree, the property of the appellants was sold on June 15, 1936, for Rs. 300 and purchased by the decree-holder. Subsequently, in 1937, the amount of the decree was reduced by the High Court in second appeal to the sum of Rs. 507-14-6.

The judgment-debtors thereupon applied before the Munsif to get the sale set aside upon payment of the entire decretal amount of Rs. 507-14-6 and to get back their property, by way of restitution under s. 144, Civil P.C. The learned Munsif rejected this application on the ground that the sale proceeds (Rs. 300) were less than the final decretal amount; so the property would have had to be sold in any case, irrespective of the modification of the decree. The lower Appellate Court took the same view and the case then came to the High Court in second appeal. This Court thought it advisable to have a clear finding of fact as to whether, if the decretal amount at the time of the sale had been only Rs. 507-14-6, the appellants would have been in a position to get the sale set aside by paying that reduced decretal amount within 30 days of the sale. The case went back to the learned District Judge, who sent it to the Munsif, who gave both parties an opportunity of adducing evidence on this point. After considering that evidence the learned District Judge has forwarded his finding. He says that he has no hesitation in finding it as a fact that the appellants were not in a position to pay up the whole decretal amount and thereby avoid the sale of their property, even if the decretal amount had been reduced to Rs. 507-14-5 only before the sale was held or within 30 days from the date of sale.

That finding of fact is binding upon us in second appeal. It has been sought to challenge it on the ground that the learned District Judge misdirected himself. One of the circumstances, upon which he based his finding, (though, be it noted, it was by no means the only circumstance) was that it was alleged that a mortgage bond which had been executed in favour of the appellants by one Bandhu Mahto had been redeemed on February 14, 1936, on payment of Rs. 1,695. The learned Judge found that there was an endorsement of payment of this sum on the back of the bond dated February 14,1936. The appellant's case, however, was that the mortgagor had paid this amount by giving an ijara of the same property to one Parbhu Chand, the brother-in-law of appellant No. 2. The learned District Judge commented adversely on the evidence of this Parbhu Chand, because though he was a substantial money-lender, he did not produce his account books in support of this transaction. It is argued for the appellants that the learned District Judge was wrong in drawing an unfavourable inference, because Parbhu Chand was not called upon to produce these account books. The contention does not appear to me to be a sound one. It was for the appellants to prove their case by the best evidence, and when they examined Parbhu Chand to support their case, it was, in my view, for them to see that their witness produced the best evidence available to support the contentions put forward. It was therefore the appellants who should have summoned this witness with his account books and the learned Judge, in my view, was quite right in drawing an unfavourable inference. Apart from that, the learned Judge, as I have said, considered a quantity of other evidence. He noted the fact that the ijara was in the name of Parbhu Chand, a brother-in-law of appellant No. 2, and he came to the conclusion that this was not really a cash transaction, but the substitution of a usufructuary mortgage for the original mortgage executed for the appellants in the name of this Parbhu Chand. The learned Judge noted also that direct evidence on this point was given by a witness on behalf of the respondent, and the Judge considered that the evidence of this witness was worthy of credit. He also took into account the fact that though the appellants could have secured under the orders of the Court a stay of the sale by deposit of half the original decretal amount, nevertheless they never put up that sum.

The finding of the learned District Judge cannot be called an unreasonable one and is not one which can be successfully challenged in second appeal. It must be taken then that the appellants were not in a position to pay even the reduced decretal amount at the time of the sale. This being so, the case was in essentials similar to Doyal Sarkar v. Tari Deshi (1). In that case Rankin, C. J. held that the judgment-debtor in a case of this kind could not recover the properties except upon showing that the sale was in substance and truth a consequence of the error in the original decree. For the appellants, it is argued that that was a case where the decree had only been slightly modified, and that where the decree has been substantially altered, it must be taken that the original decree ceased to exit. The principle to be followed therefore should be that laid down in Syed Nathadu Sahib v. Nallu (2). This ruling of the Madras High Court was however subsequently considered by the Madras High Court itself in Sundaram Reddi v. Raghava Reddi (3) where it was observed that under the old Code the Court was not limited, in granting such restitution as it thought fit, to place the party in the same position as he would have occupied but for the variation or reversal of the original decree. Section 144 of the present Code gave a much more restricted power, and the decision in Syed Nathadu Sahib v. Nallu (2), might be distinguished on the ground that it related to s. 583 of the old Code. Their Lordships went on to lay down a criterion precisely similar to that adopted in Doyal Sarkar v. Tari Deshi (1), namely, that the prejudice to be removed by restitution must be result of the erroneous terms of the original decree. Once therefore it is held that the erroneous character of the original decree made no difference to what took place, then manifestly, upon this criterion, there is no case for restitution, and whether the modification of the decree is slight or substantial will be irrelevant. It is quite clear having regard to the finding of fact now received that in the present case the position was not altered in any way by the modification of the decree, and as the judgment-debtors could not have paid up even the reduced decretal amount and the sum realised by the sale was less than the reduced decretal amount, the situation would not have been altered in any way, had the decree been modified before instead of after the sale. This is not a case where there was any prejudice owing to the erroneous character of the original decree, and is not therefore a case to which s. 144 Civil. P. C. is applicable. I would dismiss this appeal with costs throughout.

Apart from any express restriction in that respect imposed by the husband there is no limit to the time during which a widow may exercise her power of adoption. [p. 415, col. 2.]

A direction to operate as a prohibition against a widow adopting a boy as a son to her husband except the boy named by him must be explicitly made and clearly intended by the husband to limit the discretion of his widow for all time and on every occasion on which otherwise after his death his widow might validly make an adoption to him.

Held, on facts that the direction in the will that the son of a nephew should be adopted was merely recommendatory so long as a nephew was available to give him in adoption and it was not intended that the direction was to be followed for all time and on every occasion when the widow might choose to adopt. It was reasonable to infer from the provisions of the will that the testator was desirous that an adoption should be made by his widow. He prohibited the adoption of a son of V or K and he expressed the desire that the son of one of his other nephews should be adopted if available. But he had not made it clear that in the event of such a son not being available no adoption was to be made. The adoption of the plaintiff who was a grandson of one of the eligible nephews was therefore valid as at that time, the three eligible nephews and their wives were all dead, so that, although some of their sons were living, they had no parents to give them in adoption, and it was impossible to comply with the provisions of the will. 64 Ind. Quaere.—It is doubtful whether a trust deed can be regarded as an alienation.

Trustees are bound to carry out the provisions of the trust deed and are justified in continuing to do so even after the suit is brought, challenging the trust at least until the passing of the decree and hence mesne profits should not be ordered against them. They are bound by law to defend the suit which sought to put an end to the trust It is therefore unreasonable that they should be made to pay the costs of the suit out of their own pockets. [p. 416, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. V. B. Virkar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. G. Desai and S. A. Kher, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 respectively.

Broomfield, J.—The appellants in this case are the trustees under a deed of truts executed by Sagunabai widow of Laxman Damodar Juvekar. The plaintiff was adopted by Sagunabai in 1937 as son to her deceased husband and he has sued to recover the property from the possession of the trustees. Laxman before he died in 1900 made a will the principal provisions of which were as follows. He gave all his movable property to his wife and also the income of his immovable properties. But she was restrained from alienating these properties by sale, mortgage or gift. Authority was given to her to adopt a son subject to certain restrictions. A sum of Rs. 100 a year was set apart for beating drums before the family God, morning and evening and it was provided that if she did not adopt Sagunabai was to make some permanent arrangement for this and other charitable purposes mentioned by the testator. In case a son was either born to the testator or adopted, then the will provided that the son was to be full owner of the property.

Fifteen years after her husband's death Sagunabai executed a deed of trust. This deed, Ex. 45, begins by reciting that Sagunabai had been given malki or ownership of the estate under the will, which was not a fact. The object of the trust deed was stated to be that "the estate may continue to be managed and used as I am doing up till now." As regards the powers of the trustees the deed says,

"in order to carry out the management mentioned hereafter I have from to-day entrusted to the trustees title to the estate and I have given them all sorts of rights except the right of making a mortgage, sale or gift."

Then there are various directions to the trustees to spend the income on specified charitable object allowing Rs. 100 a year Sagunabai's maintenance. In 1919 Sagunabai decided to adopt a son and did adopt one Shrirang alias Siddeshwar, but the adoption was challenged by the trustees and was set aside by the Courts. The trustees continued as before in management of the property until 1937 when the plaintiff was adopted. The plaintiff's suit was resisted by the trustees who contended that the adoption was invalid on various grounds. The trial Court, however, found that it was valid and awarded possession to the plaintiff with mesne profits from the date of suit. In this appeal the learned Advocate for the appellants contends, firstly, that the plaintiff's adoption was invalid in view of the directions contained in Laxman's will, and, secondly, that if the adoption is valid, the adopted son is bound by the provisions of the trust deed in 1915. In order to consider the first argument it is necessary to refer in more detail to the provisions of the will. The important paragraph in this connection is para. 4 which contains these words :

"I authorize her (i. e. Sagunabai) to take a boy in adoption after my death. As to the boy to be adopted she may adopt any one of the sons of my nephews other than my two nephews Vishnu Vasudeo and Krishnaji Sitaram according to her choice. If they refuse to give their son in adoption, she may adopt a boy of any other person as she likes, but she shall not adopt a boy of either Vishnu or Krishnaji."

Reference may also be made to para. 6 which says :

"In case I happen to survive this illness and a son be borne to me, then my wife should, after me, manage the properties and household affairs in the way I have been doing, until that son attains majority. If that does not happen, then, after me, a boy should be adopted by her as written in para. 4 at any time she likes."

Laxman had three brothers all of whom had sons. He had altogether five nephews, two of whom he mentioned in the will as persons whose sons he did not wish to be adopted by his widow. That left three eligible nephews and they all had sons. In 1919 at the time of the first adoption some of these nephews and sons were still living so that there was nothing to prevent Sagunabai complying with the provisions of para. 4 of the will. Instead of doing that she adopted somebody else and therefore the adoption was held to be invalid. But by the year 1937, when the plaintiff was adopted, the three eligible nephews and their wives were all dead, so that, although some of their sons were living, they had no parents to give them in adoption, and it was impossible to comply with the provisions of the will. Plaintiff is a grandson of one of the eligible nephews. Mr Virkar's argument is that on the true construction of para. 4 of the will the widow's power to adopt was restricted so that she could only adopt one of the sons of the nephews other than Vishnu and Krishnaji. The only exception to that was that if these nephews refused to give their sons in adoption the widow was authorized to adopt another boy. It is urged that the refusal of the nephews to give their sons in adoption was a condition precedent to the adoption of any other person and that as, so far as the evidence goes, Sagunabai never tried to adopt a son of one of the eligible nephews and waited until the parents of these sons were all dead, her power to adopt had become extinguished. The provisions of this will were construed by this Court in the case which arose from the first adoption and the following observations were made in the judgment in F. A. No 234 of 1921, decided on February 5, 1923, by Macleod, C. J. and Crumph, J., Shrirang Laxman Juvekar v. Shri Dev Bhargavram :

"As there was a clause in the will with regard to the widow's power of adoption the widow was bound to follow the directions given therein. She was not obliged to adopt anybody and if she were minded to adopt, then, in the first instance she could only adopt one of the sons of the testator's nephews other than the two nephews Vishnu and Krishna. There is therefore an express direction that she should adopt if she made up her mind to adopt, from a particular class of grand-nephews. It was only in case nephews, other than Vishnu and Krishna, refused to give a boy in adoption that the widow could adopt any other person she liked, always excepting the boy belonging to Vishnu or Krishna. In order to show that the widow was entitled to adopt the plaintiff according to the directions of her husband's will, it would have to be proved that there were no grand-nephews who could be adopted and that therefore the choice of the widow had become unobstructed."

Mr. Virkar says that these observations support his argument in the present case, but we do not think so. The position then was, as I have already mentioned, that there were grand-nephews alive who could have been given by their parents. Therefore, it was open to Sagunabai to comply with the directions in the will and that being so, she was no doubt bound to compiy with them. But in 1937, when the parents of the grand-nephews were all dead, it was no longer possible to comply with the directions in the will. The last sentence of the passage quoted suggests that in such circumstances there would be no longer any obstruction to the widow's power to adopt. We were referred to a decision of the Privy Council in Rajendra Prasad Bose v. Gopal Prasad Sen (1), where their Lordships said that the ordinary rule as to the construction of powers which prevails in England (as, for instance, that when a power is given to be executed with the consent of a person, and that person dies before the power is executed, the power comes to an end), is generally applicable to the construction of an anumatipatra executed in India. But this was a case from Patna governed by the Dayabhaga law, under which a widow cannot adopt except with the authority of her husband. That is to say, her power to adopt is derived from the husband. In Bombay, on the other hand, she has an inherent power to adopt under the Hindu Law which she can exercise except in so far as it has been expressly limited or restricted by the husband. Cases under the Dayabhaga therefore in our opinion have no application to the present case. Sitabai v. Bapu (2), was also cited for the proposition that a Hindu widow under the Bombay school of law is bound to obey any mandatory direction contained in her husband's will as to the way in which her power of adoption should be exercised. That proposition is of course correct. But in our opinion it does not support the argument advanced on behalf of the appellants here. The only provisions in para. 4 of this will which can be described as mandatory is the prohibition against the adoption of a son of either Vishnu or Krishnaji

The leading authority on this point is Yadao v. Namdeo (3), where their Lordships laid down the rule that a direction to operate as a prohibition against a widow adopting a boy as a son to her husband except the boy named by him must be explicitly made and clearly intended by the husband to limit the discretion of his widow for all time and on every occasion on which otherwise after his death his widow might validly make an adoption to him. This rule was re-affirmed in Jagannath Rao v. Rambharosa (4). The learned trial Judge was of opinion that, applying this rule to the present case, the direction that the son of a nephew should be adopted was merely recommendatory so long as a nephew was available to give him in adoption and it was not intended that the direction was to be followed for all time and on every occasion when the widow might choose to adopt. We are in agreement with this view. We think it is reasonable to infer from the provisions of the will that Laxman was desirous that an adoption should be made by his widow. He prohibited the adoption of a son of Vishnu or Krishnaji and he expressed the desire that the son of one of his other nephews should be adopted if available. But he has not made it clear that in the event of such a son not being available no adoption was to be made. I may refer in this connection to Lakshmibai v. Rajaji (5), where this Court approved a proposition contained in West and Buhler (p. 997*):

"It is common for a husband authorizing an adoption to specify the child he wishes to be taken. Should that child die, or be refused by his parents, the authority would still be held, at least in Bombay, to warrant the adoption of another child, unless indeed he had said 'such a child and no other.' The presumption is that he desired an adoption, and by specifying the object merely indicated a preference."

It can make no difference in principle we think whether the specified child dies or the parents of that child die so that his adoption becomes impossible. We think, therefore, that this authority applies directly to the present case.

Mr. Virkar suggested that it made a difference that the widow had not apparently made any attempt to comply with the provisions of the will by adopting a son of one of the nephews other than Vishnu or Krishnaji which she could have done had she been so minded. But the husband could have limited the time within which the adoption was to be made. It seems that it was not his desire to impose any such limit and in para. 6 of the will he has expressly stated that the widow might adopt at any time she liked. The law is clear that apart from any express restriction in that respect imposed by the husband there is no limit to the time during which a widow may exercise her power of adoption. Although in the trial Court the validity of the adoption was assailed on various other grounds, no other argument has been put forward in the appeal except that which I have discussed. In our opinion, the trial Court was perfectly right in the view it took of the construction of the will and in finding that the adoption was a valid one.

If the adoption was valid, it is obvious, we think, that the plaintiff cannot be affected by the provisions of the trust deed. It is clear from paras. 6, 7 and 9 of the will that if a son were borne to the testator or adopted to him, that son was to be the owner of the property. The learned trial Judge has expressed the opinion that the trust deed was void ab initio as being beyond the powers of the widow. Apparently he regarded it as an alienation. What was prohibited by the will was alienating the property by gift, sale or mortgage. I think it is doubtful whether the trust deed can be regarded as an alienation. But the point is not really material. If it was an alienation, then clearly it was void. If it was not, it was merely an arrangement made by the widow for the management of the property until such time as an adoption was made and the arrangement must necessarily come to an end when the adoption took place. It was urged that the trust deed had been executed by defendant No. 3 in accordance with her husband's instructions as given in the will of which she was made executrix. But the will itself shows that any such arrangement was only to be made in case there were no adoption. It would be quite impossible to hold therefore that the trust deed is in any way binding on the plaintiff.

On the merits, therefore, the appeal entirely fails, but we think there is force in Mr. Virkar's arguments in respect of two minor points, mesne profits and costs. Mesne profits have been awarded from the defendants from the date of the suit. But the defendants being trustees were bound to carry out the provisions of the trust deed and were justified in continuing to do so even after the suit was brought, at least until the passing of the decree by which the adoption of the plaintiff was affirmed to be valid. We think therefore, that the order as to mesne profits should be varied and it should be made subject to this, that the trustees shall be held discharged from liability in respect of sums proved by them to have been paid in accordance with the trust deed between the date of suit and the date of the decree. After the date of the decree we consider that if the defendants continued to make payments they did so at their own risk.

Then as regards costs, the trial Court's order was that the trustee-defendants were to pay the costs both of the plaintiff and of defendant No. 3. But it was the duty of the defendants as trustees to take all steps reasonably requisite for the preservation of the trust property and the assertion or protection of the title thereto (s. 13, Trusts Act, II of 1882). They were therefore bound by law to defend the plaintiff's suit which sought to put an end to the trust. Section 32 of the same Act provides that every trustee may reimburse himself, or pay or discharge out of the trust property, all expenses properly incurred in or about the execution of the trust, or the realization, preservation or benefit of the trust property. This being the law it is unreasonable that the defendants should be made to pay the costs of the suit out of their own pockets. We think the proper order to make as to the costs of the trial Court is that the costs of plaintiff and all the defendants including defendant No. 3 should come out of the estate and we order accordingly. On the other hand we consider that there is no substance in the appeal except on the minor points to which I referred, and we are not prepared to direct that the costs in this Court should come out of the estate. The order as to the appeal will be that the appeal is dismissed with costs, but we direct that there should be one set of costs, payable to the plaintiff.

Madras Debt Conciliation Act (XI of 1936), ss. 18, 17—Board is entitled to give certificate under s. 18, even when it is bound eventually to dismiss petition of debtor under s. 17.

Action under s. 18, Mad. Debt Conciliation Act does not depend on a majority of the creditors agreeing to a settlement of the debts owing to them. The opening words of s. 18 (1) make it quite clear that the certificate can be granted during the pendency of the proceedings if a fair offer has been made by the debtor and has been refused by the debtor. The fact that the Board may have to dismiss a debtor's petition under s. 17, does not deprive it of the right of exercising its power of certifying that a reasonable offer has been refused.

C. Misc. P. praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to issue a Writ of Certiorari calling for the records in D. C. B. No. 558 of 1939 on the file of the Debt Conciliation Board, Namakkal, Salem District and to quash the order passed by the said Board on November 17, 1939.

Messrs. C. S. Krishnamurthi Iyer and C. S. Vidyasankara Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. A. Srirangachariar, for Respondent No. 1.

Leach, C. J.—This matter raises the question whether a Debt Conciliation Board is entitled to give a certificate under s. 18 of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act, 1936, when it will be bound eventually to dismiss under s. 17 of the Act a petition for the settlement of the petitioner's debts. The respondent applied to the Debt Conciliation Board, Namakkal, for a settlement of his debts under the provisions of s. 4 of the Act. His only creditor was the petitioner in this proceedings, who has security. The petitioner appeared before the Board and informed it that he was not prepared to agree to a settlement of his debt. Before there can be a settlement of debts under the Act creditors representing more than fifty per cent. of the total amount of debts must agree to a settlement. If no amicable settlement is arrived at within 12 months from the date of the application the Board is bound by virtue of the provisions of s. 17 to dismiss the application. In this case the Board did not at once dismiss the petition as the result of the petitioner's objection, but proceeded to consider what would be the amount payable by the respondent to the petitioner if the debt was scaled down in accordance with the provisions of the Mad. Agri. Relief Act. The Board has no power to scale down the debt, as was pointed out by this Court in Jonnalagadda Ramasami Chetty v. Ramachandra Rao (1). The Board did not, however, purport to scale down the debt. It merely considered what would be the figure arrived at if the provisions of the Mad. Agri. Relief Act were applied. It found that on this basis the debt due to the petitioner would be reduced to Rs. 1954. Thereupon the respondent expressed his willingness to pay this amount with interest at 6¼ per cent. from October 1, 1937, till the date of payment. The Board considered that this was a reasonable offer and granted a certificate under s. 18 (1) of the Mad. Debt Conciliation Act. The petitioner says that the Board had no power to pass this order and therefore, it should be quashed.

Sub-s. (1) of s. 18 states that where during the hearing of any application made under s. 4, any creditor refuses to agree to amicable settlement, the Board shall, if it is of opinion that the debtor has made such creditor a fair offer which the creditor ought reasonably to accept, grant the debtor a certificate, in such form as may be prescribed in respect of the debts owed by him to the creditor. The effect of a certificate is that when a creditor sues in a Civil Court for the recovery of his debt the Court cannot allow the plaintiff any costs in the suit, or any interest on the debt after the date of the certificate in excess of simple interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the principal amount due on the date of the certificate. This provision is contained in sub-s. (2). Rules have been framed under the Act and they contain the form of certificate to be given under s. 18 (1). The form reads as follows:—

"This is to certify that during proceedings No. of under the Mad. Debt Conciliation Act, 1936, between (debtor) on the one hand and (creditor) on the other hand, for the settlement of an alleged debt of Rs. the said creditor has, in our opinion, refused a fair offer of settlement made by the said debtor, which the said creditor ought reasonably to have accepted.

(1) The following particulars of the debt were furnished by the said creditor under s. 10 (1) of the Act."

Action under s. 18 does not depend on a majority of the creditors agreeing to a settlement of the debts owing to them. The opening words of sub-s. (1) of s. 18 (1) namely, "Where during the hearing of any application under s. 4" make it quite clear that the certificate can be granted during the pendency of the proceedings if a fair offer has been made by the debtor and has been refused by the creditor. The form of certificate given in the rules emphasizes this. The fact that the Board may have to dismiss a debtor's petition as the Board will have to do in this case, does not deprive it of the right of exercising its power of certifying that a reasonable offer has been refused. As the Board did not purport to scale down the debt under the provisions of the Mad. Agri. Relief Act, but merely took into consideration the provisions of that act in order to consider what would be a fair offer by the respondent, it cannot be said that it has acted contrary or without jurisdiction or even contrary to law.

The petitioner's application for a writ of certiorari must be dismissed with costs.

Memo of costs will follow.

Second Appeal No. 42 of 1940

MAUNG SHWE THIN—APPELLANT

MAUNG THA OK—RESPONDENT

Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation (III of 1889), ss. 53 (2) (xii), 41—Default in payment of revenue by fishery lessee—Surety's land resumed without notice for payment of revenue and without attachment or sale—Surety's claim is not barred by s. 53 (2) (xii).

The words "connected with or arising out of the collection of revenue" in s. 53 (2) (xii) must be construed reasonably. Their meaning cannot be extended so as to include any consequence however indirect, or however unjustified by law of action taken to collect revenue. The words "collection of revenue" mean collection by payment in the ordinary course or recovery of arrears in the way allowed by s. 41, Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation. Consequently where on default by a fishery lessee in the payment of revenue his surety's land is resumed without serving any notice to pay the revenue and without attachment or sale of the land within the meaning of s. 41, the claim of the surety cannot be said to be connected with or arising out of collection of revenue. The claim is not therefore barred by s. 53 (2) (xii).

S. A. against the decree of the Assistant District Court, Minbu, dated November 4, 1939.

Mr. G. N. Banerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. U E Maung (1), for the Respondent.

Judgment. — The plaintiff-respondent Maung Tha Ok was surety for the payment of fishery revenue on behalf of a fishery lessee in Upper Burma. That lessee failed to pay the revenue and Maung Tha Ok's land was sold. Maung Tha Ok claimed that it was bobabaing land, the defendant that it was State land. The trial Court did not come to any finding on the point. Under s. 27, Fisheries Act, arrears of fishery revenue may be recovered as if they were arrears of revenue, (not land revenue,) and the term "revenue" is defined in s. 37 (c) of the Regulation as including revenue payable on account of fisheries. The surety's land was resumed though notice to pay the revenue was never served on him. The land was taken over or resumed by Govt. and the defendant-appellant Maung Shwe Thin was allowed to take it on payment of the arrears of Rs. 70-8-0. There was however no attachment or sale of the land within the meaning of s. 41 which gives the processes by which arrears may be recovered. Resumption is only allowed by the rules in the case of arrears of land revenue itself, and only in the case of State land; vide r. 174 framed under s. 41 (1) (d): (r. 34 quoted by the Court of First Appeal has been cancelled).

The two lower Courts were of the opinion that a Civil Court had jurisdiction and that the plaintiff's claim was bound to succeed. The case quoted by the lower Appellate Court, Maung Po Cho v. Maung San Bwin (1), is irrelevant. That concerns the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to entertain disputes between private persons as to the right to occupy land over which no landholders rights have been acquired under the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act. There are similar decisions in Upper Burma as to the effect of s. 53 (2) (ii) of the Regulation Sonilal Sheoshankar v. Delawar (2) and Burma Oil Co. Ltd. v. Baijnath Singh (3). The only contention raised in this appeal is that the suit was barred by the provisions of s. 53 (2) (xii) of the Regulation which says that a Civil Court shall not exercise jurisdiction over "any claim connected with, or arising out of, the collection of revenue, or the enforcement of any process for the recovery of an arrear of revenue or any sum recoverable as such an arrear."

Ko Cheik v. Secretary of State (4) is quoted in this connection. That however was a case where there were properly instituted recovery-proceedings for the recovery of thathameda tax, and the claim was in respect of the property sold in connection with the collection of revenue. The question in the present case is whether the plaintiff's claim is connected with, or arising out of, a collection of revenue, or the enforcement of any process for the recovery of an arrear of revenue. The words "connected with or arising out of the collection of revenue" must be construed reasonably. Their meaning cannot be extended so as to include any consequence however indirect, or however unjustified by law of action taken to collect revenue. I do not think it can be said that the plaintiff's claim in this suit was connected with or arose out of a collection of revenue merely because, when the revenue was not collected, the revenue authorities proceeded without jurisdiction to resume the land. In my opinion, the words "collection of revenue" mean collection by payment in the ordinary course or recovery of arrears in the ways allowed by s. 41. No doubt, if the revenue authorities had proceeded to enforce any process (process is defined in s. 41) for the recovery of arrears of revenue the jurisdiction of a Civil Court would be barred; but there was no attachment and sale here, and what was done was not done in enforcement of any process for the recovery of revenue as defined in the Act. To hold otherwise would mean that if the revenue authorities did anything they

JYOTISH CHANDRA ACHARYA CHOWDHURY—PLAINTIFF AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Age—School Register—Evidentiary value—Hindu Law—Widow—Surrender—Surrender with consent of daughter of next reversioner—Daughter reserving to herself as consideration substantial part of property or stipulating for any benefit to her save and except what was necessary for maintenance—Surrender to preserve husband's estate—Surrender, if binding on next reversioner—Surrendering female, if can take portion of immovable property for maintenance—Such maintenance reserved—If it can be enjoyed by widow's successor after her death—Suit by presumptive reversioner for declaration that surrender by limited owner is invalid—Onus to prove that surrender is valid, where lies.

Where there is no evidence to show on what materials the entry in the school register about the age of a person was made the statement in the register about his age has no evidentiary value. [p. 421, col 1.]

Under Hindu Law a widow can, with the consent of her daughter who is the next heir of her husband, relinquish the estate in favour of the daughter's son. But the consent given by her must show an intention to efface her own interest completely and circumstances must be such as would entitle the Court to construe the transaction as amounting, in substance, to a relinquishment by the widow in favour of her daughter and a second surrender by the latter in favour of the next male heir. If the daughter who joins with the mother in the act of surrender reserves for herself as a consideration for the same, a substantial part of the property which she is also presumed to surrender, or stipulates for any benent to her save and except what is necessary for her maintenance, the transaction might amount to a transfer of her own life interest for consideration, but that could not give the reversioner in whose favour the surrender is made an absolute interest in the estate to the prejudice of the actual reversioner at the time of her death. Mere consent might operate as a personal estoppel against the consenting daughter or any other person claiming through her, but it cannot bind the actual reversioner. Such a surrender is not binding on the actual reversioner even if it is made to preserve the husband's estate. Protection of the husband's estate is, no relevant matter for consideration in determining the validity of a surrender by the widow. [p. 432, col. 1; p. 433, col. 2]

In a suit by presumptive reversioners for a declaration that alienations by the intermediate limited owners is not binding on the actual reversioners the onus of proving legal necessity, is upon the alienee. The suit for a declaration by a presumptive reversioner that surrender by the limited owners is invalid and does not destroy rights of actual reversionors should be governed by the same rule of onus inasmuch as under the Hindu Law the intermediate limited owners have only life interest and the estate vests absolutely only in male reversioners. [p. 425, col. 2.]

The maintenance need not be provided in the shape of a periodical pecuniary allowance and there is nothing in law which prevents the surrendering female heir from taking a portion of the immovable property or a lump sum at once for purposes of maintenance provided it is not unreasonable. 148 Ind. Cas. 828 (3), 57 Ind. Cas. 325 (13) and 53 Ind. Cas. 386 (14), relied on. [p. 432, col. 2; p. 433, col. 1]

A surrendering female heir can always reserve for herself a right to be maintained out of the estate which she surrenders, but the maintenance can be enjoyed by her only during her lifetime. It would be against the spirit of the doctrine of surrender if the widow would stipulate for a maintenance allowance not only to be paid to her during her lifetime, but which would be payable for ever to her heirs and successors. [p 433, col. 2.]

The widow has full powers over the income of her husband's estate, and a gift of the accumulated income, unless she had already chosen to treat it as a part of the corpus, cannot affect the validity of surrender.

Where the immediate reversioners were parties to the alienation by the widow, and consequently precluded themselves from bringing a suit for having it declared to be improper, the remote reversioner is competent to maintain a suit for a declaratory relief under s. 42, Specific Relief Act. As the Act makes no express provision for such cases, the suit must necessarily be referred to Art. 120, under which it should be instituted within six years from the date when the right to sue accrued. The right to sue would accrue ordinarily as soon as the alienation is made, but in a case where the plaintiff was not born when the widow executed the deed, his right to sue could not come into existence before the date of his birth. Abinash Chandra v. Hari Nath (15) and 81 Ind. Cas. 522 (16), relied on.

Nasim Ali, J.—This appeal arises out of a declaratory suit by a Hindu reversioner. The property in dispute belonged to Baboo Mohini Mohan Roy who was Vakil of this Court. The following genealogy will show the relationship of the plaintiff to the defendants other than defendants Nos. 5, 6 and 7.

Defendant No. 2, defendant No. 14 and defendant No. 8 died after the institution of the suit. Defendant No. 2 is represented by her husband and son and defendant No. 10 by his son Dhirendra. On August 13, 1905, defendants Nos. 1 to 3 executed a deed (Ex. 1) in favour of defendant No 4, then a minor, surrendering and relinquishing their right to the properties which Dakshina inherited from his father. On August 16, 1918, defendant No. 8 as guardian of defendant No. 4 mortgaged the disputed properties to defendant No. 5 and the father of defendants Nos. 6 and 7. On March 18, 1930 the mortgagees purchased the mortgaged properties in execution of a decree obtained on the basis of the mortgage. This sale was confirmed on February 29, 1932. On May 25, 1932, plaintiff raised the present suit. His case briefly stated is this : The deed of surrender executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in favour of defendant No. 4 is invalid under the Hindu Law. The auction sale at which defendants Nos. 5 to 7 have purchased the disputed properties therefore cannot affect the right of the reversionary heirs of Dakshina. Defendant No. 1 made an absolute gift of Rs. 1,20,000 to defendants Nos. 10 and 11, from the estate of Dakshina. This gift is not binding on the reversionary heirs of Dakshina.

He accordingly prayed for a declaration : (a) that the deed of surrender and all acts done on the strength of the said deed by defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and 8 are not binding against the reversionary heirs of Dakshina; (b) that the reversionary heirs of Dakshina are entitled to get back from defendants Nos 10 and 11, Rs. 1,20,000. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and 12 did not appear in the suit. Defendants Nos. 4 and 8 filed written statement but did not contest the suit during trial. Defendants Nos. 5 to 7 filed a joint written statement. Their case is that the suit is barred by limitation and that the surrender by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in favour of defendant No. 4 is valid in law and that they have acquired absolute interest in the disputed properties on the basis of their purchase at the mortgage sale. Defendants Nos. 10 and 11 also filed a joint written statement. Their case is that Rs. 1,20,000, was paid to them by defendant No. 1 not out of the corpus of Dakshina's estate but out of the income accumulated after the death of Dakshina.

The material issues raised in suit are these :

"1. Is the suit barred by limitation ?

2. Is the alleged deed of surrender and relinquishment dated August 12, 1905 by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 of their respective life interest in favour of defendant No. 4 a valid and bona fide deed ? Did the entire estate of late Babu Dakhina Mohan Roy vest in defendant No. 4 by the alleged surrender ? Is the alleged relinquishment and surrender binding upon the plaintiff ?

3. Did the sum of Rs. 1,20,000 claimed appertain to the corpus of the estate of late Babu Dakhina Mohan Roy or was it at the absolute disposal of defendant No. 1 ?

The trial Judge has answered all the three issues in favour of the plaintiff and has decreed the suit. Hence this appeal by the defendants Nos. 5 to 7. The dispute in this appeal between Dhirendra (son of defendant No. 10) and the plaintiff has been settled out of Court. The points for determination in this appeal are: (1) Whether the suit is barred by limitation

(2) Whether the surrender by defendants Nos 1 to 3 in favour of defendant No. 4 is valid and binding on all the reversionary heirs of Dakshina.

The first point.—The deed of surrender was executed on August 13, 1905. Plaintiff was born thereafter. The present suit was instituted on May 25, 1932. Plaintiff's case is that he was born in 1318 B. S (1911). The case of the appellants is that he was born in 1908. P. W. No. 2 and P. W. No. 3 support the plaintiff's case. P. W. No. 2 was an officer under plaintiff's father from 1312 B. S to 1335 B. S. while the other witness served under him from 1309 B. S. to 1342 B. S. P. W. No. 2 says that the plaintiff was born in 1318 B. S. P. W. No. 3 says that defendant No. 4 was 1½ or 2 years old when he entered service and that plaintiff was born after he entered service. He also says that the difference in age between defendant No. 4 and the plaintiff is 10 or 11 years. It is clear from the evidence in this case that defendant No. 4 was born in Agrahayan 1307 B. S. The evidence of P. W. No. 3, therefore, materially corroborates the evidence of P. W. No. 2. In support of their case the appellants rely on the statement in the school register about the age of the plaintiff. There is no evidence to show on what materials the entry in the register about the age of the plaintiff was made.

Defendant No. 11 stated in his evidence that plaintiff was born in 1313 B. S. The trial Judge has believed the evidence of P. W. No. 2 and P. W. No. 3. The school register has not much evidentiary value. D. W. No. 11 is vitally interested in the result of this litigation. In view of these facts and circumstances I agree with the Subordinate Judge that plaintiff was born in 1318 B. S. It is not disputed in this case that on this finding the plaintiff's suit is within time. I therefore hold that the suit is not barred by limitation.

Second point.—The portion of the deed of surrender (Ex. 1) which is material for the purposes of this appeal is as follows :

First party—Khitish Chandra Acharyya Chowdhury minor represented by his certificated guardian and father Rames Chandra Acharyya. Second party—Sindu Bala Debi. Third party—Jyotir Moyee Debi. Fourth party—Sikhar Basini Debi.

"Annoda Mohan Roy and Peary Mohan Roy made an application on July 25, 1901, in the original side of Hon'ble High Court for obtaining the probate of the will which was a forged one, on the allegation that it was executed by late Dakshina Mohan Roy on May 31, 1901...On March 10, 1903, the said will was declared to be a forged one and the said probate case was finally dismissed .. ...

Radhika Mohan Roy .....produced another will which was a forged one on the allegation that it was executed (by Dakshina Mohan Roy) on May 2, 1901 and made an application on the original side of the Hon'ble High Court on June 19, 1901 for obtaining probate of the same. In that proceeding... Sindu Bala filed objection ..Considering and knowing that the prosecution of the suit would entail unnecessary expenditure, waste of time and harassment and that even in case of success in the case all the expenses incurred and compensation money would not be recoverable and with the object of doing good and benefit to the reversioners to the estate of late Dakshina Mohan Roy .. the said Radhika Mohan Roy and the second party Sindu Bala Debi both jointly executed a mortgage bond and agreement dated Chaitra 7, 1310 B. S... As consideration for the said deed Sindu Bala Debi promised to pay Radhika Mohan Roy Rs. 50,000 amicably and out of that she paid to him Rs. 5,000 in cash and with regard to the balance of Rs. 45,000 she executed a kistibandi mortgage bond in favour of the said Radhika Mohan Roy. In accordance with the said agreement and the terms of the said deed the aforesaid Radhika Mohan Roy did not appear in the last mentioned probate case which was dismissed on March 22, 1904.

The late Dakshina Mohan Roy left a heavy amount of debts at the time of his death and after his death the second party Sindu Bala Debi has had to contract a loan of a large sum to carry on litigations for the protection and benefit of the estate left by him especially in order to carry on the first mentioned probate case brought by Annoda Mohan Roy and Peary Mohan Roy to its last stage and in connection with the carrying out of the last mentioned probate case brought by Radhika Mohan Roy up to its present stage. There is also some money due to the attorneys, etc., also in connection with the aforesaid two cases and other cases relating to the estate of the late Dakshina Mohan Roy. Loans having been contracted and there having been debts for the protection and benefit of the estate and the amounts of all those loans and debts having been spent for the purposes of and for the benefit of the estate, it (the estate) is liable for the said debts and loans and they are binding against the estate.

I, second party, Sindhu Bala Devi, am a Hindu widow. To perform religious acts etc, is the principal vow of my life; specially I am a pardanashin lady and remain in the inner apartment of the house. I have not sufficient experience and power to manage the properties. Under these circumstances it is very difficult for me to manage and preserve the estate by paying the following, viz. the balance of what has been left out of the debts, etc. contracted by my husband after payment of portion thereof.....and all the debts etc., contracted by me for the purposes and requirements of the estate.....and besides the above dues of the attorney's etc, also for the period they worked for the estate and other debts of the estate of which the amount could not be ascertained .....

With regard to the sahom allotted to my share in the partition suit.....by the said Peary Mohan Roy the sadar revenue thereof is so excessive and the collections thereof are so inconvenient and expensive .....it will be very difficult rather impossible for me to preserve the estate.....

My two daughters viz., the third party Srimaty Tarangini Devi and the fourth party Srimaty Sikhar Basini Debi, who will be heirs to the estate left by my husband after my death, will also obtain the same in life interest only. Even if I relinquish my life interest in their favour and place my husband's estate in their hands there is no chance that they would properly manage the estate of my husband and repay the debts etc., and would protect the estate properly for (the benefit of) their successors who would be entitled to the same in absolute right. I have no son and as far as I know, I have no power to take a son in adoption.....

For the aforesaid reasons I have considered it to be beneficial to me in this life as well as in after life if I and my two daughters, the third and fourth parties cause the absolute right in the estate left by my husband to vest in you from the present time by jointly conferring upon you whatever right, title and interest we have and may have to the same and by making gift of the same to you and by relinquishing the same in your favour absolutely and I think that to be necessary.

We, viz., I, Tarangini Debi, the third party and I, Sikhar Basini Debi the fourth party, have at present no rights of possession and enjoyment in respect of the estate left by our father. We shall have only life interest to the said estate on the death of our mother the second party. We are purdanashin ladies and inmates of the seraglio. We have no properties of our own. We have no experience whatever about worldly affairs. We have also no desire to enjoy the properties. For all these reasons and under the aforesaid circumstances if the estate remains in the hands of my mother, there is no chance of our making any arrangement or rendering any assistance in the matter of protection of the estate and in the works of management and administration etc, thereof and even if the said estate come to our hands it will be difficult for us to manage and protect the said estate. At present you, the first party, are the only reversionary heir to the estate in absolute right alive. If we jointly and in agreement with our mother the second party confer upon you and relinquish in your favour whatever right, title and interest we have to the said estate, you being entitled to the same wholly and in absolute right shall be able to protect it. There seems to be no other good arrangement for protection of the estate except the above. If the estate is ruined, I, the third party shall not have any chance of getting the benefit I have been deriving on the basis of this document, and if any son be born of my womb or if I take a son in adoption then they will have no chance of obtaining the benefit which has been obtained for them on the basis of this document. For all these reasons for the benefit of myself and my future son or adopted son and in order to prevent harm in future, after taking proper consideration under the circumstances, I have thought it proper to cause full and absolute right to accrue to you by conferring upon you my entire right, title and interest in the said estate and by relinquishing the same in your favour.....

After careful consideration of all the circumstances of the estate, I have fixed Rs. 41,111 as mentioned in schedule jha, as the consideration for conferring upon you and relinquishing in your favour whatever right, title and interest I have got to the said estate, and your father and other well-wishers on your behalf have admitted the said consideration to be adequate. I have no right of enjoyment of the estate before the death of my mother the second party and the future affairs are uncertain in every way and I shall be entitled to the said consideration money from the very beginning and shall be competent to enjoy the interest in the said money from now without any opposition and loss even from now. If, out of the said consideration money, Rs 11,111 be set apart for my own use and enjoyment and the balance of Rs. 30,000 be kept in the custody of my husband by making him trustee under a trust deed, the income derived therefrom also having remained in his custody will swell to a big sum and if a son be born to me in future or if I take a son in adoption the said son or adopted son on attaining majority will be entitled to receive the said money from the said trustee and will derive great benefit and profit thereby.

You the first party, are the only son born of the womb of me, Sikhar Basini Debi, fourth party.

I have regarded it as my duty to confer upon you and to relinquish in your favour whatever right, title and interest we have got and may get in future to the estate left by my father on acceptance of the monthly allowance mentioned in schedule (Ena). In accordance therewith I, third party Tarangini Devi and I, fourth party Sikhar Basini Debi have decided to join our mother the second party and to execute this deed of ekrar surrendering and relinquishing right in your favour.

As consideration for the above deeds and the consideration money mentioned therein, whatever right title and interest I, the second party, Sindhu Bala Devi have or may acquire or which may accrue to me in future in.....the self-acquired properties and the personal properties of the late Dakshina Mohan Roy and all sorts of decrees and suits etc., relating to the estate left by the said late Dakshina Mohan Roy and the accumulated money and all sorts of dues etc. and all sorts of claims etc. and in the deed of agreement executed by the said Radhika Mohan Roy on Chaitra 7, 1310, B. S. in the aforesaid manner, and whatever right, title and interest we, viz. I, the third party Taragini Devi and I, the fourth party Sikhar Basini Devi have in respect of the properties.....and in respect of the decrees and suits etc, relating to the estates left by our father and the accumulated money and all sorts of dues etc., and claims etc., and whatever right, title, and interest we have and may have and which will accrue to us and be enforceable after the death of our mother and whatever right title and interest and possession we have and may acquire in connection with the said estate on the basis of the agreement, dated Chaitra 7, 1310 B. S. executed by our paternal uncle Radhika Mohan Roy in favour of our mother the second party, we jointly and severally confer upon you by this document subject to the terms thereof hereinafter mentioned and relinquish the same in your favour.

Herein below are mentioned, item by item, all those terms and conditions under which the property mentioned in this deed are given away to you in relinquishment of right and interest therein on the basis of this deed :

(a) You, first party agree to pay me, second party, Sindhu Bala Debi Rs. 850 per month as britti or monthly allowance during my life time out of the estate left by my husband on acconnt of my religious acts and maintenance.....As security for payment of the said britti or monthly allowance the property No. 1, out of the properties mentioned in the Schedule marked (Kha), which lies within District Nokhali and which is encumbered with the charge of Rs 45,000 the unpaid money of the agreement dated Chaitra 7, 1310, B. S. executed by the said Radhika Mohan Roy in favour of myself, is encumbered with that charge. You shall not be competent to transfer the said property by sale etc., by ignoring the said britti or monthly.

allowance, that is to say, without being subject to the charge thereof.

(b) My step-brother Srijukta Babu Ananda Chandra Roy and my full-brother Srijukta Nripendra Chandra Roy have laboured hard and made great sacrifice. Especially if Srijukta Babu Ananda Chandra Roy had not rendered pecuniary help continually, it would have been impossible for me to support my objection in the said will case. But for their efforts and care, the estate could not have been preserved so long. Although out of affection for me they did not demand proper remuneration from me yet if I do not make payment to them by way of compensation according to the circumstances of estate and according to my own consideration I shall be morally guilty. Therefore, I have decided to give them the sum of Rs. 1,20,000 by way of gift as compensation for the above. By this deed the right I had and have to enjoy and appropriate according to my pleasure the income of the estate left by my husband which is now in the hands of the administrator pendente lite and the arrears of rent etc., have been entirely given away to you and with regard to that in consultation with your father sriman Ramesh Chandra and your other well-wishers and with the approval and consent of them and the third and fourth parties it has been settled that as consideration for my making wholesale gift of the income and arrears of rent etc, which I am entitled to enjoy according to my pleasure by this deed and for my relinquishing the same in your favour you shall give me Rs 1,20,000 (one lac twenty thousand rupees) with right to exercise full ownership therein and to use and appropriate the same according to my pleasure and on that condition. Out of the said sum you paid Rs. 10,000 in cash on Asharh 19, and out of the balance of Rs. 1,10,000, you shall pay to me Rs 20,000 within two months of the coming of this estate in your own possession from the administrator pendente lite. In default interest will run on the said sum of Rs. 20,000 at the rate of 1 per cent. per annum from that date.

(c) I, third party, Tarangini Debi having made a gift in your favour of the right and interest I have and shall have in future in the estate left by my father and having relinquished the same in your favour, as consideration for the same you have promised to pay me Rs. 41,111. Out of that you paid to me Rs. 5,111 in cash on Asharh 10, 1312, B. S. and as regards the balance of Rs 36,000 you shall pay the same according to the kistbandi mentioned in Schedule (Jha) and having stipulated to pay interest on the defaulted kist at the rate of as. 8 per Rs. 100 per month in case you make default in payment of any kist, you execute an instalment mortgage bond in my favour ..by keeping in mortgage the properties of the Schedules marked Ka, Kha, Ga and the properties of the items Nos. 1 and 2 of the Schedule marked Gha as security for payment of the aforesaid sum...I shall get the said sums in absolute right with right to make all kinds of transfer thereof such as gift, sale, etc, and with right to possess and enjoy the same down to my sons, grandsons and other heirs and representatives in succession...After my death neither you nor any other person shall be entitled to claim the said money as heirs of Dakshina Mohan Roy under any circumstances ..I, third party, Tarangini Debi have no son. You are at present the sole reversionary heir to the estate left by my father in absolute right. Consequently, my mother the second party and myself the third party and my full sister the fourth party all having jointly made a gift of all our right, title and interest in the said estate to you and having relinquished the same in your favour, you become owner thereof in indefeasible and absolute right.

(d) You, first party shall pay monthly allowance at the rate of Rs. 50 per month to me, third party, Tarangini Debi, during my life-time (after the death of her mother). In default of paying the monthly allowance month after month interest will run on the monthly allowance in arrear at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per month. The liability of this monthly allowance shall become operative after the death of my mother.

(e) In consideration of my making a gift of and relinquishing in your favour whatever right and interest I, fourth party, Sikhar Basini, have at present and shall have in future in the estate left by my father you shall pay to me Rs. 100 per month as britti or monthly allowance with right to enjoy the same down to my son, grandsons and other heirs in succession, but during the life-time of my mother, the second party, Sindhu Bala Debi, I shall get monthly allowance at the rate of Rs. 50 per month. After the death of my mother you shall pay monthly allowance at the full rate of Rs. 100 in the aforesaid manner .....In case of failure to pay the said two kinds of monthly allowance at the end of one month interest will run on the said monthly allowance in arrear at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per month from the next month."

The contention of the appellant with regard to Ex. 1 are two-fold: (1) that the transaction embodied in this deed amounts to surrender by a Hindu widow in favour of the second reversioner with the consent of the first reversioner. Such surrender is valid under Hindu Law. The consent of the immediate female reversioner even if purchased for consideration specially when the estate is in danger and cannot be saved except by vesting it in a male reversioner does not vitiate the surrender. (2) Assuming that the transaction embodied in Ex. 1 can be justified only on the basis of double surrender i. e., first surrender by the widow in favour of the daughter and then surrender by the daughter in favour of the daughter's son, the transaction embodied in Ex. 1 binds the actual reversioners.

The first contention can be divided into two parts viz.: (a) the effect of the consent of the first reversioner on the transaction, (b) the effect of the payment of consideration for obtaining the consent of the first reversioner on the transaction. In support of the first part of the contention reliance was placed by the appellants on the following passage in the judgment of this Court in Protab Chunder Roy v. Srimati Joy Monee Dabee (1).

"We think that it admits of no reasonable doubt that under Hindu Law a Hindu lady in possession can relinquish, and by relinquishing anticipate for the reversioners their period of succession; and if she does this in favour of second reversioners in the present instance with the consent of the first, then or afterwards expressed, the relinquishment is valid, and this, notwithstanding that it may be expressed in a form which, under some circumstances, might be open to question."

In that case however, the consenting first reversioner was a male and not a female or limited owner as in the case before us. We were asked by the appellant to extend this rule to the facts of the present case as the rule stated in that case is in general terms. The first part of the rule is a rule of the Hindu Law. By operation of this part the succession of the immediate reversioner is accelerated on the surrender by the widow. This acceleration does not depend upon the consent of the immediate reversioner. The second part of the rule states the effect of the consent of the immediate male reversioner on his accelerated interest is the interest accrued from the operation of the law of surrender by a Hindu limited owner. Where the immediate reversioner is a male, the accelerated interest vests in him absolutely and he can deal with it in any way he likes. He may make a gift of his interest. He can transfer it for consideration. If there is no consideration for the consent the consent may imply a gift. If there is consideration for such consent it may be a sale. Where however the immediate reversioner is a female and the accelerated interest is the interest of a limited owner she can only deal with her limited interest. She cannot, by her dealing, affect the interest of the actual reversioners unless by her consent she effaces her own limited interest and thereby accelerates the absolute interest of the second male reversioner.

The second part of the rule in Protab Chunder Roy v. Srimati Joy Monee Dabee (1), therefore cannot be extended to the consent of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 unless their consent amounted to an effacement of their life interest or surrender according to Hindu Law as except an alienation for legal necessity. I am not aware of any other principle of Hindu Law under which a limited owner can accelerate the absolute interest of the second male reversioner and thereby destroy the interest of actual reversioners. In support of the second part of the first contention reliance was placed by the appellants on the following observations of Sadasiva Ayyar J., in Chinnaswami Pil'ai v. Appaswami Pillai (2) at p. 29:

"The act of a daughter who being next heir surrenders the whole estate, vests the absolute inheritance in the next male heir even if she received consideration for her surrender of the full enjoyment of the property during her life-time."

These observations however must be read along with the facts of that case. In that case the consideration for the surrender by the daughter was maintenance of the daughter and such consideration does not invalidate surrender by a Hindu limited owner under the Hindu Law. The contention of the appellants however is that the relinquishment by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 even if it was for consideration other than maintenance cannot invalidate the relinquishment and prevent the destruction of the right of the actual reversioners as the spirit of the Hindu Law is, inasmuch as it is a meritorious act on the part of a Hindu widow to preserve the estate of her husband for the spiritual benefit of her husband and that if the estate is in such danger that it cannot be saved except by vesting it in a male reversioner the consent of the intermediate female reversioners can be purchased for consideration other than their reasonable maintenance. No authority was cited before us in support of this contention excepting the observations of Sadashiva Ayyar J., quoted above. Assuming that it is the duty of a Hindu widow to save the estate of her husband the imposition of the burden by Ex. 1 on the estate left by Dakshina already over-burdened with liabilities was not a step leading to the preservation of the estate.

I am therefore unable to give effect to the first contention. The second contention raises two points: (1) Whether the surrender by the widow is valid under Hindu Law. (2) Whether the surrender by the daughters is valid under Hindu Law. The basis of the doctrine of surrender by a Hindu widow is the effacement of the widow's interest and not the ex facie transfer by which such effacement is brought about. The result merely is that the next heir of her husband steps into the succession in the widow's place. There is no difference between surrender to a daughter and surrender to the nearest male reversioner: Vytla Sitanna v. Mariveda Viranna (3) at pp. 207-208. The voluntary self-effacement is sometimes referred to as a surrender sometimes as a relinquishment or abandonment of her rights. It may be effected by any process having that effect provided that there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property; Bhagwant Koer v. Dhanuk Dhari (4) at p. 270-271. The surrender cannot be considered bona fide if the arrangement is for dividing the estate with the reversioner: Radha Rani v. Srimati Brindarani (5). Reasonable provision for the maintenance of the widow, regard being had to the position in life of her husband and the size of her estate is not an arrangement for dividing the estate with the reversioner: Vytla Sitanna v. Marvieda Viranna (3) and Radha Rani v. Srimati Brindarani (5). While dealing with the question of the payment of Rs. 1,20,000 to the widow by defendant No. 4 in order to enable her to make a gift of this amount to defendants Nos. 10 and 11, the trial Judge has observed :

"The onus was upon the widow and upon the assignees, defendants Nos. 10 and 11 to show that the said amount had accumulated on the date of surrender. No evidence had been adduced to prove that Rs. 1,20,000 was available out of the income of the estate of Dakshina Babu on the date of surrender. The only evidence in this point is the deposition of Nripen Babu who is an interested witness. From the circumstances of the case, it appears to me that Ananda Roy and Nripendra Roy have taken advantage of the helpless condition of their sister Sindhu Bala and they have taken a good share in the division of Dakshina Babu's properties and that the recitals in the deed of surrender that the gift of Rs. 1,20,000 was made out of the income of Dakshina Babu's estate is not a bona fide recital. I hold therefore that the said gift of Rs. 1,20,000 was invalid against plaintiff who seeks a declaration to the same effect."

The contention of the appellants is that the trial Judge was wrong in holding that the onus was upon the widow and defendants Nos. 10 and 11 to show that Rs. 1,20,000 was available out of the income of the estate on the date of the surrender inasmuch as in the present suit plaintiff wants a declaration that the surrender by the widow was invalid and in such a suit the onus is upon the plaintiff to substantiate the grounds of invalidity of the surrender. In support of this contention reliance was placed upon certain observations of this Court in Brojo Kishoree Dassee v. Sreenath Bose (6) at p. 467. The observations relied upon were made in a suit for a declaration that a certain adoption was invalid. Plaintiff is admittedly a reversioner of Dakshina. The properties covered by the deed of surrender belonged to Dakshina. The deed of surrender does not state that the amount of accumulations was Rs. 1,20,000 or thereabout. If the actual reversioner brings a suit after the death of the limited owner or owners for possession of the estate of the last full owner and his claim is opposed by persons claiming under alienation by the intermediate limited owners for legal necessity the onus is upon the alienees to prove legal necessity. I do not see any reason why the claim based on surrender by limited owners would stand on a different footing.

In a suit by presumptive reversioners for a declaration that alienations by the intermediate limited owners is not binding on the actual reversioners the onus of proving legal necessity, in my opinion, is also upon the alienees. The suit for a declaration by a presumptive reversioner that surrender by the limited owners is invalid and does not destroy rights of actual reversioners should be governed by the same rule of onus inasmuch as under the Hindu Law the intermediate limited owners have only life interest and the estate vests absolutely only in male reversioners. There are certain exceptional circumstances under which the right of the actual reversioners can be destroyed by the intermediate limited owners. The person pleading these exceptional circumstances must prove them.

The Subordinate Judge, in my opinion, was right in holding that the onus was upon the widow and the defendants Nos. 10 and 11 to prove that Rs. 1,20,000 or thereabout was the accumulated income from the death of Dakshina up to the date of surrender particularly in view of the fact that this amount was not stated in Ex. 1 to be the accumulated income on the date of the surrender. Peary Mohan instituted a suit in the year 1901 before the death of Dakshina for partition of the estate of Mohini Mohan. Dakshina was appointed Receiver of the estate in May 1901. After his death in June 1901, no Receiver was appointed till March 6, 1902. Thereafter the entire estate was again in the possession of a Receiver appointed in the partition suit. This Receiver was discharged on November 15 1905.

On June 19, 1901, Radhika started the case for obtaining the probate of the will alleged to have been executed by Dakshina on May 2, 1901. An administrator pendente lite of Dakshina's properties was appointed in the same year. Although the probate case was dismissed on March 2, 1904, the administrator was not discharged till January 8, 1906. The administrator in-the probate case did not get possession of Dakshina's ancestral properties but he used to receive from the Receiver in the partition suit monies paid by the latter from the income of Dakshina's share and the income if any from the self-acquired properties of Dakshina.

Plaintiff examined defendant No. 1 as a witness on his behalf. In the course of her cross-examination by defendants Nos. 10 and 11 she said :

"Q.—Did the said sum of one hundred and twenty thousand rupees accumulate in the Receiver, out of the income of your husband's estate during the pendency of the case in the High Court ?

A.—I have heard that some money did accumulate.

Q.—I put it to you that the sum of Rs. 1,20,000 which Ramesh told that he would pay to you was in stock in the hands of the Receiver out of the income of your husband's estate.

A.—I have heard that some money was in stock".

From the evidence of plaintiff's witness Kashi Nath Mitter, the income from the properties inherited by Dakshina from his father from the time of the death of Dakshina to the date of surrender by his widow would be about Rs. 1,20,000.

Dakshina had certain self-acquired properties. There is no evidence to show how much the administrator pendente lite received from those preperties during this period.

The evidence of defendant No. 11 is that the arrears of rent in the hands of the administrator were more than Rs. 1,20,000. In his cross-examination he admitted that he did not look into the accounts. He is an interested witness. The trial Judge has disbelieved his evidence and I see no reason to believe him.

The Receiver paid about Rs. 70,000 to the administrator pendente lite and took about Rs. 5,000 for his salary.

Out of the amount received by the administrator he paid about Rs. 31,200 for the maintenance of defendant No. 1 and Rs. 11 000 towards the payment of Dakhina's debt. Out of this amount he took his commission (Rs. 3,500) also and met the costs of the litigation.

The debts, left by Dakshina amounted to about Rs. 1,82,000. The annual interest on this amount was about Rs. 10,000. If there had been any substantial surplus accumulations either in the hands of the administrator pendente lite or of the Receiver further payments towards the satisfaction of the liabilities on Dakshina's estate would have been met. I therefore agree with the trial Judge that the widow took a very substantial amount from the corpus of the estate, and that the arrangement about the payment of Rs. 1,20,000 was a device to divide the estate with the reversioners. From the deed of surrender it appears that defendant No. 2 took a monthly allowance of Rs. 50 after the death of the widow and a sum of Rs. 41,111 as consideration for the gift and relinquishment in favour of defendant No. 4 of the right and interest which she had or could have in future in the estate left by Dakshina. It further appears that defendant No. 3 took a hereditary monthly allowance of Rs. 50 for maintenance during the life time of her mother and of Rs. 100 thereafter.

The Subordinate Judge has found that this arrangement also was a device to divide the estate with the reversioner. It is not the appellants' case that this arrangement amounted to an alienation by the daughters of their life interest for legal necessity. The contention of the appellants is that this arrangement was a reasonable provision for the maintenance of the daughters during their lives and consequently the transaction amounted to a surrender of their life interests under the Hindu law. The argument in support of this contention is this : The monthly income of the estate was Rs. 30,000. The monthly allowance of Rs. 50 for defendant No. 2 was too small for her maintenance. She was entitled to taken more. If Rs 41,111 be taken as the capitalised value of the balance of her reasonable maintenance, the arrangement for the payment of this amount out of the estate should be considered as a reasonable arrangement for her maintenance during her life. Defendant No. 3 was also entitled to take a reasonable maintenance for her life. A monthly allowance for life of Rs. 50 during the life time of defendant No. 1 and of Rs. 100 thereafter for her life would be too small. If she had chosen to take an allowance only for her life, she could have taken a larger amount. If instead of taking a larger amount only for her life defendant No. 3 took smaller hereditary allowance the arrangement should be considered as a reasonable arrangement for her maintenance during her life.

I am unable to accept this contention and my reasons are these : (1) The question as to what amount would be a reasonable provision for the maintenance of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 is a question of fact. (2) This question of fact was not raised in the trial Court and was not even raised in the memorandum of appeal to this Court. (3) The estate was heavily involved and had to pay a large amount as interest to creditors. Rs. 850 had to be paid to defendant No. 1 monthly for her maintenance. The estate was involved in litigation. The allotments in Dakshina's share were not yet final as an appeal against the allotments made by the trial Judge was pending in this Court. The sadar revenue payable for the allotments made by the trial Court was excessive and the collections were inconvenient and expensive. (4) From the materials on the record of the present case it is not possible for me to say that the payment of Rs. 41,111 in cash and of Rs. 50 monthly as allowance after the death of the widow to defendant No. 2 or a hereditary monthy allowance of Rs. 50 to defendant No. 3 during the lifetime of the widow and Rs. 100 thereafter, was a reasonable arrangement for the maintenance of the two daughters for their lives.

For the reasons given above, I hold that the transactions embodied in Ex. 1 did not amount to a valid surrender of the life interests of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 under Hindu Law and that the arrangement contained therein was merely a device to divide the estate with defendant No. 4. The result, therefore, is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs to the plaintiff-respondent. Hearing fee is assessed at ten gold mohurs.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—I agree with my learned brother, that this appeal should be dismissed. The facts giving rise to the appeal may be shortly stated as follows :

One Dakshina Mohan Roy, a Hindu resident of Bhowanipur in the suburbs of Calcutta, who was possessed of considerable properties both movable and immovable, died on June 6, 1901, leaving behind him his widow, Sindhu Bala, who is defendant No. 1 in the suit, and two daughters, namely, Tarangini and Sikhar Basini, who are defendants Nos. 2 and 3, respectively. Sindhu Bala succeeded to the properties left by her husband in the limited interest of a Hindu widow. Soon after Dakshina's death there were two probate proceedings commenced by the brothers of Dakshina in the original side of this Court for obtaining probate of two wills alleged to have been left by the deceased. Radhika, the youngest brother of Dakshina, was the propounder of one of these wills and his application for probate was filed on June 19, 1901. The other will was propounded by the other two brothers, named Annada and Pyari, and the probate proceedings in respect of the same was started on July 15, 1901. The widow, Sindhu Bala, appeared as an objector in both these proceedings. The second probate case which was commenced by Annada and Pyari came up for hearing first and Sale, J., who heard the case rejected the application for probate and pronounced the will to be a forgery. This decision is dated February 21, 1902. There was an appeal taken against this judgment which was also dismissed on March 10, 1903. The earlier probate case in which Radhika figured as a propounder ended in a compromise and was eventually dismissed for non-prosecution, the widow agreeing to pay a sum of Rs. 50,000 to Radhika as consideration for inducing him to withdraw from the litigation and renouncing all claims under the will set up by him.

It may be mentioned here that a step-brother and a brother of Sindhu Bala who were made defendants Nos. 10 and 11 in the suit materially assisted her in contesting this protracted litigation with her husband's brothers and Babu Annada Chandra Roy, defendant No. 10, who was a leading lawyer of Dacca, and who died after the institution of the suit advanced the entire money that was necessary for the purpose of carrying on the litigation. On August 13, 1905, Sindhu Bala along with her two daughters, Tarangini and Sikhar Basini, who were the immediate female reversioners executed a deed, which has been called a satyarpan and nadabi ekrar patra and by which she purported to renounce her widow's interest in all the properties left by her husband in favour of defendant No. 4, Kshitish Chandra Acharyya who was her only daughter's son then existing he being a son of Sikhar Basini, the youngest danghter of Dakshina. Kshitish was a minor at that time and he was represented in this transaction by his father Ramesh, who was defendaat No. 8 in the suit and who has died since then. Under this document Kshitish was to get the entire estate of Dakshina in absolute right as a full male heir on cessation of the limited interests of the widow and her two daughters subject to certain terms and conditions which may be summarised as follows : (1) He was to pay a sum of Rs. 850 a month to Sindhu Bala, the widow, as her britti or maintenance allowance and this payment was made a charge upon certain properties which were described in schedule Kha to the document. (2) Defendant No. 4 was to pay out of the estate the amount due on a decree made by the High Court on the basis of a promissory note both against Dakshina and defendant No. 8, the father of defendant No. 4, but for which loan, defendant No. 8 was really liable. (3) Defendant No. 4 was to pay off the entire amount including interest due on a bond for Rs. 48,845-11-3 dated Baisakh 7, 1310 B. S. executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of her step-brother defendant No. 10 for the money that was advanced by the latter to enable the widow to contest the probate proceedings. (4) Defendant No. 4 was to hand over for the absolute use of the widow a sum of Rs. 1,20,000 and this was to be given by the widow to her two brothers, defendants Nos. 10 and 11 as a token of love and gratitude for the services they rendered in connection with the litigations with her husband's brothers. (5) Defendant No. 2, Tarangini, who was the elder daughter of Dakshina was entitled to Rs. 41,111 out of the estate as consideration for joining with her mother in the deed of surrender. She was also to have Rs. 50 a month from after her mother's death, and so long as she would herself live. (6) Defendant No. 4 was to pay to defendant No. 3 his own mother a monthly allowance of Rs. 50 so long as Sindhu Bala would remain alive, and an allowance of Rs. 100 a month after Sindhu Bala's death which was made hereditary and which would devolve after Sikhar Basini's death on her heirs and successors. (7) Defendant No. 4 was also to pay a sum of Rs. 45,000 odd which was still due to Radhika on account of the compromise entered into between him and the widow.

The plaintiff, who is a son of Sikhar Baisni and a younger brother of defendant No. 4 and who was born subsequent to the execution of the deed of surrender, brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for a declaration that the document was ineffectual as an act of surrender in creating an absolute estate in defendant No. 4 to the detriment of the reversionary rights of the plaintiff. The ground alleged in the plaint was that it was not a bona fide act of renunciation by the widow in favour of the nearest reversioner and the whole scheme was one to divide the properties of Dakshina between defendant No. 4 on the one hand and certain nominees and relations of the widow on the other.

It appears that on August 16, 1918 defendant No. 8 as guardian of defendant No. 4 executed a mortgage in respect of a large number of properties comprised in the deed of surrender in favour of defendant No. 5 and the predecessors of defendant Nos. 6 and 7 to secure an advance of Rs. 1,60,000. The mortgagee got a mortgage decree on the basis of this as well as another mortgage bond which was executed by defendant No. 8 in respect of his own personal properties. In execution of this decree the mortgaged properties were sold in two instalments and purchased by the mortgagee decree-holders. The sale was held partly in 1930 and partly in February 1932 and the present suit was commenced by the plaintiff on May 25, 1932.

Besides the parties already mentioned there were two other persons joined as defendants in the suit. One was the husband of Tarangini who was made defendant No. 9 and the other her son who was made defendant No. 12. The relief prayed for by the plaintiff was a declaration that the rights of the future reversionary heirs of the late Dakshina Mohan Roy other than defendant No. 4 to the properties left by Dakshina were not affected by the deed of surrender executed by defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 in favour of defendant No. 4 on August 13, 1905 and all subsequent acts done by the defendants on the basis of the said deed were not binding on such reversionary heirs. There was a further prayer for a declaration that the reversionary heirs of Dakshina were entitled to get back from defendants Nos. 10 and 11 the sum of Rs. 1,20,000 which they obtained from the estate.

The suit was contested by defendants Nos. 5 to 7 who filed one joint written statement and by defendants Nos. 10 and 11 who filed another. The rest of the defendants did not take part in the proceedings though written statements were filed by defendants Nos. 4 and 8. The contentions raised by defendants Nos. 5 to 7 in substance were that the plaintiff had no locus standi to maintain the suit which was not a bona fide one and was barred by limitation. It was averred that the surrender made by the widow was a valid and bona fide surrender which had the effect of vesting the estate absolutely in defendant No. 4 and it was binding on all the reversionary heirs of Dakshina. These defendants, it was said, had obtained a valid mortgage of the lands described in Sch. Ka and acquired a good title to the same by purchase at the mortgage sale. The defence of defendants Nos. 10 and 11 was that they rendered very great and valuable services both financial and otherwise in connection with the litigations between the widow and her husband's brothers and that the sum of Rs. 1,20,000 which was given to them by the widow was no part of Dakshina's estate, but represented the accumulations of the income of the estate and the outstanding arrears of rent at the date of the surrender and over these moneys the widow had absolute power of disposal. They further contended that the bond for Rs. 4,845 was lawfully executed by defendant No. 8 as guardian of defendant No. 4 with the permission of the District Judge and that this debt was a charge upon Dakshina's estate.

The trial Court decided all the issues in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the suit. It was declared that the deed of surrender executed by Sindhu Bala and her two daughters was not binding on the plaintiff after the death of these three ladies. It was further declared that the gift of Rs. 1,20,000 in favour of defendants Nos. 10 and 11 as well as the mortgage in favour of defendants Nos. 5 to 7 and the sale on the basis thereof were not binding on the plaintiff. It is against this decree that defendants Nos. 5 to 7 have preferred this appeal. No appeal was filed by defendant No. 11 or the substituted heir of defendant No. 10 but they were made respondents. It is reported to us that the heir of defendant No. 10 settled his dispute with the plaintiff and is not interested any further in this litigation. Mr. Gupta who appears for the appellants has raised a two-fold contention in support of the appeal. He has contended in the first place that the deed of surrender executed by the widow was a perfectly valid and lawful act which had the effect of vesting the entire estate of Dakshina upon defendant No. 4 and that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that it was a mere device to divide the estate between the reversioner and certain nominees of the widow. The second point taken is that the plaintiff's suit for a declaratory relief is barred by limitation.

As regards the first point it is not disputed on behalf of the respondents that the deed of surrender comprises the entire estate of Dakshina. It is further conceded that the validity of the deed as an act of surrender is not in any way affected by the provision for payment of a sum of Rs. 850 as a maintenance allowance to the widow or the provisions relating to payment of debts due to defendants Nos. 10 and 11 on the one hand and Radhika Mohan Roy, the youngest brother of Dakshina on the other. It is admitted that these debts are lawful charges on the estate of Dakshina. The validity of the deed of surrender is attacked substantially on two grounds. The first ground is that as defendant No. 4 was not the next heir of her husband, and the immediate reversioners were her two daughters, the estate could not vest absolutely in defendant No. 4, unless the daughters themselves had withdrawn their life estates by a valid act of surrender. The second ground taken is that it was not a bona fide act of self-effacement by the widow, but was a mere device to divide the property between defendant No. 4 on the one hand and the nominees of the widow on the other. These are really the two matters which require investigations in connection with the first point taken in this appeal. The doctrine of surrender or relinquishment by the widow of her interest in the husband's estate which has the effect of accelerating the inheritance in favour of the next heir of her husband is now a well-settled doctrine of Hindu Law which has been established by a long series of judicial pronouncements. So far as the Bengal Law is concerned, its origin is attributed to Jimutbahan's commentary on the well-known text of Katyayana which runs as follows :

"Let the childless widow preserving unsullied the bed of her lord and abiding with her venerable protector enjoy the property with moderation until her death. and after her let the heirs take it—Vide Dayabhag Chap 11, s. 1, para. 59."

As was pointed by Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, J., in Debi Prosad v. Golap Bhagat (7), at p. 771, Jimutbahan while commenting upon this passage observed that the persons who would be next heirs on failure of prior claimants succeed to the residue of the estate remaining after her use of it upon the demise of the widow in whom the succession had vested, in the same manner as they would have succeeded if the widow's right had never taken effect. The theory of relinquishment as the learned Judge observed

"was foreshadowed in this passage by Dayabhaga and in fact the words used by Jimutbahan, namely, 'if her right ceases or never takes effect' are comprehensive enough to include not merely the case of the death of the widow but all cases where her right ceases. In other words, the reversioners take the estate not merely when the widow dies but also when her title is extinguished, for instance, by renunciation, remarriage or the like."

Though the doctrine has undergone development in recent years, yet its basis remains unaltered, namely, that it is the self-effacement by the widow or the withdrawal of her life estate which opens the estate of the deceased husband to his next heirs on that date. "It must be remembered" so observed their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Vytla Sitanna v. Mariveda Viranna (3),

(7) 40 C 721 (771); 19 Ind. Cas. 273; 17 C L J 499; 17 C W N 701.

"that the basis of the doctrine is the effacement of the widow's interest, and not the ex facie transfer by which such effacement is brought about. The result is merely that the next heir of the husband steps into the succession the widow's place."

This being the principle underlying the doctrine of surrender, no surrender and consequent acceleration of estate can possibly be made in favour of anybody except the next heir of the husband. By surrendering the estate the widow brings about the same result as would happen in the case of her natural death and the next heir steps into the inheritance as a matter of law without any act of consent or acceptance on his part. The Privy Council has held further in the case mentioned above that the fact that the immediate reversioners are female heirs who take only a limited interest in the property does not make any difference, and a surrender in favour of such limited heirs is equally effective though certainly the interest which they take in the property is not thereby enlarged. In the present case the immediate reversioners were the two daughters of the widow who joined with the latter in making a surrender in favour of the daughter's son who might be described to be a reversioner of the second degree. The question is whether such a surrender is valid in Hindu Law. Mr. Gupta argues that it is valid provided the immediate reversioners give their consent as they have done in the present case.

The point is not free from dobut, and it was expressly left open by the Judicial Committee in Narayanaswami Ayyar v. Rama Ayyar (8). In support of his contention Mr. Gupta has relied upon certain decisions, to wit, Protap Chunder Roy v. Srimati Joy Monee Dabee (1), Chinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswami Pillai (2), Chito v. Jhunnilal (9) and Antu v. Yeshwant (10), and his contention is that the different High Courts in India have practically concurred in holding that such surrender is permissible in Hindu Law. The cases referred to by him really come under two heads. The first head comprises cases where there is an alienation by the widow in favour of a remoter reversioner or a stranger with the consent of the immediate reversioner who is a male heir or is otherwise capable of taking an absolute interest in the property. The second head relates to cases where the immediate reversioner is a female heir who takes only a limited interest in the property and with her consent the widow surrenders the estate to a reversioner who is remoter in degree. The case in Protap Chunder Roy v. Srimati Joy Monee Dabee (1) is the earliest of the first type of cases. Here the widow with the consent of her husband's brother Parbati who was the immediate reversioner, made a gift of the entire estate in favour of the four sons of the latter. It was held that the deed of gift vested a complete estate in the donees. The learned Judges expressed themselves very generally when they observed as follows:

"We think that it admits of no reasonable doubt, that under Hindu Law, a Hindu lady in possession can relinquish, and by relinquishing anticipate for the reversioners, their period of succession and if she does this in favour of second reversioners in the present instance with the consent of the first then or afterwards expressed, the relinquishment is valid and this notwithstanding that it may be expressed in a form which under some circumstances might be open to question."

It may be pointed out that it was not really a case of surrender by the widow in favour of a reversioner of the second degree it was a gift or alienation to persons who were really in the position of strangers at that time with the consent of the immediate heir. It was held by this Court in a number of cases which were reviewed and confirmed in Nobo Kishore Sarma v. Hari Nath Sarma (11) that a widow is entitled to sell or transfer the entire estate without any necessity but with the consent of the next male heir so as to bar the rights of the actual reversioners at the time of her death. This was explained by the Judicial Committee in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (12) as an extension of the principle of surrender. "The surrender, once exercised" so observed their Lordships

"in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners, the estate became his or theirs, and it was an obvious extension of the doctrine to hold that inasmuch as he or they were in title to convey to a third party, it came to the same thing if the conveyance was made by the widow with his or their consent. This was decided to be possible by Nobo Kishore Sarma v. Hari Nath Sarma (11) already cited. The judgment went upon the principle of surrender, and it might do so for the surrender there was of the whole estate; but it is worthy of notice that the order of reference showed that the alienation was ostensibly on the ground of necessity, so that it might have been supported on the grounds to be mentioned under the second head above set forth."

It will be seen that the Privy Council did not disapprove of the principle that a transfer by the widow with the consent of the reversioner could be treated as equivalent to a renunication by the widow which vested the estate in the immediate reversioner followed by an alienation by the latter in favour of the alienee. In Nobo Kishore Sarma v. Hari Nath Sarma (11) it must be remembered, the widow really sold the property to a stranger and presumably received the consideration herself. Sir Richard Garth, C. J., entertained considerable doubt as to the propriety of the view which would make a sale by the widow to or with the consent of the reversioners stand on the same footing as a real relinquishment by her. But, in view of a series of prior decisions of the Court, he was constrained to accept that view as correct. In view of the recent pronouncements of the Judicial Committee that the surrender must be a voluntary and bona fide act of self-effacement by the widow and what is to be given up is the whole estate of the husband or the whole less what is necessary for her maintenance, it is extremely doubtful whether a sale by the widow which has the effect of converting her husband's estate into money can be regarded as a surrender at all. It would certainly be an indirect way of getting absolute control over the money into which the husband's estate was converted and could not but be regarded as a dodge either to enlarge her own interest or to divide the estate between herself and the reversioner with whose consent the transfer is effected. This aspect of the question was not considered by the Privy Council probably because the transfer in Nobo Kishore Sarma v. Hari Nath Sarma (11) was upheld on the ground of legal necessity as well. The principle laid down in Pratap Chunder Roy v. Srimati Joy Monee Debee (1) was applied by the Bombay High Court in Anto v. Yeshwant (10). There the widow made a surrender of her husband's estate in favour of the husband of a deceased daughter with the consent of an existing daughter who was the next heir at the time and who according to the Bombay Law was entitled to take an absolute interest in the estate. Baker, J., expressly invoked the authority in Nobo Kishore Sarma v. Hari Nath Sarma (11) as explained by the Judicial Committee in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (12).

These decisions are no direct authorities on the present point. They only show that when a transfer is made in favour of a stranger or a remoter reversioner with the consent of the immediate heir it is possible to construe the transaction as a surrender in favour of the consenting reversioner followed by a transfer by him in favour of the alienee. The other two decisions relied on by Mr. Gupta come under the second head. The first of these viz., Chinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswami Pillai (2) is a decision of the Madras High Court. Here, the widow and the only daughter of a deceased Hindu surrendered their interests in the estate of the deceased in favour of the daughter's son, and a deed was executed by them both in which there was a stipulation that the reversioner should maintain them during their life-time. On the death of all of them, the actual reversioners who happened to be different persons sued to recover the estate from the father of the deceased daughter's son who got the properties by right of inheritance. It was held that the surrender was valid in law and operated to vest the estate in the daughter's son. What was invoked in this case was in substance a fiction of a double surrender. It was held by Sadasiva Ayyar, J., that a surrender by a widow with the consent of the next female heir to the secondary male heir can be treated as a joint surrender by both, and that such a joint surrender might be treated as a surrender by the widow to the next female heir which vests the property in her for a moment and an immediate surrender of the property thus vested in the female heir by the latter to the next male heir, the result being to vest an absolute title in the secondary male heir. In this case the daughter actually joined with her mother in executing the deed of surrender but the same principle was held applicable to a case where the immediate female heir instead of joining in the deed of surrender simply expressed her consent to it by signing it as an attesting witness: vide Chito v. Jhunnilal (9).

In my opinion, the principle formulated by the Madras High Court is the only conceivable principle, upon which a widow can be held competent to surrender the estate in favour of the secondary male reversioner with the consent of the immediate female heirs. In a way it can be said to be a logical extension of the doctrine of surrender. If the immediate reversioner who consents to the alienation by the widow is a male heir we can conceive of an antecedent surrender by the widow in his favour which entitles him to deal with the property in any way he likes by way of a sale or gift. If, however, the immediate reversioner is a female heir, the presumed surrender in her favour by the widow does not enlarge her interest and the next male heir can get an absolute estate only on the footing of another surrender by the immediate female reversioner unless there is legal necessity to support the transaction.

I am inclined to hold that a widow can, with the consent of her daughter who is the next heir of her husband, relinquish the estate in favour of the daughter's son. But the consent given by her must show an intention to efface her own interest completely and circumstances must be such as would entitle the Court to construe the transaction as amounting, in substance, to a relinquishment by the widow in favour of her daughter and a second surrender by the latter in favour of the next male heir. I think therefore that if the daughter who joins with the mother in the act of surrender reserves for herself as a consideration for the same a substantial part of the property which she is also presumed to surrender, or stipulates for any benefit to her save and except what is necessary for her maintenance, the transaction might amount to a transfer of her own life-interest for consideration, but that could not give the reversioner in whose favour the surrender is made an absolute interest in the estate to the prejudice of the actual reversioner at the time of her death.

I cannot accept the contention of Mr. Gupta that we cannot and need not look beyond the fact that the daughter has given consent to the surrender and it is immaterial as to whether her consent was procured by paying her a large sum of money. Mere consent might operate as a personal estoppel against the consenting daughter or any other person claiming through her, but it cannot bind the actual reversioner. There is a passage indeed in Chinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswami Pillai (2), where Sadasiva Ayyar, J., observes that the act of a daughter who being next heir surrenders the whole estate vests the absolute inheritance in the next male heir, even if she received consideration for her surrender of the full enjoyment of the property during her lifetime. But, as the facts of the case show, the only consideration there was a provision for maintenance of the daugher and nothing else. In the case before us the two daughters of Dakshina joined with the widow in executing the deed of surrender and they purported to confer upon defendant No. 4 and relinquish in his favour whatever right, title and interest they had in the estate. It was also recited that the daughters had no desire to enjoy the property. So far as Tarangini was concerned the consideration that she received for relinquishing her rights was Rs. 41,111 as described in Schedule Jha to the document. Out of this Rs. 11,111 was set apart for her own use and enjoyment and the balance of Rs. 30,000 was to be kept in the custody of her husband and suitably invested for the benefit of any son that might be born to her in future. "If the estate is ruined", so runs the deed,

"I, the third party, shall not have any chance of getting the benefit I have been deriving on the basis of this document, and if any son be born of my womb or if I take a son in adoption, then they will have no chance of obtaining the benefit which has been obtained for them on the basis of this document. For all these reasons, for the benefit of myself and my future son or adopted son and in order to prevent harm in future after taking proper consideration under the circumstances, I have thought it proper to cause full and absolute right to accrue to you by conferring upon you my entire right, title and interest ...I have fixed Rs. 41,111 as the consideration for conferring upon you and relinquishing in your favour whatever right, title and interest I have got to the said estate, and your father and other well-wishers on your behalf have admitted the said consideration to be adequate."

Paragraph 10 of the deed provides further that a monthly allowance of Rs. 50, would be paid to Tarangini for her life after the death of Sindhubala. No exception can possibly be taken to the stipulation in the deed relating to the payment of a monthly allowance of Rs. 50. But the question is whether the acceptance of a consideration of Rs 41,111 is consietent with the deed being construed as an act of surrender on her part, Mr. Gupta argues that having regard to the extent of the properties left by Dakshina a sum of Rs. 41,111 would be quite a reasonable and modest amount which could be paid to her in lieu of maintenance. It is said that the maintenance need not be provided in the shape of a periodical pecuniary allowance and there is nothing in law which prevents the surrendering female heir from taking a portion of the immovable property or a lump sum at once for purposes of maintenance provided it is not unreasonable. This as proposition in law need not be disputed. In Sureshwar Misser v. Maheshrani Misrain (13), the widow was given a small portion of immovable property which she was to enjoy for her life. In Vytha Sitanna v. Marivada Viranna (3), she reserved six acres out of her husband's estate for her own maintenance and surrendered the rest. In Angamuthu Chetti v. Varatharajulu Chetti (14), there were two widows, and the reversioner in whose favour the surrender was made gave a personal undertaking to maintain one of them and paid a sum of Rs. 500 to the other. In all these cases the provisions were held to be quite consistent with a bona fide surrender.

In the present case a difficulty arises by reason of the fact that this question was not raised in this shape before the Subordinate Judge and we have no materials before us to decide as to whether Rs. 41,111 would be a reasonable sum to be paid to one of the daughters by way of a maintenance allowance. The estate is indeed large, but there are very heavy liabilies upon it, and the document itself shows that Tarangini herself was doubtful as to whether there would be anything left of her father's estate after the death of her mother. It was a prudent course she adopted to accept a lump sum and avoid all uncertainties regarding the future. But quite apart from this, the very recitals in the deed would, in my opinion, go to show that this sum of Rs. 41,111 was not taken by Tarangini as a provision for her maintenance. It was expressly stated in the document that a sum of Rs. 11,111 was to be taken by her for her own personal use and the balance was to remain with her husband who was to invest it for the benefit of her future children. To me it seems that the receipt of this sum of money by Tarangini was not compatible with the idea of effacing herself completely and letting the estate go down to the next heir. It was really a sale of her interest for a consideration which she deemed to be adequate under the circumstances of this case.

So far as the other daughter, Sikharbasini, is concerned no objection has been taken to the stipulation to pay her a monthly sum by way of maintenance. What is objected to is the provision which makes the allowance hereditary. In my opinion, this objection is quite justified. A surrendering female heir can always reserve for herself a right to be maintained out of the estate which she surrenders, but the maintenance can be enjoyed by her only during her lifetime. It would be against the spirit of the doctrine of surrender if the widow would stipulate for a maintenance allowance not only to be paid to her during her lifetime, but which would be payable for ever to her heirs and successors. My conclusion is that although the two daughters undoubtedly gave their consent to the vesting of the entire estate in defendant No. 4, yet that consent was not an indication of a voluntary self-effacement on their part and the transaction cannot be upheld on the footing of a surrender.

I am not impressed with the argument of Mr. Gupta that it was justifiable in the circumstances of the present case to secure the consent of the daughters even by paying them money consideration, inasmuch as it was an act of religious merit on the part of the widow to protect her husband's estate and there was no other way of protecting the same except by vesting it in a male heir. Protection of the husband's estate is, I think, no relevant matter for consideration in determining the validity of a surrender by the widow. Whatever be the motives that actuate her, it is always open to the widow to efface herself and put an end to her legal existence. The estate then automatically vests in the next heir; and unless the next heir chooses to pass it on to some other person, in some manner recognized by law the widow cannot arrogate to herself the right of making a sort of testamentary disposition, and direct that the property should go not to the immediate heir but to some other person who might be more competent to manage the same. Further, it is difficult to believe that the estate could not be protected except by relinquishing it in favour of defendant No. 4. The widow was certainly a purdanashin lady having no experience in zamindary affairs, and it is expressly recited in the deed, that Dakshina had incurred considerable debts during his lifetime and the properties which were allotted in his share on partition, were inconveniently situated and bore very heavy revenues. But an infant of five years, as defendant No. 4 was at that time, would hardly be a proper person to be entrusted with the duties of management. It was really the father of defendant No. 4 upon whom the widow relied, but the services of Ramesh were availbable to her even if she kept the estate in herself or renounced it in favour of the daughters. A full owner certainly could secure loans more easily than a limited owner, but the full owner, in this case being a minor, had also similar disabilities to encounter.

Assuming now for the sake of argument, that the widow was competent to surrender the estate in favour of her daughter's son, with the consent of the two daughters who were the immediate heirs, and it was immaterial that the latter received consideration for giving their consent, it is necessary to enquire whether the act of the widow herself constituted a valid surrender according to Hindu Law, that is to say, was a bona fide act of self-effacement on her part, and not a mere device to divide the estate of her husband between the reversioner and her own nominees.

The answer to this question depends on the propriety or otherwise of the provision in the deed of surrender under which the reversioner bound himself to hand over to the widow a sum of Rs. 1,20,000 and which the latter wanted to make a gift of, to her own brothers, defendants Nos. 10 and 11. As has been said at the beginning, Babus Ananda Chandra Row and Nripendra Chandra Roy, the two brothers of Sindhubala, assisted her a good deal, in connexion with the litigation she had with her husband's brothers. In fact, but for the financial help which she received from Ananda Babu, it would have been impossible for her to contest the litigation. Ananda Babu had advanced a sum of Rs. 48,845 for litigation expenses and it is not disputed that he was entitled to recover this sum from the estate left by Dakshina Mohan.

In the deed of surrender, defendant No. 4 not only undertook to pay this amount for which a boud was already executed by the widow, but he took the further liability of paying a sum of Rs. 1,20,000 to the lady, which the latter wanted to hand over to her two brothers out of affection and gratitude for the services they had rendered. For this money the estate of Dakshina was not liable, and if this was to come out of the estate surrendered by the widow, she would admittedly have a large slice out of her husband's estate in absolute right for the benefit of her own relations. Mr. Gupta has frankly conceded that if this money was to be paid out of the corpus of the estate left by Dakshina the surrender would not be valid in law. He contends, however, that the money represented the accumulations out of the income of the estate which were in the hands of the administrator pendente lite and the outstanding arrears of rent realizable from the tenants, and these the widow could dispose of absolutely at her discretion. It is necessary to examine the evidence on this point carefully; for, it cannot be disputed as a matter of law, that the widow had full powers over the income of her husband's estate, and a gift of the accumulated income, unless she had already chosen to treat it as a part of the corpus, could not affect the validity of surrender. By the deed of surrender the accumulated income, and outstanding arrears of rent, were given to defendant No. 4 along with the corpus of the estate. Paragraph 5 of the deed recited as follows:

"By this deed, the right I had and have to enjoy and appropriate according to my pleasure the income of the estate left by my husband which is now in the hands of the administrator pendente lite, and the arrears of rent etc., have been entirely given away to you and with regard to that in consultation with your father Sriman Ramesh Chandra and your other well-wishers and with the approval and consent of them and the third and fourth parties it has been settled that as consideration of my making wholesale gift of the income and arrears of rent to which I am entitled to enjoy according to my pleasure, by the deed and for my relinquishing the same in your favour you shall give me Rs. 1,20,000 with right to exercise full ownership therein, and to use and appropriate the same according to my pleasure and on that condition."

In substance the lady sold the accumulated income in the hands of the administrator and the arrears of rent to the reversioner for a consideration of Rs. 1,20,000. If the evidence makes it probable, that an amount near about Rs. 1,20 000 was really due to the lady as arrears of rent, or accumlated income in the hands of the administrator pendente lite at the time of the surrender the bargain would be quite a fair one, and as this was no part of the husband's estate which she was surrendering, the retention of this benefit would not be inconsistent with the withdrawal of her life-estate. Mr. Gupta argues that the burden is upon the plaintiff to show that the recital in the deed is not true and that the accumulated income did not amount to Rs. 1,20,000 at the date of surrender. I do not think that this contention is sound. The document does not mention what amount there was in the hands of the administrator, and it does not specify the extent of the arrears of rent that had accrued due at that time. The plaintiff moreover was no party to the deed and is not bound by its recitals. A Hindu widow has only restricted powers of.

alienation with regard to the properties she inherited from her husband and it is only under exceptional circumstances, that she can confer an absolute title on other. Any person, therefore, who asserts that he has acquired an absolute title to such property, on the basis of an act of surrender or alienation by the widow must make out the circumstances which would make such act valid and binding on the actual reversioner. (After considering evidence his Lordship concluded.) I think that the finding of the Court below on this point is correct. There was little or no money in the hands of the administrator and the outstanding if any were also insignificant. It was under the guidance of Babu Ananda Chandra Roy who was himself an experienced lawyer, that the deed of surrender was drawn up. He and his brother were the persons largely benefited by the deed, and I think that this untrue recital was made in the document only to make out a plausible justification in law for the widow's giving such a large sum of money to her own brothers. In my opinion as this money was really a part of the estate left by Dakshina, the surrender by the widow was not a valid surrender in law.

The only other question that remains for consideration is the question of limitation. Both sides have accepted the position that the present suit is governed by Art. 120 and not Art. 125, Lim. Act. The position seems to be correct, as the plaintiff in this suit is not the immediate reversioner who could succeed, if the widow were to die at the time when the suit was brought. Here the immediate reversioners were parties to the alienation by the widow, and consequently precluded themselves from bringing a suit for having it declared to be improper. The remote reversioner, therefore, was competent to maintain a suit for a declaratory relief under s. 42, Specific Relief Act: vide Abinash Chandra v. Hari Nath (15). As the Act makes no express provision for such cases, the suit must necessarily be referred to Art. 120, under which it should be instituted within six years from the date when the right to sue accrued. The right to sue would accrue ordinarily as soon as the alienation is made, but as in this case the plaintiff was not born when the widow executed the deed, his right to sue could not come into existence before the date of his birth. Das Ram Chowdhury v. Thirtha Nath (16). The plaintiff would get exemption for the entire period that he was a minor, and would have to institute the suit within three years after the attainment of majority as provided by s. (8), Lim. Act,

The plaintiff's case is that he was born in 1911 and attained majority in 1929 and the suit being filed within three years from that date is not barred by limitation. No horoscope or birth certificate has been produced, but the plaintiff has examined two witnesses in suppport of his case. The first is Biswanath Dhar, who at the time of the plaintiff's birth was in the service of his father. He swears that the plaintiff was born in 1318 B. S. and at that time Khitish the elder brother was about 11 or 12 years old. It is not disputed that Khitish was born in 1900. The other witness, Peary Mohan Das is also an old employee of Ramesh, the father of the plaintiff and he also says that the plaintiff was born when he was in the service of the father. He says, however, that he makes the statement on guess. As against this the contesting defendants have produced extracts from the admission register of a public school at Dacca, where the plaintiff is said to have prosecuted his studies and also a transfer certificate signed by the headmaster of the same institution. If these certificates are to be believed, the year of birth of the plaintiff would be 1908 and not 1911. The school registers are undoubtedly admissible in evidence, but the Sub-Judge I think righly refused to attach much value to the same. It is not clear on whose statement the age was recorded, and the register mentions the name of one Nagendra Lall Chowdhury as guardian of the plaintiff though there is no evidence to show who the gentleman, was and whether the plaintiff ever lived under his guardianship. Mr. Gupta refers in this connexion to the evidence of Sindhubala who says that the difference between the age of Khitish and that of the plaintiff would be three or four years but that is manifestly incorrect, as the plaintiff was admittedly not born when the deed of surrender was executed. Though the evidence adduced by the plaintiff as regards his age is not very satisfactory, I am unable to say that the trial Judge who had the opportunity of seeing the two witnesses was not justified in believing them. In my opinion the decision of the Court below on this point must be affirmed. In the view that I have taken, it is not necessary to consider whether a fresh right to sue accrued to the plaintiff on the sale of the properties in execution of the mortgage

Under the customary law applicable to the members of the Tulla clan resident at mauza Mahmad Tulla in the Tahsil and District of Shahpur in the Punjab, collaterals of the tenth degree of a deceased landowner cannot take precedence over his married daughters in succession to his non-ancestral estate 172 Ind. Cas 158 reversed. [p. 437, col. 1.]

Where non-ancestral property is claimed by collaterals in preference to married daughters of the deceased owner the initial onus lies on the plaintiffs to prove that the general custom in favour of the daughter's succession had been varied by a special custom enabling the plaintiff to exclude the daughters [p. 449, col 1.]

(Indian case-law reviewed).

In the Punjab as a whole, the daughters generally succeed to the self-acquired property of their father, even to the exclusion of the nearest agnatic relations (as e. g.,) uncles or nephews), and, even as regards ancestral property, it is now well-settled that, more usually, the fifth degree is found to be the remotest customary limit. Some of the answers recorded in Wilson's Manual are in conflict with the customs recorded in Rattigan's Digest, notably what is stated in that Digest as the general custom of the province that daughters exclude collaterals with respect to self-acquired property of their father and this with the recent judicial decisions are sufficient to abrogate the custom to the contrary laid down in Wilson's Manual of Customary Law.

[Held, that even if it be held that the answers in Wilson's Manual raised an initial presumption against the daughters, it was a weak presumption which had been sufficiently discharged by the evidence adduced in the case.] [ibid.]

It is now settled law in the Punjab that the mere mention of the name of a person in the revenue pedigree table as the common ancestor is no proof of the fact that every piece of land held by his descendants (howsoever low) was originally held by and descended from him in succession from generation to generation. A genealogical tree of this kind is prepared merely to indicate the relationship of the proprietors in a particular village and is in no sense intended to be a record of the acquisition of every bit of land held by all persons whose names appear in it. It is no doubt presumptive proof of their kinship, but not of the nature of the property owned by them. For that purpose one has to look to the history of the acquisition of the village. To establish the ancestral character of land it is not therefore sufficient to show that the name of the common ancestor from whom the parties are descended was mentioned in the revenue pedigree. It should also be proved that the descendants of that common ancestor held the land in ancestral shares and that the land occupied, at the time of the dispute, by the proprietors thereof had devolved upon them by inheritance. 102 Ind. Cas. 313 (2) and 138 Ind, Cas. 280 (3), referred to. [p. 438, cols. 1 & 2.]

The answers (riwaj-i-am) contained in a Manual complied by Mr. (afterwards Sir) James Wilson, called a "General Code of the Tribal Customs in the Shahpur District of the Punjab", published in 1896, are clearly admissible in proof of custom under s. 48 of the Evi. Act, being the opinion, as to the existence of a general custom or right, of persons who would be likely to know of its existence if it existed. They are also admissible under s. 35 of that Act, as entries relating to a relevant fact contained in what may be regarded as a public record, made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty. [p. 439, col. 2.]

Though the entries in the riwaj-i-am are entitled to an initial presumption in favour of their correctness, irrespective of the question whether or not the custom as recorded was in accord with the general custom, the quantum of evidence necessary to rebut this presumption would, however, vary with the facts and circumstances of each case. Where, for instance, the riwaj-i-am laid down a custom in consonance with the general agricultural custom of the province, very strong proof would be required to displace this presumption, but where, on the other hand, this is not the case and the custom as recorded in the riwaj-i-am is opposed to the rules generally prevalent, the presumption would be considerably weakened. Likewise, where the riwaj-i-am affects adversely the rights of females who had no opportunity whatever of appearing before the revenue authorities, the presumption would be weaker still, and only a few instances would suffice to rebut it. 130 Ind. Cas 709 (6), referred to. [p. 441, col. 1.]

The effect of the statements in the riwaj-i-am (Wilson's Manual) is weakened by the fact that women had no opportunity of being consulted by the officer compiling the customary law and by the fact that the custom recorded was not in conformity with the general customary law though the degree of the weakening would depend upon the facts of each case. 169 Ind. Cas. 909 (1), overruled. [p. 448, col. 2.]

A judicial decision, though of comparatively recent date, may contain, on its records, evidence of specific instances, which are of sufficient antiquity to be of value in rebutting the presumption enjoyed by the riwaj-i-am. In such a case, the value of the decision arises from the fact not that it is relevant under ss. 13 and 42 of the Evi. Act as forming in itself a "transaction by which the custom in question was "recognised, etc., etc" but that it contains, on its records, a number of specific instances relating to the relevant custom. To ignore such judicial decisions merely on the basis of the riwaj-i-am would add greatly to the perplexities and difficulties of proving a custom. 169 Ind. Cas. 909 (1) explained. [p. 448, col. 1].

The English rule, that "a custom, in order that it may be legal and binding, must have been used so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary" is neither apposite or useful, when applied to Indian conditions. It is undoubted that a custom observed in a particular district derives its force from the fact that it has, from long usage, obtained in that district, the force of law. It must be ancient: but it is not of the essence of this rule that its antiquity must in every case be carried back to a period beyond the memory of man—still less that it is ancient in the English technical sense. It will depend upon the circumstances of each case what antiquity must be established before the custom can be accepted. What is necessary to be proved is that the usage has been acted upon in practice for such a long period and with such invariability as to show that it has, by common consent, been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular district. Having regard to the circumstances under which local customs have arisen and do arise in India, both with reference to Muslims and Hindus, and the ease and frequency with which people migrate from one district or province to another, it would, create great perplexity in the already uncertain character of customary law to require that, in every case, the antiquity of a custom must be carried back to a period which is beyond the memory of man. 169 Ind. Cas. 909 (1), overruled. [p. 448, cols. 1 & 2.]

Sir Hari Singh Gour and Mr. S. P. Khambatta, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar.—The question in this appeal is whether, under the customary law applicable to the members of the Tulla clan resident at Mauza Mahmad Tulla in the Tahsil and District of Shahpur in the Punjab, collaterals of the tenth degree of a deceased landowner can take precedence over his married daughters in succession to his non-ancestral estate. The question arose as follows:—

One Sahlion, a Muhammadan landowner of the Tulla clan, resident as stated above, died, leaving him surviving a widow and two married daughters (appellants before the Board) and some immovable property. The widow subsequently gave the property to the daughters by a registered deed of gift dated September 8, 1934. The respondents, claiming to be his collaterals, instituted a suit against the widow (defendant No. 1) and the daughters (defendants Nos. 2 and 3) asserting that Sahlion's property was ancestral as regards the plaintiffs and that the widow had no right to make the gift, which should be declared void and ineffectual as against the plaintiff's rights and invalid after the death or re-marriage of the widow. The widow and daughters denied the claim on the ground that the property was not ancestral and that the plaintiffs had no locus standi to sue, because daughters succeeded to the non-ancestral property as against collaterals, "especially when the plaintiffs are collaterals of the tenth degree."

The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit dismissed it, holding that the plaintiffs were Sahlion's collaterals of the tenth degree, that the lands in the suit were not ancestral and that according to the general rule of custom prevailing among the Muhammadan tribes of the district of Shahpur which applied to the parties, the daughters were not ousted by the plaintiffs with regard to succession to the non-ancestral property of their father. In arriving at his decision, the learned Judge relied on the oral and documentary evidence adduced by the parties and upon certain rulings of the Punjab Courts.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court at Lahore and that Court, in a judgment remarkable for its brevity, allowed the appeal. The material part of the High Court judgment* begins with the statement "that it is common ground that under the customary law which governs all the Musalman tribes of the Shahpur district, married daughters do not inherit their father's estate in any circumstances."

Their Lordships have a difficulty in understanding this statement, because the question stated by the High Court as the "common ground" was precisely the issue in controversy in the case. The judgment bears, in several places, indications that the High Court, instead of examining the disputed question on the fact and the evidence in the case carefully considered in the Subordinate Judge's judgment, proceeded entirely on the authority of the questions and answers contained in a Manual compiled by Mr. (afterwards Sir) James Wilson, called a "General Code 'of the Tribal Customs in the Shahpur District of the Punjab', published in 1896. (It may be convenient to refer hereafter to this publication as Wilson's Manual.) Basing their views on certain questions and answers in Wilson's Manual the learned Judges of the High Court held that there was a presumption against inheritance by the daughters and that this presumption had not been rebutted. They therefore allowed the appeal. The judgment contains no detailed criticism of the oral and documentary evidence of custom adduced by the parties, all of which was ignored with the brief observation that in a Full Bench decision of the Punjab High Court (Bahadur v. Nihal Kaur (1)) it had been stated that recent judicial decisions are not sufficient to abrogate the custom so clearly laid down in Wilson's Manual of Customary Law."

Their Lordships have consequently derived less assistance than they would have expected from the High Court judgment in elucidating the important question in controversy in this appeal.

Before examining the value to be attached to the statements in Wilson's Manual, and the effect of the Full Bench decision, it will be useful to state what the true legal position of the parties was as it emerged from the pleadings. The basis of the plaintiff's claim was that the property in suit was ancestral so far as their rights were concerned. This was denied by the defendants. The onus was therefore on the plaintiffs to prove that the property was ancestral. The Subordinate Judge held that the onus had not been discharged. The learned Judges of the a High Court did not consider this question, as the statements in Wilson's Manual on which they relied made no distinction between ancestral and non-ancestral property, and stated generally that married daughters "in no case" inherited their father's estate or "any share in it". Before this Board, the respondents did not appear in support of the High Court judgment. Their Lordships have therefore to decide the question on the evidence which is available in this case, and, on reviewing it, they agree with the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the land was not proved to be ancestral. In more than one decision of the Lahore High Court (see, for instance, Jhanda Singh v. Banto (2) and Rahmat Ali Khan v. Sadiq-ul-Nisa (3), it has been laid down that to establish the ancestral character of land it is not sufficient to show that the name of the common ancestor from whom the parties are descended was mentioned in the revenue pedigree. It should also be proved that the descendants of that common ancestor held the land in ancestral shares and that the land occupied, at the time of the dispute, by the proprietors thereof had devolved upon them by inheritance. It is now settled law in the Punjab that the mere mention of the name of a person in the pedigree table as the common ancestor is no proof of the fact that every piece of land held by his descendants (howsoever low) was originally held by and descended from him in succession from generation to generation. As is explained by Tek Chand, J. in Jhanda Singh v. Banto (2).

"a genealogical tree of this kind is prepared merely to indicate the relationship of the proprietors in a particular village and is in no sense intended to be a record of the acquisition of every bit of land held by all persons whose names appear in it. It is no doubt presumptive proof of their kinship, but not of the nature of the property owned by them. For that purpose one has to look to the history of the acquisition of the village."

The extracts from the settlement records relating to the land in dispute, which are a part of the evidence in this case, justify the finding of the Subordinate Judge.

Before examining the questions and answers in Wilson's Manual, it will be useful to ascertain the customary rights of daughters against collaterals with reference to ancestral and non ancestral land as they are stated in Sir W. H. Ratigan's Digest (of Civil Law for the Punjab, chiefly based on customary law, 1935 edition), a book of unquestioned authority in the Punjab. In para. 23 (p. 79) it is stated that (1) a daughter only succeeds to the ancestral landed property of her father, if an agriculturist, in default (a) of heirs mentioned in the preceding paragraph (viz. male lineal descendants, a widow or mother), or (b) of near male collaterals, provided that a married daughter sometimes excludes near male relatives, especially amongst Muhammadan tribes, under circumstances specified in the paragraph (not material to the present issue); (2) but in regard to the acquired property of her father the daughter is preferred to collaterals. It is further stated (p. 92)

"that the general custom of the province (the Punjab) is that a daughter excludes collaterals in succession to self-acquired property of her father," and the initial onus therefore is on the collaterals to show that the general custom in favour of the daughter's succession to the self-acquired property of her father has been varied by a special custom excluding the daughters."

This being the legal position of the parties, the question arises whether, the property being non-ancestral, the plaintiffs have discharged the onus by proving the existence of a special custom excluding daughters. They endeavoured to do this in two ways (1) by relying on the authority of Wilson's Manual, and (2) by producing oral evidence at the trial.

As the questions and answers in Wilson's Manual formed the main basis of the High Court judgment, it is necessary to examine in detail their value and effect. In the preface of that book, it is stated that the compilation combines the results of several separate enquiries made of village headmen and other leading men to the important tribes in the District, summoned together at different times in November, 1893 and January, 1894, when certain questions of tribal custom were put to them and their answers recorded in the vernacular. The answers were read out to the assembled representatives of the tribe in the presence of the author, and admitted by them to be correct. Notes were taken in English by the author, but vernacular codes were also drawn up in five parts. These codes contained numerous instances of the custom and the author suggests a precaution that the vernacular codes should be consulted when any question regarding custom arises, as they were accepted as a statement of "the opinions of person having special means of "knowledge" of the usages of the tribe. A table is added, enumerating the tribes consulted and containing details relating to the consultations. One general heading (No. 5) is "Miscellaneous Musalman Tribes," and the tribes included in this category are also specified. The author concludes that "the code thus drawn up represents the tribal custom of the whole of the land-owning and the trading classes in the Shahpur District." It is to be noted that the Tulla clan, the material tribe in this case, is not mentioned amongst the tribes consulted separately and must therefore be included among the "Miscellaneous Musalman Tribes."

The material portions of questions Nos. 16 to 18 (in Wilson's Manual) on which the High Court has relied are as follows —

"Question No. 16 (p. 48)—Under what circumstances are daughters entitled to inherit? Are they excluded by the sons or by the widow, or by the near male kindred of the deceased? If they are excluded by the near male kindred, is there any fixed limit of relationship within which such near kindred must stand towards the deceased in order to exclude his daughter? If so, how is the limit ascertained? If it depends on descent from a common ancestor, state within how many generations relatively to the deceased such common ancestor must come.

Answer No. 16—All Musalmans.

A married daughter in no case inherits her father's estate or any share in it. An unmarried daughter succeeds to no share in presence of agnate descendants of the deceased, or of her own mother; but if there be no agnate descendants and no sonless widow, the unmarried daughters succeed in equal shares to the whole of their father's property, movable and immovable, till their marriage, when it reverts to the agnate heirs. If there be a widow and daughters of another wife who has died, the unmarried daughters of the deceased wife succeed to their mother's share till their marriage.

Question No. 17 (p. 49)—Is there any distinction as to the rights of daughters to inherit (1) the immovable or ancestral, (2) the movable or acquired, property of their father?

Answer No. 17—All Musalmans

As regards the right of the daughter to inherit, no distinction is made between the movable and immovable, ancestral and acquired, property of the father. If she inherits at all she takes the whole estate."

The material part of answer No.18 (p. 49) is as follows :—

"Answer No. 18—All Muslamans.

A married daughter has no claim upon her father's estate in any case, whether she be widowed, or have children or not, or she and her husband live with her father. An unmarried daughter, if she does not herself inherit her father's estate, is entitled to proper maintenance out of it until her marriage and to the reasonable expenses of her marriage."

These answers are clearly admissible under s. 48 of the Indian Evi. Act, 1872, being the opinion, as to the existence of a general custom or right, of persons who would be likely to know of its existence if it existed. They are also admissible under s. 35 of that Act, as entries relating to a relevant fact contained in what may be regarded as a public record, made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty.

This Board held in the case of Beg v. Allah Ditta(4), in which a similar riwaj-i-am relating to the Muhammadan Jats of the Jhang District in the Punjab was concerned, that the statements contained in the riwaj-i-am formed a strong piece of evidence in support of the custom therein entered, subject to rebuttal. In a later case, Vaishno Ditti v. Rameshri (5), the Board further held that the statements contained in the riwaj-i-am might be accepted even if unsupported by instances.

On a careful examination of the relevant questions and answers in Wilson's Manual, a few considerations arise in limine which cannot be ignored :—

(1) That some of the answers are in conflict with the customs recorded in Rattigan's Digest, notably what is stated in that Digest of the general custom of the province that daughters exclude collaterals with respect to self-acquired property of their father.

(2) It cannot be disputed that, in his lifetime, a Muhammadan proprietor (as, for instance, an Awan in the Shahpur District) possesses unlimited power to give away his property to his daughters and their issue. This is clear from Wilson's Manual, p. 71 where it is recorded :

"a father having no son or son's son, has full power to give the whole of his immovable property to his daughter, daughter's son, sister, sister's son, or son-in-law, or to one of his agnate heirs, without the consent of the other agnates. No distinction is made between ancestral and acquired property."

Again, at p. 73, it is stated as regards Awans and Miscellaneous Musalmans (Tullas are included in this category) :

"a proprietor having no son or son's son, can, without the consent of the agnate heirs, make a gift of immovable property, ancestral or acquired, divided or not, to a person not related to him," and an explanatory note is added that

"among the Awans there is a general feeling that a sonless man is absolute owner of all his property, including his land, and can do with it as he likes, as his agnate heirs are generally his enemies!"

If this is the rule, it is difficult to understand why, on the death of such an absolute owner, his married daughters, whom he could have made the objects of his bounty at his will during his lifetime, should be superseded, even with regard to his self-acquired property, by collaterals, irrespective of the degree of remoteness in which they stood. Though Punjab Act II of 1920:

("an Act to restrict the power of descendants and collaterals to contest an alienation of immovable property . . . on the ground that such alienation . . . is contrary to custom") does not apply to alienations made by a female (as in the present case), s. 7 thereof throws light on the absolute right of the proprietor to give away his non-ancestral property. The section applies to the whole of the Punjab, and provides that "no person shall contest any alienation of non-ancestral immovable property . . . on the ground that such alienation . . . is contrary to custom."

(3) In answer No. 17 in Wilson's Manual no distinction is made between ancestral and non-ancestral or between movable and immovable property, and the rule is stated as a wide generalisation (in answer No. 16) with reference to "all "Muslmans" that a married daughter "in no case" inherits her father's estate or "any share in it." This answer is in conflict with numerous decisions of the Punjab Courts (some of them are noticed in a subsequent part of this judgment) which have laid down in clear terms that in the earlier records of customs throughout the Punjab, rules stated in such wide and general terms must be taken to govern ancestral property only.

(4) In the province as a whole, numerous decisions of the Punjab Courts show that daughters generally succeed to the self-acquired property of their father, even to the exclusion of the nearest agnatic relations (as, e. g., unles or nephews), and, even as regards ancestral property, it is now well-settled that more usually, the fifth degree is found to be the remotest customary limit. (See Rattigan's Digest, para. 23, cl. (1), sub-cl. (2), and authorities quoted at p. 84 and following). This general rule, prevalent in the entire province, appears to have found expression in s. 6 of the Punjab Act II of 1920, which lays down the fifth degree as the limit of collateral relationship able to contest an alienation of ancestral immovable property, on the ground that it is contrary to custom.

(5) It is remarkable that in answer No. 16 as recorded in the English version of the riwaj-i-am, no limit is mentioned within which the kindred must stand towards the deceased in order to exclude his daughters, though the question clearly contemplated enquiry into this point. It is not possible to say whether the omission to answer this part of the question was due to the fact that the point was lost sight of in the investigation or whether the answer was really intended to lay down that custom permitted collaterals, however remote (even of the tenth, fifteenth, or remoter degrees), to exclude daughters. Tek Chand, J., in the course of an examination of answer No. 16 in Khan Beg v. Fateh Khatun (6) had occasion to consult the vernacular version of the riwaj-i-am. He came to the conclusion that though the last part of the question was not specifically answered, it was clear from certain expressions—Chacha (father's younger brother) and Taya (father's elder brother) used in the corresponding vernacular answer, that it was not intended to lay down that collaterals of remote degrees should be preferred to daughters.

This case of Khan Beg v. Fateh Khatun (6) (their Lordships have derived considerable assistance from Tek Chand, J.'s judgment) deserves to be examined carefully as it related to the Shahpur district and the dispute was also very similar to the one in the present case. The contest there was between married daughters and collaterals of the sixth degree, and arose (as in the present case) in connection with a gift of non ancestral property by the widows to their married daughters. As in the present case, the collaterals relied on the riwaj-i-am in Wilson's Manual, and with reference to it Tek Chand, J. made some observations which seem to their Lordships very pertinent. He pointed out that it was significant that not a single instance had been cited in the riwaj-i-am of married daughters being excluded from succession to non-ancestral property. The learned Judge went on to observe, quoting from a judgment of a Division Bench of the Lahore High Court that though the entries in the riwaj-i-am were entitled to an initial presumption in favour of their correctness, irrespective of the question whether or not the custom as recorded was in accord with the general custom, the quantum of evidence necessary to rebut this presumption would, however, vary with the facts and circumstances of each case; where, for instance, the riwaj-i-am laid down a custom in consonance with the general agricultural custom of the province, very strong proof would be required to displace this presumption, but where, on the other hand, this was not the case and the custom as recorded in the riwaj-i-am was opposed to the rules generally prevalent, the presumption would be considerably weakened. Likewise, where the riwaj-i-am affected adversely the rights of females who had no opportunity whatever of appearing before the revenue authorities, the presumption would be weaker still, and only a few instances would suffice to rebut it.

Their Lordships are in complete agreement with this view, which is confirmed by a weighty pronouncement of Roe, J. in Harnarain v. Deoki (7) where that learned Judge, who was regarded as one of the most eminent exponents of the principles of Punjab tribal customs, and had himself compiled an important riwaj-i-am, observed :

"There is no doubt a general tendency of the stronger to over-ride the weak and many instances may occur of the males of a family depriving females of rights to which the latter are legally entitled. Such instances may be followed so generally as to establish a custom, even though the origin of the custom were usurpation; but the Courts are bound to carefully watch over the rights of the weaker party and to refuse to hold that they had ceased to exist unless a custom against them is most clearly established."

In a later case, Sayad Rahim Shah v. Sayad Hussain Shah (8) a similar caution was uttered by Robertson, J., who observed that :

"The male relations, in many cases at least, have been clearly more concerned for their own advantage than for the security of the rights of widows and other female relatives with rights or alleged rights over family property and the statements of the male relatives in such matters have to be taken cum grano salis where they tend to minimize the rights of others and extend their own."

These views were endorsed by another high authority—Clark, C. J. (Reid, J. concurring), in Maula Baksh v. Muhammad Baksh (9), and, two years later in the case of Bholi v. Man Singh (10) where the riwaj-i-am under consideration had laid down that daughters were excluded by collaterals, even up to the tenth degree, it was observed :

"As the land is rising in value under British rule the land-holders are becoming more and more anxious to exclude female succession. They are ready to state the rule against the daughters as strongly as possible, but if the custom is so well established it is strange that they are unable to state a single instance in point on an occasion like the compilation of the riwaj-i-am when detailed enquiries are being made and when the leading men are supposed to give their answers with deliberation and care."

A more emphatic warning was uttered a year later in Gunpatrai v. Kesho Ram (11) that where the entries in the riwaj-i-am :

"Seek to support a custom in defeasance of the rights of persons who were no parties to the declarations i. e., the female relatives of the signatories, it is quite clear that no body of men can deprive another set of right-holders under personal law by their mere ipse dixit. No doubt, usurpation successfully carried out for a long time may possibly eventually establish a custom, but it is necessary in such a case to show not merely that certain persons desire that such and such be the custom to the detriment of the rights of others but that such and such have really become a binding custom, fully established and followed."

With reference to answers in the riwaj-i-am (like answer No. 17 in Wilson's Manual) which state that no distinction is made in the matter of the daughter's right of inheritance between self-acquired and ancestral property of the father, or between movable and immovable property, Shadi Lal, C. J., in the case of Sultan v. Sharfan (12) remarked that though the entry in the riwaj-i-am raised a presumption in favour of the custom recorded therein, it was clear that and for that reason the onus placed upon the daughter was a light one and did not require much evidence to repel it.

Their Lordships have thought it desirable to refer, in some detail, to these observations of the Judges of the Punjab Court, because they held eminent positions and some of them had experience of the preparation of official codes of tribal custom. But none of these considerations appear to have been kept in view by the learned Judges of the High Court in this case, who, in arriving at their decision have not only ignored (as will be shown below) the entire body of evidence adduced in the suit, but also a long course of judicial decisions of their own province, extending over nearly thirty years, in which similar questions arose with reference to the tribes in the Shahpur and neighbouring districts and which were uniformly decided against the collaterals of much nearer degree than in the present suit, except in two cases of exceptional character where there was no rebutting evidence at all. [See Jawaya Shah v. Fatima (13) and Gulab v. Umar Bibi (14)]. As the question at issue affects large classes of the Muslim community, it is, in their Lordships' opinion, of sufficient importance to justify their briefly reviewing a few of these important decisions.

To begin with, there is Ex. D-7 in the case, the judgment of the Chief Court of the Punjab, C, A. No. 665 of 1905 (Judges Rattigan and Lal Chand) in Samand v. Jind Waddi, dated May, 5, 1906. It related to the Muslim tribe of Majoks of the Shahpur district. The dispute concerned a gift (as in the present case) by the widow of the original owner, and arose between his collaterals (the exact degree of relationship is not stated) as plaintiffs, and his widow, sister, and married daughters, as defendants. The land was the acquired property of the owner. The collaterals relied on a wajib-ul arz of 1865 (similar to answer No. 16 in Wilson's Manual) stating that the daughters of a sonless proprietor succeeded to his landed property and retained possession merely till marriage, when the land reverted to the male agnates. The Divisional Judge and the Chief Court both held that though the wajib-ul-arz was stated in general terms, its operation, on a proper construction, must be restricted to ancestral property, and that in the case of non-ancestral property the dauther's estate was not limited till marriage, nor was it one for life, but would remain in their line after their death for such time as there existed a male lineal descendant. The suit was accordingly dismissed. This ruling is referred to with approval in Ghulam Muhammad v. Gauhar Bibi (15) and also in Khan Beg v. Fateh Khatun (6).

The first of these two cases (Broadway and Bevan Petman, JJ.) related to the Sipras of Miana Hazara Tahsil Bhera of Shahpur district (the tribe is included in miscellaneous Musalmans in Wilson's Manual). Here too, the dispute was about a gift made by the widow of her husband's land in favour of her daughter and her deceased daughter's son. Plaintiffs, nephews of the owner, sued for a declaration that the gift did not affect their reversionary right after the death or re-marriage of the widow. Some property was found to be ancestral and some not. The nephews relied on entries in the riwaj-i-am in Wilson's Manual pp. 46, 48, 49 (the same as in the present case), against married daughrers succeeding to the father's property. The High Court disallowed the collaterals' claim as regards non-ancestral property, holding that (1) as regards the riwaj i am the entries carried with them certain presumptions of correctness, but, when positive instances were given, the riwaj-i-am could not be regarded as overriding them; (2) as regards ancestral property, the general custom was against the daughter succeeding; (3) in the case of self-acquired property, however, the general custom is that daugthers are preferred to collaterels. Reference was made to Rattigan's Customary Law, Art. 23, cl. (2), and to the decision Ex. D-7, cited above, and it was held that there was no reason to doubt the correctness of the dictum in that ruling that similar general entries about custom should be read as referring to ancestral property only. This case is an instance where answer No. 17 in Wilson's Manual, stating that no distinction exists between ancestral and acquired property of the father and married daughters are excluded from both, was not given effect to, even in favour of such near kindred as nephews. This ruling was followed in 1933 in the decision noted below as Ex. D-6.

The case of Jawaya Shah v. Fatima (13) (LeRossignol and Fforde, JJ.) related to the Sayyads (included in Wilson's Manual in miscellaneous Musalman tribes) of the Shahpur district. The contest was between married daughters and collaterals (the exact decree of relationship is not stated). The property belonged to a Muhammadan who died twenty-two years before the suit and was succeeded by his widow. On her death, mutation was effected in favour of his two daughters. In 1919, on the marriage of one of the daughters, mutation of her share was effected in favour of her unmarried sister. The married daughter subsequently brought a suit against the unmarried daughter for a declaration that, in spite of her marriage she was entitled to her half share. This claim was decreed on the confession of the unmarried sister. The suit was then brought by the collaterals on the ground that the unmarried sister was entitled to the estate only until her marriage. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim, holding that the land in suit was non-ancestral, and consequently they had no right to the property in the presence of the daughters. The collarerals preferred an appeal to the Lahore High Court. After the institution of the appeal, the unmarried daughter was married and compromised with the plaintiffs, and the first married daughter remained the only defendant to resist the appeal. It was held by the High Court (1) that, on the evidence the land in suit was not ancestral qua the plaintiffs; (2) that it was uncompromisingly stated in the answers in Wilson's Manual that daughters did not succeed to their father's estate "in any case" if they were married, and that when an unmarried daughter took the succession, it lapsed on her marriage; (3) that this statement of custom in Wilson's Manual was open to rebuttal, but that the defendants had failed to prove a single instance in which married daughters succeeded to or retained their father's estate; (4) the that it was significant that on the marriage of the first-married daughter the mutation of her share was sanctioned in favour of her unmarried sister. On these grounds the collateral's claim was decreed.

This ruling has been treated by subsequent decisions of the Lahore High Court as an exceptional case decided on the ground that not a single instance had been proved by the defendants to rebut the presumption arising from the answers in Wilson's Manual. Likewise, the exact degree of the collaterals' relationship does not appear on the record. See the comments on this ruling in Khan Beg v. Fateh Khatun (6), at 307 & 308* and in the decision Ex. D. 6 (cited below).

This case Khan Beg v. Fateh Khatun (6), (Tek Chand and Coldstream, JJ.), related to Awans (first tribe mentioned in preface to Wilson's Manual) in mauza Mardwal in Khushab Tahsil of Shahpur district. A reference has been made to this case in an earlier part of this judgment. A Muhammadan land-owner died sonless, leaving two widows and daughters from each. After his death, the widwos partitioned the property among themselves. Subsequently, each of the two widows gifted her share to her married daughter at different dates. Plaintiffs, collaterals of the sixth degree, instituted two separate suits at different dates impugning the two gifts. The trial Court dismissed both the suits. The collaterals appealed to the High Court. The two appeals were heard together. In the first suit no oral evidence had been led by the parties. In the second suit the collaterals produced sixteen witnesses who made bald statements about the custom, which were rejected by the Subordinate Judge as worthless as none of them was able to cite a single instance in which the collaterals had succeeded in preference to daughters in respect of non-ancestral property. The collaterals, however, relied on answers to questions Nos. 16 and 17 in Wilson's Manual. The High Court held (1) that the land was not ancestral; (2) that though the riwaj-i-am was entitled to an initial presumption in favour of its entries dealing with this question, on the facts of the case it was of limited value. Referring to questions and answers Nos. 16 and 17 in Wilson's Manual and the general answer as governing all Musalman tribes, it was observed that not a single instance where married daughters had been excluded from succession to non-ancestral property had been cited, either in the riwaj-i-am or proved at the trial. The judgment then refers (p. 282*) to three rulings—one of 1905 (the same as Ex. D. 7 above) and two of 1920, where the answers in Wilson's Manual were not followed. It is further stated (p. 310*) that there were:

"more than twenty cases in which daughters were proved to have excluded collaterals from succession to the property of their fathers, while there is not a single well-ascertained instance of collaterals as distantly related as the plaintiffs (sixth degree) succeeding to non-ancestral property in preference to daughters of the last male holder. The plaintiffs had succeeded in proving only three instances of succession of collaterals to non-ancestral property, but in all these cases the plaintiffs were 'near kindred'."

The suit was accordingly dismissed. The remarks at the end of the judgment (p. 310)* are valuable as showing that on the authority of Wilson's Manual (answers Nos. 16 and 17) and the admission of both Counsel in that appeal, the custom discussed in the judgment was the same among all the Musalman tribes of the Shahpur district.

Bhug Bhan v. Mohammad (16), (Dalip Singh, J.), also related to the Awans of Tahsil Khushab, Shahpur District. The contest there was between the daughters (defendants) and collaterals of the fifth degree (plaintiffs). The case followed the decision in Khan Beg v. Fateh Khatun (6). The judgment goes on to add that the twenty instances relied on in the judgment in that case were of such a character that they would apply to the fifth degreee, collaterals as much as to the sixth degree, and that out of the three contrary instances in that case only one was helpful to the plaintiffs. It was held that the presumption in the riwaj-i-am had been rebutted and that the daughters succeeded.

Jallo v. Sajjadan, (1933) (Ex. D. 6 in the present case), related to the tribe of Khokhars (fourth tribe mentioned in preface to Wilson's Manual) of Kalas, Tahsil Bhalwal, Shahpur District. This is a judgment of the District Judge at Sargodha Shahpur District. The contest was between a daughter and the sons of another daughter as plaintiffs and collaterals of the fifth degeree as defendants. In addition to the usual defences the collaterals pleaded a local custom of the Shahpur district under which daughters and their sons were excluded even if the land was not ancestral. The first Court held that the land was not ancestral that defendants were collaterals of the fifth degree and daughters were preferential heirs, and their suit was decreed. On appeal, the District Judge confirmed the findings, and stated, as regards the custom of the Shahpur district, that the evidence for the collaterals consisted (1) of entries in the revenue record; and (2) of oral evidence of nine witnesses, but that not one single instance had been cited to prove the preference of collaterals over daughters. He held that if the property was ancestral, the collaterals would succeed, but that if the property was not ancestral, the general custom of the province was in favour of the daughters, and that the local custom, contrary to the general custom, had not been established, as no instance of daughters' exclusion was proved. As for the record of the custom which stated (like the relevant answers in Wilson's Manual) that daughters did not obtain any share of the father's property, the learned Judge remarked that no distinction was made in it between ancestral and non-ancestral property and, therefore, following the case in Ghulam Muhammad v. Gauhar Bibi (15) (cited above), he held that the operation of the statemant must be confined to ancestral property. Turning to the facts of the case before him, the learned Judge held that on account of the various instances proved in the case, the presumption raised by the riwaj-i-am in favour of collaterals, so far as succession to non-ancestral property was concerned, had been rebutted. The suit was accordingly decreed. The Judge relied on the case in Khan Beg v. Fateh Khatun (6), as being "most important."

Exhibit D.8 (referred to in the trial Court's judgment in this case) is a decision of the Lahore High Court relating to the Mekans (tribe included in miscellaneous Musalmans) of the Shahpur district. Plaintiffs there were collaterals of the seventh degree as against married daughters. It was held that, according to the custom prevailing amongst the Mekans, and the Muhammadan land-holders of the Shahpur district generally, collaterals were excluded by married daughters in succession to the non-ancestral property of a sonless proprietor. It was also pointed out that according to answers No. 16 and 17 in Wilson's Manual, the same custom existed amongst all the Musalman tribes of the district (except the Tiwanas and Sayads, in whose cases there were minor variations). It was held that the plaintiffs (seventh decree collaterals) were excluded by the daughters. The judgment followed Ghulam Muhammad v. Gauhar Bibi (15), Khan Beg v. Fateh Khatun (6) and Bhag Bhari v. Muhammad (16).

The decisions cited above have been referred to in some detail because they were all from the Shahpur district and related to the Musalman tribes mentioned in Wilson's Manual. But the Lahore High Court have, in some of their decisions relating to the Shahpur District referred also to rulings from the other districts of the Punjab, where, owing to the contiguity of the district or analogous circumstances, a similarity of customs was found to have existed, tending to prove that, with regard to non-ancestral property, the custom was more or less general in the whole province of the Punjab that daughters married or unmarried, excluded collaterals, beyond the fifth degree. A few of these decisions which relate to the material period of 1905-1936 may be usefully noticed here.

Jhanda Singh v. Banto (2) (Campbell and Tek Chand, JJ.), was a case of a Kanj Jat of mauza Burewal in the Amritsar district. The contest was between collaterals of the sixth degree (plaintiffs) and the daughters (defendants) of a daughter's son appointed by the widow of the owner, under his directions, as a son to her husband. The Subordinate Judge held (and the High Court confirmed) that the land was not ancestral and the appointee took it as his absolute property with a complete power of disposal over it, and that consequently, on the latter's death, it would descend to his daughters, and plaintiffs had no right to it; that the rule of reversion mentioned in the riwaj-i-am of the Amritsar district, prepared in 1913-14, stating (like the answers in Wilson's Manual) that the collaterals excluded the daughters even with regard to non-ancestral property, had no application where the property was non-ancestral in the hands of the appointee and his power of disposal over it was absolute. In support of this view reference was made to paragraph 55 of Rattigan's Digest.

Sultan v. Sharfan (12) (Shadi Lal, C. J and Johnstone, J.), related to Awans of the village Khardar in the district of Jhelum. The owner was succeeded by his widow, who made a gift of a plot of the land to her daughter. Plaintiffs, brothers and a nephew of the owner, brought the suit, impugning the alienation. The property was admittedly self-acquired. Plaintiffs relied on an entry in the riwaj-i-am of the district (similar to answer No. 16 in Wilson's Manual), limiting the unmarried daughter's interest until her marriage, without distinction between self-acquired and ancestral property or movable or immovable property. The Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the daughters (the High Court confirmed the decision), holding that it was clear that the general custom of the province favoured the succession of the daughter to acquired property of her father in preference to collaterals. (Reference was made to Rattigan's Digest, paragraph 23, subparagraph (2).) The Subordinate Judge thought that a declaration in the riwaj-i-am that a married daughter cannot inherit even the self-acquired property of her father "verges on an absurdity"; no instances were mentioned in support of it. He added that the author of the riwaj-i-am had himself stated in the preface that his Code > "must not in all cases be regarded as a correct record of the customs actually existing and that the more intelligent tribesmen who usually act as spokesmen on an occasion of this kind sometimes allow their opinion as to what customs are expedient to override their knowledge of the customs as they really are."

The daughter produced evidence of at least four instances in her favour, as against one contrary instance proved by the collaterals, but the latter related to property which was jointly acquired by the deceased owner and his brother and went to the collaterals without any contest by the daughters. It may be noted that this case was treated by Tek Chand, J. in Khan Beg v. Fateh Khatun (6), (case of Awans of Shahpur) as of particular importance, as the question for decision in this ruling was precisely the same as before him and related to the neighbouring District of Jhelum.

Shahamad v. Muhammad Bibi (17), (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Agha Haidar, J.), was a case of Jats of the Sialkot district. The suit was brought by the daughter for a declaration that after the death of her mother she would inherit the property. Her claim was opposed by the nephew. The land was non-ancestral. The trial Judge, upon examination of the evidence, came to the conclusion that among the Jats of the Sialkot district, from where the original owner had migrated, the daughter is by custom entitled to succeed to the self-acquired property of her father in preference to his nephew. This finding was not challenged before the High Court.

Said v. Said Bibi (18), (Broadway and Harrison, JJ.), was also a case of a Jat in the Sialkot district. The contest was between a married daughter and her father's brothers. On a reference by the Collector, the daughter filed the suit for the usual declaration. The trial Court and the High Court both admitted her claim, holding that by the custom of the Jats of the Sialkot district a married daughter succeeds to the self-acquired property of her father in preference to collaterals. The uncles had relied on a riwaj-i-am of the Sialkot district (similar to answer No. 16 in Wilson's Manual) stating that married daughters did not inherit in the presence of collaterals. The High Court observed that a presumption of correctness attached to such an entry, but in the case before it the entry was qualified by the following remarks:

"this is the general rule, but, under the influence of judicial decisions, some people assert that daughters succeed in preference to collaterals of the fifth or more remote degree. Mughals assert that agnates of the fourth degree are excluded by the daughters."

The Judges gave effect to this qualification on finding that eight instances were cited in the riwaj-i-am in which daughters inherited to the exclusion of collaterals of varying degrees, and that in the case itself two more contested instances were proved in the daughter's favour. The case Shahamad v. Muhammad Bibi (17), was relied upon as affording strong evidence in support of the qualification of the custom set out in the riwaj-i-am.

Rahmat Ali Khan v. Sadiq-ul-Nisa (3) (Addison and Hilton, JJ.), related to Muhammadan Rajputs of Panipat, Karnal district. The contest was between collaterals of the sixth degree (plaintiffs) and a daughter (defendant No. 1) and widow (defendant No. 2). There was a will by the owner in favour of the daughter. The suit was for a declaration that the will was of no effect against reversionary rights, as the property was ancestral and there was a general custom excluding daughters and also a special custom of the Rajputs of Panipat that daughters married outside Panipat did not inherit. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the will was genuine and valid, the property was non-ancestral and there was a general custom preferring daughters to collaterals, and that the special custom pleaded was neither ancient nor reasonable. The High Court held that the property was not ancestral and that plaintiffs had not proved that the general custom favoured sixth degree collaterals even if the property was ancestral. The plaintiffs had relied upon a riwaj-i-am of Panipat of 1880, stating that "daughters succeed provided they be married in Panipat proper and are alive." This riwaj-i-am was supported by one instance proved in the case. Notwithstanding this, the High Court, following its previous decisions in Ghulam Muhammad v. Gauhar Bibi (15), (cited above) and Sham Das v. Moolo Bai (19), limited the operation of the riwaj-i-am to ancestral property as no mention of self-acquired property was made in it. The High Court proceeded to observe that assuming that the property was ancestral, the daughter was unmarried at her father's death when succession opened out and the property having vested in her, her subsequent marriage would not divest it. It is interesting to compare the last-mentioned principle with answer No. 16 in Wilson's Manual which states that unmarried daughters succeed to their father's estate but that on their marriage it reverts to the agnates.

Mahi v. Barkate (20), (Tek Chand and Skemp, JJ.), related to Kalon Jats of the Sialkot district. The contest was between brother's son's sons (plaintiffs) and daughter (defendant). After the death of the owner and his widow, the Collector ordered mutation in favour of the daughter. The brother's son's sons brought the usual suit against the daughter, claiming, inter alia, that according to the custom prevailing in the tribe, collaterals succeeded to self-acquired property to the exclusion of daughters. The Subordinate Judge found against plaintiffs on all points and dismissed the suit. The High Court held that the daughter was legitimate and therefore had a right to succeed in preference to the brother's son's sons. The collaterals had relied upon a riwaj-i-am of the Sialkot district of 1916, with reference to which the High Court observed that, though the initial presumption must be in favour of its correctness, the lower Court had rightly held, after careful examination of the evidence on the record and also the previous decisions, that the daughters had succeeded in displacing the presumption. It is significant that the High Court proceeded to add that Counsel appearing for the collaterals "conceded that there were several instances of daughters excluding collaterals in succession to non-ancestral property of their sonless fathers, while there was not even one instance in support of the answers as recorded. This entry in the riwaj-i-am has been examined in several cases by this Court and in every one of them it has been found that it was not in accord with the actual prevailing custom."

Reliance was placed, among other rulings, on Shahamad v. Muhammad Bibi (17) and Said v. Said Bibi (18), (cited above).

It is interesting to compare the last ruling with another case reported in the same volume—Gulab v. Umar Bibi (14), (Addison and Abdul Rashid, JJ.). This case related to a Dillu Jat of the village of Godha in the Sialkot District. The contest was between collaterals of the eleventh degree (far remoter than any collaterals concerned in any of the previous decisions) as plaintiffs and a married daughter (donee from the widow) and her husband (donee from her) as defendants. The trial Court dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiffs were very remote collaterals, that the land was not ancestral and that under the custom the daughter was entitled to succeed. It is to be noted that no evidence was produced by either party on the question of custom and the Subordinate Judge decided the issue on the basis of the general custom of the province as made out in the previous decisions of the Lahore High Court (cited above) dealing with the different tribes in the Sialkot and other districts. The High Court reversed the decision and decided in favour of the plaintiffs, relying entirely on the riwaj-i-ams of 1865, 1895 and 1916, holding that these riwaj-i-ams had remained unchanged during all these years and were clearly to the effect that married daughters did not inherit in the presence of collaterals "in any case," and, as they were not rebutted by the contrary evidence in the case, the riwaj-i-ams must be given effect to. It is clear that this case is an extreme instance where collaterals of the eleventh degree succeeded. It ignores the previous decisions, and some of them (cited above) from the same district of Sialkot, where collaterals of a much nearer degree, like nephews, were excluded by the daughters with reference to self-acquired property. The decision likewise fails to take note of the interpretation adopted in several of the previous decisions that where a riwaj i-am makes no distinction between ancestral and self-acquired property and states, as a wide generalisation, that daughters do not succeed in any case, it must be limited to ancestral property. It is to be noted that in this case, as in Jawaya Shah v. Fatima (13), (cited above), there was not a single instance adduced to rebut the presumption created in favour of the collaterals by the riwaj-i-am. It is on this ground that Bhide, J. in his differing judgment in Bahadur v. Nihal Kaur (1), (cited below) rightly describes this case as of an exceptional character.

It now remains to consider the Full Bench case of Bahadur v. Nihal Kaur (1), (differing judgments of Coldstream and Bhide, JJ. and Full Bench decision of Young, C. J., Monroe and Din Mohammad, JJ.). At the High Court in the present case has treated this ruling as an authority for ignoring the previous judicial decisions, it is necessary to examine closely the facts and effect of this ruling. The case related to the Jats of Daska Tehsil in Sialkot district. The contest was between a married daughter (plaintiff) and collaterals of the fourth degree (defendant). The land was non-ancestral. The trial Court decreed the suit, holding that the land being non-ancestral the custom favoured the daughter's preferential right. This decision was upheld on appeal by the District Judge. The collaterals appealed to the High Court, and that Court dismissed the suit. It is to be noted that neither party had proved any specific instances in the case, so there was no rebutting evidence against the presumption raised in favour of the collaterals by the answers in the riwaj-i-am relating to the district. The only material question was whether previous decisions of the Lahore High Court of a character contrary to the custom recorded in the riwaj-i-am would be sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption. None of the earlier decisions, for instance those cited above, nor even those relating to the Jats in the Sialkot district, were noticed in the Full Bench judgment, which referred only to two previous decisions: one of 1922, which Young, C. J. (who delivered the judgment of the Full Bench) thought was based on a wrong view of the law; and the other of 1928, which was held to be too recent to prove a custom. The riwaj-i-am relevant to the suit, which was noticed and commented on in some of the earlier decisions cited above, was clear so far as it went, but its qualifications were not given effect to as was done in some of the earlier decisions. There was a difference of opinion between Coldstream, J. and Bhide, J., and on a reference to the Full Bench, the reasoning adopted by the former Judge was virtually approved, but several vital considerations urged by Bhide, J. in his differing judgment do not appear to have received adequate consideration in the Full Bench judgment

If the Full Bench decision is intended to lay down the rule that a riwaj-i-am, being presumptive evidence, cannot be overridden by recent instances, either in the form of specific cases proved at the trial or the decisions of the Law Courts, their Lordships have little comment to make on it. The case cannot, however, be treated as an authority for the view that judicial decisions, even if they are not of recent date, cannot be treated as evidence against the statements in the riwaj-i-am. A judicial decision, though of comparatively recent date, may contain, on its records, evidence of specific instances, which are of sufficient antiquity to be of value in rebutting the presumption. In such a case, the value of the decision arises from the fact not that it is relevant under s. 13 and 42 of the Indian Evi. Act as forming in itself a "transaction by which the custom in question was "recognised, etc., etc.," but that it contains, on its records, a number of specific instances relating to the relevant custom. To ignore such judicial decisions merely on the basis of the riwaj-i-am would add greatly to the perplexities and difficulties of proving a custom.

Their Lordships are not convinced that Young, C. J.'s reference to the English rule, stated in Blackstone's Commentaries, that "a custom, in order that it may be legal and binding, must have been used so long that the memory of man-runneth not to the contrary"

was either apposite or useful, when applied to Indian conditions. It is undoubted that a custom observed in a particular district derives its force from the fact that it has, from long usage, obtained in that district, the force of law. It must be ancient ; but it is not of the essence of this rule that its antiquity must in every case be carried back to a period beyond the memory of man—still less that it is ancient in the English technical sense. It will depend upon the circumstances of each case what antiquity must be established before the custom can be accepted. What is necessary to be proved is that the usage has been acted upon in practice for such a long period and with such invariability as to show that it has, by common consent, been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular district. Having regard to the circumstances under which local customs have arisen and do arise in India, both with reference to Muslims and Hindus, and the ease and frequency with which people migrate from one district or province to another, it would, in their Lordships' opinion, create great perplexity in the already uncertain character of customary law to require that, in every case, the antiquity of a custom must be carried back to a period which is beyond the memory of man. Insistence upon such proof would also involve a complete ignoring of the caution, which was uttered in a judgment of this Board in the case of Abdul Hussein Khan v. Bibi Sona Dero (21), where their Lordships adverted to the difficulty of applying

"the strict rules that govern the establishment of custom in this country to circumstances which find no analogy here"

Likewise, their Lordships do not find themselves in agreement with the view of the Full Bench that the effect of the statements in the riwaj-i-am was not weakened by the fact that women had no opportunity of being consulted by the officer compiling the customary law or by the fact that the custom recorded was not in conformity with the general customary law. The presumption enjoyed by the riwaj-i-am was, in their Lordships' opinion, weakened to the extent of both these considerations, though the degree of the weakening would depend upon the facts of each case. Their Lordships prefer, in this behalf, the observations of the Punjab Judges, cited in a previous part of this judgment, which are of a contrary character.

Whatever value the Full Bench decision might have with reference to the customs of the Sialkot district the High Court in the present case was in error in accepting it as an authority for excluding from consideration the several instances, both judicial and otherwise, which were proved in this case with reference to the customs of the Shahpur district. By no straining of language could these decisions be described as recent. They commence from 1905-6 and range over a period of nearly thirty years. In many of these decisions the claimants in the position of the daughters proved specific instances of their superseding collaterals of varying degrees of remoteness, sometimes even nephews, with reference to non-ancestral property. The case of Gulab v. Umar Bibi (14), on which the Full Bench judgment relied, was as shown above, of an exceptional character and could hardly be regarded as indicating any rule of custom of general application as against numerous instances of a contrary character. Besides, both parties had led, in the present case, evidence of specific instances which had received careful consideration in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The High Court virtually ignored all this evidence on the basis of the Full Bench judgment. Their Lordships have examined this evidence and they agree with the view of the Subordinate Judge that the evidence produced by the daughters was of a more convincing character.

For the reasons indicated in this judgment, their Lordships are of opinion that the true legal position was that, the property being non-ancestral, the initial onus lay on the plaintiffs to prove that the general custom in favour of the daughters' succession had been varied by a special custom enabling the plaintiffs to exclude the daughters and that the plaintiffs have not discharged this onus. Their Lordships would add that even if it be held that the answers in Wilson's Manual raised an initial presumption against the daughters, having regard to the considerations mentioned in this judgment, it was a weak presumption, which has been sufficiently discharged by the evidence adduced in the case.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be allowed, that the decree of the High Court be reversed and that of the Subordinate Judge restored. The respondents will pay the appellants' costs in the High Court and before this Board.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Appeal No. 16 of 1940

BEAUMONT, C. J. AND KANIA, J.

CHITNIS AND KANGA, SOLICITORS—APPELLANTS

WAMANRAO S. MANTRI—RESPONDENT

Bombay High Court Original Side Rules, rr. 534, 895—Discretion of Judge to direct taxation under r. 534—Dispute as to fact or terms of employment of solicitor, order of taxation, if can be refused—Client, whether can challenge his liabitity to pay under r. 895—Work done in mofussil —Bill can be taxed on original side—Work done on appellate side cannot be so taxed.

A Judge has discretion to direct attorneys' bills to be taxed under r. 534 and where a bill is taxed, the attorney can apply by summary process for payment under r. 895. The taxation of a bill does not determine the liability of the client to pay, and he is entitled to challenge his liability on a summons under r. 895 after taxation has taken place. When an application is made ex parte for a common form order for taxation, the Court may direct the solicitor to issue a summons, and may hear what the client has to say in the matter. If the Court thinks that there is a serious dispute as to the fact or terms of employment of the solicitor, the Court may refuse to make an order for taxation and leave the attorney to file a suit; and in that suit the solicitor's right to recover can be first determined, and the amount to be recovered can be determined subsequently by taxation. The Taxing Master is entitled to tax the bill of costs in relation to work done in the mofussil, on the original side scale but costs incurred on the appellate side of the High Court cannot be so taxed. 94 Ind. Cas. 149 (1), relied on.

Mr. F. J. Coltman, for the Respondent.

Mr. V. F. Taraporewala, for the Law Society.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of Somjee, J., setting aside an order made by the Prothonotary for taxation. The learned Judge gave no judgment and therefore we do not know on what view his decision was based. The order made by the Prothonotary was the common form order for taxation of a bill of costs of Messrs. Chitnis & Kanga in relation to certain matters, one of which was an appeal on the appellate side of the High Court. An order for taxation on the original side cannot be made in respect of costs incurred on the appellate side of the High Court, and as to this item, admittedly the order to tax was wrong. The solicitors' case is that they were employed by the client and his father in connexion with probate proceedings in the Satara District Court, and in those proceedings they filed a formal retainer. They did a certain amount of work in that case partly as attorneys and partly as Pleaders, although a Pleader was employed to argue the case. They also allege that they did miscellaneous work in the mofussil. The order made by the Prothonotary was under r. 534 which provides that "the Taxing Master shall tax the bills of costs on every side of the Court (except the appellate side) and in the insolvency Court. All other bills of costs of attorneys shall also be taxed by him when he is directed to do so by a Judge's order."

So that a Judge has discretion to direct attorneys' bills to be taxed in any case, and where a bill is taxed, the attorney can apply by summary process for payment under r. 895. It is argued by Mr. Coltman in the first place that the fact of employment of the solicitors and the terms of employment are disputed, and it is unreasonable to put parties to the expense of taxing a bill when ultimately nothing may be payable. The taxation of a bill does not determine the liability of the client to pay, and he is entitled to challenge his liability on a summons under r. 895 after taxation has taken place. As I have pointed out the power of a Judge to direct taxation under r. 534 is discretionary. When an application is made ex parte for a common form order for taxation, the Court may direct the solicitor to issue a summons, and may hear what the client has to say in the matter. If the Court thinks that there is a serious dispute as to the fact or terms of employment of the solicitor, the Court may refuse to make an order for taxation and leave the attorney to file a suit; and in that suit the solicitor's right to recover can be first determined, and the amount to be recovered can be determined subsequently by taxation. In the present case, on the affidavits, I do not think there is such serious doubt as to the client's liability to pay as to justify us in refusing to make an order for taxation.

Then it is said that the costs of proceedings in the mofussil cannot be taxed by the Taxing Master of the High Court, who will tax the bill on the ordinary original side scale. With regard to that there is a direct authority in the decision of this Court in Nowroji v. Kanga (1) where the Court of Appeal held that an attorney of this Court was entitled to have his bill taxed on the original side although it related to work done in the mofussil. That case, as is noted in the judgment, related to costs incurred before the Pleaders Act of 1920 came into operation, but in my view that Act has no effect on the present question. The Act provides in s. 17, which has been replaced by s. 3, Legal Practitioners' Fees Act of 1926, that a legal practitioner (which includes an attorney) may enter into a special agreement as to the terms of his remuneration. But there is no question of special remuneration here. Section 18, which was also relied upon, deals merely with the amount of Pleader's fees which can be recovered against the opposing party. That again has nothing to do with the present matter. In my opinion we are bound by the decision in Nowroji v. Kanga (1) to hold that the Taxing Master is entitled to tax the bill in relation to work done in the mofussil. In my opinion therefore the appeal must be allowed with costs.

Kania, J.—The jurisdiction of the Court to make the order for taxation under r. 534 in connection with matters sought to be taxed here (excluding the work done on the appellate side) cannot be disputed. Rule 534 in terms is applicable. It is therefore improper to contend that the order made by the Prothonotary was ultra vires. Such orders are ordinarily made ex parte, and on the footing that the attorney is employed as such. The client's liability to pay the taxed costs can be disputed when the attorney takes out a summons for payment under r. 895. Even before that it does not appear to be out of place for a client to take out a summons to set aside the ex parte order and on the hearing of that summons the Court may direct either that the enquiry sought to be made in connection with the employment of the attorney by the client may be made at that stage or having regard to the disputes raised by the client the attorneys should be referred to a separate suit. If however, there is prima facie evidence or the Court is satisfied on the affidavits that no such order revoking the previous order should be made, the taxation under the order obtained ex parte may proceed and the client can still, when an order is sought for enforcing payment, raise the contentions permitted to him. In the present case it appears that the learned Judge set aside the ex parte order passed by the Prothonotary on the footing that it was ultra vires. I am led to this conclusion from the statement found in the affidavit of the respondent. The learned Judge does not appear to have decided that there was no employment of the appellants by the respondent or his father or that there was no satisfactory evidence to lead to that conclusion and therefore left the appellants to their ordinary remedy of filing the suit. On that footing I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Second Appeal No. 162 of 1939
May 8, 1940
EDGLEY, J.

Shekh TAMIZALI—APPELLANT
versus
MD. NASARALI BHUIYA
AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Practice—New plea—Important question of law, if can be taken for first time in second appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 47, O. XXI, r. 90—Court taking erroneous view of law acts illegally in exercise of jurisdiction—Revision, if maintainable—Plea not taken before sale should be regarded as waived—Rule does not apply to debtor applying under Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII of 1936), s. 8—Validity of sale is question in execution—Sale held—Application under Bengal Agricultural Debtors' Act (VII of 1936), s. 8—Onus to prove that sale was illegal—Onus discharged—Effect—Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII of 1936), ss. 8, 35, 34—Application under s. 8—Execution proceedings relating to debt included in application, if automatically stayed even if no notice under s. 34 is issued.

A point which was not directly raised in either of the Courts below but which involves an important question of law, can be raised in second appeal. [p. 452, col. 1.]

Where the Courts below have taken an erroneous view of the law with regard to a matter and have acted illegally in the exercise of their jurisdiction it is open to the High Court, to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under s. 115, Civil P. C. [ibid.]

The question of the illegality of the sale should be pleaded at the proper stage of the execution proceedings before the sale actually took place. Such a plea should be regarded as waived unless such plea is expressly taken before the sale. This plea of waiver does not, however, apply to the case of the judgment-debtor who has applied under s. 8, Beng. Agri. Debtors' Act. [p. 452, col. 2.]

The question as to the validity of the execution sale is clearly a matter which arises between the parties to the suit and relates to the execution of the decree and therefore falls within the purview of s. 47, Civil P. C. But when once an execution sale had been held there is a strong presumption to the effect that it was validly held by a Court which acted in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction. This being the case, the onus would lie heavily upon the applicant to show that the sale was in fact illegal on the ground that before the sale he had applied to the Debt Settlement Board for the settlement of his debts and had included in his application the debt in respect of which the execution proceedings had been taken, which resulted in the sale. On discharge of this onus, the Court would have no option but to set aside the sale even if it had received no notice under s. 34, Beng. Agri. Debtors Act The result would therefore be that even if the debt had been extinguished by the sale it would revive after the sale had been set aside and the provisions of the Beng. Agri. Debtors Act would apply thereto. [p. 453, col. 2]

The intention of the Legislature was to provide that all proceedings for the execution of decrees for debts included in an application under s. 8 should be automatically stayed as soon as the application was filed before a Board. In view of the language of s. 35 of the Act it is impossible to hold that it could have been the intention of the Legislature that a judgment-debtor should be deprived of a valuable right which had been conferred upon him by the Act by reason merely of some carelessness on the part of the Board, which might result in failure to issue the required notice under s. 34. [p. 453, col. 1.]

S A. from the appellate order of the District Judge, Mymensingh, dated March 13, 1939.

Messrs. Birendra Kumar De and Abani Kanta Roy, for the Appellant.

Messrs Ramendra Chandra Roy and Chandra Nath Mukherjee, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The judgment-debtor is the appellant in this case and the appeal arises with reference to the dismissal of an application filed by the judgment-debtor under s. 47, Civil P. C., in which he sought to set aside an execution sale. It appears that the decree-holder obtained a decree for rent against the appellant on July 12, 1937. On May 28, 1938 he put this decree into execution and the requisite processes had been served by June 14, 1938. On June 30, 1938 the appellant applied to the Debt Settlement Board for the settlement of his debts and he alleges the rent decree which the decree-holder was seeking to execute was included in the application under s. 8, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act. He maintained that the Debt Settlement Board in due course issued a notice under s. 34 of the Act but, in spite of the issue of this notice, the execution sale was held on August 9, 1938. Thereafter, on November 11, 1938 the appellant applied to the Court under s. 47, Civil P. C., to have this sale set aside. Issues were framed by the trial Court with regard to the question of the maintainability of the application and also on the points whether or not the application to the Board was a bar in respect of the subsequent proceedings in execution and whether the sale was vitiated by reason of the alleged issue of the notice under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act. Although it was decided that the application was maintainable, the other two points were decided against the appellant and the trial Court held that in fact no notice under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, had been issued by the Board and that in these circumstances the sale which was held on August 9, 1938 could not be impeached by the appellant. The judgment-debtor thereafter appealed to the learned District Judge of Mymensingh and his appeal was dismissed.

The main point which has been argued on behalf of the appellant in this case is that, in view of the fact that an application had been made to the Debt Settlement Board under s. 8, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, which included the decree which was the subject-matter of the execution proceedings in Execution Case No. 54/C of 1938, the Court had no option but to set aside the sale under s. 47, Civil P. C., as soon as the fact had been brought to its notice that the application had been actually made to the Board and, in this connection it was further contended that the non-receipt of the stay order under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, must be regarded as immaterial. With regard to this matter it may be noted that the appellant places particular reliance upon the provisions of s. 35, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act. This was a point which was not directly raised in either of the Courts below but, as it involves an important question of law there is no reason why it should not be raised in this Court.

In the first place, it has been argued by the learned Advocate for the respondents that no appeal lies to this Court having regard to the principles laid down in Prafulla Krishna Deb v. Nosibannessa Bibi (1). In view of the fact that the decree which it was sought to execute was in respect of a sum of Rs. 19-11 6 only this contention must be accepted having regard to the provisions of s. 153 (a), Ben. Ten. Act. At the same time, I am of opinion, for the reasons which will presently appear, that the Courts below have taken an erroneous view of the law with regard to this matter and have acted illegally in the exercise of their jurisdiction. It is, therefore, open to this Court to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under s. 115 Civil P. C. The learned Advocate for the appellant in this case, as already pointed out, relies mainly upon the provisions of the first part of s. 35, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, which is in the following terms:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any Act, no decree of a civil Court or certificate under the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, shall be executed (i) for the recovery of a debt included in an application under s. 8 or in a statement under sub-s. (1) of s. 13, until (a) the application has been dismissed by the Board in respect of such debt; or (b) an award in which such debt is included has ceased to subsist under sub-s. (5) of s. 29... .."

His argument is to the effect that, as soon as an application to the Board is made under the provisions of s. 8 of the Act, the Civil Court loses its jurisdiction to execute any decree which may have been included in the application in question. He admits that, according to the ordinary procedure which should be followed by Debt Settlement Boards, a notice under s. 34 of the Act should be issued to the Court concerned and that, on receipt of such notice, the Court should stay all further proceedings in the matter. He contends, however, that in a case in which the Board failed to fulfil its duty under s. 34, and the execution sale was held by reason of such failure, it would be open to the judgment-debtor himself to bring the matter to the notice of the executing Court which would be bound to set aside the sale if the judgment-debtor succeeded in showing that he had duly applied for the settlement of his debts under s. 8 of the Act and his application included the decree which had been put into execution by the sale in question.

The main argument of the decree-holder is to the effect that the question of the illegality of the sale should be pleaded at the proper stage of the execution proceedings before the sale actually took place. He contends that such a plea should be regarded as a plea in bar, which should be deemed to be waived unless such plea is expressly taken before the sale. In support of this contention reliance is placed upon the decision of the Madras High Court in Moturi Seshayya v. Venkatadri Appa Row, 36 Ind. Cas. 289 (2). In that case the learned Judge observed that:

"It must be remembered that the plea of res judicata is one which does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court, but it is a plea in bar of a trial of a suit or an issue, as the case may be which a party is at liberty to waive."

This case was cited with approval by this Court in Rajani Kumar Mitra v. Ajmaddin Bhuia (3) in which the learned Judge observed that:

"If a party does not put forward his plea of res judicata in a suit he must be taken to have waived it or it must be taken to be a matter which ought to have been made a ground of attack and deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in the suit under explanation (4) of s. 11, Civil P. C."

In the cases cited above, it would appear that the plea of res judicata had not been expressly taken in the pleadings and it was on this account that it was held that this defence had been waived. In the present case however, it cannot be said that the appellant had at any time waived his right to rely on the provisions of s. 35, Ben Agri. Debtors Act. As soon as he filed his application to the Debt Settlement Board on June 30, 1938 he was justified in assuming that the Board would comply with the mandatory requirements of s. 34 of the Act and would issue a notice to stay all further proceedings in execution of the decree in respect of any debt which might have been included in his application. Ordinarily, therefore, no occasion would have been arisen for him to inform the Court that he had actually made an application to be Board for the settlement of his debts or to contend that by reason of such application the decree had become incapable of execution. In this view of the case, the decisions upon which the learned Advocate relies are of little avail to him. In my view, there can be no doubt that the intention of the Legislature was to provide that all proceedings for the execution of decrees for debts included in an application under s. 8 should be automatically stayed as soon as the application was filed before a Board, and for this purpose it was provided under s. 34 of the Act that due notice with regard to such application should be given to the civil Court. The terms of this section are mandatory inasmuch as it says that :

"....."the Board shall give notice thereof to such Court in the prescribed manner and thereupon, the suit or proceeding shall be stayed until the Board has either dismissed the application in respect of such debt or made an award thereon."

At the same time in view of the language of s. 35 of the Act it is impossible to hold that it could have been the intention of the Legislature that a judgment-debtor should be deprived of a valuable right which had been conferred upon him by the Act by reason merely of some carelessness on the part of the Board, which might result in failure to issue the required notice. It is contended on behalf of the respondent that, when once a rent sale has been held the debt must be regarded as satisfied and the matter will therefore no longer fall within the scope of the Ben. Agri. Debtors Act and that a rent sale which has been held by the Civil Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction cannot be set aside under s. 47, Civil P. C. in a case such as that with which we are now dealing. I am not prepared to accept this contention. The question as to the validity of the execution sale is clearly a matter which arises between the parties to the suit and relates to the execution of the decree and therefore falls within the purview of s. 47, Civil P. C. At the same time, when once an execution sale had been held there is a strong presumption to the effect that it was validly held by a Court which acted in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction. This being the case the onus would lie heavily upon the applicant to show that the sale was in fact illegal on the ground that before the sale he had applied to the Debt Settlement Board for the settlement of his debts and had included in his application the debt in respect of which the execution proceedings had been taken, which resulted in the sale. If the applicant is liable to discharge this onus, in my opinion, the Court would have no option but to set aside the sale even if it had received no notice under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act. The result would therefore, be that even if the debt had been extinguished by the sale it would revive after the sale had been set aside and the provisions of the Ben. Agri. Debtors Act would apply thereto.

The question whether or not the application under s. 8, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act had actually been made by the appellant to the Debt Settlement Board and whether this application included the decree which he sought to execute in Execution Case No. 54/C of 1938 has not been considered by the Courts below. This being the case, the decisions of both the Courts be set aside and this case is remanded to the trial Court for further consideration in the light of the above observations. The appeal is accordingly allowed. Costs will abide the final result. The hearing fee in this Court is assessed at three gold mohurs. This order will however not have the effect of disturbing the findings of the trial Court with regard to the maintainability of the application and the further finding to the effect that no notice under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, was actually issued by the Board.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 383, 385, 347, 342—Extortion includes offence under s. 385—S. 347 includes offence under s. 342—"Corruptly and maliciously" in s. 220 covers confinement for extortion under s. 347—Police Sub-Inspector wrongfully confining person on charge of gambling and extorting money from them by putting them under fear of prosecution—Offence falls under s. 220 and not under s. 347 or 342—It is triable by Court of Sessions—Magistrate usurping jurisdiction—His duty—Whether mere irregularity—Committal by Appellate Court to Court of Sessions—Inquiry and committal order, if should be repeated—Conviction of accused under s. 220 and confederate under s. 384 read with s. 114, Penal Code—High Court quashing proceedings and committing case to Sessions Court—Proceedings against confederate, if should be ordered to be dropped merely because he has served part of sentence—Proper procedure—Criminal trial —Jurisdiction—Objection to, taken at late stage —Court, if gets jurisdiction.

Extortion as defined in s. 383, I. P. C., includes putting any person in fear of injury and covers s. 385, I P. C., which is a less serious offence punishable only with two years' imprisonment as against three years' imprisonment for an offence under s. 384. [p 455, col. 1.]

The offence under s. 342, I. P. C., is included in the offence under s. 347. [ibid]

The words "corruptly and maliciously" in s. 220, I. P. C., are wide enough to cover confinement for the purpose of extortion. Where a Police Sub-Inspector wrongfully confines certain persons on charges of gambling in futures and extorts money from them by putting them in fear of being challaned in Court upon offences which he knew to be false, the offence falls under s. 220 and not s. 347 or s. 342 and is triable only by Court of Sessions. [p. 456, col. 1.]

Where the Legislature has provided that an offence because of its gravity or because of the special knowledge required in its trial, shall be tried by a Sessions Court, a First Class Magistrate, however proper be his motives, should not himself remove that case, as it were from its proper Court, the Court of Session, and try it himself by merely altering the numbers of the sections, for, after all the numbers of the sections are mere lables, and what is to be looked at is the allegation of the facts. Where serious offences, such as one under s. 220 against the Sub-Inspector, are to be tried, it is desirable from all points of view, from the point of view of the public, from the point of view of the Police force, from the point of view of the officer concerned, from the point of view of justice, that these most serious cases, and they are most serious cases, should, so far as the law permits, be committed to the Court of Session even if a First Class Magistrate had power to try them. [p. 455, col. 2.]

The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try an offence under s. 220. It is not a case of irregularity such as is referred to in s. 531, Criminal P. C., but is an illegality comparable to those irregularities under s. 530, Criminal P. C., which make proceedings void. [p. 456, col. 2.]

An Appellate Court under s. 423 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., has power to commit the accused for trial to the Court of Session, though it is not necessary for it to repeat the inquiry or write a long commital order, where the alleged facts are set out clearly in the judgment of the trying Magistrate and the evidence is very fully upon the record. [p. 456, col. 1.]

Where the Magistrate by usurping jurisdiction convicts an accused for an offence falling under s. 220, I P. C., and his confederate under s. 348 read with s. 114, I. P. C., the High Court while quashing the proceedings and committing the case to the Court of Sessions, cannot order that no further proceedings be taken against the confederate merely because he has served a part of his sentence. It is in the interests of all concerned that the confederate and the accused should be tried together for offences which are all part of the same transaction. [p. 456, col. 2.]

A Court does not get a jurisdiction it does not possess, merely because objection to it is taken by the accused at a late stage. [ibid.]

Cr. As. against convictions and sentences passed by the City Magistrate, Karachi, dated June 17, 1940.

Messrs. Partabsingh S. Shahani and Balkrishna H. Lulla, for the Appellants. (Mansharam and Shanker, respectively).

Kazi Khuda Baksh, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Judgment.—I have before me two appeals: (1) by one Mansharam Gianchand, at one time a Sub-Inspector of Police, and (2) by his alleged confederate Shanker Kashiram, a clerk in the accounts branch of the Karachi Municipal Corporation. So far as Mansharam is concerned he has been convicted by the City Magistrate of Karachi of offences of wrongful confinement and extortion, and so far as Shanker is concerned, he has been convicted of abetment of the offence of extortion. The sections under which the appellants have been convicted are set out in the order of the learned Magistrate. So far as Mansharam is concerned, the sections are 384, 385 and 347, I. P. C., and so far as Shanker is concerned, the sections are 384 read with s. 114, I. P. C., and 385 read with s. 114, I. P. C. For the offence under ss. 384 and 385, I. P. C., Mansharam was sentenced under each section to six months' rigorous imprisonment, and for the offence under s. 347, I. P. C., he was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment, the punishment under s. 347, I. P. C., to run consecutively with the two sentences of six months each passed under ss. 384 and 385, I. P. C., which were to run concurrently. Mansharam was, therefore, to suffer one year's rigorous imprisonment in all. The appellant Shanker was sentenced under s. 384 read with s. 114, I. P. C., and s. 385 read with s. 114, I. P. C. each to six months' rigorous imprisonment, the sentences to run concurrently.

The offences of which the appellants were convicted were alleged to have been committed by the Sub-Inspector on the night of May 27, 1939, when the wrongfully confined three Khojas, Bundehali, Kamarudin and Husseini, on charges of gambling in futures, put them in fear of being challaned to the Court upon offences which he knew to be fictitious and extorted from them sums of money in their possession, namely Rs. 55, Rs. 86, Rs. 2 and a further sum of Rs. 200 through his go-between and confederate Shanker Kashiram. The charges, as set out at p. 103 of the paper book, referred to an offence under s. 409, I. P. C., but of this offence the appellants were acquitted. The charge also refers to ss. 384 and 385, I. P. C. But, as Mr. P. S. Shahani points out extortion as defined in s. 383, I. P. C., includes putting any person in fear of injury and covers s. 385, I. P. C., which is a less serious offence punishable only with two years' imprisonment as against three years' imprisonment for an offence under s. 384, I. P. C. Mr. Shahani also points out that the offence under s. 342, I. P. C., is included in the offence under s. 347, I. P. C., for s. 347, I. P. C., refers to wrongful confinement for the purpose of extortion. Section 342, I. P. C., refers to wrongful confinement simply and is punishable with imprisonment only for one year as against three years which may be imposed under s. 347, I. P. C.

But Mr. Shahani at the outset of the proceedings raised a much more important point. This was that so far as the charge of wrongful confinement was concerned, the appropriate section was not s. 342 or s. 347, I. P. C. at all, but s. 220, I. P. C., for if the Sub-Inspector was charged as a Sub-Inspector, as he was alleged, with wrongfully keeping these three Khojas in confinement corruptly for the purpose of extortion, he knew well, if the evidence is to be believed and the inferences are correctly drawn, that he was acting contrary to law when he so exercised authority. His offence then is an offence under s. 220, I. P. C. and is triable solely by the Court of Sessions; the Magistrate cannot therefore usurp a jurisdiction to himself he did not possess by placing an offence, which rightly falls under s. 220, I. P. C. under s. 342 or s. 347, I. P. C., so as to give himself jurisdiction and trying it himself. It is true that in the complaint s. 220, I. P. C., is specified and the learned Public Prosecutor tells me that process was issued with respect to this offence also. The learned Public Prosecutor agrees that the case should be committed to the Court of Session. Mr. Shahani has referred me to three cases which deal with this question of usurpation by Magistrates of jurisdiction vested in Sessions Courts, namely Shambooram v. Emperor, 37 Cr. L. J. 80 (1) Jamal Mahomad v. Moideen Sa, 12, Cr. L. J. 20 (2) and Moge Ali v. Emperor, 21 Cr. L. J. 10 (3). But I do not think myself it is necessary to refer to any authority in respect of the argument that where the Legislature has provided that an offence because of its gravity or because of the special knowledge required in its trial, shall be tried by a Sessions Court, a first class Magistrate, however proper be his motives, should not himself remove that case, as it were from its proper Court, the Court of Session, and try it himself by merely altering the numbers of the sections, for after all the numbers of the sections are mere labels, and what is to be looked at is the allegation of facts. But even in this case the complaint, as I have said, refers to an offence under s. 220, I. P. C.

There is again, I think, another aspect to this matter. It is a matter merely of personal opinion, and I may be wrong, but where serious offences, such as are alleged in this case against the Sub-Inspector, are to be tried, it appears to me that it is desirable from all points of view, from the point of view of the public, from the point of view of the Police force, from the point of view of the officer concerned, from the point of view of justice, that these most serious cases, and they are most serious cases should, so far as the law permits, be committed to the Court of Session even if a first class Magistrate had power to try them, for it appears to me that for an offence of this nature, even though it involves the loss of appointment and of pension, a sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment in the case of one man would be far more effective than six monts or a year in the case of more than one, in the cases, say of five or six Sub-Inspectors, who might be convicted and sentenced to six months' imprisonment each. Corrupt men in the office of Sub-Inspector may still think it worth the risk, if the penalty is only six months' imprisonment, but they would not think it worth the risk if they saw before them on detection for such an offence a sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment. But in a case under s. 220, I. P. C., if it is properly to be applied, any doubt as to the Court by which such an offender should be tried, is removed by the provisions of the Criminal P. C., itself which requires an offence under s. 220, I. P. C., to be tried by the Court of Session. It might, of course, be argued that an offence under s. 347, I. P C., is rather different from an offence under s. 220, I. P. C., that the words "corruptly or maliciously" mean something less than confinement for a specific purpose, such as extortion with which s. 347, I. P. C., deals. I think myself that these words "corruptly and maliciously" are wide enough to cover confinement for the purpose of extortion, and, in any case, if I should be wrong, the learned Sessions Judge who tries this case, can, if he thinks proper, amend the charge. In any case, I should think it desirable that an offence of this gravity—and it is a very grave offence indeed—should be tried by the Court of Session.

I have power under s. 423 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., to commit the accused for trial to the Court of Session, thought it is not necessary for me to repeat the inquiry or write a long committal order. The alleged facts are set out clearly in the judment of the City Magistrate and the evidence is very fully upon the record.

But it has been suggested to me that I should consider that the Sub-Inspector has been sufficiently punished by the period of imprisonment, namely three and half months which he has already undergone, while his confederate or alleged confederate Shanker has also suffered three and half months' imprisonment, and he has been acquitted of the offence of abetting wrongful confinement and convicted only of the offence of abetment of extortion. But it appears to me very difficult indeed to separate the case of one accused from another without prejudicing the whole trial. I need not, and do not, commit the accused for offences under s. 409, I. P. C., nor for an attempt to commit an offence under s. 511, I P. C. while the offence under s. 384, I. P. C. itself remains in the charge. Nor is it necessary for me to commit the accused for trial for an offence under s. 385, I. P. C. s. 364, I. P. C., covering also the offence under s. 385, I. P. C. Nor, in view of the fact that an offence under s. 220, I. P. C. is to be charged, is it necessary for me to refer in the charge to offences under ss. 342 and 347, I. P. C. So for as Shanker is concerned, he has to be charged only with an offence under s. 384 read with s. 114, I. P. C. with respect to the four sums of money, viz., Rs. 55, Rs. 86, Rs. 2 and Rs. 200, alleged to have been extorted from the three Khojas, Bundehali, Kamarudin and Husseini, severally as regards the smaller sums and jointly as regards the larger sum. But I do not think that because he has already suffered three and half months' rigorous imprisonment, I can, while quashing the proceedings, order no further proceeding to be taken against him. It appears to me in the interests of all concerned that he and the Sub-Inspector should be tried together for offences which are all part of the same transaction.

Nor do I think it can be said that the exercise by the City Magistrate, Karachi, of jurisdiction which he did not possess with regard to the offence under s. 220, I. P. C. in view of the facts upon the record, does not vitiate the trial, that it is a mere irregularity which would not vitiate the trial. It seems to me we are dealing here with a question of jurisdiction which goes to the root of the trial, with something more than an irregularity within the meaning, say, of 531, Criminal P. C., or even s. 537 of the Code. It is, of course, unfortunate that this question with regard to s. 220, I. P. C., was not raised before but a Court does not get a jurisdiction it does not possess merely because objection to it is taken by the accused at a late stage. The offence or one of the offences for which the Sub-Inspector should have been tried was under s. 220, I. P. C. The Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try this offence. We have not here a case of irregularity such as is referred to in s. 531, Criminal P. C. We have rather an illegality comparable to those irregularities under s. 530, Criminal P. C., which make proceedings void. It appears to me therefore that I should quash the proceedings, set aside the conviction and order the committal under s. 423 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., to the Court of Session for the trial of offences, so far as the Sub-Inspector is concerned under ss. 220 and 384, I. P. C., and so far as Shanker, his confederate, is concerned, for an offence under s, 384, I. P. C. read with s. 114,

I. P. C., and I order accordingly. The charge will now read as under:

"Charge.—You (1) Mansharam, son of Gianchand, and (2) Shanker, son of Kashiram, are charged as follows:

That you Mansharam on or about the 27th day of May 1939, at Karachi, in your capacity as the Sub-Inspector of Police, Soldier Bazar Police Station, did in virtue of your office, corruptly or maliciously keep in confinement, in the exercise of your authority, knowing that in so doing you were acting contrary to law, Bandehali, Kamarudin, and Husseini, and further that you committed an offence of extortion against each of the aforesaid persons with respect to the sums of Rs. 55, Rs. 86 and Rs. 2, respectively, and with respect to a further sum of Rs. 200, against the the aforesaid persons jointly, and you thereby committed offences under ss. 220 and 384, I. P. C., triable by the Court of Session:

And that you Shanker, on or about the aforesaid date and at the aforesaid place intentionally abetted the commission of the aforesaid offences under s. 384, I. P. C., and thereby committed offences under the aforesaid s. 384 read with s. 114, I. P. C., and triable by, the Court of Session:

And I, the undersigned, do hereby direct that you both be committed to and tried by the aforesaid Court on the said charges."

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Appeal No. 185 of 1938

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
PROVINCE OF BENGAL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1923), s. 127—Tenant—Servants occupying house of master—Deductions made from pay for occupying house—Servant, if becomes tenant—Points material for decision.

The mere fact that a servant is paid less wages or some deductions are made from his pay for the benefit of being allowed to occupy a house of his master would not make him a tenant. In such a case the master would in law be taken to have possession. The relationship of master and servant is not however inconsistent with that of landlord and tenant. The question as to whether the master's house is a mere lodging provided for the servant or is left in occupation of the latter qua tenant must be answered by keeping in view not the form but the substance. If the servant's occupation of his master's house be ancillary to the performance of the duties which as servant he has engaged to perform, then his occupation would be considered as that of a servant, but if his occupation is not connected with his employment, he would be considered a tenant. [p. 458, col. 1.]

[English case-law relied on].

In deciding whether a person's occupation of certain premises is as a tenant or as a servant the material points for consideration are (a) whether a person is required to occupy the house in question for the performance of his services, or (b) did occupy it in order to their performance or (c) that it was conducive to that purpose more than any other house which he might have himself rented. [p. 458, col. 2.]

From the fact in the house the Commissioner sometimes holds meetings of public bodies of which he happens to be the chairman, though the meetings could have been as well held in his office it cannot be held that the case comes within the first head. It cannot be said that the Commissioner was required to occupy the house for the performance of his duties. He was not required to reside there, much less was his residence there ancillary and necessary to the performance of his duties Smith v. Overseers of Seghill (5), relied on. [p. 460, col. 2.]

In order that the case may fall within the propositions (b) and (c), the advantage must be shown to be decisive one and not merely slight. Hughes v. Overseers of the Parish of Chatham (2), relied on.

Order.—The principal question in this appeal relates to the method of assessment of No. 4, Theatre Road. It was assessed by the municipality under s. 127, cl. (b), Cal. Municipal Act, but the Province of Bengal contends that it can only be assessed under cl. (a) of that section. This contention has been accepted by the Chief Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court in an appeal preferred by the assessee under s. 141 of the said Act. The annual value has been reduced from Rs. 16,837 to Rs. 9,720. The Province of Bengal is the owner of the said premises. It is occupied by the Commissioner of the Presidency Division. He has to pay for his occupation ten per cent. of his salary. The evidence is that that sum is deducted from his salary and credited by the Accountant General, Bengal, to the Local Govt. under the denomination of rent. The evidence also establishes the fact fact that a Govt. officer occupies it and is entitled to occupy it so long as he is the Commissioner of the said division. The learned Chief Judge has held that the Commissioner of the Division must be taken to occupy the same in the character of a tenant and not of a servant for two reasons, namely (a) because the sum deducted from his salary is credited to the Local Govt. as rent and (b) because it is immaterial whether he actually resides there or sublets it.

The last mentioned finding is not only not supported by evidence but is against the case as set up by the respondent. The sole basis of the finding of the learned Chief Judge accordingly rests on the fact that the Govt. deducts a fixed sum from the Commissioner's salary as rent. We do not however consider the said fact as of unequivocal import. The mere fact that a servant is paid less wages or some deductions are made from his pay for the benefit of being allowed to occupy a house of his master would not make him a tenant. Bertie v. Baumont (1). A master may provide a lodging for his servant, may be in a separate house, pay him less wages, or deduct from his pay a fixed sum of money for such benefit, still the servant would not be his master's tenant, though he has to pay for his residence in his master's house. In such a case the master would in law be taken to have possession. The relationship of master and servant is not however inconsistent with that of landlord and tenant. In our judgment the question as to whether the master's house is a mere lodging provided for the servant or is left in occupation of the latter qua tenant must be answered by keeping in view not the form but the substance.

The cases establish the principle that if the servant's occupation of his master's house be ancillary to the performance of the duties which as servant he has engaged to perform, then his occupation would be considered as that of a servant, but if his occupation is not connected with his employment, he would be considered a tenant. The cases we have in mind are Hughes v. Overseers of the Parish of Chatham (2), Dobson v. Jones (3), Reg v. Spurrell (4), Smith v. Overseers of Saghill (5) and Bent v. Roberts (6). The case has not been approached in the Court below from this point of view and there is no evidence on this material point. The onus is on the Province of Bengal to prove the conditions of service of the Commissioner of the Division on the ground of special knowledge. As the case is of importance we do not think it right to allow the appeal, as urged by Mr. Chatterjee, on the ground that the onus has not been discharged by the respondent. For the ends of justice we direct the learned Chief Judge to allow the parties to lead additional evidence directed on the following points : (a) Whether the Commissioner of the Presidency Division is required to occupy the house in question for the performance of his services, or (b) did occupy it in order to their performance or (c) that it was conducive to that purpose more than any other house which he might have himself rented. The respondent must first lead evidence und the appellant will have the right to give rebutting evidence. The learned Chief Judge is requested to record his findings and send the same together with the additional evidence, to be recorded in full, within six weeks of the arrival of our order. We keep the appeal in our file, which is to be treated as part heard. Eight typed copies of the additional evidence and of the findings of the Court below must be prepared as expeditiously as possible by the appellants for their use and for the use of the respondent and of the Court. (After receiving the findings their Lordships delivered the following judgment.)

Judgment.—The question involved in this appeal is whether premises No. 4, Theatre Road, which is known as the "Commissioner's house" is to be assessed to rates under cls. (a) or (b), s. 127, Cal. Municipal Act. It has been assessed under cl (b) but the Province of Bengal contends that it ought to be assessed under cl. (a). This question depends upon the question as to whether the occupation of the premises by the Commissioner of the Presidency Division is that of a tenant or of a servant. On appeal by the Province of Bengal the learned Chief Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court held by his order dated March 17, 1938, that the Commissioner of the Presidency Division was a tenant. He further held that the rent at which the premises could reasonably be let out is Rs. 900 per month. On that basis he fixed the annual value at Rs. 9,720. When the appeal against the said decision preferred by the Corporation of Calcutta came up for hearing before us in November of the last year we passed an order by which we directed the learned Chief Judge to afford opportunity to the parties to lead further evidence and to record his findings on the following points which have been formulated as material in such cases by Tindal, C. J., in Hughes v. Overseers of the Parish of Chatham (2), at p. 488* and analogous cases:

(a) whether the Commissioner of the Presidency Division is required to occupy the house in question for the performance of his services, or (b) did he occupy it in order to their performance, or (c) that it was conducive to that purpose more than any other house which he might have himself rented.

After taking additional evidence the learned Chief Judge has answered all the three questions in the affirmative. We are to see whether his findings are correct. The relevant evidence bearing upon those points are the depositions of Mr. Graham, the Commissioner of the Presidency Division, of Mr. Manmohan Mukherjee and Exs. E E. (1), D.E. (2), D.E. (4), D.E. (5), P. E. A., P. E B. and P. E. C. The summary of this evidence is as follows: In 1905 a proposal was made by the Govt. of Bengal to the Govt. of India suggesting that the Commissioner of the Presidency Division should be provided with an official and permanent residence in Calcutta. The grounds given by the Bengal Govt. in support of its proposal are mentioned in its letter to the Govt. of India dated November 28, 1906 (Ex. D.E. 1); (1) that high rents prevalent in Calcutta had in the past dissuaded the Commissioner of the Presidency Division in renting a house suitable to his official position with the result that he had preferred to live in clubs, which was derogatory to his position and which had the effect of diminishing his influence, and (2) that public interest required that he should be easily found out by those who required to see him on business or by those who desired to pay him ceremonial visits. "Accessibility in his case was a matter of first importance".

The letter stated that for those reasons it was necessary for the Commissioner to reside in a fixed house suitable to his official position so that continuity of residence may be secured and his place of residence may be known to the public. The letter further suggested that it should be made obligatory on the Commissioner to reside in the house to be acquired at Govt. cost for his residence for which he would be required to pay "rent" at the rate of 10 per cent. of his salary. This proposal was accepted by the Govt. of India by its letter to the Ben. Govt. dated December 20, 1906 (Ex. D. E. 2). Premises No. 4, Theatre Road, was thereafter acquired and it has since its acquisition been the official residence of the Commissioner. A name plate has been fixed at the gate indicating the house as the house of the Commissioner of the Presidency Division. Although Ben Govt. suggested in its letter Ex. (D. E. 1) that residence of the Commissioner in the house to be acquired was to be made obligatory, that has not been done.

After the acquisition of the said premises no special rule was made for the Commissioner's residence but he continued to be governed by the general rules applicable to all Govt. servants relating to residence in localities where the Govt. has provided for residential houses for them. These rules are appended to the letter written on December 16, 1939 by the Secretary to the Govt. of Bengal, Department of Public Health and Local Self-Govt. to the Deputy Executive Officer, Corporation of Calcutta (Ex. P. E. C.). These rules do not make it obligatory on the part of Govt. servants to occupy the houses built by the Govt. for their residence. They make a Govt. servant responsible for the "rent" of the house built by the Govt. for his residence, unless exempted by the Local Govt. If he does not get the exemption, he can reside in a house of his choice, but must pay the "rent" of the Govt. house to the Govt. The rules leave him free to sublet the Govt quarters intended for his use. Although the word "rent" is used in these rules, we have already held in our previous order that a Govt. servant occupying a Govt. quarter would not necessarily be a tenant. We point out here the fact which is now relevant, that these rules do not, in express terms make it obligatory for a Govt. servant to reside in Govt. quarters provided for him. The letter of Mr. G. S. Dutt (Ex. D. E. 5) only expresses his own opinion which he subsequently modified in his letter Ex. P. E. C. Those rule may at best exert an indirect pressure on a Govt. servant to occupy the house intended by the Govt. for his residence. In the Commissioner's case there is besides the natural inducement, for a house of the nature of No. 4, Theatre Road, cannot be rented at about Rs. 300 a month, which amount the Commissioner has to pay for his occupation. The finding of the Chief Judge is that a house of that description in that locality would fetch Rs. 900 a month.

Although it is not obligatory on the Commissioner to reside at No. 4, Theatre Road, the evidence establishes that since its acquisition by Govt. all the Commissioners have resided in that house except on two short terms. Those two cases were of exceptional character and must therefore be discarded from consideration. The house is at a distance of about two miles from the office of the Commissioner. In the house he sometimes holds meetings of public bodies of which he happens to be the chairman, though the meetings could have been as well held in his office and in fact some such meetings have been held in his office. On this evidence we cannot hold that the case comes within the first head on which we required a finding. It cannot be said that the Commissioner was required to occupy the house for the performance of his duties. He was not required to reside there, much less was his residence there ancillary and necessary to the performance of his duties: Smith v. Overseers of Saghill (5), at p. 428*. The evidence also does not justify an affirmative answer to the second and the third points on which we required findings. The evidence given by Mr. Graham is that he could perform his duties as well by residing in another house. The only material which requires special consideration in this respect is the Govt. of Bengal's letter of November 28, 1906 (Ex. D. E. 1). The reasons which induced the Govt. to provide a suitable house for the Commissioner at a reasonable sum payable for his occupation were mainly two, namely dignity of the office and easy accessibility to visitors coming on business or to pay respects.

For the purpose of judging whether the house in question was more conducive for the performance of his duties than any other house which he could have himself rented, we must have regard to his duties. Reception of ceremonial visits or other visits is no doubt one of the duties of the Commissioner but his other duties were more important and more responsible If the residence in that house be only slightly more advantageous to the performance of his official duties the case would not in our judgment come within the second or the third proposition laid down by Tindal, C. J. in Hughes v. Overseers of the Parish of Chatham (2). The advantage must be a decisive one. We accordingly hold that the Commissioner's occupation must be regarded as that of a tenant and the assessment has to be made under cl. (a) of s. 127, Calcutta Municipal Act. We are further of opinion that the fair rent would be Rs. 900 a month as found by the learned Chief Judge. We accordingly confirm the order of the learned Chief Judge dated March 17, 1938, though not for the reasons given therein. The annual value is fixed at Rs. 9,720. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, hearing-fee five gold mohurs.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 108, 53—Construction — Proceedings under s. 108—Attaching creditor, position of — Attachment followed by sale — Attaching creditor, if entitled to proceeds.

The administration in insolvency of a deceased debtor's estate under s. 108, Presi. Towns Insol. Act, must necessarily mean that the uncharged assets of the estate are to be utilised for the benefit of the general body of creditors, and as a mere attachment creates no charge, an attaching creditor is in no better position than any other ordinary creditor. If the attachment has resulted in a sale and the sale proceeds are in Court, the attaching creditor is entitled irrespective of s. 53, to the money or so much of it as is necessary to meet his claim. Krishnaswami Mudaliar v. Official Assignee of Madras (4) and 174 Ind. Cas 423 (5), relied on. Soobul Chundra Law v. Russick Lal Mitter (7), approved.

Messrs. T. V. Subramania Iyer, T. V. Srinivasam, C. R. Rajagopalachariar and King and Partridge, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—This appeal raises two questions of law with regard to the administration in insolvency of the estate of a deceased person. On July 15, 1938 one S. V. Kannabhiran Pillai died, and by an order of the original side of this Court passed on April 18, 1939 it was directed that his estate should be administered in insolvency under the provisions of s. 108, Presi. Towns Insol. Act. The appellants are creditors. On August 9, 1938 they obtained a decree against the deceased's estate in O. S. No. 151 of 1938. In execution proceedings filed on January 26, 1939 they attached the deceased's interests in certain immovable property, which was the subject-matter of another suit, O. S. No. 189 of 1938, and in movable properties, which were in dispute in a third suit, O. S. No. 198 of 1939. The movable properties included a sum of Rs. 483-7-10 which was standing to the credit of the deceased in the books of the Egmore Benefit Society. A garnishee order was issued by the Court in respect of this sum on February 13, 1939, and the money was paid into Court on March 27, 1939.

The first question which arises is whether the order of this Court directing the estate to be administered in insolvency puts an end to the insolvency proceedings and relegates the appellants to the position of ordinary creditors. The second question is whether the appellants' claim to the sum of Rs. 483 7-10 paid into Court by the Egmore Benefit Society stands on a different footing from their claims in respect of the other attached properties. Section 108 (1), Presi. Towns Insol. Act, provides that a creditor of a deceased debtor, whose debt would have been sufficient to support an insolvency petition had the debtor been alive, may present a petition to the Court praying for an order for the administration of the estate of the deceased under the Presi. Towns Insol. Act. Sub-section (2) states that on the prescribed notice being given to the legal representative of the deceased debtor, the Court may, upon proof of the debt, unless it is satisfied that there is a reasonable probability that the estate will be sufficient for the payment of the debts owing by the deceased, make an order for the administration in insolvency of the estate. Sub-section (3) says that a petition of this nature shall not be presented after proceedings have been commenced for the administration of the deceased debtor's estate, but in that event, on proof that the estate is insufficient to pay its debts, the Court may transfer the proceedings to the Court exercising jurisdiction in insolvency under the Act. Section 109 (1) provides that, upon an order being made for the administration of a deceased debtor's estate under s. 108, the property of the debtor shall vest in the Official Assignee, who shall forthwith proceed to realize and distribute the assets in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Sub-s. (2) of this section says that with the modifications thereinafter mentioned, all the provisions of Part 3 of the Act, shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to the case of an administration order in like manner as to an order of adjudication under the Act. The only modification is in sub-cl. (3) which makes the proper funeral and testamentary expenses incurred by the legal representative of the deceased debtor a preferential claim payable in full in priority to all other debts. Part 3 of the Act contains the provisions with regard to the administration of the property of an insolvent and included in this part is s. 53, sub-s. (1) of which reads as follows:

"Where execution of a decree has issued against the property of a debtor, no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the execution against the Official Assignee, except in respect of assets realized in the course of the execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the order of adjudication, and before he had notice of the presentation of any insolvency petition by or against the debtor."

The learned Advocate for the appellants has conceded that, if s. 53 applies to an administration of a deceased debtor's estate under ss. 108 and 109 his clients are out of Court, except as regards the sum of Rs. 483-7-10 paid into Court by the Egmore Benefit Society. This case was decided on the original side by Mockett, J., who held that s. 53 is not applicable to proceedings under ss. 108 and 109 and in this connection relied on the judgment in Hasluck v. Clark (1). The learned Judge, however, decided against the appellants on the ground that in this country an attachment confers no title and creates no charge, relying here upon the decision in In re Prem Lal Dhar (2) and Nicholson Town Bank Ltd, Tanjore v. Varadarajulu Naidu (3). In In re Prem Lal Dhar (2), the Calcutta High Court also held that s. 53 is not applicable to cases of administration under ss. 108 and 109 and discussed Hasluck v. Clark (1). In Hasluck v. Clark (1), the Court of Appeal said that an order for the administration of the estate of a deceased debtor under s. 125, Bankruptcy Act, 1883 which corresponds to s. 108, Presi. Towns Insol. Acts is not equivalent to a receiving order for the purposes of s. 45 of the Act which corresponds to s. 53, Presi. Towns Insol. Act and that a creditor who had proceeded in execution was entitled to retain as against the trustee of the debtor's estate, the benefit of an execution not completed before the date of the administration order. In that case a writ of fieri facias had issued. By s. 26, Sales of Goods Act, 1893, it was enacted that a writ of fieri facias should bind the property in the goods of the execution debtor as from the time when the writ was delivered to the sheriff to be executed. Therefore, s. 45 of the Act could not apply. The Calcutta High Court in following Hasluck v. Clark (1) on the question of the applicability of s. 53 (1), Presi. Towns Insol. Act, held that an attachment in India only prevents alienation and does not confer any title or create any charge or lien on the property such as attaches in England upon seizure under the writ of fieri facias. In these circumstances the attaching creditor in India has merely the right of sharing rateably with the other creditors of the estate.

For the purpose of this appeal it is not necessary to decide whether s. 53, Presi. Towns Insol. Act, applies to the administration in insolvency of deceased debtor's estate, because it is manifest that in any event the appellants are not entitled to succeed, except as regards the sum of Rs. 483-7-10 paid into Court by the Egmore Benefit Society. There are two decisions of this Court, each by a Full Bench, which lay down that in this country an order of attachment does not create any charge. The first decision was in Krishnaswami Mudaliar v. Official Assignee of Madras (4), where it was said that the effect of an attachment under the Civil P. C. was to prevent alienation and not to confer title. The second decision was in Manickam Chettiar v. Income-tax Officer, Madras (5), where it was again contended that inasmuch as an attachment had taken place the petitioner was in the position of a secured creditor. It was pointed out that this question had been decided by this Court in Krishnaswami Mudaliar v. Official Assignee of Madras (4) and that the Privy Council in Ananthapadnabhaswami v. Official Receiver, Secunderabad (6) had not overruled it, as was suggested. The Judicial Committee had refused to go into the question and reserved their decision for a future occasion. The judgments in Krishnaswami Mudaliar v. Official Assignee of Madras (4) and Manickam Chettiar v. Income tax Officer, Madras (5), conclude the question so far as this Court is concerned. It may be mentioned, however, that the Calcutta High Court gave a similar decision in Soobul Chundra Law v. Russick Lall Mitter (7) which was also decided by a Full Bench.

As the result of decisions of this Court we must hold that in India no charge is created by an attachment and when the judgment-debtor becomes an insolvent the attachment falls to the ground, provided, of course, that the attachment has not resulted in a sale. There is no difference here between the administration of the estate of an insolvent who is alive and the administration of the estate of a person who dies insolvent, but was not adjudicated before his death. The administration in insolvency of a deceased debtor's estate under s. 108, Presi. Towns Insol. Act, must necessarily mean that the uncharged assets of the estate are to be utilised for the benefit of the general body of creditors, and as a mere attachment creates no charge, an attaching creditor is in no better position than any other ordinary creditor. If he were, there would be little virtue in the provisions of ss. 103 and 109 of the Act. The learned Official Assignee has conceded that, if the attachment has resulted in a sale and the sale proceeds are in Court, the attaching creditor is entitled irrespective of s. 53, to the money or so much of it as is necessary to meet his claim. Except as regards the sum of Rs. 483-7-10 paid into Court by the Egmore Benefit Society, the attachments have not resulted in the realization of any of the assets attached. With regard to Rs. 483-7-10 it has transpired that after the Egmore Benefit Society had paid the money into Court the Master passed an order giving the appellants the right to withdraw it from Court. The matter has gone beyond the interim order stage and in these circumstances the learned Official Assignee has rightly conceded that the appellants are entitled to this money. The result

A. from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur, dated September 16, 1939.

Mr. S. N. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. K. Banerji, for the Respondents.

Varma, J.—The learned Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur by his order, dated September 16, 1939, has dismissed the application for probate of a will, preferred by one Bulaki Mahto (Sunri). The will is said to have been executed jointly by Lalchand Sunri and his brother's widow Mst. Bhukhli on May 21, 1917. The application for probate was made on April 25, 1938, after the testators' death which took place in 1936. Both Lalchand Sunri and Mst. Bhukhli were illiterate.

The Court below has found—a finding which is in favour of the appellant, that the executants intended to execute the will and that they were in a position to realize what they were doing. But probate of the will has been refused by the learned Judicial Commissioner on the ground that the will was not properly attested as required by law. I have looked into the will and it appears that one Wazir Pande signed on behalf of the two executants against their thumb-impressions. One Kishun Sahai signed the will as a scrile and merely says that he read over the contents of the document to the executants. Kishun Sahai does not say under his signature that he attested the signatures of the executants. The signature of Lato Hajam also appears on the will. Lato Hazam was, at the time of the proceedings in the Court below, dead and therefore could not be examined. But his signature on the will appears in a peculiar manner. The signature is from the pen of Kishun Sahai and there is a mark just below it. There is no evidence that this mark below Lato's name written by Kishun Sahai was made by Lato Hajam himself. The only other signature, is that of Wazir Pande, but the Court below has not accepted this as an act of attestation, because he was the person who also signed for the executants. The learned Judicial Commissioner has relied upon the decision in In the matter of the Petition of Hemlota Debee (1), Nitye Gopal Sircar v. Nagendra Nath Mitter Mozumdar (2) and D. Fernandez v. R. Alves (3). The evidence, therefore, does not show that the signatures on the will were properly attested as required by s. 63 of the Indian Succession Act.

Mr. S. N. Banerji on behalf of the appellant argues with his usual ability that even if it be held that the required number of two witnesses have not been proved to have attested the signatures of the executants, the endorsement by the Registrar before whom the document was registered should be taken to amount to attestation. In support of his argument Mr. S. N. Banerji relies upon the decision in Sarada Prasad Tej v. Triguna Charan Ray (4) and also refers to the decision in Theresa v. Francis Misquita (5). But it is not really a question of law that stands in the way of Mr. Banerji's client (the appellant), it is really a question of fact. Even assuming that the Registrar could be taken as an attesting witness, the evidence on the record does not show that there was any other witness who could be said to have attested the will. Wazir Pande no doubt speaks to what happened at the time of the execution of the will and also at the time of registration thereof, but his evidence falls short of the required proof that any witness attested the will at the time of its execution. In these circumstances there is no other alternative but to dismiss the appeal. The appeal is dismissed, but there will be no order as to costs of this Court.

Dr. K. N. Malaviya, for the Applicant.

Mr. Chaturbhuj Sahai, for the Opposite Party.

Opinion of the Full Bench.

The question referred for decision to this Full Bench is as follows :

"Whether the revisional jurisdiction vested in this Court by s. 115, Civil P. C, can be exercised with reference to appellate orders, passed under sub-s. (2) of s. 45 or revisional orders, passed under s. 46 of the Act, by a District Judge."

This question was considered by a Division Bench of this Court in Ashraf v. Saith Mal (1), and it was held in that case that, apart from the provisions contained in Ch. VI, U. P. Encum. Estates Act, this Court had the power to interfere in revision under s. 115, Civil P. C. In view of the somewhat involved provisions of ss. 45 and 46 of the Act the answer to the question referred to above was beset with difficulties of varying intensity and presumably because of those difficulties the Legislature stepped in and passed an Amending Act (Act No. XI of 1939) by which amendments of far-reaching importance were made in s. 45 of the Act. In accordance with s. 45, as it originally stood, only one right of appeal was given to an aggrieved party against the decisions, decrees, or orders of a special Judge, second grade, or of a special Judge, first grade. By that section the District Judge was authorized to hear appeals against "any decision, decree or order, of a special Judge of the second grade" and similarly the High Court was empowered to hear appeals against the decisions, decrees or orders of a special Judge of the first grade. But, by the Amending Act referred to above, a new sub-section, viz., (2*a*), has been introduced in s. 45 and the newly added sub-section runs thus :

"An appeal shall lie to the High Court or Chief Court, as the case may be, from an appellate order or decree of a District Judge passed under sub-s. (2) on one or more of the grounds mentioned in s. 100, Civil P. C., 1908. The period of limitation for appeals under this sub-section shall be ninety days."

In view of this amendment the decrees or orders passed by a District Judge on appeals against decrees or orders of a special Judge of the second grade shall be appealable to the High Court. Thus, by the amendment an aggrieved party is entitled to invoke the appellate jurisdiction of this Court for testing the validity or otherwise of an appellate decree or order passed by a District Judge. This being so, ordinarily it would not be necessary for an aggrieved party to invoke the revisional jurisdiction of this Court in accordance with the provisions of s. 115, Civil P. C. The question referred to at the inception of this judgment is therefore of no practical importance so far as appellate decrees or orders of District Judges passed after the Amending Act came into force are concerned. The decision of the question one way or the other would therefore only affect the applications in revisions that have already been filed in this Court. In this state of facts, we, as at present advised, do not consider it expedient to depart from the view taken in the Division Bench case noted above. We follow that decision, at any rate, on the principle of stare decisis and accordingly answer the question in the affirmative.

BURN AND MOCKETT, JJ.

In re SINGAMPILLI YERRANNA AND OTHERS—ACCUSED

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 27, 30 — Accused describing murder and part played by other accused and almost simultaneously producing deceased's earrings—Admissibility of statement under s. 27—Confession by accused that he killed deceased because other accused promised to give him certain amount — Admissibility under s. 30—Whether evidence against other accused —Criminal trial—Evidence — Sufficiency — Evidence held not sufficient to warrant conviction — Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 302, 404—Accused in murder case charged with misappropriation of deceased's articles—Procedure, if good.

Under s. 27, Evi. Act, cases where a discovery is made in consequence of information given and a disclosure by an accused accompanying a statement must be distinguished.

Where an accused makes a statement to a Police Officer describing the murder and the part played by the other accused and almost simultaneously produces earrings identified as those worn by the deceased, the discovery of the earrings cannot be said to have been made in consequence of the information given by the accused and therefore the statement is inadmissible in evidence under s. 27.

A confession by an accused to a prosecution witness that he killed the deceased because the other accused had promised to give him a certain amount, is admissible under s. 30 but it would naturally require the strongest independent evidence if any reliance can be placed upon it at all. But it cannot be treated as against the other accused :

Held, on facts that the presence of the accused persons in the deceased's company shortly before his death, was no doubt suspicious but not enough to warrant their conviction, even though there was the only statement made by the co-accused that they took part in the murder, specially when the body of the deceased was in such a decomposed condition that it was not even possible to infer that more than one hand was responsible for the death of the deceased

In a case of murder, it is not a desirable procedure to charge the accused under s. 404 for misappropriating the articles of the deceased.

Refd. T. and Cr. A. referred by the Court of Session, Vizagapatam Division, in C. C. No. 7 of 1940.

Messrs. Kasturi Seshagiri Rao and E. T. Chockammal, for the Accused.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mockett, J.—The four appellants and one Killadi Dali Naidu who was accused No. 5 before the Sessions Court were charged in the case of accused Nos. 2, 3, and 4 with the murder of one Sriramulu on November 1, 1939; accused No. 1 was further charged with abetment of the murder by accused Nos. 2, 3 and 4, at the place of the murder, and accused No. 5 with abetment of accused No. 2 by waiting near by presumably with the object of co-operating. Accused Nos. 1 and 2 were further charged with dishonest misappropriation of property of the accused. Accused No. 1 is the wife of the deceased and there can be little doubt that—to put it no higher—the married life of accused No. 1 and the deceased was not happy. The father of Sriramulu deposes that the deceased and his wife had not slept together after their marriage until actually the night of the occurrence. It is not necessary to investigate the relations between these two further than that. The prosecution relied on the ill-feeling alleged to exist between them as being at least the motive for the murder owing to the part said to have been taken in the murder by accused No. 1. Accused Nos. 3 and 4 are the brothers of accused No. 1. Accused No. 2 is a farm servant employed by a person who did not give evidence in this case. The conviction of these persons has rested almost entirely on a statement made by accused No. 2 to the Police which statement the learned Sessions Judge held admissible as coming within the provisions of s. 27, Evi. Act. That statement combine with other evidence in the case satisfied the learned Sessions Judge of the guilt of accused Nos. 1 to 4. It is convenient, however to observe here that for reasons which will later appear, if that statement should be inadmissible, there is virtually no evidence whatever against accused Nos. 1, 3 and 4. Naturally the position of accused No. 2 will be different because apart from the statement, his actions accompanying that statement may be very relevant in considering whether the evidence as a whole is sufficient to establish the case against him.

Now the story is easy to relate because it depends on one or two witnesses and one or two facts. The learned Sessions Judge has set out the history of the case fully. On the night of November 1, 1939 there was quarrel between accused No. 1 and the deceased because accused No. 1 shut the deceased's room and it is stated that the deceased slapped his wife. On the night when he was last seen, i. e., on the night of November 1, 1939 the deceased was wearing ear-rings M. O. No. 2 in this case. On that night he went out and apparently went out for the purpose which will later appear of getting leaves for the purpose of treating the mother of accused No. 3 who suffered from boils. That at least is said to be the reason why he went out although the real reason may never be satisfactorily proved. He went out and never returned. All that is known of his movements appears from the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 7, 8 and 10 in this case. P. W. No. 7 states that he saw accused Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 and the deceased going towards the Golukonda road which is apparently in the north of the plan some time after midnight. He was quite near to them and claims to be able to identify them. Later, this witness communicated this fact to P. Ws. Nos. 4 and 5, because it came to his knowledge that the deceased had met a violent death. In fact he was told that accused Nos. 1 to 4 had murdered him. P. W. No. 8 had been to a festival and was returning to his village which is Pappuchettipalem. He says that at a point identified by him on the plan he sat down for the purpose of easing himself. One Pothirzu was sitting near. This witness (P. W. No. 8) almost saw four men and a woman passing near by and one of the men called out "Sriramulu, come quickly." The man replied, "I am coming." Now this witness knows the deceased Sriramulu and he was the man who was there and he asked him where he was going and Sriramulu replied he was going to get Gatcha leaves as a relation of his wanted them. The witness says that he spoke to Sriramulu and he knew his wife but he did not know the four people who were with Sriramulu.

The next who knows of the movements of the deceased was one P. W. No. 10. P. W. No. 10 had also gone to the festival and he was driving home with his bulls late at night and coming to the main road, according to him, the bulls turned to go as they were accustomed to do towards the paddy fields whereas their owner (P. W. No. 10) wanted them to go in the opposite direction. It was necessary therefore for him to dismount from the bandy and turn the bulls round. He says he saw the deceased, accused Nos. 1 and 2 and the deceased's two brothers-in-law, that is to say, accused No. 3 and 4, near the culvert. He asked the deceased what they were doing there. The deceased replied they were going to get Gatcha leaves for his mother-in-law. The witness got on to his bandy and saying—as no doubt correctly translated by the learned Sessions Judge —"Very well, you get your leaves. I am going off" and he went away to Pappanapeta returning to Jagampeta on the following Saturday. He there heard of the death of Sriramulu and reported in the village what he had seen. He identified accused Nos. 3 and 4 before the Tahsildar. That is the evidence as regards the movements of the deceased.

The deceased was found on the 3rd in a water-course near where he had been seen by the witnesses. His head was under water but the water was not deep enough to cover the body. A post mortem was held and the Medical Officier (P. W. No. 1) was unable to say how the deceased met his death because of the advanced stage of decomposition. He could not find signs of drowning and he found no signs of violence. It was not possible for him to say that the lobes of the ears which were missing had disappeared naturally or had been turned out. It is important because certain ear-rings (M. Os. No. 2) in this case were identified as having been worn on the ears of the deceased. But some light is thrown—if it is to be accepted—by a statement made by accused No. 2 to P. W. No. 5. P. W. No. 5 is a cousin of the deceased. He heard of Sriramulu being missing and he looked for him. He states that he questioned accused No. 2 as he and accused No. 1 were on very friendly terms. Accused told him a long and detailed story about the death of the deceased. He said that after the festival he went and slept and that the deceased had waken him up and asked him to follow him as his brothers-in-law were waiting under a peepal tree; that he and the deceased went to the peepal tree and there saw accused Nos 3 and 4. Accused No. 3 asked him (accused No. 2) to show him where he could get a Gatcha leaf as his mother was ill. All of them, i. e., the deceased, accused No. 2 himself, accused Nos. 4 and 1 then proceeded to the road where they found accused No. 5 sitting on a culvert holding a cycle. Accused Nos. 3, 4 and 5 talked together. Then accused No. 5 went with them for some distance and stopped. He, i. e., accused No. 2, accused Nos. 1, and 4 then took the deceased to Dara Gedda which is the water-course and there killed him after striking him. Accused Nos. 2, 1, 3 and 4 after killing Sriramulu got on to the road and met accused No. 5 there. Then accused Nos. 3, 4 and 5 went along the road which leads to Mallampeta, while accused Nos. 2 and 1 returned to Jagampeta. When asked by P. W. No. 5 why he had killed Sriramulu accused No. 2 replied that accused No. 5 had promissed to give him Rs. 50.

It will be observed that that statement implicates the other accused but it would naturally require the strongest independant evidence if any reliance can be placed upon it at all. Under s. 30, Evi. Act, such a confession can be taken into consideration; it is not evidence against the other accused. A statement on which the prosecution rely under s. 27 was made by this witness in the presence of P. Ws. Nos. 14 and 15 and P. W. No. 20, the Sub-Inspector. According to the Sub-Inspector of Police, a statement (Ex. E) was made, part of which has been admitted in evidence by the learned Sessions Judge. That statement describes the murder of the deceased and the part played in it by the other accused. But there is no doubt from the evidence that what happened was the following. The accused made this statement and almost simultaneously—if not actually simultaneously—produced M. O. No. 2, the two earrings. That that is so is quite clear from the evidence of P Ws. Nos 14 and 15 who witnessed (Ex. E). P. W. No. 14 states:

"Accussed No. 2 made a statement before the Sub-Inspector. It was reduced to writing. I signed it. It is Ex. E. Accused No. 2 then took the earrings M. O. No. 2, from his waist cloth and handed them over to the Sub-Inspector.

P. W. No. 15 stated:

"He made a statement. It was written down, I signed it. Ex. E. is that statement. He handed over the jewels to the Sub-Inspector taking them, from his waist cloth."

The Sub Inspector who, we feel, was conscious of the difficulty surrounding the admissibility of the statement, stated before the lower Court: "I recovered the earrings from accused No. 2 as a result of the statement which he made." No doubt, bearing in mind the precise wording of s. 27, Evi. Act, which provides that when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence, in the custody of a Police Officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved. The learned Judge has considered this aspect but we think that he has overlooked the actual facts. We are satisfied that these ear-rings were not discovered in consequence of any information given by accused No. 2. They were discovered by accused No. 2 himself combined with a statement. They were not found by the Police upon him after he made this statement which is the nearest approach to a compliance with this section which might be possible under the circumstances before us. This topic is dealt with in the latest edition of Amir Ali's Evi. Act at p. 282 and this Court has on numerous occasions distinguished between cases where a discovery is made in consequence of information given and a disclosure by an accused accompanying a statement. In this particular case, we are quite satisfied that the statement is inadmissible—is not admissible under s. 27, Evi. Act, and should not have been allowed to appear on the record. But, quite apart from this question, it is obvious that the convictions of accused Nos. 1, 3 and 4 cannot stand. Even if it could be taken into account it is obvious that there is virtually no adequate evidence on which a conviction could be based. Had accused No. 2 been examined as an approver, his evidence would have required corroboration implicating the other accused in material particulars. There is no doubt evidence that accused Nos. 1, 3 and 4 were in the deceased's company shortly before his death but the only statement that they took part in the murder comes from accused No. 2 who, be it remembered, was soon after in possession of the deceased's property. Moreover, owing to the condition of the body, it is not even possible to infer that more than one hand was responsible for the deceased's death. Their presence is no doubt suspicious but suspicion is not enough. Consequently, their convictions must be set aside and they will be set at liberty.

But the position with regard to accused No. 2 is different. We have his association on the night in question with the deceased clearly proved. There is no reason to disbelieve the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 7, 8 and 10. Neither do we disbelieve the evidence of P. W. No. 5. We consider that the confession made to P. W. No. 5 by accused No. 2 was made as stated. The conduct of P. W. No. 5 and P. W. No. 4 immediately after accused No. 2 made his confession is consistent with the fact: vide Ex. C. There is furthermore the all-important fact that, as we believe, the accused did produce from his person, on November 3, that is to say, within two days of the death of the deceased his articles of jewellery. His explanation of his possession of these articles was not considered satisfactory by the trial Judge, with which view we agree. There is not the slightest ground in this case for doubting that the deceased met his death by violence and that accused No. 2 took part in that violence. No one suggests that the deceased was not a healthy man. Accused No. 2 told P. W. No. 5 that he assisted to murder him for a reward of Rs. 50 and we are satisfied—corroborated by other evidence —that he at least is guilty. Consequently, we see no reason to interfere with the conviction of accused No. 2. His conviction for murder and the sentence of death are confirmed. It may be that accused Nos. 1,3 and 4 have been fortunate, but a Court can only act upon evidence as it affects the individual. A somewhat unusual procedure was followed in this case—a case of murder—charging accused Nos. 1 and 2 with misappropriation of articles of the deceased (s. 404). In a case of murder, it is not a desirable procedure and one not within the experience of this Court. In any case, there is no evidence of misappropriation and these convictions are also set aside in the case of accused Nos. 1 and 2.

Criminal Reference No. 329 of 1940
November 8, 1940
ALMOND, J, C.
GOKAL CHAND—PETITIONER
SAID ALI—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 250—Applicability to warrant cases.

Section 250, Criminal P. C., applies to trial of warrant cases as well as summons cases. 91 Ind Cas. 38 (1), dissented from. 101 Ind. Cas. 482 (2), relied on.

Cr. Ref. from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Hazara District, dated June 11, 1940.

The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner Gokal Chand was ordered to pay compensation of Rs. 50 to Said Ali, respondent, under s. 250, Criminal P. C. He applied for revision of the order to the Sessions Judge, Hazara, who, without going into the merits of the case, has recommended that the order be set aside on the basis of a ruling of a Single Judge of the Allahabad High Court reported in Harihar Dat v. Maksud Ali (1). In that case the learned Judge made a remark that the provisions of s. 250, Criminal P. C., occurring as they do in Chap. XX of the Code apply only in the case of cases tried as summons cases. The remarks were however in the nature of obiter dicta for the question for decision in that case was whether compensation can be awarded in a case where some of the charges were triable by the Sessions Court and some by a Magistrate. The dictum was definitely dissented from in a subsequent judgment of the Oudh Chief Court reported in Paighambar v. Emperor (2) and is in my opinion not a correct statement of law. The marginal note to s. 250, Criminal P. C., is "False, frivolous or vexatious accusation" without restriction to summons cases and the body of the section does not give any indication that it applies to summons cases only. In fact there are clear indications to the contrary, for, it refers to the award of compensation in a case in which an accused person is discharged. No person who is tried for an offence which is trible as a summons case can be discharged: he must either be acquitted or released without an order of conviction or acquittal. In my opinion, s. 250, Criminal P. C., clearly applies to trial of warrant cases as well as summons cases.

On the merits, I am of opinion that there are no grounds for interfering with the findings of the trial Magistrate. The facts briefly were that the complainant had delivered to the accused who is a lorry driver a consignment of salt to take from Havelian to Srinagar. The salt was not delivered. The accused's defence was that at Srinagar owing to the breach of the road he could not proceed beyond Bararkot which is the last village in British territory, that he delivered the goods there to one Sitaram and some days later took the munshi of the complainant, Sohan Lal, with him to Bararkot and there handed over a receipt which he had taken from Sitaram. He produced Sitaram as his defence witness and Sitaram admitted that these consignments of salt had been deposited with him by the accused though he makes no mention of Sohan Lal having gone there. He said that the salt was still with him and could be handed over to the accused if he produced the receipt therefor. The learned Magistrate was of opinion that the complainant knew throughout that the salt was deposited in Bararkot and he also referred to the fact that this complaint had been brought a year after the salt had been lying at Bararkot. In my opinion, there are grounds on which the trial Court could conclude that the prosecution was false and vexatious and I am not prepared to interfere with its order.

Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Sayyeds of Gurdaspur District are governed by Customary Law.

The Sayyeds of Gurdaspur District are governed by what is called the usual Customary Law in the matter of alienations and ancestral immovable property cannot be alienated by the holders without necessity.

F. A. from the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Lyallpur, dated August 23, 1938.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Parkash Chandar Jain, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mohsin Shah, for the Respondents.

Dalip Singh, J.—In this case the sons of one Sayyed Ahmed Shah, ex-Police Sub-Inspector, brought the usual declaratory suit contesting an alienation made by their father by way of mortgage in favour of two mortgagees, Basant Singh and Alla Ditta. The mortgage is printed at p. 159 of the paper book. The issues material to the appeals are at p. 29. The learned trial Court held that the parties were governed by custom and as the land was ancestral the sons had a right to control the alienation of their father, and, therefore, unless the alienation was for consideration and necessity, the alienation could not stand. On the question of consideration, it held that the consideration was proved; on the question of necessity, it held that the last two items mentioned in the mortgage-deed, namely Rs. 800 paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar and a pronote written by Allah Ditta mortgagee in favour of the alienor Sayyed Ahmed Shah for Rs. 1,186 were not proved to be for necessity. It, therefore, decreed the plaintiffs' suit holding that the mortgage was only proved to be for necessity to the extent of Rs. 3,264 and except for this sum would not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs. It left the parties to bear their own costs. From this decree the mortgagee Allah Ditta has brought an appeal contending that these two items are proved to be for necessity and, secondly, that the parties are not governed by custom and, therefore, the consideration being proved, the sons have no right to control the alienation. There is a cross-appeal by the sons of Sayyed Ahmed Shah, the plaintiffs, where they contend that the sum found to be legally due, namely Rs. 3,264, is also not for necessity and therefore could not bind them.

As regards the first appeal by Allah Ditta, two points have been argued by the learned Counsel appearing for him: firstly, that the parties are not proved to be governed by custom in the matter of alienations. He contends that the riwaj-i-am of the district is altogether silent on the subject of the control of these alienations and that this is a strong point showing that all tribes whatsoever in this district, even those following agricultural occupations are not controlled in the matter of alienations by reversioners. Secondly, he contends that at any rate these Sayyeds, who are high class Muhammadans and whose main occupation is service, are not shown to be following custom on the subject of control of alienations of ancestral property by reversioners. As a matter of fact, however, we find on the record that there is oral evidence that the Sayyeds of the district and of this family in particular follow agriculture as their main occupation, though they also have at various times gone in for military service, or as the alienor himself did, for service, in the Police; but this would not by itself prove that the family does not follow agriculture as its main occupation. On the whole I see no reason to doubt the oral evidence on this point and I agree with the finding of the trial Court that this family's main occupation is agriculture. The absence of any mention in the riwaj-i-am of control of alienations is due to the simple fact that the question of alienations was not asked from the tribesmen for some reason which is not very clear. The oral evidence again is all one way as to the power of control of alienations and there are two judicial instances to support this oral evidence. There is not any evidence at all in rebuttal. There is plenty of evidence to show that the Sayyeds do not in other matters, e. g., succession or gift, follow Muhammadan Law. In these circumstances, it appears to me that the only deduction possible is that the Sayyeds of Gurdaspur District are governed by what is called the usual Customary Law in the matter of alienations and that ancestral immovable property cannot be alienated by the holders without necessity.

Next the learned Counsel wished to show that necessity was proved for the two items disallowed by the trial Court. But there is nothing whatsoever to show what the necessity was for these two items. It is not mentioned in the mortgage-deed and there is really no proof on the record as to how this money was spent. There is some vague evidence that the alienor was involved in litigation at the time. His statements on the subject are contradictory and I do not think any great importance can be attached to them. I, therefore, do not think that there is proof that these two items excluded by the trial Court were for necessity. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal of the mortgagee Allah Dita. As regards the cross-appeal by the sons it is contended that Basant Singh knew of the reckless extravangence of the alienor Sayyed Ahmed Shah. The only proof on the record to which our attention has been drawn is that Basant Singh lived in chak No. 69 in Lyallpur and that the alienor first made a mortgage transaction in 1921 of certain lands situated in chak No. 37.

It is contended that Basant Singh must have come to know of this alienation and that therefore when subsequently he advanced Rs. 1,000 to the alienor for the purchase of a mare and for household expenses, he must be taken to have had knowledge that the alienor was recklessly extravagant. There is, however, nothing to show that Basant Singh had any notice of the first transaction of mortgage of the alienor in 1929. The distance between chak No. 37 and chak 69 is not proved on the record. A map has been shown from which it would appear that the distance is at least 3 to 4 miles, but be that as it may, as the alienor was not a resident of this chak No. 37 but at the time was stationed as a Sub-Inspector of Police elsewhere, there is little reason to suppose that Basant Singh's attention could have been attracted to this transaction. The other transactions of the mortgagor were after the date of the advance by Basant Singh. Therefore, all we have on this record is that Basant Singh advanced a thousand rupees to a Police Sub-Inspector, for the purchase of a mare and for household expenses. Both these items would be quite justifiable in an ordinary case and there being nothing to show that Basant Singh had any reason to suspect the bona fides of the would-be borrower. I do not see that his debt arising from this transaction could be called other than a just debt. This debt was followed by a decree obtained ex parte by Basant Singh, But it is clear from the written statement that the main item was not even denied by the alienor. He only denied a small item of Rs. 360 for which he alleged he had a receipt, not produced. This decretal debt formed the first item of the mortgage transaction and in the circumstances it must be considered to be a just debt. Items Nos. 2 and 3 follow with this and, therefore, I am of opinion that there is no force in the appeal of the sons. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal. By consent of parties, the parties will bear their own costs of both appeals in this Court.

Sale, J.—I agree.

Madras Agriculturist's Relief Act (IV of 1938), s. 9—For applicability of s. 9 both prior debt and debt sued on must be debts due from agriculturist.

Both the debt sued on and the prior debt which it is found to have been superseded must, if s. 9, Mad. Agri. Relief Act is to have any application fall within the definition of the term "debt" in s. 3; that is to say, both the prior debt and the debt sued on, must be debts due from an agriculturist.

Where therefore A and his brother B executed a promissory note in supersession of an earlier promissory note executed by A alone who was not an agriculturist within the purview of the Act, it is not open to B to call in aid s. 9 on the ground that the debt upon which he is sued is in renewal of a prior debt.

C. R. P. under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 224 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the orders of Court of Small Causes, Madras, dated September 24, 1938, and February 13, 1939, respectively and made in M. P. No. 1581 of 1938 in Suit No. 1104 of 1937 and N. T. A. No. 421 of 1938 respectively,

Mr. S. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. N. Muthuswami Iyer and N. Ramanatha Iyer, for the Respondent.

Wadsworth, J.—This petition raises a question under the Mad. Agri. Relief Act. The petitioner was the second defendant in a suit on a promissory note dated October 8, 1934, executed by himself and by his brother the 1st defendant. This promissory note was in supersession of an earlier promissory note executed by the first defendant alone on May 28, 1930. The 1st defendant is admittedly not an agriculturist within the purview of the Act. The second defendant claims to be entitled to the benefit of s. 9 of the Act on the basis that the debt upon which he has been sued is in renewal of a prior debt so far as he is concerned.

It seems to us unnecessary to decide the question whether, when there is a debt incurred by A, superseded by another debt incurred by A and B, B can contend that his liability is in renewal of a prior debt? So far as the facts of this case go, it is clear to us that the original debt is not a debt as defined by s. 3 (iii) of the Act which defines a debt as "any liability in cash or kind, whether secured or unsecured due from an agriculturist". The proviso to s. 9 deals with any part of a debt which is found to be a renewal of a prior debt. Both the debt sued on and the prior debt which it is found to have been superseded must, if this section is to have any application, fall within the definition of the term "debt" in s. 3; that is to say, both the prior debt and the debt sued on must be debts due from an agriculturist. In the present case, admittedly, the original debt was not due from an agriculturist and it is therefore not open to the petitioner to call in aid s. 9 on the ground that the debt upon which he is sued is in renewal of a prior debt.

This petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

C. R. P. No. 1106 of 1939.

This petition need not be decided on the merits in view of our decision in C. R. P. No. 1115, for it only seeks to canvass by means of a new trial application the question upon which we have given a finding adverse to the petitioner. The petition is therefore dismissed but there will be no order as to costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 499, 514—Surety bond — Forfeiture—Surety undertaking to produce accused on certain date and thereafter as directed by Court —Accused produced on date—With Court's permission accused leaving Court house to say prayers but absconding—Surety, if liable.

The liability of the surety must continue so long as the surety has not been discharged or the bail bond cancelled and the accused taken into the custody of the Court. The accused will be taken in the custody of the Court only when his bail bond is cancelled.

In his bond the accused bound himself to appear in the Court on a certain date and thereafter as directed by the Court and the surety bound himself that the accused shall so attend and in default of his so attending he bound himself to forfeit Rs. 1,000. The accused was produced on the fixed date. During the course of the proceedings the accused with the Court's permission left the Court house to say his prayers and absconded. The bail bond was not cancelled nor was the surety discharged;

Held, that the surety's liability continued even after the production of the accused in the Court. The forfeiture of the bond therefore was justified.

Held, however that inasmuch as the surety was taken off his guard, it was a mitigating circumstance in the case whereby the penalty for forfeiture could be reduced to something nominal.

Cr. R. App. and Cr. Ref. to revise the order of the District Magistrate, Dadu, dated March 3, 1940.

Mr. Fatechand Asudamal, for the Applicant.

The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Davis, C. J.—This is an application in revision by a surety who has been ordered by the District Magistrate of Dadu to pay a penalty of Rs. 500 upon proof that his bond for Rs. 1,000 for the attendance of one Dilawar son of Abdul Rehman Brohi in the Court of the first class Magistrate Kotri was forfeited. We have in addition to this revision application a reference by the learned District Magistrate himself who asks us to give for the guidance of Magistrates a ruling on the question which arises in this case the facts of which are unusual. It appears that in accordance with his bond the applicant-surety secured the attendance in Court on September 14, 1939, at Kotri of Dilawar against whom an inquiry for offences under ss. 366 and 367, I. P. C. was proceeding and it appears that while the question as to whether the bail bond should be cancelled and the accused remanded to custody was being argued, the accused left the Court on the excuse that he wished to say his prayers. After more than sufficient time for these pious exercises had passed, it was noticed the accused had not returned. Consequently a search was made and it was found that he had absconded. The accused had left the Court with the permission of the Magistrate and his surety the applicant contended, when called upon by the Magistrate to show cause why the bond should not be forfeited and a penalty enforced, that he had satisfied the terms of his bond and had secured the attendance of the accused. and that if he, the accused, had absconded, it was not due to any fault of his but due to the fact that permission had been given by the Magistrate of the Court in whose custody the accused then was. But we do not think that in this case or in cases like this there can be any confusion between the case of an accused who was on bail and whose bail bond has not been concelled and the case of an accused who is in custody. An accused does not cease to be on bail and his surety does not cease to be liable for his attendance merely because during the course of the day the Court has adjourned or the Court should have given the accused permission to leave the Court for some purpose. An accused person, for instance, would have reasonable ground for complaint if when attending Court on bail and the Court adjourned, the Court ordered him to be watched by a Policeman, for, he might well say he was on bail, that he was not in custody and so long as the bail bond was not cancelled or the surety discharged, he was entitled to come and go freely and be at liberty subject of course to the orders of the Court as to his attendance in Court.

We have had the bond in this case translated and it is the usual form of bond taken from the surety for the attendance of an accused in Court. There is nothing in the bond about the production of the accused. The applicant has argued that he bound himself to produce the accused before the Court; he did produce him before the Court the accused was then in the custody of the Court and his liability under the bond had ceased. But there is nothing in the bond of the surety about production. In his bond the accused binds himself to appear in the Court on January 29, and thereafter as directed by the Court and the surety binds himself that the accused shall so attend and in default of his so attending he binds himself to forfeit Rs. 1,000

We think, therefore, that the liability of the surety must continue so long as the surety has not been discharged or the bail bond cancelled and the accused taken into the custody of the Court. The accused will be taken in the custody of the Court only when his bail bond is cancelled. The bail bond was not cancelled in this case and although the Magistrate did upon that day decide to cancel the bail bond and remand the accused to custody, it was during the discussion as to whether this should be done that the accused left the Court. He was therefore on bail when he left the Court and he was not in custody and the surety was by the terms of his bond bound to see that the accused should return to and attend the Court as the Court directed, which in this case was after he had finished his prayers.

We think, therefore, that the learned Magistrate was right when under s. 514, Criminal P. C., he held that the bond must be forfeited and ordered a penalty for such forfeiture to be paid by the surety. But we think there are in this case mitigating circumstances, whereby the penalty can be reduced to something nominal, such as Rs. 50. In this case the surety was taken off his guard. He had secured the attendance of the accused in the Court, the accused had left the Court for a temporary purpose with the permission of the Court and the surety might well think that as the Court had allowed the accused to leave the Court for this purpose, the accused would obey the order of the Court and return; otherwise, the surety might have accompained the accused to his prayers or taken some measure to secure his return and attendance. This is, as the learned District Magistrate says, an unusual case, but we think the principle on which it should be decided is plain, that is to say, that an accused is either on bail or in the custody of the Court. There is no half-way house between or any combination of these two conditions, and until the bail bond is cancelled and the accused has been taken into custody, we do not think that merely because he attends the Court one day, the surety ceases to be liable for that day and the Court has custody of the accused. We therefore allow this revision application only on the question of the amount of the penalty for, we think in principle the order of the learned Magistrate forfeiting the bond was right. We will, for the reasons we have given in the exceptional circumstances of this case, reduce the penalty to Rs. 50. We order a copy of this order to be sent to the learned District Magistrate, Dadu, in answer to his reference.

C. P. To convene means to call together or to assemble. When notices are sent to every member or circulated among the members by the Secretary, it must be presumed that it was with the consent of the Chairman, particularly when he attends the meeting. There is no law, rule or bye-law laying down any special procedure to regulate the exercise of the President's power to convene meetings. If there is evidence of the President's assent to the calling of any meeting, he must be deemed to have convened the meeting His assent is inferable from his presence at the meeting. Every meeting that is held must be presumed to have been convened by order of the President. Even on the assumption that there was any irregularity it cannot, in its nature, affect the validity of the meeting itself and is cured by s. 23 of the C. P. Municipalities Act. Strictly speaking, it is nothing more than an informality Abaji Sitaram v. Trimbak Municipality (2) and 46 Ind. Cas. 682 (3), distinguished. [p. 476, cols. 1 & 2.]

Failure of the President to summon or non-receipt of summons does not invalidate a meeting but is capable of being regularized by the member's attendance at the meeting 147 Ind. Cas. 894 (1), relied on. Smyth v. Darley (4), In re Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines Ltd. (5) and Merchants of the Staple of England v. Bank of England (6), referred to.

There is a close connection between sub-ss. (1) and (2) of s. 67, C. P. Municipal Act. The integral part of a resolution contemplated in sub-s. (1) is not only the proposal to impose the tax which is implicit in the resolution but defining the class of persons or description of property proposed to be taxed, amount of tax to be imposed and the system of assessment to be adopted. When the intention is clearly apparent from the wording of the resolution it is futile to stress the mere inelegance of expression. 147 Ind. Cas. 894 (1), distinguished. [p. 478, col. 1]

The omission to mention sub-s. 7 of s. 67, is not material because the Local Govt. cannot publish a Notification under any other provision except that one. [p. 479, col. 1.]

The order of the Local Govt. sanctioning the proposal to impose a tax is not a mere executive order but an order having the force of law from which the Municipality concerned derives its authority to impose the tax of a particular nature. It is in its nature a legislative order with all the force of law. The Notification itself is nothing but publication of the order. The rule of interpretation bearing on the question of commencement of statutes is that a statute takes effect from the first moment of the day on which it was passed unless another day is expressly named for the beginning of its operation. On this principle the order sanctioning the proposal to impose the tax and the rules relating to its assessment and collection would be deemed to come into force on the day on which they were notified in the Gazette. In any case the omission to specify the date cannot deprive the Notification itself of its presumptive force bearing on the proceedings relating to the imposition of the tax. Under sub-s. 8 of s. 67 the Notification of the imposition of a tax is conclusive evidence that the tax has been imposed in accordance with the provisions of the Act. That serves to validate the entire proceeding relating to the imposition of the tax and precludes any objection to its regularity or legality. Rex v. Smith (7), relied on. [p. 479, col. 2.]

The tax on ginning and pressing of cotton is not a tax on income derived from the trade but on the process of ginning and pressing. This tax does not seek to take anything out of the income and consequently is not ultra vires. 106 Ind. Cas. 882 (8), distinguished. [p 480, col. 1.]

The period of office of the nominated members of the Municipal Committee was extended till a new body was elected and began to function. The new elected body was to consist of nine elected, two nominated and two selected members. The nine elected members could not displace any nominated members of the old body for the reason that it was not possible to determine which elected member was a successor of which nominated member so as to attract the application of sub-s. 3 of s. 16. That new body was fully constituted subsequent to the meeting in question:

Held, that the failure to summon the old members who were qualified to act as corporators and summoning the new elected members who were then not so qualified rendered the proceedings of that meeting invalid and of no effect.

The omission of a party on whom the onus lay, t examine a particular witness gives rise to a presump tion adverse to him.

S. A. from the appellate decree of th Court of the Additional District Judge Khamgaon, dated July 15, 1937.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellants.
Mr. V. K. Rajwade, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal and Second Appeal No. 497 of 1937 are two allied plaintiffs' appeals from the judgments of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, reversing the decrees of the Additional Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Malkapur, passed in their favour in two suits instituted for a declaration that the tax levied by the Municipal Committee, Nandura, on persons carrying on the trade of ginning and pressing cotton, was illegal and ultra vires and for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant Committee from recovering the said tax from the plaintiffs. In one of the suits, there was added a claim for refund of the amount recovered by the Committee. This judgment governs the disposal of both.

The town of Nandura was declared to be a Municipality with effect from April 1, 1930 by the Local Govts'. Notification No. 756/27-VIII, dated February 4, 1930 issued under s. 5 (2) (a) of the C. P. Municipalities Act, 1920 as applied to Berar. The Nandura Municipality so formed was by Notification No. 757/27-VIII, dated February 4, 1930, excepted from the operation of ss. 10 (2) and (3), 16 (2), 67 (2), (3) and (4), 175 (3), 86 (3) and 178 (4) of the aforesaid Municipalities Act. By Notification No. 759/27-VIII of the same date, the Local Govt. appointed a Committee of 13 named members in accordance with rules made by the Local Govt. under s. 9 (2) of that Act. By another Notification the Municipal Committee, Nandura was excepted from the operation of s. 14 of the Municipalities Act and it was declared that the provisions of the said section with regard to the residence did not apply to candidate for election as a member of that Committee at the time of the fresh elections.

On May 18, 1931, the Local Govt. by Notification under 2576/848-M-VIII extended the period of office of the nominated members of the Municipal Committee "till a new body is elected and begins to function". The Local Govt. notified the election of 9 named persons as members of the Committee in the C. P. Gazette dated August 15, 1931, nomination of 2 named persons as members in the C. P. Gazette, dated October 3, 1931 and the selection of 2 named persons as members in the C. P. Gazette, dated November 28, 1931 and the election of President and two Vice-Presidents in the C. P. Gazette, dated January 9, 1932. Lastly, the Local Govt. published for general information the complete list of President, two Vice-Presidents and members of the Municipal Committee of Nandura, in the C. P. Gazette of the same date.

On September 20, 1931, there was a special meeting of the Committee for proposing imposition of a tax on persons carrying on the trade of ginning and pressing cotton within the limits of the Nandura town under s. 66 (1) (b) of the Municipalities Act. It was unanimously resolved that the tax should be imposed on the bales and bojas in the ginning and pressing factories on the terms provided in the rules of the Jalgaon Municipality and that the rules for collection of the tax should be made on the lines of those in force in that Municipality.

The notices of the proposal to impose the aforesaid tax at specified rates and that to make rules for the assessment and collection of it, as therein set out, were published in the C. P. Gazette, dated March 11, 1933. The former was published over the signature of the Secretary, Nandura Municipal Committee and the latter over that of of the Secretary to the Local Govt.

At a subsequent special meeting held on January 15, 1933 the original proposal was somewhat varied in respect of the rates and at the 1st special meeting held on Decem- 5, 1933, certain objections to the proposed tax received from the public were considered and disposed of.

The proposal to impose the tax at the modified rates was duly forwarded to the Local Govt. for sanction as required by s. 67 (5) of the Municipalities Act. The Local Govt. sanctioned the imposition of the tax and the rules relating to assessment and collection and published two Notifications announcing the imposition of the tax and the enforcement of the rules in the C. P. Gazette, dated February 2, 1934. In view of the discussion that is to follow, it is desirable to reproduce textually the Notification regarding imposition of the tax :—

"No. 399-130-M-VIII. In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-s. (5) of s. 67 of the Central Prov. Municipalities Act, 1922, (C. P. Act II of 1922), as applied to Berar, the Local Govt is pleased to confirm the following rule made by the Nandura Municipal Committee, in the Buldana district, under s. 66, sub-s. (1), cl (b) of the said Act, for imposing a tax on persons carrying on the trade of ginning and pressing cotton by means of steam or mechanical process within the limits of the Nandura Municipality :—

The Committee shall levy from all persons carrying on within the limits of the Municipality the trade of ginning cotton or pressing the same into bales by means of steam or mechancial process a tax at the following rates :—

	Rs.	a.	p.
(a) For each boja of 392 lbs. ginned	0	1	0
(b) For each bale of 392 lbs. pressed	0	2	0"

The Committee sought to recover the tax for some period preceding the date of the Notification (viz February 2, 1934) on the view that it had a retorspective effect on account of the omission to specify the date from which the tax was to come into effect.

The appellants contend that the tax was not validly imposed and therefore could not be lawfully recovered, on the following grounds :—

(1) That the special meetings which were held to consider the proposal to impose the tax were not convened by the President as required by s. 31 (2) of the Municipalities Act.

(2) That notices of no material meeting were served on the members in accordance with the requirements of the Act and the bye-laws framed there-under.

(3) That the first meeting held on September 20, 1931 was not in point of law a meeting of the Municipal Committee, Nandura, for the reason that no notices were sent to the 8 out of 13 persons nominated as members by the Local Govt. by Notification published on February 4, 1930, but that on the other hand the persons whose election was notified on August 15, 1931 were illegally summoned to attend the meeting. In other words, the argument is that the meeting was not a meeting of the Committee having power to levy the tax, or at any rate that it was not duly constituted to be competent to perform a corporate act.

(4) That the Local Govt's. Notification published in the Gazette, dated February 2, 1934, was invalid for the reason that it did not specify the date from which the tax was to come into effect as required by s. 67 (7) of the Municipalities Act and that it did not purport to be one published under that sub-section.

(5) And lastly that the tax, though intended to be levied on persons carrying on a trade in terms of s. 66 (1) (b) of the Municipalities Act, was in fact levied on commodities and that this is ultra vires of the Committee and illegal.

Before examining these contentions, it is desirable to advert to a ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council on which considerable stress was laid on behalf of the appellants. That is reported in Radha Kishan Jai Kishen v. Municipal Committee, Khandwa (1). In that case the Municipal Committee of Khandwa had resolved at a special meeting held on July 16, 1922, to propose the imposition of a tax on the trade of ginning and pressing cotton by means of steam or mechanical process, in compliance with sub-s. 1 of s. 39 of the C. P. Municipalities Act of 1903 which was repealed by the C. P. Municipalities Act of 1922. That resolution (proposing imposition of the tax) contained no mention of the amount or the rate of the tax to be imposed, although there was a reference to the "bye-laws adopted by Murtizapur and other Municipalities in Berar" as having been read at the meeting. The terms of the operative part of the resolution were

"Resolved that the proposed bye-laws drafted by the President be passed and they be published locally as well as in two successive issues of the C. P. Gazette for inviting objections or suggestions ....."

It is clear that the terms were too vague to enable any one to understand the nature, incidence and other necessary features of the proposed tax. The proposal was published consonant to the resolution, objections received were considered and disposed of and the final proposal was sanctioned by the Local Govt. followed by a Notification published in the C. P. Gazette of November 25, 1922, announcing the sanctioning of the imposition of the tax with effect from the date of the Notification. The validity of the tax was challenged on two grounds:

(1) that the special meeting of July 16, was not duly constituted in the absence of the receipt of notice by one member of the Committee;

(2) that the resolution proposing the imposition of the tax was not in accordence with the provision of s. 39 (1) of the Act of 1903 for the reason that it did not fix the amount or rate of the proposed tax.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council decided the controversy on principles which may be formulated as follows:—

"(i) that an attack on the validity of the proceedings of a statutory body must be 'clearly defined and clearly proved' i. e. to say that it should be supported by definite plea and convincing proof;

(ii) that it is imperative to summon every person entitled to take part in the intended meeting, but that the want of notice is an irregularity which is capable of being cured by the attendance of the member who has not been duly notified;

(iii) that when a corporate body is called upon to consider and decide such questions as the imposition of a tax, the motion in that behalf must be couched in terms which would clearly show such necessary particulars as the amount or the rate of the tax intended to be imposed."

It may be pertinent here to refer to the opinion expressed by their Lordships on the plea of law raised by the Municipal Committee. The committee contended that the Notification published by the Local Govt. on November 25, 1922, though under the repealed Act of 1903, should be deemed to have been issued under the Act of 1922. The object of this contention was to invoke the protection of the presumption of law embodied in sub-s. 8 of s. 67 of the Act of 1922. Their Lordships overruled the contention on the ground that neither the invalid proceedings of the Committee nor the Notification of the Local Govt. were or was the proceedings or a Notification under the Act of 1903; in other words, the proceedings and the Notification which followed, being intrinsically invalid could not be validated under the new Act of 1922.

On the issue of fact as to whether or not a member was summoned, their Lordships found that the testimony of the member concerned to say that he had not received notice was not sufficient to sustain the challenge to the proceedings of the Committee. Their Lordships' observations made in that behalf clearly go to show that what is vital is the failure to summon i. e. to send notice and not the failure to receive the notice.

Their Lordships, while holding that the resolution imposing the tax was invalid, remanded the case to the trial Court to give the Committee an opportunity of adducing evidence to identify the "bye-laws drafted by the President" which were placed for consideration of the special meeting held on July 16, 1922.

Reverting to the points in controversy, the first question is whether the special meetings held in connection with the imposition of the tax were invalid for the alleged reason that they were not convened by the President as required by s. 31 (2) of the Municipalities Act. It is true that the notice of the earlier meetings and the notices of the later ones were issued by the Secretary, but convening does not mean issuing notices. To convene means to call together or to assemble. When notices are sent to every member or circulated among the members by the Secretary, it must be presumed that it was with the consent of the Chairman, particularly when he attends the meeting. Raghunath (P. W. No. 1) who was then the Secretary affirms that although he was not expressly asked to issue notices of the meetings, he used to consult the President and Vice-President in the matter of convening the meetings. Excepting the first meeting of the nominated body, he consulted the President and Vice-President in regard to all other meetings. There is no law, rule or bye-law laying down any special procedure to regulate the exercise of the President's power to convene meetings. If there is evidence of the President's assent to the calling of any meeting, he must be deemed to have convened the meeting. His assent is inferable from his presence at the meeting.

Both ordinary and special meetings are distinguishable from the extraordinary meetings which the President is required to convene on a requisition from the members. The initiative to call extraordinary meetings comes from the members, whereas the initiative to call any other meeting lies with the President who has necessarily to depend on his Secretary for guidance as to when to call any particular kind of meeting. Consequently, every meeting that is held must be presumed to have been convened by order of the President. Even on the assumption that there was any irregularity it could not, in its nature, affect the validity of the meeting itself and is cured by s. 23 of the Municipalities Act. Strictly speaking, it is nothing more than an informality. Reliance is placed on Abaji Sitaram v. Trimbak Municipality (2) in support of the proposition that the failure of the President to convene a meeting is an incurable irregularity. That case no doubt ostensibly supports the appellants but it must be understood in the light of its peculiar facts. The question there was whether a special general Committee meeting held on June 17, 1897 was validly constituted. It was found that neither the President nor any official member was present at the meeting and in the circumstances of that case it was held that the meeting was not called by the President and that the omission by him to convene the meeting was a defect which could not be treated as a mere informality. There might well be a divergence of opinion on the question whether the omission in the circumstances by the President to call a meeting was or was not a mere informality. In Taher Ali v.

The Municipal Committee of Khamgaon (3) the Bombay case was considered but it was not followed by Kotval, A. J. C., as in his view the omission was a mere informality. In any case it is clear that the learned Judges who decided the Bombay case were fully inclined to condone the defect, if the President had been present at the meeting. In the present case the Pesident was present at the critical meetings as would be shown in the sequel and that circumstance renders the Bombay case inapposite.

The next question is whether the failure to serve some members invalidates the meetings. In the argument presented on behalf of the appellants it is assumed that non-receipt of notice is equivalent to failure to summon. In the leading case of Smyth v. Darley (4) it was held that the omission to summon a person entitled to be present at a special meeting of a corporation renders the acts done at the meeting in his absence invalid. In In re Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines Ltd. (5), also it was held that the failure to give notice of the meeting when the member is within reach was a defect vital to the validity of the meeting. In Mayor & Co. Merchant of the Staple of England v. Governor and Company of the Bank of England (6), it was pointed out that giving of notice meant that there must be such knowledge or such means of knowledge as to give each corporator the opportunity of attending. It is in view of these decisions that their Lordships of the Privy Council in Radha Kishan Jaikishan v. Municipal Committee, Khandwa (1), laid down that failure to summon or non-receipt of summons is capable of being regularised by the member's attendance at the meeting.

Turning to the facts of this case it would appear that the crucial meetings were three, that is to say, those held on September 20, 1931, January 15, 1933, and December 5, 1933. Excluding the first meeting which will be considered separately in the sequel it would appear that Tukaram Totaram, the President, attended the last two meetings although he did not sign the notice in token of its receipt: see Ex. D-41 and Ex. D-44, which are not translated. The trial Court found that as regards the meeting held on January 15, 1933 the only person that was not served was Tukaram Totaram and as regards the last meeting dated December 5, 1933 Tukaram Totaram and Gulam Zilani were not served. The objection in regard to Tukaram loses all its cogency on account of his attendance at the meetings. At the last meeting Ghulam Zilani was not present but the point whether his non-attendance was due to failure to summon him is left in obscurity as he was not summoned as a witness. The omission of the plaintiff, on whom the onus lay, to examine him gives rise to a presumption adverse to him and that is reinforced by the clear evidence of Deshpande the Secretary that he tried his best to inform all members resident in the station and by post all those who were living outside Nandura. Shamrao (P. W. No. 2) was the peon who was charged with the duty of circulating the notice among the members. He affirms that occasionally the members read the notice and orally promised to attend the meeting but did not choose to sign. In case of a corporate body every presumption must be made in favour of the regularity of its proceedings and that presumption was left unrebutted by the plaintiffs who challenged the validity of the proceedings.

The next question is whether the meeting held on September 20, 1931 was a properly constituted meeting. The appellants' argument so far as it affects this meeting has great force. By Notification, No. 2576/848-M-VIII, dated May 28, 1931 the period of office of the nominated members of the Municipal Committee, Nandura, was extended till a new body was elected and began to function. The new elected body was to consist of 9 elected, 2 nominated and 2 selected members. 9 elected members could not displace any nominated member of the old body for the reason that it was not possible to determine which elected member was a successor of which nominated member so as to attract the application of sub-s. 3 of s. 16 of the Municipalities Act, 1922. Moreover, the Local Govt. had by the Notification aforesaid fixed the term of office of the nominated members up to the time that the new body would be formed and begin to function. That new body was fully constituted subsequent to that meeting of September 20, 1931 by Notification No. 273-/M-VIII, dated January 2, 1932. Consequently, the failure to summon the old nominated members who were qualified to act as corporators and summoning the new elected members who were then not so qualified rendered the proceedings of that meeting invalid and of no effect. Moreover, the proposal to impose the tax which was embodied in resolution No. 9; see Ex. D 45, suffered from the same defect of vagueness, as was held to be fatal in Radha Kishen Jai Kishen v. Municipal Committee, Khandwa (1).

If the meeting, dated September 20, 1931, were the sole meeting to consider the proposal to impose the tax the appellants must succeed. There is, however, another important aspect of the question which should not be lost sight of. The subject came up again for consideration of the new elected body at a subsequent special meeting on January 15, 1933, which must, therefore, claim our attention now. That meeting was held on the instructions conveyed by the Deputy Commissioner in his letter No. 697-AIII, dated November 2, 1932, in which it was pointed out that the proposal sent by the Municipal Committee was not in conformity with the rules. They were, therefore, asked to send a fresh proposal in a form sample of which was annexed to the letter. After this letter the Committee got a fresh opportunity of considering the subject de novo and to decide on the advisability or otherwise of imposing the tax. The notice of this meeting is Ex. D 12 and it gives intimation of the subject in these words: as Item No. 8 of the agenda, "to consider the imposition of tax on bales and bojas". The Committee passed a resolution in these term:

"The proceeding in respect of the imposition of the tax on ginned bales and boja within the limits of the Nandura Municipal Committee was received back from the Deputy Commissioner. (Thereupon) it is resolved unanimously that tax on a bojas be fixed at 1 anna and on a bale at 2 annas according to the rates of the Chikhali Municipality and the rules for the collection of the tax should be like that of the Jalgaon Municipal Committee."

The appellants are not prepared to admit that this resolution was in terms of s. 67 (1) of the Municipalities Act. They apparently overlook the close connection between sub-ss. (1) and (2) of s. 67. The integral part of a resolution contemplated in sub-s. (1) is not only the proposal to impose the tax which is implicit in the resolution but defining the class of persons or description of property proposed to be taxed, amount of tax to be imposed and the system of assessment to be adopted. It was because these vital particulars of the proposed tax were not embodied in the resolution passed by the Khandwa Municipal Committee that their Lordships of the Privy Council in Radha Kishen Jai Kishen v. Municipal Committee, Khandwa (1), remanded the case for further enquiry. The resolution reproduced above contained unlike the one in the Khandwa case particulars pronounced by their Lordships of the Privy Council as vital. The wording of the resolution may be inelegant but it leaves no manner of doubt that it embodies the intention of the Committee to impose the tax on bojas and bales at the rate of 1 anna and 2 annas respectively. That the resolution meant to impose the tax on persons carrying on the business of ginning and pressing is clear from the notice dated January 15, 1933 published in the C. P. Gazette, dated March 11, 1933. When the intention is clearly apparent from the wording of a resolution it is futile to stress the mere inelegance of expression.

The resolution which was passed on January 15, 1933, was the one duly passed in terms of s. 66 (1) and (2) of the Municipalities Act. The meeting also was duly constituted as the President was present even though he had not signed the notice. The various steps of the procedure regulating the imposition of a tax are these; (1) passing of a resolution embodying a proposal for the imposition of a tax and the framing of draft rules of assessment and collection, (2) publication of the proposal and the draft rules in the official Gazette inviting objections, (3) consideration and disposal of objections and forwarding the proposal in its final form to the Local Govt. (4) the Local Govt's order sanctioning the imposition of the tax confirming the rules, and (5) Notification by the Local Govt. of the imposition of the tax and the rules related thereto in the official Gazette.

When the subject came up for consideration before the meeting of January 15, 1933, it was in its initial stage and the notice. Ex. D-12, rightly described the subject as being "to consider the imposition of tax on bales and bojas." At that meeting it was open to the Committee to throw out the proposal for the imposition of the tax but they decided to adopt the proposal. The previous resolution proposing the imposition of the tax passed on September 20, 1931, was void and consequently the subject must be deemed to have come for the first time before the meeting, dated January 15, 1933, as required by s. 67 (1) and (2) of the Muncipalities Act. In terms of this resolution, dated January 15, 1933, was published the notice over the signature of the Secretary in the official Gazette of March 11, 1933. That notice clearly intimated that the proposal would be "taken into consideration" after the expiry of 30 days from the date of the publication of that notice and that any objection and suggestion in respect thereof must be forwarded to the President before the expiry of that period. The publication of this notice marked the second stage in the development of the proposal to levy the tax.

The last meeting, dated December 5, 1933, was held to consider the objections. The notice Ex. P-3 dated December 3, 1933, described the subject as being "to consider the bye-laws in respect of the ginning and pressing factories." This is quite in accordance with the notice published in the Gazette of March 11, 1933. At this meeting the objections were considered and disposed of. The decision was embodied in the resolution No. 1, dated December 5, 1933. This meeting was a special meeting which was duly constituted. The trial Court finds that Tukaram Totaram and Gulam Zilani were not served with notice of this meeting. The defect in respect of Tukaram was cured by his attendance: see Ex. D-44 in the original. Ghulam Zilani was no doubt absent but he was not examined to show that his non-attendance was due to failure to summon him.

It is clear that the new body constituted by election duly passed the proposal to impose a tax and after disposal of objections sent up the proposal with the rules of assessment and collection, to the Local Govt. for sanction. There is no doubt on the point that the Local Govt. sanctioned the proposal as well as the rules. An attack is made on the validity of the Notification published by the Local Govt. in the Gazette dated February 2, 1934. The Notification itself was dated January 25, 1934, showing that on that day the Local Govt. had sanctioned the proposal and confirmed the rules. That Notification is apparently defective in two respects, namely, the non-mention of sub-s. 7 of s. 67 of the Municipalities Act and the omission to specify the date from which the tax was to come into effect. The omission to mention sub-s. 7 is not material because the Local Govt. could not publish a Notification under any other provision except that one. The question is whether the omission to specify the date invalidates the Notification. Before applying the law one has to be clear about the real nature of the Notification under sub-s. 7 of s. 67 of the Municipalities Act. The Notification follows the sanction of the proposals by the Local Govt. and it directs the imposition of the tax as sanctioned. The order of the Local Govt. sanctioning the proposal to impose a tax is not a mere executive order but an order having the force of law from which the Municipality concerned derives its authority to impose the tax of a particular nature. It is in its nature a legislative order with all the force of law. In the General Clauses Act X of 1897 Indian Law is described as comprising any law, ordinance, order, bye-law, rule, regulation passed or made at any time by any competent legislature, authority or person in British India. The canons of construction of statutes must, therefore, apply to the Local Govt.'s order sanctioning the proposal and the rules. The Notification itself is nothing but publication of the order. The rule of interpretation bearing on the question of commencement of statutes is that a statute takes effect from the first moment of the day on which it was passed unless another day is expressly named for the beginning of its operation. Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, 6th Edn. p. 739. In Rex v. Smith (7), Lord Alverstone, C. J., observed:

"At the present time there are two well-known dates in many Acts of Parliament, the date of the Act passing, and the date of its coming into operation. If, therefore, an Act is silent as to the date of its coming into operation, it comes into operation at the date of its passing."

On this principle the order sanctioning the proposal to impose the tax and the rules relating to its assessment and collection would be deemed to come into force on the day on which they were notified in the Gazette, that is on February 2, 1934.

In any case the omission to specify the date cannot deprive the Notification itself of its presumptive force bearing on the proceedings relating to the imposition of the tax. Under sub-s. 8 of s. 67 the Notification of the imposition of a tax is conclusive evidence that the tax has been imposed in accordance with the provisions of this Act. That serves to validate the entire proceeding relating to the imposition of the tax and precludes any objection to its regularity or legality.

Now there survives the last point, viz., whether the tax was illegal as being levied on commodities and not on persons carrying on the trade of ginning and pressing. The Notification is quite clear in its terms that the tax was imposed on persons and not on commodities. Much reliance is placed on District Board, Sialkot v. Sultan Muhammad Khan (8), and it is urged that the tax is ultra vires of the Municipal Committee. In the cited case the tax was levied on the total annual income derived by the assessee from any trade, profession or calling and consequently, it was held that it was a sort of disguised income-tax. Nothing that is said in that decision has any bearing on the facts of this case. The tax on ginning and pressing of cotton is not a tax on income derived from the trade but on the process of ginning and pressing. This tax does not seek to take anything out of the income.

An additional ground was sought to be raised here, viz., that the tax is in the nature of an excise tax and as such could not be enforced by the Municipal Committee in view of the recent decision of the Federal Court of India raported in In re Central Provinces Motor Spirit Act (9). This plea was not raised in the lower Court and we do not see our way to permit it at this late stage.

The result is that Radhakisan's appeal (second appeal No. 497 of 1937) stands dismissed with costs. In the other appeal (second appeal No. 492 of 1937) the plaintiffs claimed refund of Rs. 158-12-0 besides interest on the ground that this amount was recovered on March 9, 1935, in respect of some period prior to the imposition of the tax. We have held above that the tax would be deemed to have been imposed with effect from the date of the Notification, namely, February 2, 1934. It is not clear from the record whether any part of the amount recovered from the plaintiffs relates to a period anterior to the date of the Notification. If it does, the Municipal Committee would have no right to recover it and would be bound to refund the same to the plaintiffs. This case will go back to the trial Court for enquiry into this issue. With this reservation, the appeal is dismissed with costs except in regard to the claim for Rs. 158-12-0. Costs will abide the event.

N.-W. F. P. Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Application Act (VI of 1935), s. 2 — Reversioner's suit for declaration that alienation by woman holding life estate is not binding on them, is not maintainable after the passing of the Act.

In all suits instituted after the passing of the N.-W. F. P. Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Application Act the Courts must determine the rights of the parties under Muhammadan Law and not according to custom. A reversioner is unknown to Muhammadan Law. It is under custom that a reversioner is entitled to question sales made by a widow or other woman holding a life estate His right under custom is based on a spes successionis, which is also unknown to Muhammadan Law.

Consequently, after the passing of the aforesaid Act, the reversioners have no locus standi to sue for declaration that alienation by woman holding life estate is not binding on them. 192 Ind. Cas. 343 (1), relied on.

C. R. P. from an order of the Additional Judge, Peshawar, dated November 4, 1939.

Mian Ziauddin, for the Petitioner.

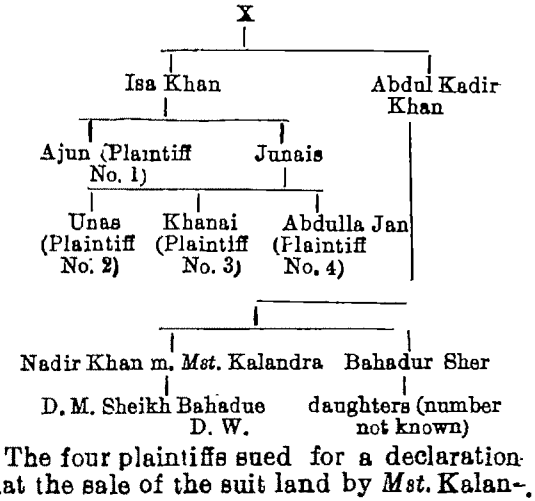
Lala Basheshar Nath, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4. Respondent No. 5 in person.

Almond, J. C.—This is an application for revision of the order of the Additional Judge, Peshawar, dismissing the petitioner's appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, 4th Class, Peshawar, dated December 23, 1937. The pedigree-table below shows all the parties to the suit with the exception of Amir, defendant No. 2, who is the petitioner before us :



The four plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the sale of the suit land by Mst. Kalan-dara, defendant No. 1, to Amir was invalid under custom and would not affect the plaintiff's reversionary rights. They alleged that Mst. Kalandara had only a life estate in the suit land which had been the property of her husband Nadir. Both the Courts below found that the alienation by Mst. Kalandara was not for legal necessity and was therefore invalid under the custom by which the parties were bound. The petition has been argued before us solely on the ground that in view of the enactment of the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Application Act. VI of 1935, the question must be decided according to Muhammadan Law and not according to custom. In a recent judgment of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 94/24 of 1938 Fazal Haq Dilzada v. Dawar Shah (1), it was explicitly laid down by a Bench that in all suits instituted after the passing of that Act the Courts must determine the rights of the parties under Muhammadan Law and not according to custom whether the inheritance had opened up either before or after the passing of the Act. A reversioner is unknown to Muhammadan Law. It is under custom that a reversioner is entitled to question sales made by a widow or other woman holding a life estate. His right under custom is based on a spes successionis, which is also unknown to Muhammadan Law. We are therefore of opinion, that the plaintiffs have no locus standi to sue under Muhammadan Law for the relief which they now claim. We therefore accept the petition and setting aside the decrees of the Courts below dismiss the plaintiff's suit. As this petitioner has succeeded on a point raised for the first time, we direct that the parties bear their own costs in all the Courts.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 66, 80—Bond—Bond providing for payment of loan within seven years—Further stipulation that interest due would be paid at end of each year and that in default of such payment creditor would be entitled to recover entire amount of bond with interest—No interest paid in any year—Bond held single bond—Limitation for suit on bond held ran from date specified for payment as prescribed by Art. 66 and not from date of first default in payment of interest — Whole amount held did not become due on default so as to induce application of Art 80—Practice — High Court —Full Bench when satisfied that view previously taken in High Court about law of limitation is wrong, can declare correct law especially when its effect is to enlarge period.

The plaintiff instituted a suit on September 1, 1936, for recovery of money on foot of a bond dated September 2, 1926. The bond provided that the loan would be repaid within seven years from the date of execution of the bond. There was also a stipulation that interest would be paid year by year and that if it was not so paid, the creditor would be entitled to sue for the recovery of the entire debt with interest. No interest was paid by the defendant in any year:

Held, that the bond such as one in question was a single bond notwithstanding the fact that there was what is called a default clause. Nor was it an instalment bond. The option given to the creditor was purely for the benefit of the creditor and did not make the money become payable. It merely gave the creditor a right, if he chose to exercise it, to have the money made payable Neither of the Arts. 68, 74 and 75, Lim. Act, were applicable to such a case. In such a case the period of limitation for instituting a suit for the amount due under the bond, ran from the date specified for payment as prescribed by Art. 66 of the Lim. Act and that it did not run from the date of the first default in payment of interest, nor did the whole amount of the bond become payable on that date so as there and then to induce the application of Art. 80. 162 Ind. Cas. 459 (1), not approved. [p. 489, col. 2; p. 490, cols. 1 & 2.]

[Case-law discussed.]

If on a consideration of the decisions on the point in question the High Court is satisfied that the view previously taken is the wrong view, there is no reason why it should not accept and declare what is the correct view; more particularly is this the case where the effect is not to deprive persons who have lent money under a bond, of an extended period of limitation to which formerly they had been held entitled but rather to enlarge the period of limitation, by doing which there can be no deprivation of rights. C. R. App. of the order of the Civil Judge (as Judge of Small Cause Court), Fyzabad, dated November 4, 1936.

Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Applicant.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for the Opposite Party.

Order of reference to a Bench

Radhakrishna, J.—(November 30, 1939) —This is a revision under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act against a decree of the Civil Judge, sitting as Small Cause Court Judge, Fyzabad, dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff brought a suit on foot of a bond dated September 2, 1926. This bond provided for payment of the loan within seven years from the date of the bond. It was further stipulated that interest due would be paid at the end of each year and if it was not so paid the creditor would be entitled to sue for the recovery of the entire amount of the bond with interest.

The lower Court on the authority of Shiva Narain v. Badal (1936 Oudh Weekly Notes, 518) (1) held that the suit was barred by time.

The learned Counsel for the applicant has among other points raised by him, contended that Art. 66 of the Indian Lim. Act was applicable to his suit and it was within time. Article 66 of the Indian Lim. Act runs as follows :

On a single bond, where a day is specified for payment.	Three years.	The day so specified.

According to him, the bond fixed the period for payment, and the fact that there is another stipulation in the bond by which the creditor has been given an option to sue earlier, does not make Art. 66 of the Indian Lim. Act inapplicable.

The same contention as is raised by the learned Counsel before me was raised in the case reported in Shiva Narain v. Badal (1936 O. W. N. 518) (1). The learned Judges at p. 522* observed as follows :

"It was also argued that the suit was governed by Art. 66 of the First Schedule of the Indian Lim. Act. This Article provides for the case of a single bond where a day is specified for payment. The provision contained in the bond in suit about payment of interest month by month and entitling the creditor to recover his money in case of default of payment of interest for every month are such as to exclude the application of Art. 66 to the case. It is hardly possible to say that such a bond is one where a day is specified for payment."

The learned Counsel contends that the view expressed above is not sound and is open to question. He has in support of his contention relied upon the following cases among others : Narain Babu v. Gouri Persad Bias (I. L. R. 5 Calcutta 21), (2), The Collector of Etawah v. Bati Maharani (I. L. R. 14 Allahabad, 162), (3), Gaya Prasad v. Sher Lal (15 Allahabad Law Journal, 313) (4) and L. Narain Das v. Mannoo Lal (A. I. R. 1935 Allahabad, 405) (5).

These cases no doubt support his contention on the whole length. The point argued is a very important question of law, and in view of the fact that these cases were not referred to before the Bench which decided the case reported in 1936 Oudh Weekly Notes, 518, (1) I think it proper that the present case be decided by a Bench of two Hon'ble Judges.

I, therefore, refer this case for decision by a Bench of two Judges of this Court under s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act.

Order of reference to a Full Bench

Ziaul-Hasan and Yorke, JJ.—(May 8, 1940).—This is an application under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act for revision of a decree of the learned Judge, Small Cause Court, Fyzabad and it has been referred to a Bench by a Single Judge of this Court under s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act.

The suit of the plaintiff applicant was for recovery of money on foot of a bond dated September 2, 1926. The bond provided that the loan would be repaid within seven years from the date of execution of the bond. There was also a stipulation that interest would be paid year by year and that if it was not so paid, the creditor would be entitled to sue for the recovery of the entire debt with interest.

On a plea of limitation being raised on behalf of the defendant the learned Judge of the trial Court accepted that plea in view of the decision in Shiva Narain v. Badal (1936 O. W. N. 518) (1) and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff thereupon filed this application for revision of the lower Court's decree. When the case came up before a learned Judge of this Court, the learned Counsel for the applicant referred to various decisions of the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts which were in conflict with the case mentioned above. The learned Judge therefore feeling doubt as to the correctness of the decision in Shiva Narain's case (1) referred the case for decision by a Bench.

The bond in Shiva Narain's case (1) was executed on July 18, 1929, and contained a promise to repay the loan in two years. It further provided that interest would be paid month by month and in case of non-payment of interest monthly, the creditor would have a right to sue for his money within or after the stipulated period. It will thus be seen that the terms of the bond in that case were similar to those of the bond before us. A Bench of this Court held in that case that Art. 66 of the Lim. Act did not apply as the bond could not be said to be one in which a day was specified for payment. We have a number of cases in which it was held by Courts, other than this Court, including the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, that a suit on a bond similar in terms to the one now before us is governed by Art. 66 of the Lim. Act.

In the case of Durga v. Tota Ram (16 O. C.,45) (6) the bond provided that the money would be repaid with interest within three years, that interest would have to be paid monthly and that if default were made in the payment of interest for six months the creditor would be at liberty to realize the principal and interest due on the bond without waiting for the expiry of the said term or after the expiry of the said term whichever be thought proper. It was held that the plaintiff's claim could not be regarded as time barred if he brought his suit within limitation from the date fixed for re-payment.

The bond in Hari Lal v. Thamman Lal (26 O. C., 121) (7), provided for repayment in seven years and for payment of interest year by year and there was a stipulation that if default was made in the payment of interest for two consecutive years, the entire amount due on the bond would be realizable. It was held that the creditor had an option to recover the amount due either when two consecutive defaults were made or at the end of the seven years' period as laid down in the bond. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner who decided the case was personally of opinion that Art. 66 of the Lim. Act was not applicable to the case but inspite of that view decided the case, owing to various previous decisions of the Court, contrary to that view.

In Narain Babu v. Gouri Persad (I. L. R. 5 Cal. 21) (2) the loan was repayable within six months from the date of execution of the bond and there was a provision for recovery of the entire amount in case interest was not paid monthly. It was held that the suit was governed by Art. 75 of the Indian Lim. Act (IX of 1871) which exactly corresponds to Art. 66 of the present Act. In The Collector of Etawah v. Beti Maharani (I. L. R. 14 All., 162) (3) also, it was held that Art. 66 of the Lim. Act is applicable to a suit on a bond similar in terms to those of the bond before us.

In Lalta Prasad v. Gajadhar Shukul (I. L. R. 56 All., 283) (8) it was held that a stipulation in a bond entitling a creditor, on the occurrence of default in payment of six monthly interest, to sue for the entire amount although the period fixed for repayment of the principal had not expired, is a stipulation for the benefit of the creditor, which it is open to him to waive at his option and that if the creditor waives such option, the bond does not become payable until the expiry of the period fixed for payment and limitation begins to run from such expiry.

A similar view was taken in the case of L Narain Das v. Mannoo Lal (A. I. R. 1935 All., 405) (5).

In view of the above decision, we ourselves doubt the correctness of the law as laid down in 1936 O. W. N. 518; (1), but as that decision was by a Bench of this Court, we refer the present case to a Full Bench for decision.

Opinion of the Full Bench

Yorke, J.—(December 18, 1940).—This Full Bench reference under s. 14 (1) of the Oudh Courts Act arises out of a suit to recover a sum of Rs. 200 with interest at two annas per rupee per year due on an unregistered bond for Rs. 200 executed by the defendant on September 2, 1926, whereby the original amount was made payable with interest within seven years. The bond further provided that interest would be paid at the end of each year, and if it was not so paid, the creditor will be entitled to sue for the recovery of the entire amount with interest without waiting for the expiry of the period of seven years stipulated in the bond.

The case came before the Civil Judge of Fyzabad, exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court, and he held that the cause of action for the suit arose on September 2, 1927, when interest for the first year was not paid. He therefore held that limitation began to run, presumably under Art. 80 of the Indian Lim. Act from that date, and therefore, the suit which was instituted on September 1, 1936, that is within three years from the expiry of the period of seven years specified in the bond, was barred by limitation, and he dismissed the suit relying on the decision of a Bench of this Court in Shiva Narain v. Badal (1936 O. W. N. p. 518) (1).

The matter came on an application in revision under s. 25 of the Prov. Small Cause Courts Act before the late Mr. Justice Radha Krishna Srivastava. It was argued before him that the decision in Shiva Narain's case (1) was unsound and a number of cases were quoted before him which led him to consider it desirable to refer the case for decision to a Bench of two Judges under s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act.

On the case coming before a Bench of this Court, of which I was a member, the Bench felt a doubt as to the correctness of the law as laid down in Shiva Narain's case (1) and referred the case to a Full Bench for decision. The Division Bench lost sight of the fact that this reference was one falling under the provisions of s. 14 (1) of the Oudh Courts Act and referred the whole case, whereas it could under that section only refer a question of law or custom having the force of law or of the construction of any document, or of the admissibility of any evidence, arising before it. It appears to me that the question which the Bench really sought to refer to this Bench should be framed in the following form :

Whether in the circumstances described limitation for a suit to recover the amount due under the bond ran from the date fixed for payment under Art. 66 of the Indian Lim. Act or it ran from the date of the first default in payment of interest on the view that the whole amount of the bond became payable on that date and Art. 80 of the Lim. Act was applicable.

The matter is of general importance because bonds are frequently drafted in this particular form and such bonds do not fall within the purview of instalment bonds to which Art. 74 or Art. 75 is applicable, but the question whether Art. 66 or Art. 80 is applicable is by no means free from difficulty and has been the subject of difference of opinion in the High Courts. Learned Counsel for the applicant and the opposite party have however taken us through the cases only of this Court and of the other High Court of this province, the Allahabad High Court.

For the applicant the case which is put forward is that a bond of this type, despite the presence of the option given to the creditor on a default in the payment of interest to sue for the whole amount, is a "single" bond within the meaning of Art. 66. The first question for consideration is whether this is a sound view.

Learned Counsel for the opposite party argues that such a bond is not a single bond. For the definition of "a "single bond" he has referred us to Halsbury's Laws of England and to various commentaries on the Lim. Act. In Halsbury's Laws of England (2nd Edition) Vol. III, para. 162 at p. 92 it is stated that "a bond merely for the payment of a certain sum of money without any condition in or annexed to it, is called a simple or single bond. Such instruments are rarely, if ever, met with at the present day, and the term 'single bond' is sometimes used to signify a bond given by one obligor as distinguished from one given by two or more."

Referring to this definition Rustomji in his Law of Limitation (5th Edition), Vol. I, at p. 763 remarks, presumably quoting from a case

"The expression 'single bond' is undoubtedly a term of art borrowed from English Law, but even in England a bond of this nature is rarely, if ever, met with at the present day, and it is therefore difficult to understand why these articles are still retained on the Indian statute book."

We have also been referred to U. N. Mitra's Limitation and Prescription, Tagore Law Lectures, (6th Edition Vol. II, p. 1241), where the learned Commentator dealing with Art. 66, remarks on the absence of an exhaustive definition of what a bond is and defines a 'single bond' as "a written engagement for the payment of money without a penalty." This definition necessarily gives rise to the question what is a penalty, and the obvious question in the present case would be whether the grant of an option to the creditor to sue for the whole amount can be construed as a penalty. It is, of course, obvious that if for example it is provided that in case of a default interest will be calculated 'compound' instead of 'simple' or it will be calculated at a higher rate, the bond provides for a penalty and in terms of this definition is not a single bond.

The learned Commentator at p. 1252 under Art. 75, deals with this point and remarks :

"A provision in a note or bond for the immediate payment of the whole, on any default in the payment of instalment, is often spoken of as a penalty or a condition of forfeiture, but it has been held in equity that a debt being presently due, such stipulation is not in the nature of a penalty, inasmuch as its object is only to secure payment in a particular manner. The Court cannot relieve the debtor against the consequence of a default in the punctual payment of any instalment, or compel the creditor to waive the default."

I am clearly of opinion, that such a provision is not a penalty, and that view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court in one of the cases quoted to us vide Gaya Prasad v. Sher Ali, (15 A. L. J. R. 313), (4), in which a Bench of that Court held Art. 66, applicable to such a bond. This same view was taken in cases of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, of which Durga v. Tota Ram, (16 O. C., 45), (6), is a sample. In that case it was held that "as the bond in suit gave the plaintiff an option in express terms to wait till the expiry of the term originally fixed for re-payment, whether the interest for the first six months was paid or not, the plaintiff's claim could not be regarded as barred by time because he chose to stick to the longer term."

The learned Judicial Commissioner held that where there was a condition permitting the creditor to wait for the expiry of the longer term or to sue before its expiry as he thought proper, the question was not one of waiver but of a pure contract and the creditor was entitled to adopt either of the two alternatives expressly contemplated by the bond, Art. 65 (now Art. 66) or 80 of the Lim. Act applied to such cases, and the debtor had no right to compel the creditor to stick to the shorter term. In that case a reference was made to Narain Babu v. Gouri Persad Bias, (I L. R. 5 Cal., 21) (2). That was a case in which the defendant executed a bond which provided that interest should be payable monthly, and that the principal should become due within six months from the date of execution; the bond contained a clause to the effect that if the interest should not be paid according to the terms of the bond, or if the creditor should feel any doubts as to his being able to realise the principal he should not be bound to wait until the expiry of the six months in order to bring a suit, should be at liberty to realize the principal and interest in any manner he might choose. It was held, that a suit on the bond brought within three years from the date of the day specified therein for payment was not barred by limitation, as the case fell under Art. 65 and not under Art. 75 of Sch. II of the Lim. Act, IX of 1871. The learned Judges in effect held that such a bond was a single bond falling within the mischief of the present Art. 66.

The decision in Durga's case (6) was followed most unwillingly by Mr. Wazir Hasan as Additional Judicial Commissioner in Hari Lal v. Thamman Lal, (26 O. C., 121) (7). He was of opinion that such a bond was not a "single" bond and that a bond which merely fixes a long period within which the whole amount is to be repaid does not specify a day for payment. He greatly preferred the view taken by Mr. Chamier, Additional Judicial Commissioner, in Har Narain v. Beni Pershad (8 O. C., 77) (9) that "such a bond is not to be regarded as a single bond because it contains something more than an undertaking to pay a certain sum of money on a day specified."

Mr. Chamier had gone on in that case to hold that Art. 80, was applicable and the suit was barred by limitation, since limitation began to run from the default which took place in November 1900, and the suit was not instituted until March 1904.

After the decision in Hari Lal's case, (26 O. C., 121) (7), the same question came before a Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, of which Mr. Wazir Hasan was one of the members, in Pherai v. Pudai Ram, (27 O. C. 318) (10). The Bench discussed the previous cases, including those which we have mentioned above and took the view that it was not open to the parties to an agreement to contract themselves out of the law of limitation by inserting in their agreement two alternative starting points for limitation. They held that on the date of the first default the creditor had a good cause of action, and therefore limitation began to run, that Art. 80 of the Lim. Act was applicable and a suit instituted within three years from the date specified for payment, but outside three years from the date of the first default, was barred by limitation. The view which was taken in Pherai's case (10), is the view which was followed in Shiva Narain's case in 1936 O. W. N., 518 (1), the learned Judges saying in terms,

"we are not therefore prepared to agree with the applicants' contention that the ruling in Pherai v. Pudai Ram (10), has ceased to be good law because of the decision in Lasa Din's case (11)."

This brings us to a consideration of Lasa Din's case (11). Lasa Din's case (11), was a case of a mortgage to which Art. 132 of the Lim. Act was applicable. That article provides a period of 12 years for a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immovable property, the period of limitation begins to run from the date when the money sued for becomes due, that is ordinarily the due date stated in the mortgage deed. Lasa Din's case (11), came in second appeal before a Bench of this Court which held that

"where a mortgage deed fixes a term of six years, which would mean that the money thereon is to become due at the end of this period and further contains a clause giving the mortgagee the right to sue within six years in case of default in the payment of interest, the money must be considered to become due at the earliest date when it is possible for the mortgagee to enforce paymant of it, and the starting point for limitation of 12 years prescribed by Art. 132 of the First Schedule of the Indian Lim. Act woold be the date of the first default in the payment and a suit not brought within that period is time-barred."

That case went to the Privy Council and the decision of their Lordships is reported in Lasa Din v. Gulab Kunwar, (I. L. R. 7 Lucknow, 442) (11).

Their Lordships held that

"under the Indian Lim. Act, 1908, Sch. I, Art. 132, suit to enforce a mortgage for a stipulated period can be instituted within 12 years of the expiry of the period although a default by the mortgagor has occurred during the period and by the terms of the mortgage the mortgagee thereupon had an immediate right to enforce the mortgage. The money become due within the meaning of the above article only when either the stipulated period has expired, or, a default having occurred, the mortgagee has exercised his option to enforce the mortgage."

Their Lordships had in a previous case, Pancham v. Ansar Husain (L. R. 53 I. A, 187 (12), expressed doubts as to the soundness of the view that limitation began to run against the mortgagee from the date of a default by the mortgagor which gave to the mortgagee an option to sue for the mortgage money. In Lasa Din's case (11) their Lordships held that "a proviso of this nature is inserted in a mortgage deed 'exclusively for the benefit of the mortgagees'." Their Lordships went on to say,

"It purports to give them an option either to enforce their security at once, or, if the security is ample, to stand by their investment for the full term of the mortgage. If on the default of the mortgagor—in other words by the breach of his contract—the mortgage money becomes immediately 'due', it is clear that the intention of the parties is defeated, and that what was agreed to by them as an option in the mortgagee is, in effect, converted into an option in the mortgagor.'

Their Lordships said further on that they were not prepared to hold that the mortgagor could in this way take advantage of his own default; they did not think that upon such default he would have the right to redeem, and in their opinion the mortgage money did not "become due" within the meaning of Art. 132 of the Lim. Act until both the mortgagor's right to redeem and the mortgagees' right to enforce his security had accrued. Towards the end of their judgment their Lordships remarked,

"If in the Indian cases the question were 'When did the mortgagee's cause of action arise?'—i. e., When did he first become entitled to sue for the relief claimed by his suit—their Lordships think that there might be much to be said in support of the Allahabad decisions."

That is those which had been followed by the Chief Court in Lasa Din's case (11). "Judged by the Indian criterion," (that is, the starting point of limitation mentioned in the article of the Lim. Act itself)

"'when the money sued for' became due', upon the best consideration their Lordships have been able to give to this difficult question, they think that the decision of the Chief Court of Oudh was wrong, and that they should have held that the appellant's suit was within time."

Lasa Din's case (11) settled a vexed question for all mortgage cases following that decision, but the question arose whether the principle of that decision was applicable to bond suits to which Art. 132 is not applicable but Art. 80 or 66 is applicable. Prior to the decision in Pherai's case (10) the Allahabad High Court had been inclined to the view that the stipulation for an option to sue on default of payment of interest during the period of the currency of a bond did not operate to take the bond out of the description of a single bond to which Art. 66 was applicable. The first case of the Allahabad High Court quoted to us was Gaya Prasad's case (4) referred to above (15 A. L. J. R., 313), (4). There the learned Judges said that the instrument sued upon was a single bond which specified a day for payment, namely three years from the date of the bond. They considered that the provision in the bond which provided that the creditor had the option of suing at once or waiting until the prescribed period to be immaterial for the purpose of computing the period of limitation and that the creditor must be presumed to have exercised the option which was clearly given to him by the terms of the bond.

This view was followed in Makrand Singh v. Kallu Singh (17 A. L. J. R., 647), (13) a case of a mortgage bond in which money was payable in 7 years but the mortgagee was given the option of suing for his money in default of payment of interest in any year. The mortgagee had obtained a decree and got the mortgaged property sold and then applied for a personal decree, and it was held that as the mortgage bond was a registered bond he could claim a period of limitation of six years from the date specified in the bond and not merely six years from the first default in payment of interest.

The principle of these two cases was applied by another Bench of the same Court in Sham Lal v. Tehariya Lakhmi Chand (18 A. L. J. R., 476) (14). In this case a mortgage deed provided that the money was to be repaid in five years, that interest was to be paid every six months and that in case of non-payment of interest for four six monthly periods the creditor would have power to realise the whole of the amount due to him in a lump sum within the fixed period (that is without waiting for its expiry), and that if after the time fixed the amount remained unpaid with the consent of the creditor or for some other reason, then the same conditions and rate of interest would be applied and maintained after the time fixed and up to the satisfaction of the amount in full.

On a suit to enforce this bond the mortgage as such was held to be invalid, but a simple money decree was passed in the plaintiff's favour. The suit was instituted within six years of the expiry of the period fixed for payment, but beyond six years of the non-payment of two years' interest. It was held that the suit was not time-barred, and the argument that Art. 80 read with Art. 116 of the Lim. Act was applicable and that the suit ought to have been brought within six years from the failure to pay two years' interest was repelled.

We have not been shown any of the cases between this case and Lasa Din's case (11). The first case of the Allahabad High Court after Lasa Din's case (11) to which we have been referred in Lalta Prasad v. Gajadhar Shukul, (A. I. R. 1933 All., 235) (8). In that case it was provided in a simple bond that the debt was to be paid in four years and that interest must be paid on the amount every six months. It was further provided that in case of default in payment of interest of any six monthly period or of the amount of principal, the creditor had power to realise in any way he liked his entire amount. Default was made in the payment of interest from the very outset. It was held that "the covenant in the bond, entitling the creditor to sue for the amount due on the bond before the expiry of the stipulated period of four years, was for the benefit of the creditor, and it was open to him to waive that option, and to wait for the full period of four years before putting the bond into suit, and that the time for recovery of the debt did not begin to run from the date of the first default."

The learned Judges referred to Lasa Din's case (11) and remarked that the reasons contained in the judgment of their Lordships applied with full force to the case of a simple money debt. In the headnote the Editors have referred to this portion of the judgment as having reference to Art. 75, but it is quite clear that Art. 75 had no application whatever, and Art. 75 was not referred to in the judgment. Clearly the learned Judges treated the case as one to which Art. 66 was applicable.

Following this decision a single Judge of the same Court in L. Narain Das v. Mannoo Lal (A. I. R. 1935 All., 405) (5) held that

"Where in a simple bond it is provided, that, if the monthly interest is not paid or if the principal money lent is not paid at the end of a specified period, the creditor may sue, even though there is a breach of the condition for payment of interest, still that is a matter over which the creditor has a right of waiver and limitation will only begin to run from the period stipulated in the bond for payment. In such cases the clause regarding right to sue on breach of condition regarding interest is exclusively for the benefit of the creditor. The two Arts. 66 and 68 must be read together in the case of such bonds; and limitation runs either from the date specified for payment of the bond or from the date when the condition as regards payment of interest is broken. The two Arts. 66 and 68 read together are tantamount to Art. 132 and the expression 'when the money sued for becomes due' would apply to either Art. 66 or Art. 69."

The learned Judge who decided this case referred to Lasa Din's case (11) and discussed the question whether the principle laid down in that case was applicable to cases of simple bonds, and he considered that the reasoning would apply also to the latter class of cases. Dealing with an argument about the applicability of Art. 80 the learned Judge remarked that even if that article were taken, limitation would run from the time when the bond became payable, and he was evidently inclined to the view that the bond did not become payable merely because the creditor had an option to institute a suit at that date which he might or might not exercise, that is he interpreted the word "payable" as having the same meaning as the word "due" in Art. 132, with the necessary implication that both these words imply not only that the creditor has a right to recover the money but that is bound to exercise that right and has not merely an option either to exercise it or not to exercise it.

The same view has been taken in a Single

Judge case of the Lahore High Court, Mool Chand v. Chhittar, (A I R 1935 Lah. 948) (15). The learned Judge said summarising the decisions briefly,

"it has been held that a clause, such as that attached to the bond now in suit, gives an option exclusively in favour of the creditor, who is entitled to the benefit of the investment for the full term originally provided, and need not sue until that term expired even if there is a default in the payment of interest."

Another case in which there is definite support for this view is Muhammad Husian v. Sanwal Das, (I L R 56 All. 954) (16). It is stated in the headnote,

"the Privy Council decision in Lasa Din v. Gulab Kunwar (11), has definitely overruled the ruling in Shib Dayal v. Mehrban (I L R 45 All. 27) (17), on the question of the commencement of limitation for a suit for sale on a mortgage, and has by necessary implication overruled it also on the question of commencement of limitation for a claim for a personal decree. The question in the present case being one of a personal decree was governed by Art. 80 read with Art. 116 of the Lim. Act, and not by Art. 132, applicable to a suit for sale on a mortgage, as in the case of Lasa Din v. Gulab Kunwar (11). But there was no distinction between the expression "money becomes due" in Art. 132 and the expression 'money becomes payable' in Art. 80, if in either case the creditor had an option to disregard the stipulated period and he did not exercise that option, and the same reasoning applied to both classes of suits on the question of the starting point of limitation."

King, J. in his judgment in this case remarked that in Lasa Din's case (11), their Lordships laid stress upon the point that the provisions enabling the mortgagees to sue before the expiry of stipulated period is inserted "exclusively for the benefit of the mortgagees", giving them an option either to enforce their security or to stand by their investment for the full term. He said that he took this to mean that the mortgagee had an option of treating the money as having become due by demanding or suing for it, and that it did not become due unless he exercised his option, even though the mortgagor might already have a right to redeem in accordance with the terms of the mortgage contract. Further on he remarked that the time did not begin to run against the mortgagee before the expiry of the stipulated period unless he availed himself of the option inserted exclusively for his benefit.

As against this case reference was made on behalf of the opposite party to the Full Bench case of Jawahar Lal v. Mathura Prasad, (I L R 57 All. 108) (18), but this was a case under Art. 75, and therefore prima facie inapplicable in the passage relied upon. Suleman, Chief Jusice, said :

"The principle laid down by the Privy Council in Lasa Din v. Gulab Kunwar, (I L R 7 Luck. 143) (11), regarding the necessity of the mortgagee choosing to exercise his option under the default clause in order to make the mortgage money due and the limitation to start, should not be extended to cases of money bonds falling under Art. 75. The case of a mortgage is peculiar and stands on a different footing; and the reasoning in Lasa Din's case (11), is applicable only to cases of mortgage and inapplicable to money bonds. Further each article of the Lim. Act, has to be interpreted according to the particular language employed in that article, and the starting point of limitation under Art. 75, is definitely laid down to be the date of default, and not, as in Art. 132, the date 'when the money becomes due.'

Even supposing, however, that on the principle in Lasa Din's case (11), on the occurrence of the default it would depend on the choice of the creditor whether the whole amount would become due or not, in the present case the creditor exercised that option by giving notice enforcing the default clause and demanding payment of the whole amount. The whole amount became immediately due and time began to run against him and he could not thereafter fall back upon Art. 74."

This case is clearly distinguishable from cases of the type of the present case in a number of different ways.

Coming now to consider Shiva Narain's case (1936 O W N 518) (1), in the light of these decisions, it seems to me, with great respect, that the view taken in that case is not satisfactory or convincing. The learned Judges, as I have remarked earlier, referred back to Pherai's case (10) and they distinguished Lasa Din's case (11), on the ground that that was a case of a mortgage, and a mortgagor and a mortgagee had reciprocal rights which they did not consider to be the case between the executant of a bond and the obligor, (a point dealt with by Bennet, J. in the Allahabad case of Narain Das v. Mannoo Lal) (5). They further went on to refer to Jawahar Lal v. Mathura Prasad, (I L R 57 All. 108) (18), on the question of the effect of the option, and in this connection they referred to a remark of King, J. where he said (with reference to an instalment bond to which Art. 75 applied) that when the statute laid down that in certain circumstances time would begin to run from the date when the default was made, it was not open to the parties to agree that the creditor might simply ignore the default and that if he did so, limitation would not begin to run until the expiry of the stipulated period. They remarked with reference to the bond in suit, "It is clear from the terms of the bond that it became payable as soon as a default is made in the payment of interest." Doubtless the bond could be described as having become payable in the sense that the creditor was entitled to have it made payable. They went on to say,

"when once the amount becomes payable limitation must begin to run and it cannot be stopped because the bond provides an alternative starting point for limitation. The creditor cannot be allowed to ignore the earlier starting point of limitation because, as soon as the money once becomes payable limitation must begin to run irrespective of the wishes and convenience of the creditor. The matter is one the determination of which rests on the terms of the statute and not on the wishes or option of the creditor," that is to say they interpreted the option given to the creditor to institute a suit on this default as a clause which made the amount then due payable in the sense that that word is used in Art. 80 of the Lim. Act.

What the learned Judges really did was I think to apply arguments based on the wording of Art. 75 (which makes time run from the date of default) to a case to which they held Art. 80 to be applicable, by taking the view that the money became "payable" on the default in payment of interest. It seems to me that on this point the reasoning of Lasa Din's case (11) is clearly applicable and that the option given to the creditor on such default does not make the whole amount payable but only gives the creditor a right which he may or may not exercise to have it made payable. Such an option does not bring in the application of Art. 75 or by itself make time begin to run under Art. 80.

As pointed out by Sulaiman, C. J. in Jawahar Lal's case (18):

"The Lim. Act, is in a sense a purely arbitrary enactment and the various starting points for purposes of limitation laid down in the third column of the First Schedule are equally aribitrary. It is not absolutely necessary that there should be a consistency or a uniformity of any definite principle in fixing the various starting points It is a mere matter of choice dependent on public policy. In some cases the starting point is fixed as the date of the execution of the bond. In other cases the starting point is the date fixed for payment. In some other cases it is the date of the first default Each article has therefore to be interpreted according to the particular language employed in that article and, ordinarily, irrespective of somewhat similar language employed in other articles."

He went on to point out the contrast between the wording in the third column of Art. 132 and Art. 80 from that in the third column of Art. 75, under which article the starting point is when the default is made, and in case the obligee waives the benefit of the provision, then the date of the fresh default. On the reasoning adopted by the learned Chief Justice Lasa Din's case (11) clearly could not be made applicable to a case under Art. 75 where under the statute itself time began to run from the date of default. On the other hand, as it appears to me, the refusal to apply the principle stated in Lasa Din's case (11) to cases of the present type involves straining the effect of the option to sue so as to make it lead inevitably to the result that the money has become payable. In this connection I may refer to another remark of Sulaiman, C. J. at p. 127 * of Jawahar Lal's case (18) where he remarks.

"I would guard myself against holding that the case of every bond with a default clause the whole amount would necessarily become due (thati upon the occurrence of a default). The answer would depend on the particular language of the document employed, but I would certainly hold that even if it be held that the money does not become due immediately on the occurrence of a default, it would certainly become due if the creditor exercises his option by demanding the amount and by serving notice on the debtor to pay the whole sum."

To sum up my conclusions, in the first place I am of opinion that a bond such as that with which we have to deal in the present case is a single bond, notwithstanding the fact that there is what is called a default clause. The fact that bonds of the single bond type are now rare in England seems to me to be irrelevant, as this type of bond is far from being rare in this country.

The next point I would make is with reference to Art. 68. Personally I feel some doubt about Art. 68 being applicable to cases of this kind. It is true that the bond contains a condition but the condition is not one which relates to the whole sum due on the bond. It seems from the notes in the various commentaries on the Lim. Act that Art. 68 has been interpreted as a plying rather to bonds of the nature of security bonds, where the executant is only liable to make a payment on breach of the condition and is not otherwise liable under the bond.

Next it seems to me that Art. 74 and Art. 75 and the various rulings under those articles have no application. By no stretch of imagination could the present bond or bonds of this type be called instalment bonds, and it is only in the case of an instalment bond to which Art. 75 applies that time begins to run from the date when the default is made.

The only other article which can be contrued as applicable is Art. 80. The only line of reasoning on which Art. 80 can be made applicable is first to accept the view that on a default occurring the money immediately becomes payable. To meet such an agreement it appears to me that the reasoning and the general principles laid down in Lasa Din's case (11) are fully applicable. The option which is given to the creditor is purely for the benefit of the creditor and does not make the money become payable. It merely gives the creditor a right, if he chooses to exercise it, to have the money made payable. Whether therefore Art. 66 or Art. 80 is applied, limitation begins to run from the date fixed for payment or the date when the money becomes payable, and that is the date stated in the document itself, or the expiry of the period stated in the document.

Learned Counsel for the opposite party has suggested that even if doubt is felt about the view of the law in 1936 O. W. N., (1) the Court should not readily modify the view of the law taken in that case because the law of limitation is adjectival or procedural law. I do not feel much force in this argument. It seems to me that if on a consideration of the decisions on the point we are satisfied that the view previously taken is the wrong view, there is no reason why we should not accept and declare what is the correct view; more particularly is this the case where the effect is not to deprive persons who have lent money under such a bond of an extended period of limitation to which formely they had been held entitled but rather to enlarge the period of limitation, by doing which there can be no deprivation of rights.

On this view I would answer the question which I consider to be the question that should have been put by the Division Bench by saying that in the circumstances described the period of limitation for instituting a suit for the amount of the bond runs from the date specified for payment as prescribed by Art. 66 of the Indian Lim. Act and that it does not run from the date of the first default in payment of interest, nor does the whole amount of the bond become payable on that date so as there and then to induce the application of Art. 80 of the Lim. Act.

Thomas, C. J. (December 19, 1940)—I have nothing useful to add to this exhaustive judgment and concur.

Ghulam Hasan, J. (December 20, 1940)—I concur and have nothing to add.

Thomas, C J., Yorke and Ghulam Hasan, JJ.—(January 3, 1940)—Our answer to the question which has been formulated is that in the circumstances described, the period of limitation for instituting a suit for the amount due under the bond, runs from the date specified for payment as prescribed by Art. 66 of the Indian Lim. Act and that it does not run from the date of the first default in payment of interest, nor does the whole amount of the bond become payable on that date so as there and then to induce the application of Art. 80 of the Lim. Act.

Final order

Yorke and Ghulam Hasan, JJ.—In view of the decision of the Full Bench this application must succeed. The decision of the Judge, Small Cause Court is therefore set aside and the suit decreed for Rs. 417 with pendente lite and future interest at six per cent. per annum from the date of suit till realisation. The plaintiff will get his costs throughout from the defendant.

S. Order accordingly.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17-A, s. 12 (ii)—Suit filed in District Munsif's Court transferred to Subordinate Judge for being tried along with other suit filed there—Both suits decided by same judgment—Appeal from decree in suit originally filed in District Munsif's Court—Court-fee payable—Power of Appellate Court to correct mistake made by lower Court in respect of court-fees.

Where a suit for declaration which was originally filed in the Court of the District Munsif is transferred subsequently to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for being tried along with the other similar suit filed in that Court and both the suits are decided by one judgment, the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge in respect of the suit originally filed in the District Munsif's Court is one passed by that Court and not by the Court of the District Munsif and the memorandum of appeal from such decree when the value for the purposes of jurisdiction is less than Rs. 10,000 must bear a court-fee stamp of Rs. 100 and not of Rs. 15.

Where a Court accepts a plaint or memorandum of appeal bearing a stamp of certain value, it must be deemed to have decided that that was the proper court-fee. Section 12 (ii) Court Fees Act gives an Appellate Court power when an appeal comes before it to correct a mistake made below in respect of court-fees.

A. against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore dated November 22, 1937 in O. S. No. 176 of 1937.

Mr. K. V. Ramachandra Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Krishna Rao, for the Govt. Pleader.

Leach, C. J.—This appeal has been placed before us to-day on a question raised with regard to the court-fee payable. The memorandum of appeal bears a court-fee stamp of Rs. 15 and the Deputy Registrar has called upon the appellant to pay an additional fee of Rs. 85 on the ground that the memorandum should be stamped with a fee of Rs. 100 under the provisions of Art. 17-A of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act. As the appellant questioned the validity of the Deputy Registrar's decision a notice was issued to the Govt. Pleader. The facts are these. The appellant filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Dharapuram for a declaration that a certain alienation was a fraud on creditors. He filed a similar suit in respect of another alienation in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore. The suit filed in the Court of the District Munsif was subsequently transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge and tried along with the suit which the appellant had filed in that Court. By a common judgment the two suits were dismissed. The appellant then filed an appeal to this Court against the decision in the suit which he had filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and filed an appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Coimbatore in respect of the decree of the Subordinate Judge in the suit which was originally filed in the Court of the District Munsif. This is the appeal which has given rise to the question of stamping.

The memorandum of appeal was stamped with a fee of Rs. 15 when it was presented to the Court of the District Judge and the District Judge accepted it as being correct. Article 17-A provides that the court-fee on a memorandum of appeal in a suit for a declaration with consequential relief in a District Munsif's Court shall be Rs. 15. The District Court, however, erred in accepting the memorandum as having been properly stamped. The decree which was challenged was a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge and not of the Court of the District Munsif and Art. 17-A clearly states that in the case of a Memorandum of Appeal against a decree of a District Court or a Sub-Court the fee shall be Rs. 100 if the value for the purpose of jurisdiction is less than Rs. 10,000, as in this case. The argument of the appellant that the fact that the suit was originally filed in the Court of the District Munsif makes it a decree of that Court cannot be accepted. The decree was passed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge and is rightly declared to be a decree of that Court.

The learned Advocate for the appellant has suggested that this Court has no jurisdiction to require payment of the difference between Rs. 15 and Rs. 100 by reason of s. 12 of the Court Fees Act. He says that there was no question raised when the appeal was filed in the Court of the District Judge and not having been raised there it cannot be raised here. This argument ingores the facts and the wording of the section. The District Court in accepting the memorandum of appeal at Rs. 15 did decide that that was the proper fee. Section 12 (ii) gives an Appellate Court power when an appeal comes before it to correct a mistake made below, and this mistake was corrected by the direction of the Deputy Registrar. There is no substance in the appellant's objections and they must be overruled. As he has insisted on these questions being argued and as the Govt. Pleader has been served the appellant must pay costs which we fix at Rs. 50. The appeal will not be accepted until both the court-fee and the costs which we have now awarded have been paid.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision Application No. 600 of 1940

September 30, 1940

AGARWALA, J.

GONI MAHTON AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 435—High Court, if can revise proceedings of Panchayat—Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Act (III of 1922), ss. 53 (2) (b), 76—Sub-Divisional Magistrate, if can stay proceedings of Panchayat—

S. 345 (6), Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), applicability of, to Panchayat—Panchayat, whether bound to accept compromise entered into by parties.

A Panchayat constituted under the Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Act is a Court and it is in the exercise of its criminal jurisdiction, an inferior Criminal Court, and, therefore, its orders are revisable under s. 435 of the Criminal P. C. [p. 493, col. 2]

[Case-law reviewed]

The only provision in the Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Act enabling a Sub-Divisional Magistrate to interfere with the proceeding of a Panchayat in criminal case, while the case is pending, is s. 53 (2) (b), which enables either the Sub-Divisional Magistrate or the District Magistrate to transfer the case. There is no other provision in the Act which enables a Sub-Divisional Magistrate to interfere with the proceedings of a Panchayat either by stay or otherwise. [p 494, col. 2.]

Section 345 (6), Criminal P. C., does not apply to a Panchayat. Section 76, Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Act is merely an enabling section and it does not mean that a Panchayat is bound to accept a compromise entered into by the parties. Where one of the parties resiles from the compromise it is clearly a proper case in which the Panchayat should not act on it. [p. 495, col. 1.]

C. R. App. against an order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Hajipur, dated August 18, 1940.

Mr. Harinandan Singh, for the Petitioners.

The Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Order—The first question that arises on this application is whether this Court has power to revise the proceedings of a Panchayat under the Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Act, 1922. Under s. 435, Criminal P. C., this Court has power to call for the records of all inferior Criminal Courts situate within its local jurisdiction and to revise the orders of such Courts. Section 6 of the Code provides:

"Besides the High Courts and the Courts constituted under any other law than this Code for the time being in force, there shall be five classes of Criminal Courts in British India, namely, Courts of Session, Presidency Magistrate and Magistrates of the first, second and third class."

The question is, whether a Panchayat is a Court constituted under any other law within the meaning of s. 6. Under s. 6, Village Administration Act, the Local Govt. is empowered, in any area in which a Union Board has been constituted, to direct the members of the Union Board to elect from among their own number three or more persons to be, during their term of office as members of such Union Board, a Panchayat. Under s. 7, the Local Govt. is empowered to direct that a Panchayat shall be established even where no Union has been constituted. By s. 53 (1) of the Act it is declared that a Panchayat constituted under s. 6 or s. 7 shall have jurisdiction with that of the Criminal Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the Panchayat circle is situated to take cognizance of and to try the offences specified in that sub-section. Sub-section (2) of the same section authorizes certain Magistrates to transfer to a Panchayat for trial certain offences not specified in sub-s. (1). Section 56 enables the Local Govt. to empower Panchayats with jurisdiction in certain other offences. Civil jurisdiction is conferred on Panchayats by s. 57 and the following sections. A case or suit before a Panchayat is required by s. 64 of the Act to be instituted by petition made orally or in writing.

Section 65 authorizes a Panchayat to dismiss petition if, on the face of it, it appears to be frivolous and vexatious. If it has no jurisdiction to try the particular case or suit it is required by sub-s. (2) to direct the petitioner to the proper Court. If the petitioner who initiated the case or suit fails to appear on the date fixed or shews negligence in prosecuting his case or suit, the Panchayat may dismiss the case or suit for default (s. 66). If the petition is not dismissed the Panchayat is required by s. 67 (1) to require the accused or the defendant to appear and answer the petition either orally or in writing. If the accused fails to appear or cannot be found, sub-s. (4) requires the Panchayat to report to the nearest Magistrate who is then authorized to issue a warrant with bail for the arrest of the accused, and forward him, when appearing for trial, to the Panchayat, or release him on bail to appear before it. If the accused appears to answer the petition and claims to be tried by a Magistrate, the Pachayat must direct the complainant to file a complaint before a proper Court (s 68). Section 74 requires the Panchayat to record in writing its sentence or decree and directs that such sentence or decree shall be pronounced on hearing the parties and their evidence and that it shall be just, equitable and according to good conscience; but, in arriving at that decision the Panchayat is declared to be not bound by any laws of evidence or procedure other than the procedure prescribed by or under this Act.

In the event of the members of the Panchayat disagreeing the decision of the majority is to prevail (s. 75). There is no right of appeal from a conviction by a Panchayat; but if the District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate is satisfied that a failure of justice has occurred he may of his own motion by an order in writing cancel or modify any order of conviction or compensation made by a Panchayat or direct the retrial of any case by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to him. Section 90 requires the Local Govt. to prescribe the procedure to be followed by Panchayats and s. 96 (2) (k) authorizes the Local Govt. to make rules for regulating the procedure to be followed by Panchayats. Under the authorities thus conferred the Local Govt. have framed rules which are published in the the Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Manual of 1932. The rules with regard to criminal cases are Nos. 11 to 21 and the rules were published with Notificatien No 3649 of April 3, 1923, at p. 68 of the Manual. In ciriminal cases the Panchayat is required to examine the complaint on oath or solemn affirmation. If the accused does not admit his guilt, or claim to be tried by a Magistrate under s. 63, r. 15 requires that the Panchayat shall proceed to hear the complainant and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution and also to hear the accused and take all such evidence as he produces in defence. A summary of the evidence of each witness must be recorded in the appropriate place in the register of cases and the order of the Panchayat must be similarly recorded.

The question whether a Panchayat is an inferior Criminal Court within the meaning of s. 435, Criminal P. C., has not been considered hitherto. In Ram Chandra Singh v. Baldeo Singh (1) this Court revised an order passed by a Panchayat in exercise of its criminal jurisdiction but the question whether this Court had power to revise such an order was not agitated. I have been referred to cases under other Acts in which revisional power of the High Court has been discussed. In Ram Gopal Goenka v. Corporation of Calcutta (2) the position with regard to Magistrate appointed under the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923, was under consideration. Section 531 of that Act empowers a Local Govt. to appoint Magistrates for the trial of offences against the Act and the rules or bye-laws made under the Act. It was held that a Magistrate so appointed would be a Criminal Court within the meaning of s. 6, Criminal P. C., and that his orders would be revisable by a High Court. In Nga E v. Emperor (3) the question was whether a village headman appointed under the Burma Village Act was a Court within the meaning of s. 6 of the Code, It was held that he was. In Sat Narain v. Sarju (4) the question was whether the High Court has power under s. 526, Criminal P. C., to transfer a case pending before a Panchayat under the United Provinces Village Panchayats Act of 1920. This case is similar in its scope and general outline to the provisions of the Act now under consideration; but the learned Judges who constituted the Bench which heard that case differed.

In Emperor v. Kamlapati Panth (5) the question arose whether the High Court has power to revise an order under the U. P. Act and it was held that the Court had such power. In Basdeo Misra v. Badal Misra (6), a single Judge held that the High Court had power to transfer a criminal case pending before a Panchayat under s. 526, Criminal P. C. There are two provisions of the Act I am considering which appear to me to be a clear indication that a Panchayat is a Court. Under s. 53 (2) proviso (b), Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Act, the District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate may transfer any case "from one Panchayat to another or to any other Court subordinate to him." Unless the Legislature considered a Panchayat to be a Court the word 'other' in this proviso is redundant. Similarly, s. 57 (2) provides that "no Court other than a Panchayat shall take cognizance of any suit" of the class specified in the sub-section. Here again, the use of the word 'other' by the Legislature appears to connote that a Panchayat is also a Court. In my opinion, therefore, a Panchayat constituted under the Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Act is a Court and it is, in the exercise of its criminal jurisdiction, an inferior Criminal Court, and therefore its orders are revisable under s. 435 of the Code.

With respect to the merits the facts were as follows : On July 11, a complaint was made to the Panchayat charging the petitioner with theft. Summons was issued to the accused to appear on the 18th. On that day both the complainant and the accused appeared and applied for time for producing their evidence. This prayer was granted and the 22nd was fixed for the hearing. The parties also filed on the 18th a petition stating that they had compromised the case. This was also directed to be put up on the 22nd. On the latter date the Panchayat recorded on the petition of compromise that the accused (the present petitioner) had backed out of the compromise. The evidence of the complainant and his witnesses was then recorded. The petitioner alleges that on that date he asked the Panchayat to refer the case to a Mgistrate under s. 68 of the Act. There is nothing on the record of the Panchayat to support the petitioner in this respect and the petition which he filed in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on that date suggests that what the petitioner did before the Panchayat on the 22nd was to ask the Panchayat to dismiss the complaint. The petition of the 22nd to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate stated that the petitioner appeared before the Panchayat and made "a verbal and written request to dismiss the case under s. 68 of the Act on the ground set out above." The ground set out above was that the charge was a false one and that the Sirpanch was a friend of the complainant. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate was asked "to dimiss the complaint under s. 68, of the Act and direct them not to proceed."

On this petition the Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed the record to be called for and the proceedings before the Panchayat to be stayed. The stay order did not reach the Panchayat although there is another petition filed by the petitioner on July 26, in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate stating that the petitioner had informed the Panchayat of the stay order. The Magistrate again directed the proceedings to be stayed and called for a report and the record from the Panchayat. It is not clear when this order reached the Panchayat; but on July 29, it passed an order convicting the petitioner. In the circumstances related above, the petitioner claims that his conviction is illegal. His first contention is that the Panchayat had no jurisdiction to try the case after he had applied for the matter to be referred to a Magistrate. Section 68 of the Act which confers upon an accused person a right to be tried by a Magistrate, instead of by a Panchayat, requires that the petitioner shall claim this right when he appears in answer to a summons. In the present case the summons directed the accused to appear on July 18. The accused appeared on that date but did not claim to be tried by a Magistrate. Instead, he made two prayers to the Panchayat, one requiring time to produce his evidence and the other the alleged petition of compromise. Even if the subsequent petition alleged to have been filed by the accused on the 22nd asking for the dismissal of the complaint be regarded as an application to have the case tried by a Magistrate, it was not made at the stage when s. 68 requires it to be made.

The next contention is that in view of the stay order which the Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed on the 22nd, the Panchayat had no jurisdiction to proceed with the trial even though this order failed to reach the Panchayat. The only provision in the Act enabling a Sub-Divisional Magistrate to interfere with the proceeding of a Panchayat in criminal case, while the case is pending, is s. 53 (2) (b), which enables either the Sub-Divisional Magistrate or the District Magistrate to transfer the case. There is no other provision in the Act which enables a Sub-Divisional Magistrate to interfere with the proceedings of a Panchayat either by stay or otherwise. The proviso to s. 77 which enables a District Magistrate or a Magistrate to cancel an order of conviction or compensation made by a Panchayat does not come into operation until after the conviction has been recorded. Under s. 435, Criminal P. C., a Sub-Divisional Magistrate has power to call for the record of an inferior Criminal Court constituted within his jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying himself that the proceedings are irregular; but his power is limited to forwarding the record to the District Magistrate. In this case the Sub-Divisional Magistrate does not appear to have acted in exercise of the powers conferred upon him by s. 435 and there is, in my opinion, no power conferred upon him enabling him to interfere under the Act itself and, therefore his stay order must be regarded as one passed without jurisdiction.

The last point is that in view of the alleged compromise petition filed on July 18, the Panchayat had no option but to accept the Compromise and acquit the accused. There is, however, in the Act no provision similar to the provision of s. 345 (6), Criminal P. C, that the composition of an offence shall have the effect of the acquittal of the accused. By s. 74 of the Act it is declared that the Panchayat is not bound by laws.

of procedure other than those prescribed by or under the Act. Section 345 (6), therefore, does not apply to a Panchayat. Reference however was made to s. 76 of the Act. That section declares that it shall be lawful for a Panchayat to decide any case or suit within its jurisdiction in accordance with any compromise agreed to by the parties. This is merely an enabling section and it does not mean that a Panchayat is bound to accept a compromise entered into by the parties. In a case like the present, where one of the parties resiles from the compromise it is clearly a proper case in which the Panchayat exercised a wise discretion in not acting on it. There is no other point in this case. The Rule is discharged.

In execution of a mortgage decree two adjacent houses bearing Nos. 146 and 147 were put up for sale. At the time of the sale of house No. 147 the sale amin through a bona fide mistake pointed out to the bidders house No. 146 and described it as house No 147. X purchased this house No. 146 believing it to be house No. 147. House No. 146 was then put up for sale and was described by the amin under a bona fide mistake as house No. 147 and was purchased by Y under the belief that he purchased house No. 147 while the house actually sold was house No. 146. Both X and Y entered into possession of the houses Nos. 146 and 147 respectively. The sale certificates mentioned correct numbers of the houses purchased by X and Y as Nos. 147 and 146 respectively. X reconstructed house No. 147 at a great cost under a bona fide belief that he had purchased that house. After about twelve years Y sued X for possession on the basis of the sale certificate:

Held, that Y must have bid for, and intended to bid for, the house No. 147 and nothing else. And as he had been content to accept that position for almost twelve years he could not succeed in obtaining something which ex hypothesi he never bought. Even if, it was accepted that by virtue of the sale certificate he had become technically the owner of house No. 146, no Court in justice, equity or good conscience would assist him to obtain possession of something which he never bargained to have. At the most he could be held to be a trustee for the real owner X. Leuty v. Hillas (1) and Craddock Bros v. Hunt (2), relied on. [p 499, cols. 1 & 2.]

A High Court is entitled to apply principles of justice, equity and good conscience and to look for such priciples to English authorities. [p. 499, col. 2.]

There are, at any rate, four cases in which leave to appeal under the Letters Patent should be given. First, in a case in which a question has arisen which is of general importance. In such case as that it is manifestly, in the public interest that a more authoritative decision should be given than is possible at the hands of a single Judge. And to this head might be added a case in which the matter involved is of altogether unusual private importance, either by reason of the magnitude of the material issues involved or for some other reason. Secondly, there are cases in which a question arises of very frequent occurrence. Such a case might arise where, on some new statute a point arises which will govern the rights and liabilities of a large number of people. An authoritative decision in a case like that is necessary to serve as a precedent for future cases. And, thirdly, there are those cases in which the existing authorities by which the Court is to be guided are either obscure or conflicting. In such a case as that it is to the public interest that all doubts should be dissolved and for that reason it is obviously proper to grant leave to appeal under the Letters Patent. There is then a further case which arises and it is one in which greater difficulty arises. It is the case in which the Judge himself who decides the case feels a reasonable doubt as to the correctness of his own decision and thinks that for that reason it is just to the parties that a further appeal should be allowed. But it is a ground which should, be exercised with considerable care and in a proper case only and leave to appeal should not be granted too lightly. 138 Ind. Cas. 454 (3) and 151 Ind. Cas 921 (4), relied on. [p. 500, col 2; p. 501, col. 1.]

S. A. from a decision of the Additional Civil Judge, Benares, dated April 20, 1938.

Mr. Gopi Nath Kunzru, for the Appellant.

Messrs B. Malik and Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal. The facts and the circumstances out of which it arises are a little curious. The suit which was instituted as long ago as August 9, 1935, was for possession of a half interest in a house at Benares which it is sufficient for me to describe as house No. 146. This house and its adjoining house No. 147 have become the subject-matter of this and a good deal of this litigation in the following manner. The entirety of house No. 147 and a moiety of house No. 146 belonged to two persons, who are father and son named Nasir Husain and Nazeer Husain. The remaining moiety of house No. 146 belonged to a lady named Mst. Razia Begam, who was the wife, I think, of Nazir Hussain. At some date prior to 1922, which is not material, Nasir and his son Nazeer Husain mortgaged the whole of house No. 147 and their moiety of house No. 146 to Kalyan Das, the plaintiff in the proceedings out of which this appeal arises. In 1922 in a suit No. 50 of that year the plaintiff took steps to enforce his mortgage. He obtained a preliminary, and in due course a final decree and ultimately the mortgaged property came to be sold by the Court. The sale was proclaimed for October 5, 1923. It was to be held by the local amin and a sale proclamation was issued. With what can only have been great carelessness, the sale proclamation mentioned only a house No. 146.

The auction took place. At it there were present, among other persons, the plaintiff and the original defendant to these proceedings, Munshi Sundar Lal. It may be mentioned in passing that Munshi Sundar Lal died during the pendency of the proceedings which accounts for the fact that the present respondent are his heirs. Sundar Lal, as far as can be gathered, had no previous connection with this property and was not, as far as I can see, in any way connected with the mortgage. The auction took place on the spot and the amin first put up house No. 147. It is alleged and the lower Courts have found it to be true as a fact and I accept it that the amin in putting up house No. 147 for sale pointed out to the assembled bidders house No. 146 It is not suggested that this was anything but a bona fide mistake. But it was, as it seems to me, the origin of the whole trouble. Upon that footing the defendant, Munshi Sundar Lal, bid for a house described as No. 147, supposing it to be that house which the amin had pointed out, namely, house No. 146. In setting out the facts briefly I need say no more than this at this stage. that it has been conclusively found in the Courts below—and I again agree with it—that the defendant Munshi Sundar Lal too made a bona fide mistake. He intended to bid for, and did in fact bid for, what he believed to be house No. 146. Not only that he bid for the house which had actually been pointed out by the amin. Eventually the lot was knocked down to him for a sum of approximately Rs. 1,100 and he went away believing that in purchasing the house described as No. 147 he had actually purchased the house that had been pointed out by the amin. It would perhaps be easier to follow if I say at that stage that house No. 146 lies immediately to the west house No. 147. And the two houses respectively are referred to in the judgments of the lower Courts and will be referred to by me, as the "western house" and the "eastern house" respectively. The western house is No. 146 and the eastern house is No. 147. It was the western house that was pointed out to the defendant as the lot for which he was invited to bid and for which he did bid and which was wrongly described by the amin as No. 147.

Immediately after the sale to the defendant, lot No. 146 was put up. This, of course actually, was one moiety of the western house for which the defendant had already bid and of the whole of which he conceived himself to have become the purchaser. When this was put up, the plaintiff-mortgagee himself bid for it and purchased it. Now, it is necessary carefully to observe what followed. That auction sale was held on October 5, 1923. On November 5, 1923 the sales were confirmed, and subsequently sale certificates were granted and possession was given to the respective purchasers. It is perfectly true that the sale which was confimed to the defendant and the sale certificate which was given to the defendant were in respect of house No. 147. That is only natural and logical because, whatever it was that the defendant had purchased, he had purchased it as house No. 147. The significant thing, however, is that the defendant actually took possession of house No. 146, that is to say, the western house and the plaintiff actually took possession of house No. 147, that is, the eastern house. Put in other words, each of them took possession of a house which, if regard be had only to the strict numerical description of them, was the house purchased by the other. It appears that the defendant, Sundar Lal, as regards the western house took a number of steps, to which I shall refer more particularly in a moment, all of which point to the fact that he was under a genuine belief that the western house was the house which he had purchased and ultimately he went so far as to pull down all the existing buildings on it and to build new buildings at a cost which, I am told, amounted to Rs. 11,000. Meanwhile, the plaintiff throughout this time remained in possession of the eastern house. And, as far as, I can see, took no steps to rectify any mistake that had been made, assuming that he knew of it.

Now, the position which had been created in this way was a very curious one. The plaintiff who had, ostensibly purchased a moiety only of No. 146, was actually in possession of the whole of No. 147, that is the eastern house. On the other hand, the defendant who "ostensibly" had purchased the whole of No. 147; that is to say, the eastern house, was in fact in possession of the whole of the western house, of which house a moiety, at any rate, was at the date of the auction outstanding in Mst. Razia Begam. When he went into possession, the defendant must necessarily have taken possession of not only that moiety of the western house which was subject to the mortgage but also of that other moiety of the western house which was never subject to the mortgage, but which was outstanding in Mst. Razia Begam. It is quite obvious that as against Mst. Razia Begam, the defendant could have had no answer had that lady immediately after the mortgage objected to his having taken possession of her share. But what actually happened was that throughout the period from 1923 to 1932, no one objected to what had happened and it was only in August 1932 that the muddle was appreciated and Mst. Razia Begam brought a suit against both Kalyan Das and Munshi Sundar Lal, claiming her share of the western house. As I have pointed out, if this suit had been brought at an earlier stage Munshi Sundar Lal could not possibly have had answer to it. But, as it was, the suit failed, not on the ground that Munshi Sundar Lal had obtained a title as against Mst. Razia Begam by virtue of the auction sale, but because it was held that Mst. Razia Begam by standing by and allowing Munshi Sundar Lal to spend a considerable sum of money on re-building the premises, had thereby estopped herself from asserting her rights. That suit went through the many processes of a suit and its latest stage is that it was settled in the way I have described by a judgment in second appeal by my learned brother Allsop, J., on November 1, 1939. The learned Judge, however, gave leave for a further appeal under the Letters Patent and so that suit is not even yet finally laid to rest.

The position, therefore, was altered by virtue of those proceedings. Munshi Sundar Lal who could have got no possible title to the whole of the western house under the auction sale under whatever description he bought the property did in fact get a title to the whole of it, subject to the result of the Letters Patent appeal, by his successful defence to the suit of Mst. Razia Begam. In this way, Munshi Sundar Lal remained in possession of the whole of the western house without danger of interference from anyone. And, as I have said, up to that point the plaintiff Kalyan Das had remained, without complaint, in possession of the eastern house. In those circumstances, on August 9, 1935 this suit was begun by the plaintiff alleging—and alleging for virtually the first time—that what he had purchased at the auction-sale nearly twelve years earlier had been in fact the property described as house No. 116, whereas what the defendant had purchased at that auction had been the property described as house No. 147. He ignored what may have been the intention of the parties and the muddle that may have been made and claimed upon this ground to turn the defendant out of possession of the western house together with the buildings which at great expense to himself the defendant had erected in the bona fide belief that the land belonged to him. That is the suit with which the Munsif and the learned Civil Judge had to deal and with which I now have to deal in second appeal. It is a claim by the plaintiff, after an interval of just short of twelve years, to take a technical advantage of a mistake which was made in 1923 at the auction-sale and to insist that he is now entitled to have the property of the exact description which he bought, irrespective of what the real intention of the parties may have been and of any equities between them.

Now, a number of technical defences have been raised to this suit, but I propose first to try to dispose of it upon the grounds of principle. It appears to me that the first thing to consider because it lies, I think, at the root of the whole matter is what it was that the parties, apart from any question of mere description, purchased at the auction in 1923. Put in another way, what I think we have first to consider is whether the defendant, when he bid for house No. 147 and when it was knocked down to him, was really intending to purchase the western house and whether it was the western house which the amin really intended to sell to him? In the same way, when the plaintiff bid for what was described as house No. 146 was he really intending to purchase the eastern house and was it the eastern house which was knocked down to him? That seems to be the substance of the matter. If it is true that in substance and in reality the purchase by the defendant was the purchase of that house which is known as the western house, then it seems to me that its misdescription as house No. 147 is a mere falsa demonstratio. In the same way, if what the plaintiff intended to purchase was the eastern house, then I doubt if it matters in the least whether it was described as house No. 146. If upon the facts of this case, it should prove that the defendant genuinely believed he was buying, and intended to buy, and the amin intended to sell him the western house, then, as between himself and a co-purchaser at the same auction it is not easy to see upon what principles he could be deprived of his purchase. If, on the other hand, the plaintiff brought and intended to buy the eastern house, it is equally difficult to see upon what principle of law, equity or common sense he can be entitled to come to a Court after an interval of nearly twelve years and to insist upon having something he never intended to buy. I shall, therefore in the first place treat this as a pure question of fact. I have to see therefore what have been the conclusions of fact which have been arrived at in the Courts below. Turning first to the judgment of the Munsif I find that it contains a highly significant finding of fact. He says:

"I think the entire oral and documentary evidence of the parties conclusively establishes that the defendant really purchased the entire western house in suit on October 5, 1923. Within the knowledge of the plaintiff at the Court amin's assurance that the entire western house bore No 13/147....."

Now, that seems to me a finding of fact, not only that the defendant intended to buy the western house, but that the plaintiff knew he intended to buy the western house. And it seems to follow that, if the plaintiff knew that the defendant intended to buy the western house, then the plaintiff must equally have known, when he purchased the other house, that he was buying the eastern house and not the western house. Passing to the judgment of the learned Civil Judge I find that he comes to the same conclusion. He finds first, on the reverse of p. 2 of his judgment, that "the finding of the lower Court is perfectly, correct". He finds a little lower down:

"The statement of witnesses examined by the defence clearly establishes that the western house was actually purchased by the defendant and not by the plaintiff and the plaintiff's statement that he purchased the half of the western house is wrong in fact."

That means, if I understand it rightly, that the defendant purchased and was sold the western house (irrespective of its number) and that the plaintiff purchased and was sold and knew he was sold the eastern house. The learned Civil Judge on p. 3 of his judgment finds that the amin did in fact point out the western house as answering the description 147 and the eastern house as answering the description 146. The Civil Judge then goes on to consider and discuss the evidence upon which he bases these findings. He discusses first the bona fides of the defendant and he concludes that that has been clearly established. He says that there is no doubt whatever that the defendant when he took possession of the western house took it in the belief that its number was 147. I should perhaps have said at an earlier stage that neither of these houses bore any actual numbers. The Judge then finds from a series of steps taken by the defendant that he has proved up to the hilt his genuine belief that what he had been sold was the western house. For instance the defendant accepted rent from the tenant of the house. He made certain applications to the Municipal Board in respect of the house describing it as No. 147. He made arrangements for sewerage upon the footing that the house's proper number was 147. He even mortgaged it as house No. 147 to the Secretary of State and finally, he spent a sum on it amounting to nearly Rs. 15,000 in building the house. I agree with the learned Civil Judge in thinking that this evidence points conclusively to the fact that what offered to the defendant at the aution was the western house and that he bid for and purchased that house only. It is quite true that the amin by mistake described it as house No. 147, but that, to my mind, is a mere false demonstration and the substance of the matter is that the defendant purchased that house which physically was the western house. Then the Civil Judge proceeds carefully and well to consider the evidence which points to what I may describe as a lack of bona fides in the plaintiff and he comes to a conclusion which he expresses in these words:

"The simple question of fact to be determined was whether the defendant purchased the western or the eastern house and on the materials discussed above I find that he purchased the western house ... .and I can safely say that the defendant Munshi Sundar Lal purchased the western house thinking that it actually bore the No. 12/147 and agree with the lower Court and hold that the defendant purchased the western house first and at the second and subsequent bidding the plaintiff purchased the eastern house."

That is as plain a finding of fact as there can be that what the plaintiff purchased was the eastern house. I may say that I agree with that conclusion of fact. Now that, to my mind, is alone sufficient to dispose of this suit. If it is true, as it must be taken to be, that the plaintiff was aware all the time that the defendant had purchased the western house, then it must follow that the plaintiff himself, when he purchased house No. 146 immediately afterwards, could have been under no delusion as to what he was getting. He must have bid for, and intended to bid for, the eastern house and nothing else. And all the evidence points that way. He has been content to accept that position for almost 12 years since. He has never complained until this suit that he did not get what he purchased. It is only now for the first time that he comes here and says "I did not purchase the eastern house at all, I purchased the western house." How upon this finding of fact, can the plaintiff possibly succeed in this Court in obtaining something which ex hypothesi he never bought. It appears to me that this affords a conclusive answer to the whole suit. It does not seem to me to be necessary to refer to any authority. But it may be contended (I am not sure that it has been in this suit that whatever the intention of the parties may have been the effect of the sale certificate was actually to vest in the respective parties Nos. 145 and 147 that is to say, that 147 was actually vested in the defendant and 146 in the plaintiff. It will be remembered that the sale certificate did accurately show the numbers and, therefore, if we look at the sale certificate the defendant actually got 147 and the plaintiff got 146. But that, in my judgment, would not, in the least, help the plaintiff in this suit. Even if I accept it was a fact that by virtue of the sale certificate he has become technically the owner of house No. 146, that is to say, the western house, ever so I am quite satisfied that no Court in justice, equity or good conscience would assist him to obtain possession of something which he never bargained to have.

Indeed, I think that the present case is covered by the well-known English case in Leuty v. Hillas (1). In many ways this case in principle is not unlike the well known comparatively recent case in Craddock Bros. v. Hunt (2). I feel free to refer to this case because after all I am entitled in this Court to apply principles of justice, equity and good conscience and I am entitled to look for such principles to English authorities. In Craddock Bros. v. Hunt (2), a situation arose which, in many respects, is not unlike the present one. I need not give the facts in full because they are very long and very complicated. In effect, what happened was that at an auction of adjoining properties one purchaser purchased one property and another purchaser purchased the other property in precisely the same way as in this case. The plaintiff bid for and thought he was getting as part of the lot which he bought, a property which included the whole of a certain courtyard. The defendant whose lot was put up immediately afterwards purchased the adjoining piece of land. It was found as a fact in that case, precisely as I have found as a fact in this appeal, that the subsequent purchaser was well aware what the previous purchaser had bought. At a later date the subsequent purchaser upon a technical ground sought to contend that part of the yard should be included in his purchase. Now, as I say it was found as a fact that the subsequent purchaser was well aware that the previous purchaser had purchased the whole of the yard. In those circumstances this is what is said by Lord Sterndale, M. R. at p. 155* of the report:

"It seems to me that the question is whether if on these facts the defendant ought to be in equity a trustee of the brown land for the plaintiffs. The learned Judge must, I think, on this branch of the case as on the former, have held that he ought but he has not given his reasons for so holding. It does not seem to me that the case is brought within the direct authority in Leuty v. Hillas (1), where the facts were quite different, but I think it comes within the principle which seems to me to underlie that case. I can see no conscience or honesty in the defendant's claim and I think he should be declared a trustee for the plaintiffs of land, to which he has by mistake got a title, which he knew had been knocked down to them, and which he never thought was intended to be sold to him or had been brought by him."

Those last words appear to me exactly to cover the present position. Equally clearly Warrington, L. J., at p. 158* of the report deals with the same question. He says:

"The defendant has accidentally got something which he has neither bought nor paid for, and he had notice that the vendor did not intend to sell to him, for he knew, as I have said, that so much of the property as was not included in what he intended to buy was knocked down to the plaintiffs. The principle applicable to Leuty v. Hillas (1), and to the present case is, in my opinion, that under which a man acquiring a legal estate with notice that another had a better claim thereto cannot in a Court of Equity be allowed to insist on his position at law, but will be treated as a trustee for the person rightfully entitled, and be if necessary, ordered to convey the estate to him....."

Even assuming, therefore, that, because of the form of the sale certificate, the plaintiff did obtain, as a conveyancing technicality, a title to the western house under the description No. 146, I should not have the least hesitation in holding even in India that a Court, in its application of principles of justice, equity and good conscience, would hold him to be, in circumstances such as these, a trustee for the real owner. For these reasons, in my view, this appeal must fail. There were other points argued in the Courts below and notably a question of estoppel. It was said that the plaintiff, having stood by all these years and having watched the defendant put up this expensive building cannnot now be heard to assert his interest in the land. It is precisely the same case as that with which Mst. Razia Begam was met at an earlier stage. It is suggested by the learned Advocate who has appeared for the respondents that it is incredible that Munshi Sundar Lal, can have remained in possession of the western house all these years without realising that he got a property which he never bought. I do not hold that view. In the first place, as I have already decided, it was the western house that he had bought. There is no reason, as far as I can see, why he should have supposed that the No. 147 was not an accurate description of it. The houses were not numbered. He had been led to believe from the beginning that the house did bear No. 147 and I am quite satisfied that he genuinely did believe it. Certainly nothing has been proved in these proceedings which shows that anything happened which could have undeceived him as to that. Had it been necessary for me so to decide I should have found very little difficulty in saying that the learned Munsif and the learned Judge were right in this matter of estoppel also. It is not necessary for me to discuss the other points that arise in this appeal because this, as I have said, is sufficient to dispose of it. For these reasons this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

I have been asked by the unsuccessful appellant for leave to appeal further under the Letters Patent of the Court. This matter of giving or withholding leave to appeal under the Letters Patent is always an embarrassing one for a single Judge and it is generally distasteful to him for obvious reason, to have to refuse a further appeal from his own decision. But, as I understand it, the policy of the law in this respect is, in cases such as these, that litigation should normally end with the second appeal to the single Judge and that only in what I may describe as special or exceptional cases is a further appeal to a second Bench of the High Court to be allowed. It is placed within the discretion of the Judge himself as to what cases a further appeal ought to be allowed in. And as it seems to me, that is a discretion which ought not to be exercised haphazard but on principles.

My attention has been called to no case of this Court in which these principles have been laid down. But, as it seems to me, there are, at any rate, for cases in which leave to appeal under the Letters Patent should be given. First in a case in which a question has arisen which is of general importance. In such case as that it is manifestly, in the public interest that a more authoritative decision should be given than is possible at the hands of a single Judge, And to this head I might possibly add a case in which the matter involved is of altogether unusual private importance, either by reason of the magnitude of the material issues involved or for some other reason. Secondly, there are cases in which a question arises of very frequent occurrence. Such a case might arise where, on some new statute a point arises which will govern the rights and liabilities of a large number of people. An authoritative decision in a case like that is necessary to serve as a precedent for future cases. And, thirdly, there are those cases in which the existing authorities by which the Court is to be guided are either obscure or conflicting. In such a case as that it is to the public interest that all doubts should be dissolved and for that reason it is obviously proper to grant leave to appeal under the Letters Patent. These principles have been set out in the judgment of the Bombay High Court in Sadashiv Vishnu v. Sakharam Raghunath (3) and I desire to say, with great respect, that I fully agree with what fell from the learned Judge in that case. There is then a further case which arises and it is one in which greater difficulty arises. It is the case in which the Judge himself who decides the case feels a reasonable doubt as to the correctness of his own decision and thinks that for that reason it is just to the parties that a further appeal should be allowed. This is the sort of case that is dealt with in the Patna case in Asarfi Mander v. Karu Mander (4) I should not desire to question that this, in a proper case, is a good ground upon which to grant a Letters Patent appeal. But it is a ground which should, in my judgment, be exercised with considerable care and in a proper case only. As the late Sir Courtney-Terrell, the Chief Justice of the Patna High Court, and the learned Judge who sat with him in the case to which I have referred, observe, "leave to appeal should not be granted too lightly."

In a great majority of cases which a single Judge is called upon to decide on second appeal, I venture to think he would hesitate to assert that he was 'certain' that the result at which he had arrived was correct. Speaking for myself. I have not sufficient confidence to say that I am certain that I necessarily decide nearly every case rightly But that does not mean that, in every case or nearly every case, a Letters Patent Appeal should be granted. In my view, in order to justify a Letters Patent Appeal it is necessary to go a good deal beyond those ordinary doubts which every modest Judge, however, capable he is, must often feel in respect of his own decisions. It is necessary that there should be some real and outstanding point of difficulty as to which the Judge feels there is every chance that another Judge or other Judges who bring to bear fresh and different minds on the question might take different view. Those are the principles which appear to me to be the right ones and which, until I am corrected by a more authoritive pronouncement as to what the proper principles are, I propose myself to apply. The present case is not, in my view, one which qualifies under any of these heads. I think I need say no more than that.

Appeal from Original Decree No. 46 of 1938

January 15, 1941

CHATTERJI, AND MEREDITH, JJ.

RAMPAL SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

MANSUKH RAI KHEMKA AND OTHERS PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art 47—"Final order in the case", meaning of—High Court's order in revision in proceedings under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—Whether Magistrate's order or High Court's order is final—Appeal and revision, distinction between, made in Criminal Procedure Code—"Final order" in col. 3, Art. 47 refers to order contemplated by col. 1—High Court's order dismissing appeal for want of jurisdiction, if final—Whether High Court's order summarily dismissing revision is final.

The Criminal P. C., makes a clear distinction between an appeal and a revision, because in the case of an appeal the party has a right to be heard but there is no such right in the case of a revision. Revision is entirely in the discretion of the Court. But where the Court does exercise its power of revision under s. 435 of the Code. the order which is ultimately passed by the High Court under s. 439 of the Code is no less effective than an order passed on appeal. Section 439 itself provides that in revision the High Court may in its discretion exercise any of the powers of an Appellate Court. If, therefore, an order passed by an Appellate Court could be regarded as the final order, there is no reason why an order passed by the High Court in exercise of its power of revision under s. 439 of the Code could not be equally regarded as the final order. Whether the High Court ultimately interferes in revision or not, its order is none the less the final order. [p. 503, col. 2; p. 504, col. 1.]

Where the Sessions Judge in exercise of his power under s. 435 makes a reference to the High Court under s 438 with the recommendation that the order of the Magistrate be set aside, the matter remains sub judice so long as it is not finally determined by the High Court. The order of the High Court passed under s. 439 will be the final order in the case. [p. 504, col. 1]

The Magistrate decided the case under s. 145, Criminal P. C. on August 4, 1932. An application was filed for revision before the Sessions Judge who made a reference to the High Court on September 29, 1932. But the High Court by its order dated November 11, 1932, discharged the reference and the suit was brought on November 13, 1935, 9th to 12th being holidays :

Held, that the order of the High Court and not the order of the Magistrate was 'final order' within the meaning of Art. 47, Lim. Act, and the period of limitation under Art. 47 must be computed from the date of the High Court's order. The suit was therefore within limitation. 43 Ind. [Case-law referred to.]

The "final order" in col. 3 of Art. 47 of the Lim. Act must be understood to refer to the order contemplated by col. 1 of the same Article. [p. 504, col. 2.]

The order of the High Court dismissing an appeal for want of jurisdiction cannot be the final order. [p. 505, col. 1.]

Quære.—Where the High Court summarily dismisses an application for revision, whether its order would be the final order within the meaning of Art. 47 of the Lim. Act. [p. 505, col. 2.]

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated December 21, 1937.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, S. N. Bose, P. Misra, K. K. Sinha and Prem Lall, for the Appellants.

Dr. D. N. Mitter, Messrs. Sundar Lal, S. Nath and R. N. Sinha, for the Respondents.

Chatterji, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants which arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of 21·92 acres or 32 bighas 1 katha 15 dhurs of bakasht lands in village Barhee Pali Tajpur Taraf Ind. These lands are said to be comprised in a patti of 1*a* 1*d* and odd share which formerly belonged to Rai Bahadur Tukanath Singh. He mortgaged the patti with some other property to the plaintiffs' predecessor Ramkishun Ram under a simple mortgage bond dated September 17, 1891, for Rs. 15,001. On the basis of this mortgage Ramkishun Ram obtained a mortgage decree on April 30, 1908. In execution of that decree he purchased the mortgaged properties on September 15, 1914, and obtained delivery of possession over the same on June 1, 1915. The sale proceeds being insufficient, he obtained a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 6 of the Civil P. C. In execution of this decree he purchased another patti of 19 dams and odd share in the same village on August 27, 1918, and took delivery of possession on July 6, 1919.

The plaintiffs' case is that since the delivery of possession taken on June 1, 1915, Ramkishun Ram and after him the plaintiffs were all along in possession of the disputed lands. But in 1932 there was a proceeding under s. 145 of the Criminal P. C. with regard to these lands between the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2. In that case the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 alleged that the disputed lands appertained to the patti of 19 dams and odd share and were given in usufructuary mortgage by Rai Bahadur Tukanath Singh to Banshi Singh, Karu Singh and Bija Singh under a deed dated September 28, 1900, for Rs. 3,151 and that they (defendants Nos. 1 and 2), having purchased one bigha out of the disputed lands from Rai Bahadur Tukanath Singh's son Jhalak Kishore Singh by an unregistered sale deed dated March 5, 1916, redeem the said usufructuary mortgage and came into possession of the entire disputed lands. The Magistrate decided the case under s. 145 in favour of the defendants on August 4, 1932 The plaintiffs filed an application for revision before the Sessions Judge of Monghyr who made a reference to the High Court on September 29, 1932. But the High Court by its order dated November 11, 1932, discharged the reference.

The present suit was brought on November 13, 1935. The plaintiffs allege that the usufructuary mortgage of Banshi, Karu and Bijya was redeemed by Rai Bahadur Tukanath himself, that the unregistered sale deed propounded by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is a fraudulent and collusive document, and that the defendants were never in possession of the disputed lands until the decision under s. 145 of the Criminal P. C.

The remaining defendants are members of a joint Mitakshara family with defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who are the managing members.

The suit was contested on the grounds, inter alia, that it was barred by limitation, that the disputed lands appertain to patti of 19 dams and odd share and not to the patti of 1*a* 1*d* and odd, and that the defendants, having purchased 1 bigha out of the disputed lands, redeemed the usufructuary mortgage of Banshi, Karu and Bija and came into possession of the entire disputed lands.

The learned Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, holding that the disputed lands appertain to the patti of 1*a*. 1*d* and odd share which was purchased by Ramkishun Ram in 1914 in execution of his mortgage decree, that the defendants' unregistered sale deed dated March 5, 1916, is not a genuine document, that the usufructuary mortgage of Banshi, Karu and Bija was redeemed not by the defendants but by Tukanath himself, that since the delivery of possession taken in 1915 Ramkishun Ram and after him the plaintiffs were all along in possession of the disputed lands till the decision in the case under s. 145 of the Criminal P. C., and that the suit was not barred by limitation.

The only point urged in this appeal by Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick on behalf of the appellants is that the suit is barred by limitation under the three years' rule prescribed by Art. 47 of the First Schedule of the Lim. Act as well as under the 12 years' rule.

Article 47 of the First Schedule of the Lim. Act (IX of 1908) is as follows:—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
By any person bound by an order respecting the possession of immovable property made under the Criminal P. C., 1898, or the Mamlatdar's Courts Act, 1906, or by any one claiming under such person, to recover the property comprised in such order.	Three years.	The date of the final order in the case.

In the present case the following are the relevant dates:—

Order of the Magistrate	...	August 4, 1932.
Order of the High Court	...	November 11, 1932.
Present suit instituted	...	November 13, 1935, (November 9 to 12, 1935, were holidays.)

Mr. Mullick's contention is that the "final order" is the order of the Magistrate and the present suit, being instituted more than three years after the date of the Magistrate's order, is manifestly out of time. On the other hand, Dr. D. N. Mitter for the respondents contends, and the Subordinate Judge has also held, that in the present case the "final order" is the order of the High Court.

The question, therefore, turns on the true meaning of "the final order in the case". Mr. Mullick relies on the decision of this Court in Lachman Singh v. Diljan Ali (1) and on the decisions of the Calcutta High Court in Jagannath Marwari v. Ondal Coal Co. Ltd. (2) and Kangali Churn Sah v. Zomurrudonnissa Khatoon (3).

Both in Lachman Singh v. Diljan Ali (1) and Jagannath Marwari v. Ondal Coal Co., Ltd. (2), it was held that the order of the Magistrate under s. 145 of the Criminal P. C., and not of the High Court is the final order and the three years under Art. 47 should be counted from the date of the Magistrate's order. But these cases were decided when the Criminal P. C. of 1898, as it stood before the amendment of 1923, was in force. In s. 435 there was then sub-s. 3 which provided that proceedings under Chap. XII (which includes s. 145) were not proceedings within the meaning of that section; in other words, order made in proceedings under Chap. XII were not subject to revision. By the Amending Act XVIII of 1923 sub-s. 3 of s. 435 was altogether omitted so that under s. 435 of the Code, as it now stands, an order made under s. 145 is subject to revision. Before the amendment of 192 the High Court had no power to interfere with an order under s. 145 except under its general power of superintendence under the Govt. of India Act. Any order passed by the High Court in exercise of its power of superintendence would not be an order made under the Criminal P. C. In fact this is the reason for the decision in Jagannath Marwari v. Ondal Coal Co., Ltd. (2), as will appear from the following passage :

"Order under s. 145, Criminal P. C., are not subject to appeal, review or revision. This is apparent from sub-s. 3 of s. 435 Criminal P. C. No doubt a rule was issued by this Court in connection with this order. But that was issued under s. 15 of the Charter Act and it could never have been contemplated by the Legislature when it drew up the provisions of Art. 47 of the Indian Lim. Act that rules issued under our powers of 'superintendence under the Charter Act', and disposed of by us should come within the meaning of the words 'final order' in the case".

In Lachman Singh v. Diljan Ali (1), which was practically based on Jagannath Marwari v. Ondal Coal Co., Ltd. (2), the learned Judges said

"The order of the Magistrate is itself a final order. It is not subject to appeal. It can only be set aside under the power of superintendence vested in a High Court if made without jurisdiction. The decision of the High Court confirming the jurisdiction of the Court passing the order cannot affect the date from which it came into force."

From both these decisions it is fairly obvious that the order of the Magistrate was taken to be the 'final order' because under the Criminal P. C., as it then stood, there was no provision conferring any power on any superior Court to interfere with the Magistrate's order.

Indeed the Criminal P. C., makes a clear distinction between an appeal and a revision, because in the case of an appeal the party has a right to be heard (s. 421 of the Code), but there is no such right in the case of a revision (s. 440 of the Code). Revision is entirely in the discretion of the Court. But where the Court does exercise its power of revision under s. 435 of the Code, the order which is ultimately passed by the High Court under s. 439 of the Code is no less effective than an order passed on appeal. Section 439 itself provides that in revision the High Court may in its discretion exercise any of the powers of an Appellate Court. If, therefore, an order passed by an Appellate Court could be regarded as the final order, there is no reason why an order passed by the High Court in exercise of its power of revision under s. 439 of the Code could not be equally regarded as the final order. Whether the High Court ultimately interferes in revision or not, its order is none the less the final order. Where, as in the present case, the Sessions Judge in exercise of his power under s. 435 makes a reference to the High Court under s. 438 with the recommendation that the order of the Magistrate be set aside, the matter remains sub judice so long as it is not finally determined by the High Court. The order of the High Court passed under s. 439 will be the final order in the case. In this view the period of limitation under Art. 47 in the present case must be computed from the date of the High Court's order.

In the case in Kangali Churn Sah v. Zomurrudonnissa Khatoon (3), the question that was actually raised before the High Court was whether Art. 47 of Sch. II of the former Lim. Act (Act XV of 1877) was applicable to immovable as well as movable property. But from the facts of that case it appears that the suit, which was brought beyond three years from the date of the Magistrate's order but within three years from the date of the order of the Sessions Judge, was held to be barred by limitation. Article 47 of the Lim. Act (XV of 1877) corresponded to Art. 47 of the present Lim. Act (IX of 1908) with this difference that the Article of the former Act had reference to "an order respecting the possession of property made under the Criminal P. C., Chap. XL", whereas the present Article refers to "an order respecting the possession of immovable property made under the Criminal P. C., 1898". Thus the former Article, though it embraced both movable and immovable property, was otherwise more limited in its scope. It must also be mentioned that the Criminal P. C., which was in force when the case in Kangali Churn Sah v. Zomurrudonnissa Khatoon (3), was decided was the Code of 1872, i. e. Act X of 1872. The sections of that Code corresponding to ss. 435, 438 and 439 of the present Code were ss. 294 to 297 in Chap. XXII. Under s. 520 of the Code of 1872 orders made under ss. 518 and 519 (corresponding to ss. 144 and 143 of the Code of 1898) were not judicial proceedings, but there was no such exception in the case of orders made under Chap. XL (now Chap. XII) of the Code; in other words, orders made under Chap. XL were subject to revision. The position, therefore, was much the same as under the present Code with the amendment of 1923. However apart from the fact that the question now before us was not raised or decided in Kangali Churn Sah v. Zomurrudonnissa Khatoon (3), that case is dissimilar to the present case in two respects. In the first place, the order passed in revision in that case was that of the Sessions Judge and not of the High Court. Under s. 296 of the Criminal P. C., of 1872 (corresponding to s. 438 of the present Code) the Sessions Judge had no power to pass any final order himself and could only report to the High Court which was to pass the final order under s. 297 of the Code of 1872 (corresponding to s. 439 of the present Code). Therefore the order of the Sessions Judge passed in that case could not be regarded as the final order. In the next place, Art. 47 of the Lim. Act of 1877 was limited to orders made under the Criminal P. C., Chap. XL only. The order passed by the Sessions Judge in exercise of his power of revision under Chap. XXII would not be an order made under Chap. XL of the Code. The "final order" in col. 3 of Art. 47 of the Lim. Act must be understood to refer to the order contemplated by col. 1 of the same Article.

Mr. Mullick contends that the expression "final order in the case" in col. 3 of Art. 47 of the Lim. Act means a final order as distinguished from an interlocutory order. No doubt s. 145 sub-s. (4) provides for an interlocutory order in case of emergency, but such interlocutory, order is not obviously contemplated by col. 1 of Art. 47 of the Lim. Act. Further, s. 522 of the Criminal P. C., which by the terms of Art. 47 of the Lim. Act falls in its purview does not provide for any interlocutory order.

Mr. Mullick refers by way of analogy to certain decisions bearing on other Articles of the Lim. Act, particularly to Oleo-Unnissa v. Buldeo Narain Singh (4) and Juscurn Boid v. Prithichand Lal Choudhury (5).

The case in Oleo-Unnissa v. Buldeo Narain Singh (4), had reference to the Lim. Act (XIV of 1859) s. 1, cl. 5, which provided that the period of limitation applicable "to suits to alter or set aside summary decisions and orders of any of the Civil Courts not established by Royal Charter, when such suit is maintainable" was "one year from the date of the final decision, award or order in the case". It was held that "the final decision, award, or order in the case intended by the fifth clause of s. 1 is the final decision of the Court which has competant jurisdiction to determine the case finally. Consequently, the order of the Principal Sudder Ameen, against which no appeal would lie to this Court, was the final order in the case, and therefore the period of limitation dates from the time when that order was passed, and not from the time when the High Court passed an order declaring that an appeal would not lie from that order of the Principal Sudder Ameen."

It is obvious that the order of the High Court dismissing an appeal for want of jurisdiction could not be the final order.

The case in Juscurn Boid v. Prithichand Lal Chowdhury (5), was decided with reference to Art. 97 of the First Schedule of the Lim. Act. The suit was brought by an auction-purchaser of a patni taluk for recovery of his purchase money after the patni sale was set aside by suit brought under s. 14 of the Patni Regulation. The trial Court had decreed the suit, reversing the sale, and its decree was confirmed on appeal. The question arose whether limitation under Art. 97 should run from the date of the trial Court's decree or from that of the appellate decree. Article 97 prescribes that the period of limitation for a suit "for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails" is three years from "the date of the failure". Their Lordships held that "the failure of consideration was at the date of the first Court's decree". This decision bears no analogy to the present case. Mr. Mullick, however, relies on the following observation of their Lordships:

"Under the Indian Law and procedure an original decree is not suspended by presentation of an appeal nor is its operation interrupted where the decree on appeal is one of dismissal."

This is undoubtedly true, but it is of no assistance in construing the particular Article of the Lim. Act with which we are here concerned.

Dr. D. N. Mitter, on the other hand, relies on the decision of the Privy Council in Nagendranath De v. Suresh Chandra De (6), and the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in P. P. P. Chidambara Nadar v. C. P. A. Rama Nadar (7). In the Privy Council case what was actually decided was that an appeal "is no less an appeal because it is irregular or incompetent" and such an appeal would extend limitation under Art. 182 cl. (2) of the Lim. Act. In Madras case it was held that the term "appeal" in Art. 182 cl. (2) of the Lim. Act is not used in a restrictive sense so as to exclude revision petitions and the expression "the Appellate Court" in the said Article is not confined to a Court exercising appellate power as opposed to revisional powers. These cases are, therefore, not in point.

In my judgment the suit is not barred by Art. 47 of the Lim. Act. I should, however, like to make it clear that where the High Court summarily dismisses an application for revision, whether its order would be the final order within the meaning of Art. 47 of the Lim. Act, is a question upon which I express no opinion.

I shall now consider the 12 years' rule of limitation. The plaintiffs' case is that the disputed lands appertain to the patti of 1*a*. 1*d* and odd share which was purchased by Ramkishun Ram on September 15, 1914, and of which he took delivery of possession on June 1, 1915. Admittedly the disputed lands were given in usufructuary mortgage to Banshi Singh, Karu Singh and Bija Singh under the deed of Ex. F (1) dated September 28, 1900. These mortgagees were recorded to be in possession of the lands in the khatian Ex. 13 (d) finally published in July 1910. The khatian Ex. 13 (d), taken along with the corresponding khewat Ex. 14 (a), shows that the disputed lands appertain to the patti of 1*a*. 1*d* share. In the mortgage bond Ex. F (1), however, the lands were described as appertaining to the patti of 19 dams and odd share. The plaintiffs suggest that this was fraudulently done by Rai Bahadur Tukanath Singh with an ulterior motive. Apart from the record of rights, the defendants' own unregistered sale-deed Ex. K, dated March 5, 1916, shows that the one bigha out of the disputed lands which is said to have been purchased thereunder appertains to the patti of 1*a*. 1*d* share. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the disputed lands really appertain to the patti of 1*a*. 1*d* share, and though Mr. Mullick attempted to show that this finding is wrong, he argued the question of limitation on the assumption that it is correct.

It is common ground that the usufructuary mortgage of Banshi, Karu and Bija was redeemed. The plaintiffs' case is that the redemption was by Tukanath himself. The defendants, on the other hand, assert that in 1916 shortly after the purchase of the one bigha under the unregistered sale-deed Ex. K they redeemed the mortgage on payment of Rs 3,151. The Subordinate Judge's finding that the sale-deed Ex. K is not a genuine document has not been challenged before us. That being so, it is impossible to believe that the defendants without having any title should redeem the mortgage on payment of Rs. 3,151. No doubt the mortgage bond was produced by them with endorsements showing payment through Kashi Singh, defendant No. 2. Curiously enough the endorsements are not dated. The disputed lands as appertaining to the patti of 1*a*. 1*d* share had already passed under the auction purchase of 1914 to Ramkishun Ram. It is, therefore, absurd to suppose that after 1914 Tukanath's son (Tukanath having died in 1912) or anybody claiming through him would redeem the mortgage. The plaintiffs have adduced evidence to show that about 1911 Tukanath himself redeemed the mortgage. P. W's. Nos. 5, 7 and 12 have deposed on the point. The evidence of P. W. No. 5 may not be convincing or reliable because he says the Bharna bond was redeemed 4 years before survey, and he is a servant of one Badri Narayan Singh with whom the defendants are, according to his own evidence, on terms of litigation. There is no sufficient reason, however, to discard the evidence of P. W. No. 7 and P. W. No. 12. P. W. No. 7 is grandson of Karu Singh, one of the mortgagees. The only comment on his evidence is that he admits that all his lands have been sold. P. W. No. 12 is sought to be discredited on the simple ground that he is the raiyat of the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge has believed the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs and it is very difficult to hold that his view of the evidence is wrong.

Mr. Mullick strenuously argues that it is incredible that Tukanath would redeem the mortgage when Ramkishun Ram's decree on the prior mortgage was being executed. He refers to the suit register Ex. 23 which shows that during Tukanath's life time Ramkishun Ram took out execution of his mortgage decree in 1908 and 1909 and again in 1910. But from that very register it appears that in 1909 Tukanath paid at first Rs. 550 and again Rs. 2,800, total Rs. 3,350. It is, therefore, evident that Tukanath was making payments towards the decree. It may be that Tukanath thought he could retain the lands as part of his 19 dams patti as asserted by him in the mortgage bond Ex. F (1). Be that as it may, the fact remains that the mortgage was undoubtedly redeemed. The question is, when and by whom? Redemption after 1914, that is to say, after the auction purchase by Ramkishun Ram was absurd. Redemption by defendants is definitely disproved. Redemption after Tukanath's death by his son Jhalak Kishore between 1912 and 1914 is quite unlikely. Under these circumstances, I do not think that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in accepting the plaintiffs' case that it was Tukanath himself who redeemed the mortgage.

Mr. Mullick lays much stress on the fact that the satisfied mortgage bond was produced by the defendants. But Rampal Singh, defendant No. 1, was, as the evidence shows, the karpardaz of Rai Bahadur Tukanath Singh, and Kashi Singh defendant No. 2, is brother of Rampal Singh. Kashi Singh is said to have made the payments to the mortgagees and his name appears in the endorsements on the back of the bond. But neither he nor Rampal has been examined. No importance, therefore, can be attached to the fact that the bond was produced by the defendants. The plaintiffs' evidence is that there was no endorsement on the back of the bond which was simply returned to Tukanath. It is said that at the time of return of the bond either its head must have been torn or there must have been an endorsement of satisfaction. But, on the other hand, endorsement without any date is very suspicious. Bija Singh, D. W. No. 8, one of the mortgagees, proves one of the endorsements Ex. J (1) to be in his handwriting. But in his cross-examination when the endorsements were shown to him he said "They do not contain my signature. My sight is defective". This throws a great doubt on the genuineness of the endorsements.

Tukanath having redeemed the usufructuary mortgage, the disputed lands were in the possession of his son Jhalak Kishore Singh at the time of the auction purchase of Ramkishun Ram. The order No. 12, dated September 15, 1914, in the order sheet Ex. 2 in the execution case shows that the 1*a*. 1*d patti* which was lot No. 1 was valued at Rs. 14,000 on the basis of the annual income which was ascertained to be Rs. 700 the bulk of which was derived from 60 bighas of khudkasht land. These 60 bighas of khudkasht land which were most valuable apparently included the disputed 32 bighas and odd. The khatian Ex. 13 (d) shows that the total area of bakasht lands in khata No. 188 was 37.84 acres which would be equivalent to more than 55 bighas. Ramkishun Ram, having purchased the 1*a* 1*d patti* of Rs 14,000, was not likely to remain idle if he did not get actual possession of the 60 bighas which formed the most valuable part of the patti he purchased. It is not suggested that the plaintiffs are in possession of some other lands making up 60 bighas as part of 1*a* 1*d patti*.

The plaintiffs examined several witnesses to prove their possession over the disputed lands. Though the learned Subordinate Judge has not discussed their evidence in detail, he has believed their evidence and come to the finding that the plaintiffs were in possession of the disputed lands till the decision in the case under s. 145 of the Criminal P. C. The evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs is consistent with the probabilities. In the circumstances, it is difficult to hold that the finding of the Subordinate Judge, is not correct.

Mr. Mullick argues that this being a suit in ejectment, the plaintiffs must adduce satisfactory evidence to prove their possession within 12 years. He complains that what the Subordinate Judge has done is that he has discussed the evidence of the defendants and having disbelieved their evidence, he has held that the plaintiffs were in possession within 12 years. Of course, his judgment is open to the criticism that he has not discussed the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses on the question of possession. But taking his judgment as a whole, and considering the evidence and the probabilities, I am unable to hold that his finding is wrong.

The contentions of the appellants fail and I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

First Appeal No. 18 of 1940

July 4, 1940

DUNKLEY AND BLAGDEN, JJ.

MA KYIN SEIN AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

MAUNG KYIN HTAIK—RESPONDENT

Burmese Buddhist Law — Adoption — Monk, if can adopt—Adoptive parent's unilateral act, if can terminate adoption — Succession — Adoptive parents indicating by acts, desire to sever relation with their keittima child—Keittima child acquiescing in parents desire by living separately — He forfeits right to inheritance — Adoptive parent, if can give adoptive child in adoption to another — Adopted child minor— Consent of person on his behalf, if necessary— Precedent—Parties consenting not to canvass particular legal question—Decision in suit, if binding on inferior Courts as to answer to that question.

A Buddhist monk is vowed to a life of celibacy and poverty, and has cut himself off from all worldly ties. By reason of his vows he cannot have natural children and he can own no property. The notion that a person, bound by such vows, can adopt a child to take the place of natural children and inherit his non-existent estate is preposterous. Clearly a person who is precluded by his personal law from having natural children cannot adopt. 120 Ind. Cas. 663 (1), relied on. [p. 509, col. 1.]

The relationship between an adoptive parent and his adopted child cannot be terminated by the unilateral act (disclaimer) of the parent An adoptive parent has no power to disinherit his adopted child (except perhaps by giving him away in adoption), any more than a natural parent has such power in respect of his natural and lawful children. 55 Ind. Cas. 258 (2), relied on [p. 509, cols. 1 & 2.]

If the adoptive parents show by their acts that they desire to sever the relationship with their keittima child, and if the conduct of the child shows that he acquiesces in their wishes, as expressed by their acts, by living separately from them and not attempting to discharge filial duties, and by not asserting his rights as keittima child, even when it is in his own interests to do so, the presumption arises that he intends to break off the tie with his adoptive parents, and under such circumstances he forfeits his rights of inheritance. [p. 509, col. 2; p. 510, col. 1.]

Obiter.—An adoptive parent has the same right as a natural parent in regard to giving his adopted child in adoption to another. The adoptive parents step into the shoes of the natural parents, and as natural parents can give away their child in adoption, adoptive parents also may give away their keittima child in adoption to another person who takes the child with the intention that the child shall inherit to him and if the child is a minor no consent of any person on behalf of the child would be necessary to the validity of such a second adoption. And, just as the adoption from the natural parents has the effect of severing all the ties of the child with its natural family so such a second adoption would have the effect of bringing to an end the relationship between the child and his original adoptive parents. [p. 508, col. 2]

Where by consent, parties to a suit do not canvass a particular legal question, the decision in that suit cannot be an authority binding on an inferior Court as to what the answer to that question is. [p. 515, col. 1.]

F. A. against the decree of the District Court, Pyapon, dated December 29, 1939.

Mr. U E Maung (1), for the Appellants.
Mr. U Aye Maung (2), for the Respondent.

Dunkley, J—The suit out of which this appeal arises was a suit by the plaintiff-respondent for the administration of the estate of U Maung Maung, deceased, who died in the year 1933. The plaintiff-respondent set up that he is the keittima adopted son of U Maung Maung and his first wife, Ma Kyin Si, who died in or about the year 1907. This respondent alleges that he was adopted with a view to inherit by U Maung Maung and Ma Kyin Si when he was a few months old, and that Ma Kyin Si died when he was a little over one year old. U Maung Maung and Ma Kyin Si had a number of children born to them, but the only one who survived infancy was Ma An, (P. W. No. 3), who is the respondent's strongest supporter in his present claim. In or about the year 1909, U Maung Maung married as his second wife one Ma Khin, who died in 1938. The defendant-appellants are the surviving children of U Maung Maung and Ma Khin. Assuming that the respondent's claim to be still the keittima son of U Maung Maung is true, he might have claimed his share of his adoptive father's estate on the latter's re-marriage, and again on U Maung Maung's death, and it is extremely significant that he waited until after Ma Khin's death before putting forward his claim, and, although he had erroneously stated in para. 17 of his plaint that his cause of action arose on Ma Khin's death, in the prayer he has asked for the administration of the estate of U Maung Maung. This delay in making his claim is rendered even more important by the facts that on November 22, 1920 (Ex. 5), Ma An was given Rs. 20,000 by U Maung Maung, as her share of the joint property of her mother and U Maung Maung due to her on U Maung Maung's remarriage and that on January 23, 1935, (Ex. 6) she was given by Ma Khin a piece of land in full satisfaction of all claims which she might have in the estate of U Maung Maung then deceased. On neither of these occasions when his (alleged) adoptive sister claimed and obtained a share of her father's estate did the respondent make any claim.

The appellants, in their defence, denied the adoption of the respondent and in the alternative pleaded that the relationship between U Maung Maung and the respondent, if it ever existed, was brought to an end on June 25, 1910. i. e., when the respondent was only three or four years of age by U Maung Maung giving away the respondent in keittima adoption to a monk named U Zawana, (P. W. No. 2). The finding of the learned District Judge that the respondent was in or about the year 1906 adopted in the keittima form by U Maung Maung and Ma Kyin Si has not been strenuously contested before us. It could not very well be in view of the evidence of U An Za (P. W. No. 1), U Zawana (P. W. No. 2), and Ma An (P. W. No. 3), as to the actual adoption and the admission made by U Maung Maung in the presence of a number of prominent residents of Pyapon who have signed the document as witnesses in the deed of adoption (Ex. 8), dated February 22, 1921 in which he acknowledged that the respondent was the keittima son of himself and Ma Kyin Si. It is conceded by both sides that an adoptive parent has the same right as a natural parent in regard to giving his adopted child in adoption to another and I think that this proposition is probably correct, although I have not been able to find any authority for it. The adoptive parents step into the shoes of the natural parents, and it seems probable that as natural parents can give away their child in adoption, adoptive parents also may give away their keittima child in adoption to another person who takes the child with the intention that the child shall inherit to him and if the child is a minor no consent of any person on behalf of the child would be necessary to the validity of such a second adoption. And, just as the adoption from the natural parents has the effect of severing all the ties of the child with its natural family so such a second adoption would have the effect of bringing to an end the relationship between the child and his original adoptive parents. But it is unnecessary for us to come to a decision on this question for the purported second adoption of the respondent was invalid on another ground.

Now it is clear from the evidence that soon after his second marriage U Maung Maung desired to sever his relationship with the respondent and purported to do so by giving away the respondent in keittima adoption to the monk U Zawana on June 25, 1910. This purported adoption was evidenced by the document Ex. 8 executed more than ten years later on February 22, 1921. U Zawana who is now 83 years of age and whose mental powers are obviously failing tried to pretend in his evidence that he did not intend to take the respondent in adoption, but he is naturally highly interested to deny that there was a monetary consideration for his execution of this document and I agree with the learned District Judge that the evidence of U Tha Kin, (D. W. No. 1), an Advocate of this Court who signed the document as a witness, is to be preferred as to the circumstances under which U Zawana and U Maung Maung executed it. It was confirmation in writing of an adoption which had taken place more than ten years previously and it shows that U Maung Maung severed his connection with the respondent when the latter was about four years old and remained of the same mind until his death. If a second adoption is possible that would end the case in favour of the appellants provided that the adoption of the respondent by U Zawana were a valid adoption; but, in my opinion, it was invalid for the reason that a Buddhist monk cannot validily adopt. It is perhaps not surprising that there is no reported decision on this point as it must be a very rare occurrence for a pongyi to desire to adopt a child, but in an unreported case, Ma On Kyi v. Ma Thaung May (1) a Bench of this Court held that a pongyi, being bound by the Vinaya, cannot adopt. With the greatest respect, this must be so. A Buddhist monk is vowed to a life of celibacy and poverty, and has cut himself off from all worldly ties. By reason of his vows he cannot have natural children and he can own no property. The notion that a person, bound by such vows, can adopt a child to take the place of natural children and inherit his non-existent estate is preposterous. Clearly a person who is preculded by his personal law from having natural children cannot adopt.

However, U E Maung for the appellant concedes that the relationship between an adoptive parent and his adopted child cannot be terminated by the unilateral act of the parent. An adoptive parent has no power to disinherit his adopted child (except perhaps by giving him away in adoption), any more than a natural parent has such power in respect of his natural and lawful children: San Paw v. Ma Yin (2). But U E Maung contends that the action relationship can be severed by the act or acts of the adoptive parent in which the adopted child, having reached the age of discretion, has by his conduct acquiesced. That a keittima child may forfeit his right of inheritance by his conduct is unquestioned. According to the Dhammathats he forfeited his right of inheritance by living separately from his adoptive parents (Manukye, Book X, ss. 25 and 26), but the strictness of this rule has been modified by judicial decision; see Nga Min Gyaw v. Me Pi (3), Maung Po Sein v. Maung In Dun (4), Maung Aing v. Ma Kin (5), Ma Gyan v. Maung Kywin (6), Maung Shew Thwe v. Ma Saing (7). This question was considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1917 in the case in Maung Thwe v. Maung Tun Pe (8). In the course of their judgment their Lordships observed at p. 255*:

"A keittima child may, according to the authorities, forfeit his right of inheritance by separating from his adoptive parents. These authorities however draw a distinction between the cases where there are other children with whom the keittima seeks to compete and share and cases where he has no such competitor, and in the latter instance allow him to inherit in whole or in part notwithstanding his separation. This points to the true principle upon which the rule of forfeiture rests. It is a matter of intention. If the keittima child goes to live separately from his adoptive parents, it may be that he has shaken off the tie, that he has provided for himself, has discontinued the further performance of duty towards his adoptive parents, and has given up with his duty his claims upon their estate; and it is more easy to presume this when the parents have other children who can perform the duties and receive the estate. The fact that the child goes to live apart is some evidence of an intention to break the bond. The distance may be so great as to render it impracticable for the child to continue to discharge his duties to his adoptive parents, and in that case it probably works a forfeiture. But if the distance be not great, if the separation of residence be with the consent of the adoptive parents, and if the child is ready and willing to discharge filial duties after this separation, the bond is not broken."

Hence, it is clear that if the adoptive parents show by their acts that they desire to sever the relationship with their keittima child, and if the conduct of the child shows that he acquiesces in their wishes, as expressed by their acts, by living separately from them and not attempting to discharge filial duties, and by not asserting his rights as keittima child, even when it is in his own interests to do so, the presumption arises that he intends to break off the tie with his adoptive parents, and under such circumstances he forfeits his rights of inheritance.

When the respondent was adopted U Maung Maung and Ma Kyin Si were living at Eyagyi village, which is about two miles from Naukpyando village, where the pongyi U Zawana lives. Ma Kyin Si's mother, Daw Soon, also lived at Naukpyando. After his second marriage U Maung Maung moved to Pyapon, where he lived up to the time of his death. Naukpyando is about one hour's journey by boat from Pyapon. The respondent has stated in his evidence that after the death of Ma Kyin Si he lived with U Maung Maung and his second wife Ma Khin at Pyapon until he was eight years old, and then he was sent to U Zawana's monastery at Naukpyando, where he lived until he was 18 years old, first as a scholar and later as a novice; that after he left the monastery he lived with Daw Soon at Naukpyando until she died in 1928; that he was married at that time and he and his wife were living with Ma Soon; that he continued to live at Naukpyando until 1938, when he moved to Pyapon; that his occupation since he left the monastery has been and still is that of a carpenter. The respondent cannot have any real recollection of his early life with U Maung Maung, and on this point I prefer the evidence of Ma An, who is 11 years older than the respondent. She is strongly prejudiced in favour of the respondent: she has admitted that in her evidence. She has stated that after the death of Ma Kyin Si she and the respondent were taken by Daw Soon to live with her. They lived with Daw Soon for about a year, and then U Maung Maung took them both to live with him and his second wife at Pyapon. A year later, that is, when the respondent was between 3 and 4 years old, the respondent was sent to U Zawana's monastery at Nyaukpyando. The statement of Ma An on this point corresponds with the date mentioned in the document Ex. 8 as the date on which the original purported adoption of the respondent by U Zawana took place.

Consequently it is clear that from about the time when the respondent was 3 or 4 years old U Maung Maung considered that he had put an end to all the ties between himself and the respondent, and never subsequently looked upon the respondent as his son. He did not maintain the boy, he did not "shinbyu" him. Daw Soon fed him and performed the "shinbyu" ceremony. U Zawana has stated that U Maung Maung on his visits to the monastery used to give some sweetmeats to the respondent, but it is clear that U Maung Maung and his family respected U Zawana, and that U Maung Maung's visits to the monastery were for the purpose of seeing U Zawana, and not to see the respondent, and it is very slight evidence of any relationship between them that a wealthy Burmese gentleman should give cakes or pocket money to a school-boy on his visits to the monastery. U Maung Maung's treatment of Ma An was in marked contrast. She continued to live with U Maung Maung and Ma Khin until she was 21 years old when she married and set up a separate establishment with her husband.

The respondent did not attempt to perform filial duties towards U Maung Maung. He has stated in evidence that he used to pay visits to U Maung Maung at Pyapon, but he admits that he never slept in U Maung Maung's house and that the number of such visits was only ten in twenty years. U An Za and U Zawana have both stated that the respondent used to visit U Maung Maung, but they are very old and their memories are not good, and as they live at Naukpyando I cannot understand how they could know personally whether the respondent used to visit U Maung Maung or not. On the other hand, the appellants have called a number of the leading citizens of Pyapon as witnesses, some of these witnesses having been close neighbours of U Maung Maung, and they have stated that they had never heard of the existence of an adopted son of U Maung Maung and had never seen the respondent in U Maung Maung's house. They are persons who would have been likely to have known if the respondent had visited U Maung Maung at all frequently. Further Ma An who is the strongest witness for the respondent, has stated that whenever the respondent visited Pyapon he used to stay in her house, and as far as she is aware he never went to her father's house.

It has been urged upon us that these facts do not show any intention on the part of the respondent to sever the tie of adoption, because he had been repudiated by U Maung Maung and was therefore prevented from discharging his filial duties, which he was always ready and willing to discharge; but there are other facts which in my opinion, show conclusively that the respondent, after he had come of age, acquiesced in U Maung Maung's severance of the relationship between them, and did not consider himself to be the keittima son of U Maung Maung. U Maung Maung was a Sino-Burman. According to the custom of persons of this class, he was buried with Chinese ceremonies, and in these ceremonies the son of the deceased takes a very prominent part. Also all the near relatives of the deceased wear black clothes for a considerable time after his death. U Maung Maung died in 1933, when the respondent was 27 years of age. I am prepared to accept the evidence that the respondent attended the funeral, although his presence was so inconspicuous that U An Za did not notice him. He attended on two days as a follower of U Zawana, and did not stay at the funeral house. He was merely an ordinary guest at the funeral. He did not wear mourning clothes although the appellants and their mother Ma Khin and Ma An did so. He took no part whatever in the funeral ceremonies. Clearly therefore he did not consider himself to be a son of U Maung Maung. In November 1920, Ma An was given Rs. 20,000 by U Maung Maung as her share of the joint estate of U Maung Maung and Ma Kyin Si. The respondent admits that he knew about this transaction. He was 14 years old at the time, and he had U Zawana and Ma Soon to advise him. Yet he made no claim for himself. In January 1935, after the death of U Maung Maung, Ma An made further claim against her father's estate and was given a piece of land, valued at Rs. 1,500, by Ma Khin. The respondent admits that he knew about this transaction at the time. He was 29 years old at that time, but he made no claim for himself. Baw Soon died in 1928, and at the time of her death she owned a holding of paddy land a house and garden. Ma An applied to the revenue authorities to have these properties assessed to revenue in her name on the ground that she was the sole heir of Daw Soon. The respondent objected, alleging that he was a joint heir with Ma An. U Maung Maung was examined by a revenue officer, and stated that the respondent was not his adopted son, and consequently Ma An's application was successful. The respondent did not proceed further with his objection, and did not prosecute his claim before the Civil Courts. Ma An's statement in evidence in regard to this matter is extremely illuminating. She said :

"At the time of his filing the objection he and I were temporarily on bad terms with each other. We are now on speaking terms with each other. We have been so far about seven years (i. e. since 1932). About seven years ago he expressed his regret to me for having filed the objection and said that he had made a mistake."

Yet she is now strenuously supporting the respondent's claim, because she has, as she admits, quarrelled with the appellants. A sister of U Maung Maung, named Daw Gyi, died in 1938, and according to Chinese Customary Law (which at that time was held to be applicable to Sino-Burmans) her nephews were he heirs. One nephew brought a suit in the Township Court of Pyapon for the administration of her estate, and he joined her other nephews as defendants in the suit. If the respondent were the keittima son of U Maung Maung, he was also a nephew of the deceased and entitled to share equally with the other nephews in the estate. Yet he was not made a party to the suit, and although the respondent admits that he knew that Daw Gyi's nephews had inherited her estate he has never claimed a share therein.

All these facts raise the irresistible inference that the respondent acquiesced in and agreed to the act of U Maung Maung in severing the tie of adoption and repudiating the respondent as his son, and for many years before U Maung Maung's death did not consider himself to be U Maung Maung's adopted son. Hence the presumption arises that the respondent had intentionally severed the relationship with his adoptive father, and had thereby forfeited his right of inheritance. This appeal must therefore be allowed, the judgment and decree of the District Court of Pyapon set aside, and the suit of the plaintiff-respondent dismissed with costs in both Courts, Advocate's fee to be calculated ad valorem on the amount of the claim, viz, Rs. 35,325. As the plaintiff-respondent was permitted to sue in forma pauperis, it is now ordered that he shall pay the court-fees on his plaint which he would have had to pay if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper, and the District Court of Pyapon is directed to send a copy of the decree in this appeal to the Collector of the Pyapon District.

Blagden, J.—This appeal raises interesting questions of mixed law and fact. The plaintiff claims to administer the estate of U Maung Maung, deceased, as the keittima child of U Maung Maung and his first wife Ma Kyin Si. His adoption was in controversy in the Court below. The plaintiff adduced evidence to show that he was received into U Maung Maung's household as an infant of about six months; that a meal was given to pongyis to celebrate his adoption on the occasion of his first bath; and that an inscription on the tombstone of Ma Kyin Si referred to him as her son. Our attention was not called to any evidence that the person who caused this inscription to be made was dead, but I see that U Zawana (P. W. No. 2) was able to testify to this and thereby make the inscription evidence under s. 32 (6), Evi. Act. On the other hand a witness was adduced by the defendants who deposed to a conversation with U Maung Maung in 1908 in which he referred to the then infant plaintiff as being in his house, so to speak, "on approval" and expressed doubts as to how long he (the deceased) could tolerate his presence. This, if true, was quite inconsistent with keittima adoption at the date of the conversation. But the witness was dealing with an event more than thirty years old. Whatever the truth about this conversation (it may for example well be that the words were uttered in jest but, as so often happens with jests, were not so understood) a subsequent event, namely the execution of the document called Ex. 8, makes it clear beyond reasonable doubt that at some time in or about 1907 the plaintiff was adopted as the keittima child of U Maung Maung. U E Maung, who appeared for the appellants, did not very strongly contend to the contrary, and therein he showed his usual wise discretion. The area of the dispute before us has also been greatly narrowed as learned Counsel on both sides agree that if at the date of the death of U Maung Maung the plaintiff was still his keittima son, the plaintiff is in the events that have happened entitled to three-eighths (or one-half of three quarters) of the payin property and 1/16th (or one-half of one-eighth) of the lettetpwa property of U Maung Maung, the other halves being represented by the share of which Ma Ant (his surviving daughter by his first marriage) elected to take possession on the death in 1933 of U Maung Maung in lieu of waiting for that of Ma Khin, his second wife.

Given that the plaintiff was adopted by U Maung Maung, the question remains whether the relationship of father and son by adoption survived till 1933. During the life of Ma Kyin Si, the deceased had his home at Eyagyi. Ma Kyin Si died shortly after the plaintiff's adoption and the two children, Ma Ant and the plaintiff, were apparently left for about a year in the care of her mother Daw Soon at Naukpyandoe. Then the deceased married Ma Khin and at or about the same time went to live at Pyapon, distant according to Ma Ant (P. W. No. 3) about one hour's journey by boat from Naukpyandoe. But a year or more later the two children ceased to be treated alike. When according to the plaintiff) he was about five, or (according to his own witness Ma Ant) when he was three, he was sent back to live with his adoptive maternal grandmother Daw Soon. From the day forward he saw very little of the deceased or the deceased of him From then till he was about 22 he continuously resided either in the house of Daw Soon or at a kyaung (also at Naukpyandoe) presided over by U Zawana (P. W. No. 2), where at first he daily attended as a kyaungtha, eating and sleeping at Daw Soon's house and where he later, until he was about 18, resided as a koyin, Daw soon supplying his food. A shinbyu ceremony was performed for him not by U Maung Maung but by Daw Soon, although at about the same time a similar ceremony was performed for a number of other youths by U Maung Maung. During these years almost his only intercourse with U Maung Maung took place when, not more often than monthly, (the plaintiff himself says only about once a year) U Maung Maung visited the kyaung when he used apparently to give the boy pocket money and minor comestibles. With the greatest respect to my learned brother's views, I should have thought that this by itself was rather strong evidence of intention to continue adoptive paternity, though I agree it is quite insufficient to outweigh the other available evidence about this matter.

On February 22, 1921 there came into existence the most important document in this case, Ex. 8. It recites first the keittima adoption of the plaintiff by U Maung Maung and Ma Myin, then an outright verbal gift of the plaintiff by way of keittima adoption to U Zawana 10 years before. It then confirms the latter gift and concludes with what is in effect a covenant for quiet enjoyment in favour of U Zawana. Whatever the legal effect of this document, it certainly does make it quite clear that the original adoption relied on by the plaintiff in fact took place. On the other hand, if the plaintiff had been given in adoption to U Zawana (if in law that were possible) there is an end of the plaintiff's case since one cannot have more than one father at any one time. We have to consider whether, either in 1911, or at all events as from February 22, 1921, U Zawana in fact purported to adopt the plaintiff as his keittima child, and if so could he in law do so effectually? As against him the recital is strong though not irrebuttable evidence that he at all events purported to adopt the plaintiff and I think it some evidence against the plaintiff though by reason only of s. 32 (5), Evi Act, and in all the circumstances I do not myself think it very strong evidence as the plaintiff was no party to the instrument. U Zawana strenuously denied that he ever adopted the plaintiff. He is not the first, or likely to be the last, person (even amongst those habitually dealing with worldly affairs) who has signed a document with a false recital, and as the learned District Judge seems to have been clearly of opinion that there was never even a purported adoption by him I should not myself have been prepared to come to a different conclusion on the facts.

As however my learned brother takes a different view about this I may be—indeed probably am—wrong. Even if I am, Ma On Kyi v. Ma Thaung May (1) (unreported) is an authority binding on us to show that anyhow a pongyi is in law incapable of making a valid adoption. It would certainly be paradoxical, if a person legally incapable of procreating children or possessing property could do by a legal fiction what he could not do through the usual channels and acquire children to inherit, but to inherit (presumably) nothing. The question whether there was a valid adoption by U Zawana being thus answered one way or another in the negative, it follows that if the plaintiff had been the natural son of U Maung Maung nothing that happened down to the latter's death would have terminated that relationship or, to be more accurate, its legal consequences. In the case of natural parenthood those legal consequences cease (1) on the adoption of the child, (2) on divorce of the parents as between the child and that, if either, parent with whom filial relations are not maintained, and (3) on the child's becoming a "dogson" That the legal consequences of adoptive parenthood also cease on the happening of any of these three events is not in dispute. But none of them here happened. U E Maung contends that adoptive, unlike natural, parenthood can be terminated by mutual consent, and that such consent can be evinced by conduct and need not be expressed. Certainly there seems to be nothing unreasonable in a purely artificial relationship being terminable by purely artificial means.

On the facts, there can be no doubt at all that at latest on February 22, 1921 U Maung Maung intended, so far as in him lay, irrevocably and completely to put an end to the artificial tie which once or then bound him to the plaintiff. He gave expression to that intention by an instrument which on the face of it recorded an adoption. This, as I have said, is not in my opinion shown to have in fact occurred and in law could not have done so; nonetheless he gave emphatic expression to his desire, and the instrument though ineffective as an assignment may still, as U E Maung contends, be effective as a disclaimer. U E Maung, rightly in my opinion, conceded that a disclaimer alone is not enough: parents, adoptive or natural, cannot in law get rid of their obligations to their children by a mere unilateral act; children are not chattels which can be abandoned at the owner's whim: see as to this San Paw v. Ma Yin. (2). U E Maung, therefore, further contends that the plaintiff's conduct, though it never approached that active impiety which would render him a dogson plainly indicates that he assented to the termination of his relationship with U Maung Maung.

It is unnecessary to consider what he did or did not do as a young child: I do not think that can affect the question. But looking only at what took place from February 1921 onwards, I think his conduct taken as a whole was quite inconsistent with his still regarding U Maung Maung as his father. He seems to have behaved towards him with increasing casualness culminating in complete neglect. It may well be that if he had sought greater intimacy he would have been rebuffed, but if he wanted to keep alive his relationship with U Maung Maung I think that at least he should have tendered performance of those obligations which that relationship imposed on him.

That which happened when he ceased to be a koyin is particularly important. He was, it seems, about 18 years of age. I ask myself where a youth of that age leaving an educational or similar establishment would naturally go, and the answer is "home—possibly not at once but fairly soon." Where did the plaintiff go? Admittedly to the house of Daw Soon; and he did not go there merely for such a farewell visit as any young man might well pay to an old lady for whose kindness in the past he had every reason to be grateful, but he stayed there for about four years. Taking his evidence as to his relations during this time with U Maung Maung at the highest, he paid to the latter such visits as a young man or boy might be prompted by great affection (or great expectations to pay to a relative more remote than a parent, but his whole procedure during this period was inconsistent with his regarding U Maung Maung's house as his home. True, there is no direct evidence that U Maung Maung's wish to sever parental and filial relations with him was ever brought to his knowledge. But the circumstantial evidence that neither regarded the other as father or as son during this period is overwhelming. It may also be true that had he returned, his relations with the defendants (his adoptive step-sisters) would have been intolerable. But, if so I do not see why he should be allowed to have it both ways so as to refuse to share the paternal home because he disliked his adoptive father's real daughters and at the same time to claim his share of their natural inheritance in opposition to them. If, therefore, a keittima adoption can in law be terminated in the manner suggested, this adoption was in my opinion so termited. We must consider if it can be.

A passage in the Laws of Manco, Vol. VI, p. 171, and a dhamma quoted in s. 201 of Vol. I of U Gaung's Digest show that from very early times adoption differed in law from procreation, being subject to possible restraints from which procreation was free. Still more significant is the passage in Vol. VIII of the Laws of Manoo, pp. 234-6 as showing that subject to certain conditions some adoptions were voidable at the instance of the natural parents. Though the tendency of modern decisions is to identify keittima with natural children, it is, I think, true that in those decisions the Court has been considering not how a keittima adoption can be terminated but what a keittima adoption involves, assuming it to be subsisting at the material time.

Nga Min Gyaw v. Me Pi (3) and Maung Po Sain v. Maung In Dun (4), though not binding on us and of dubious authority in view of Ko Pe Kyai v. Ma Thein Kha (9) which I shall mention later, at all events indicate that by living apart from his adoptive parents (even after his own marriage) a keittima child may (not must) lose his rights of inheritance, and they are based on explicit passages in the Dhammathats there cited, which, read literally, go even further than the decisions themselves. For example:

> "If the adopted child be not living with the parents, and their own children are, he shall have no right to share; Manu Dhammathat, Vol. X, para. 25."

> "If the child, being a notoriously adopted child, shall not live with the parents who adopted him but.... shall marry and live separately, he shall have no share in the property of the parents who adopted him: Ibid, para. 26."

It is true that these requirements must receive a reasonable construction regard being had to the changed conditions of modern times Ma Gyan v. Maung Kywin (6) and indeed it may be said that in view of Maung Aing v. Ma Kin (5) they are no longer part of our law at all. But they are relevant to the present problem as showing that keittima children were never for all purposes in an identical position with natural children. It must be observed that in Ma Gyan v. Maung Kywin (6) it was said (at p. 161):

> "The real issue for determination ... is whether the surrounding circumstances proved to exist establish an intentional severance of the family tie or not," a sentence which pre-supposes that the artificial family tie can be intentionally severed. At the very least these early authorites show that long ago it was considered that right of a kettima child to inherit might be lost where that of a natural child would not be. Other authorities to the same effect are Maung Aing v. Ma Kin (5), Maung Shew Thwe v. Ma Saing (7) and Ma E v. Maung Shwe Kaing (10). Though in the last cited case the relaxation in modern times of the strict requirement of joint living, especially where there are no natural children, was pointed out, the possibility of loss of inheritance by a keittima child living apart was again clearly recognized as it was by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maung Thue v. Maung Tun (8). Again, a Full Bench of this Court in Maung Po An v. Ma Dwe (11) was of opinion that a keittima adopted son could not claim from his adoptive mother on the death of the adoptive father the auratha sons's quarter share of the parents' joint estate, which again indicates that the keittima child is not for every purpose in a position identical with an own child. This also appears from Ma Nyun Sein v. Maung Chan Mya 12) where it was held that a keitttma child who enters and then leaves the priesthood is not ipso facto re-adopted, though in similar circumstances the legal consequences of the natural relationship of parent and child would again come automatically into force.

At first view the decision of the Judicial Committee in Maung Ba Pe v. Maung Shwe Ba (13) appears to be in the respondent's favour. But on a close examination one finds that that case actually decided nothing which affects the present question. The fourth issue settled in the District Court was (see p. 520) : "Has Maung Shwe Ba lost his right to inherit on account of conduct inimical to Ma Ka ?" In other words, "is the plaintiff a dogson?" Had the wording of the issue stopped at the word "inherit" light would doubtless have been thrown on the question we have to decide. But that the parties chose to confine the dispute to the particular question of "dogson or not dogson" is made abundantly clear by the agreed interpretation of the fourth issue set out at the top of p. 522. Where by consent parties to a suit do not canvass a particular legal question the decision in that suit cannot be an authority binding on an inferior Court as to what the answer to that questoin is nor do I find any dicta in their Lordships' judgment which affect it.

There have in the last five years been four decisions in this Court which impinge on the case before us. Dealing with these in chronological order, in Ma Than Nyun v. Daw Shwe Thit (14) the mode of effecting a keittima adoption was considered and the publicly expressed intention that the child shall inherit was laid down to be the esential factor. How, if at all, that expression of intention could be revoked was not in issue and therefore the case is really no authority on the point we have to decide.

In Ko Pe Kyai v. Ma Thein Kha (9), to which I have already alluded, the opinion was expresed that the old requirement of cohabitation is no longer essential to a keittima child's inheriting. That dictum, if I may respectfully say so, seem clearly right in view of the decisions already reviewed. There is however much more here than mere failure to live in the adoptive parents' house. There is on the parent's side the clearest possible repudiation of the relationship of father and son ; and there is on the plaintiff's side, as I have said, the deliberate choice of a house which was not the deceased's as his home There is residence there by the plaintiff for four years, two of them before he married, which is quite inexplicable except on the hypothesis that he so regarded the house of Daw Soon. There are then visits to the deceased, at first very infrequent and later ceasing altogether ; the very minor part played by the plaintiff at the funeral of U Maung Maung; and his passive attitude to the rights of inheritance asserted by Ma Ant and another in opposition to him. I have no doubt at all that under the old law he would have lost his rights to inherit, and I see nothing in Ko Pe Kyai v. Ma Thein Kha (9) which in the circumstances of the present case shows that the contrary is true to-day.

That actual residence with the adoptive parents was not essential was also held by Braund, J. in U Ba Thaung v. Daw U (15). No doubt, at any rate in modern times, merely sending the child away to receive education, whether secular or religious, would not sever the tie. But as I have said, much more than that took place here, and in my opinion, we should not be doing anything inconsistent with Braund, J.'s decision if we were to hold that in this case the tie was severed on some date prior to the death of U Maung Maung. Finally there is the Full Bench decision in Maung Thein v. U Tha Byaw (16). The question referred there was :

"What right of inheritance has the child adopted in the keittima form according to Burmese Buddhist Law in the estate of the father of his adoptive father, where the latter having acquired the status of an auratha son has died before the death of the grandfather?"

Consequently, the decision which answered that question presupposed a valid adoption and an adoption subsisting at the date of the death of the adoptive father's father. The statement that "keittima adoption creates the relationship of parent and child" must therefore be read as referring to a subsisting keittima adoption. The question how, if at all, that fictitious relationship of parent and child can be terminated was never discussed. There is therefore in law nothing to preclude us from deciding what as I have indicated, we should in my opinion decide on the facts, namely that though the plaintiff was at one time the keittima adopted son U Maung Maung he lost his right to inherit at some time before the death of the latter. It is unnecessary to decide at precisely what date he did so. The appeal should therefore in my opinion be allowed and the suit dismissed with the consequences as to costs indicated by my learned brother.

OUDH CHIEF COURT

Criminal Appeals Nos. 6 and 7 of 1941
February 13, 1941
THOMAS, C. J.

SHIB SHARMA (SHIVA SHARMA)— ACCUSED—APPELLANT
EMPEROR—COMPLAINANT—RESPONDENT

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 153-A, 295-A—Book containing passages promoting enmity between classes — Intention of author, how to be judged—Preface of book, if guide — Rediculing Prophet of Muhammadans is offence under s. 153-A — Book published before enactment of s. 295-A—New edition published subsequent to its enactment—Author, if can be convicted under s. 295-A.

In a prosecution under s. 153-A, I. P. C., for publishing a book containing passages promoting enmity between different classes the preface can be no guide with regard to the intention of an accused person. The intention has to be judged primarily by the language of the book and the circumstances in which the book was published. If the language is of a nature calculated to produce or to promote feelings of enmity or hatred the writer must be presumed to intend that which his act was likely to produce. [p. 519, cols. 1 & 2.]

A Hindu who ridicules Prophet of the Muhammadans not out of any eccentricity but in the prosecution of a propaganda started by a class of persons who are not Muhammadans, promotes feelings of enmity and hatred between Hindus and Muhammadans and is guilty under s. 153-A, I. P. C. 104 Ind. Cas. 234 (2) and 104 Ind. Cas. 225 (3), referred to. 103 Ind. Cas. 769 (1), dissented from. [p. 520, col. 1.]

Where a new edition of a book published before enactment of s. 295-A, I. P. C., is published after its enactment, its author can be convicted under that section when his connection with the publisher is proved.

Cr. As. against the order of the Sessions Judge of Lucknow, dated January 2, 1941.

Messrs. H. G. Walford and Shankar Sahai, for the Appellant.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—Shib Sharma (Shiva Sharma) and Sham Lal have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Lucknow, under ss. 153-A and 295-A of the I. P. C. and each of them has been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment under each section, the sentences of each accused to run concurrently.

The charge against Shib Sharma was that he wrote the book Ex. 1 called "Chaman Islam ki Sair" which was printed and published at Lucknow in 1939 and which book contained objectionable passages quoted in Exs. 7 and 7-A and also other passages contained in the book against the Muslim religion and that thereby he promoted feelings of enmity or hatred between the Muslim and Hindu subjects of His Majesty, and thus he was guilty of an offence under s. 153-A of the I. P. C. The further charge against him was that by writing this book Ex. 1 and allowing it to be published he insulted the religion and the religious beliefs of the Mussalmans and that he did this with a deliberate and malicious intention of outraging the religious feelings of the Mussalmans and thus he was guilty of an offence under s. 295-A of the I. P. C.

The charge against Sham Lal accused was to the same effect, excepting that he published the book which was written by Shiv Sharma.

It may be made clear that the charge against Shib Sharma is in respect of the whole book Ex. 1 and Exs. 7 and 7-A are six particularly most objectionable passages which form the basis of the charge.

Shib Sharma is the head preacher of the Arya Samaj in this province and Sham Lal is a seller mainly of Arya Samajist books.

It may be mentioned that Ex. 1 is the third edition. It was first published in 1922 and the second edition was published in 1928 and the third edition (Ex. 1) was printed from the second edition of 1928 at the Shukla Printing Press in 1939. The book was proscribed and the accuseds' prosecution was sanctioned on September 7, 1939. A complaint was filed in the Court of the District Magistrate of Lucknow against the two accused on September 11, 1939, when warrants were ordered to be issued.

Sham Lal was arrested on March 4, 1940, and Shib Sharma presented himself in Court on April 8, 1940, (vide the evidence of P. W. No. 12, B. Ajodhia Prasad Singh, second officer).

The accused Shib Sharma made a fiery speech in Amir-ud-Daula Park Lucknow on December 31, 1939, at which some Police Officers were present. It is strange that the Police did not know his whereabouts or arrested him on that date when there was a warrant of arrest against him.

The accused Sham Lal admitted having published the book at the Shukla Printing Press. He stated that his intention was not to promote or attempt to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between Muslim and Hindu subjects of His Majesty and that he published it with the permission of Shib Sharma because there was a demand for it. He further stated that he was only an ordinary scholar of Hindi and could not read Hindi very well.

The accused Shib Sharma has made a lengthy statement and has also filed a written statement, Ex. D-1. His account of how he came to write the book is that one Parmanand, who was a student at Agra, used to discuss other religions. He asked him (Shib Sharma) to write a collection of references, criticising passages in the Mussalman scriptures so that he might have material for debating with the Mussalmans. He wrote such a collection of references and gave it to Parmanand who printed it in the form of a book without his (Shib Sharma's) permission. When the book was read over to him in the Magistrate's Court, he found that there had been changes in the printed book from what he had written in the collection of references. He further stated that he was not responsible for what was published because Parmanand had taken the copyright and published it. In brief his defence is that he did not write the book with any malicious intention of outraging the religious feelings of the Mussalmans or to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between Hindus and Mussalmans. His object in writing the book was the preservation of his own religion and to prevent conversion of his religionists to Muhammadanism and further it was to help Arya Samajist preachers to argue and discuss religion with Mussalmans.

It is conceded by the learned Counsel on behalf of Shib Sharma that the accused wrote the book, and on behalf of Sham Lal it is also conceded that he got the third edition in 1939 printed at the Shukla Printing Press. The evidence shows that 1000 copies were printed.

The appeal of Shib Sharma has been argued by Mr. Walford and of Sham Lal by Mr. H D. Chandra. Both the Counsels have not criticised the evidence of the prosecution, but have taken their stand on legal grounds.

No copy of the first edition has been filed by the prosecution. Exhibit 3 is the second edition and Ex. 1, as I have said, is the third edition.

The six objectionable passages which are quoted in Exs 7 and 7-A were picked out by Nazir Ahmad, P. W. No. 6, who has studied Muslim theology and is a scholar in Arabic and Persian and the entries which find place in the remarks column are his observations.

Mr. Walford has contended that the passages quoted in Exs. 7 and 7-A are from the Holy Koran and the correct references of paras and pages are given in front of the passages, that any one who read the whole passages would know that they were correct passages and that there was nothing objectionable, that the book was printed in Hindi which would not be read by the Mussalmans and the idea of the author was to enlighten his own brethren and prevent them from accepting the Muhammadan religion that the comment, if any, was a fair comment, and not malicious, that the first edition was published in the year 1922 and the Govt. did not prescribe the book or ordered the accused's prosecution. It, therefore, must be presumed that the accused was not guilty under s. 153-A of the I. P. C.

With regard to s. 295-A, I. P. C., it was urged that as the book was written in 1922 when this section did not exist in the I. P. C, and as there was no evidence that Ex. 1 was published with the permission and knowledge of the accused, therefore, the accused's conviction under this section was illegal. It was further urged that there was no evidence to show that Ex. 1 was the true copy of the first edition.

Before dealing with the evidence in the case, I may mention that on December 31, 1939, a Conference of the Arya Samaj was held in Amir-ud-Daula Park, Lucknow. There were a large number of persons present as it was the Annual Conference of the Arya Samaj and speeches were made. Shiv Sharma spoke at the meeting and said that he had written "Chaman Islam ki Sair". This he said when he was criticising the Mussalmans. The above fact is proved by the evidence of P. W. No. 1, Chandra Shekhar Soti, Sub-Inspector. The speech was taken down by Mukhtar Ahmad Naik, P. W. No. 2, and is Ex. 4. Ex. 5 is its duplicate. The speech undoubtedly was inflamatory and likely to cause bad blood between Hindus and Muhammadans, but I have no concern with it in this case excepting for the fact that Shiv Sharma bragged about writing "Chaman Islam ki Sair."

The learned Sessions Judge has not dealt with each passage in Ex. 7 separately because he did not think it advisable to do so as it would only tend to give it further publicity. In my opinion he has adopted the correct course. I am myself not going to analyse each passage for fear of giving it further publicity which will certainly promote feelings of enmity or hatred between Hindus and Muhammadans. I may just quote one or two passages.

Now coming to the evidence of the prosecution, the two most important witnesses to whose evidence reference may be made are P. W. No. 5, Abdus Salam and P. W. No. 6, Nazir Ahmad.

Abdus Salam is a teacher in theology in Darul Muballighin, which is a religious institution in Lucknow. He has read thoroughly Mishkat and Minhaj, which are religious books. He stated that he had "Chaman Islam ki Sair" read through and in his opinion the book as a whole was very painful to the Mussalmans and insulted the religion and the founder of the religion and that it calculated to excite the anger of Muhammadans. With regard to the passages Exs. 7 and 7-A, the witness stated that they were painful to Muhammadans and insulted the Prophet and that Mishkat and Minhaj were misquoted.

P. W. No. 6, Nazir Ahmad, is a political pensioner and a scholar in Arabic and Persian. He has studied Muslim theology. He filed the passages mentioned in Exs. 7 and 7-A In his opinion the whole book is insulting to Muhammadans and provocative to them. The witness further stated that the passages given in col. 2 were either totally wrong or have been distorted so as to change the meaning. They were objectionable and insulting to the religion and the Prophet. They were likely to create bad blood.

The first passage in Ex. 7 in as follows :

"Hazrat ne apni bibi ke nahaye hue tasle ke pani se wazoo kiya halanki istri janabi thi (bhog karai hue thi). Bibine kaha pani napak hai. Hazrat ne farmaya pani ne bhog nahin karaya hai."	Safa 11 Para 31

There can be no doubt in my mind that by reading this passage one would understand that the Prophet was willing to use for religious ablution water polluted by his wife's bathing. In Muslim Law a woman is "Janabi" when she has sexual intercourse with her husband and the literal meaning of the word "Janabi" is polluted. No Mussalman will ever use such polluted water for wazoo.

The second passage is that

"Hazrat Aisha used to go to the tomb of the Prophet and Abu Bakr without clothes, and she would say that one is my husband and the other is my father, there is no occasion for me to be modest;"

The note of the author, that is the accused Shib Sharma, is that "at the time of becoming a widow Aisha was 18 years old. How far was it proper for her to go naked there at such an age ?"

Hazrat Aisha is one of the first ten persons who gave the teaching of the Prophet to others, and is considered most beloved of all Mussalman women among at least the Sunni Mussalmans. The learned Counsel on behalf of Shib Sharma tried to show that some other Muhammadan authors have also said that she used to go naked. In my opinion the word "Saub" which has been used in Mishkat means either a chadar or clothing. What the author of Ex. 1 has done is to have collected a number of passages which may be perfectly right and harmless in their proper setting, but when disconnected or detached may seem scurrilous, indecent and highly objectionable. Any Muhammadan who reads the passages given in Exs. 7 and 7-A must feel them highly painful and excite his anger and disgust. There can be no doubt that misinterpretation of Mishkat and Minhaj must be highly painful and displeasing to the Mussalmans. The learned Sessions Judge in his judgment points out that Vishnu Sarup, an Arya Samajist preacher, who was examined on behalf of the defence, when being cross-examined on his interpretations of the scriptures and when supporting them with such reason as he could find, suddenly objected that some of his answers may be very displeasing to the Maulvis who were present in Court at the time of the trial and he might be murdered.

The main question for consideration is what was the intention of the author who wrote the book. Was it merely an easy book of reference as is urged by the learned Counsel or was it written to promote feelings of enmity or hatred?

Before I discuss this point I may dispose of the argument of the learned Counsel that there was no evidence that the accused was the author of these passages.

I cannot compliment the prosecution for their conduct of this case because there are a good many gaps left which could have easily been filled. This argument is really based because there is no copy of the first edition on the record or any evidence to show that the book was not available. I am informed by Mr. Ghosh, the learned Assistant Govt. Advocate, that there is no difference between Ex. 1 and Ex. 3. In his written statement, Ex. D-1, Shib Sharma does not say anything about any alteration in the book. Nor does he say that it was published without his permission. He simply stated that it was written in Hindi so that the Mussalmans should not try to read it, but that it should only come into the hands of Arya Samajists and Hindus. He further stated that the Mussalmans frequently insult the Hindu religion and that he wrote this book of reference as a means of refuting the Muslim religion.

P. W. No. 7, Manna Lal, who is a printer in the Shukla Printing Press stated as follows;

"Exhibit 3 also was printed at my Press. Prem Shankar Varma got it printed. He has now died. When we printed this first a copy was sent to the District Magistrate. Exhibit 3 was printed as far as I remember from a very old book....."

I have no reason to suppose that Ex. 3 was not a true copy of the first publication. I am therefore of opinion that Ex. 1 is the true copy of Ex. 3. If there had been any difference or addition and alteration between Exs. 1 and 3 the accused would have pointed it out. I therefore hold that the accused Shib Sharma is the author of the passages contained in Exs. 7 and 7-A.

In order to prove the innocent intention of the accused the learned Counsel referred me to the preface of the book which is harmless. In my opinion the preface can be no guide with regard to the intention of an accused person. The intention has to be judged primarily by the language of the book and the circumstances in which the book was published. If the language is of a nature calculated to produce or to promote feelings of enmity or hatred in my opinion the writer must be presumed to intend that which his act was likely to produce. The accused who is a missionary may be entitled to a certain latitude in respect of re-expression of religious opinions, but it cannot for a moment in this case he said that the book was written in a spirit of fair and honest criticism without any malicious intention of producing any hatred. In my opinion if the intention of the accused was harmless he would have taken care to quote the full passages, and not only the objectionable portions.

The learned Counsel relied on the case of Raj Paul v. King-Emperor reported in (A. I. R. 1927 Lahore, 590) (1). The case is commonly known as "Rangila Rasul case" in which it was held that "Section 153-A was intended to prevent persons from making attacks on a particular community as it exists at the present time and was not meant to stop polomics against deceased religious leaders however scurrilous and in bad taste such attacks might be."

This case was decided on May 4, 1927, and is a decision of a Single Hon'ble Judge of that High Court.

There is another case reported in the same volume, that is A. I. R 1927 Lahore at p. 594, (Devi Sharan Sharma v. Emperor) (2). It was decided on August 6, 1927, and is a Bench decision and the Hon'ble Judges have placed a different interpretation on s. 153-A. It is true that the Single Judge case, reported at p. 590* was not brought to their notice.

Mr. Ratanlal in his Commentary on the Law of Crimes, 15th Edition, p. 682, says that the Rangila Rasul case (1) was overruled by the Bench decision in which it was decided that a scurrilous vituperative and foul attack on a religion or on its founder would come within the purview of s. 153.

I do not think that the case has been clearly overruled because there is no reference of the judgment in the Rangila Rasul case (1). The Rangila Rasul case (1) was expressly dissented from by Mr. Justice Dalal in the case reported in A. I. R. 1927 Allahabad 654 (Kali Charan Sharma v.

King-Emperor) (3) in which the learned Judge stated as follows:—

"The learned Counsel who argued this revision showed me a copy of a judgment of an Hon'ble Judge of the Lahore High on a similar book 'Rangila Rasul' issued in the Punjab. Possibly the judgment was cited as both books appeared to have been issued in prosecution of the same Hindu propaganda. With all respect to the learned Judge, I am not prepared to agree with the nice distinction he has drawn between a book which may hurt the feelings of Muhammadans and a book which may cause feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects,' (now follows the most important and pertinent portion of the judgment). "Speaking for myself I look at such a matter not as a somewhat learned Judge of a High Court, but as a common or ordinary citizen of a town in India. I would place myself in the position of a Muhammadan who honours his Prophet, and then consider what my feelings would be towards a Hindu who ridiculed that Prophet, not out of any eccentricity but in the prosecution of a propaganda started by a class of persons who are not Muhammadans. In such a position from the hatred of the author I would, as an ordinary man, proceed to hatred of the class to which the author belonged and which instigated the author. There cannot be the slightest doubt that the writing such as that of the book before me..... will certainly promote feelings of enmity and hatred between Hindus and Muhammadans", and this is exactly the view which I take of the present case. There can be no doubt that the passages quoted in Exs. 7 and 7-A must be highly painful to the Muhammadan who reads or hears them and must excite his anger and disgust. In one of the passages there is a clear suggestion that the Prophet was a debauch and of infamous character. Shib Sharma's pleas that he wrote the book in Hindi so that it should not come into the hands of the Mussalmans and that for 19 years, (that is when the book was published), the Govt. did not take any section, are in my opinion useless and of no avail.

The learned Sessions Judge in his judgment has made reference that the accused was previously prosecuted and convicted for similar offences in respect of another book written by him. This he has done in order to gather the intention of the author. It was suggested by the accused learned Counsel that the learned Judge should not have taken the accused's conviction into consideration. In my opinion the learned Judge under s. 14 of the Evi. Act was justified in doing so and even if we exclude his previous conviction from consideration, there is enough material on the record to uphold his conviction. The accused's intention can also be gathered from the speech which he made on December 31, 1939, at Amir-ud-Daula Park.

An attempt was made by the accused' learned Counsel to explain away these passages and some evidence was also produced on behalf of Shib Sharma to explain these passages. In my opinion the learned Sessions Judge was right in rejecting the evidence of those witnesses.

After giving careful consideration to the evidence in the case and the circumstances I am of opinion that the intention of the accused was to ridicule the Prophet and his religion and to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between the Hindus and Muhammadans. I do not for a moment believe that the book was written for reference for Arya Samaj missionaries.

It was next contended that the conviction under s. 295-A, I. P. C. was illegal. The book, as I have said, was first published in the year 1922 and s. 295-A was introduced by the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act (XXV of 1927) which came into force on September 22, 1927. This section was introduced owing to the agitation following the decision of the "Rangila Rasul" case to which reference has already been made. It is true that the section has no retrospective effect, but if Shib Sharma's connection with Sham Lal accused is proved his conviction under s. 295-A is perfectly legal.

Sham Lal stated that he published the book at the instance of Shib Sharma. The learned Sessions Judge has relied on this statement. The learned Assistant Govt. Advocate has, and in my opinion, rightly conceded that this statement of Sham Lal cannot be used against the co-accused.

It was suggested that Sham Lal hardly knew Hindi and he did not know the contents of the book. I am not prepared to accept Sham Lal's statement when he says that he did not know the nature of the book. He is a seller of Arya Samajist books and there is evidence to show that he is a regular attendant at all Arya Samaj conferences, (vide the statement of D. W. No. 2, Pt. Kali Charan). He is a worker of the Arya Samaj and sells books at their conferences. It is inconceivable that he would have printed the book without the permission of the author. It was in the interest of the author and his co-religionists that the book should be printed. I am of opinion that Sham Lal's connection is established beyond doubt with Shib Sharma.

Both the accused have rightly been convicted under ss. 153-A and 295-A of the I. P. C. and I dismiss their appeals. They Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 66 (2)—Allowance under—Discretion of Court—Insolvent claiming expenses in lump sum for his daughter's marriage—Application, if falls under s. 66 (2)—Proper procedure stated.

The making of the allowance is left to the discretion of the Court. It is not possible to hold that an application where a lump sum is claimed on behalf of the insolvent for meeting the marriage expenses of his daughter will come strictly within the scope of s. 66 (2), Prov, Insol. Act. But under the category of "allowance for the support of himself and his family" the expenses that may be necessary for celebrating the marriage of the daughter of the insolvent may be brought. Therefore, the proper course for the insolvent to adopt is to ask for an increase in his allowance for the period during which he contemplated celebrating the marriage of his daughter. Such an application would be dealt with by the Court bearing in mind the considerations that ought to prevail in disposing of applications under s. 66 (2). The claim can certainly not be made as a matter of right. Sundari Ammal v. Subramania Iyer (5) and 141 Ind. Cas 424 (6), relied on, Ex parte Holthausen; In re Scheibler (1), In re East Gate, Ex parte Ward (2), In re Mapleback; Ex parte Caldacott (3) and 101 Ind. Cas. 368 (4), referred to.

C. R. P. to revise an order of the District Court, East Godavari at Rajahmundry, dated December 7, 1937.

Mr. V. Viyyanna, for the Petitioner.
Mr. D. Narasa Raju, for the Respondents.

Order.—This civil revision petition arises out of certain insolvency proceedings pending in the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge of Cocanada (I. A. No. 204 of 1937 in I. P. No. 29 of 1932). The petitioner was adjudged insolvent and all his properties became vested in the Official Receiver of East Godavari. On an application made by the petitioner under s. 66 (2), Pro. Insol. Act, it is stated that a monthly allowance of Rs. 50 out of the estate has been made in his favour by the learned Subordinate Judge. While this order was in force, the petitioner presented another application for an allotment of Rs. 4,000 to be made for celebrating the marriage of his daughter who had just attained the age of 14 years. It was conceded in the Subordinate Judge's Court that this amount included a sum of Rs. 2,000 which petitioner wanted for katnam (dowry). The balance of Rs. 2,000 was claimed by him for meeting the actual expenses of the marriage. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that in any event, the petitioner was not justified in claiming Rs. 2,000 to enable him to give it as dowry at the time of the marriage of his daughter and that it was not open to him to claim the balance of Rs. 2,000 under s. 66 (2), Pro. Insol. Act. In the course of his order the learned Subordinate Judge has recorded that in his opinion a sum of Rs. 500 would be sufficient for meeting the expenses of the marriage of the petitioner's daughter. This however was only an observation made by him in the course of his order. On appeal to the learned District Judge of East Godavari, the order made by the learned Subordinate Judge was confirmed and the appeal was dismissed. It is against this order that the present revision petition is filed.

The learned Advocate for the petitioner contends that the property of the insolvent must be deemed to have vested in the Official Receiver subject to all the liabilities that could have been enforced against it in the hands of the insolvent himself. In support of this proposition he has cited certain English decisions where the view taken is that the trustee in bankruptcy stands in the position of the bankrupt, that he takes the property of the insolvent subject to rights of third parties and that he is in effect the legal representative of the bankrupt: Ex parte Holthausen, In re Sacheibler (1), In re East Gate Ex parte Ward (2) and In re Mapleback, Ex parte Caldacott (3). He has also cited the case reported in Sheobaran Singh v. Kalsum-un-nissa (4) where a right of pre-emption to which a third party was entitled with regard to certain property of the insolvent was enforced subsequent to insolvency. The substance of these decisions has been summarized in Mulla's commentaries on the Pro. Insol. Act where the learned author states that the property which the Official Receiver takes is the property of the bankrupt exactly as it stood in his person with all its advantages and all its burdens.

The learned Advocate for the respondent, on the other hand argues that according to Hindu Law the creditor's rights are recognized as supreme even as against the sons of the insolvent and that there is no warrant for the claim put forward on behalf of a daughter. He cites the decision reported in Sundari Ammal v. Subramania Iyer (5), in support of his contention. There a wife had expended moneys for celebrating her daughter's marriage and subsequently sued her husband for recovering the amount so expended but it was held that she was not entitled to recover. He also relies on the decision reported in Jawahir Singh v. Parduman Singh (6) where it is observed in the judgment that "it is settled law that the debts contracted by a Hindu governed by Mitakshara School take preference over the right of maintenance of his wife and minor children."

In Mayne's Hindu Law at p. 429, the case law relating to this subject has been summarized:

"In cases governed by the Mitakshara Law a father may sell or mortgage not only his own share but also the share of his male issue in family property for the purpose of satisfying antecedent debts of his own not incurred for any family necessity or benefit, provided they are not immoral or illegal, and the sale or mortgage may be enforced against his sons by a suit or proceedings to which they are not parties.... ..."

A creditor may enforce payment of the personal debt of a father not being illegal or immoral, by attachment or sale of the entire interest of father and sons in the family property and it is not absolutely necessary that the sons should be parties either to the suit itself or to the proceedings in execution. In view of these authorities, it is not possible for the petitioner to contend that the daughter is entitled as a matter of right to claim the amount mentioned in the petition from out of the estate of the insolvent as against the creditors of the insolvent. The application, as already stated, was presented under s. 66 (2), Pro. Insol. Act. This clause of the section is worded as follows :

"The Court may from time to time make such allowance as it may think just to the insolvent out of his property for the support of himself and his family.....but such allowance may at any time be varied or determined by the Court."

It will be seen that the making of the allowance is left to the discretion of the Court. It is not possible to hold that an application like the present where a lump sum is claimed on behalf of the insolvent for meeting the marriage expenses of his daughter will come strictly within the scope of this section. I am prepared to hold that under the category of "allowance for the support of himself and his family" the expenses that may be necessary for celebrating the marriage of the daughter of the insolvent may be brought. Therefore, the proper course for the petitioner to adopt is to ask for an increase in his allowance for the period during which he contemplated celebrating the marriage of his daughter. Such an application would be dealt with by the Court bearing in mind the considerations that ought to prevail in disposing of applications under s. 66 (2), Prov. Insol. Act. The claim can certainly not be made as a matter of right, for, there is no authority for holding that the insolvent has a right to claim out of his estate the expenses that he contemplates incurring for celebrating the marriage of his daughter. In these circumstances, I am not satisfied that the view taken by the lower Courts is wrong. The petitioner may, if so advised, make an application for increasing the allowance already made to him by the learned Subordinate Judge but the petition that was filed by him in the learned Subordinate Judge's Court out of which this revision petition arises was clearly not sustainable. This civil revision petition must therefore be dismissed. I make no order as to costs.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

June 21, 1940
TEK CHAND AND BECKETT, JJ.
BIR BHAN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
Pandit JAGAN NATH AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Custom (Punjab)—Adoption — Sarsut Brahmins of Mauza Jandola, Tahsil Thanesar, District Karnal are governed by Hindu Law in matter of adoption.

The initial presumption in the case of Sarsut Brahmins of mauza Jandola, Tahsil Thanesar District Karnal, is that they are governed by Hindu Law in matters of adoption and an adoption of wife's, sister's son is therefore valid. The mere fact that the family of these Brahmins owns one-half of the village raises no presumption that they have given up Hindu Law and adopted the custom of agricultural tribes in all matters.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated September 2, 1938.

Mr. Panna Lal Behl, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. R. Agnihotri, for the Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—This is a second appeal arising from a suit instituted by the plaintiff-appellant against the defendant-respondent for possession of land situate in mauza Jandola, Tahsil Thanesar, District Karnal. The suit has been dismissed by both the Courts below. The land in suit belonged to Uma Dutt, a Sarsut Brahmin of mouza Jandola. He died sonless in December 1936. About five months before his death, on July 3, 1936, he had executed a deed declaring that six years earlier he had adopted Jagan Nath defendant No. 1 (who is his wife's sister's son) as his son after the performance of the necessary ceremonies according to Hindu Law and that he had brought him up as such. On the same day, he executed a will that after his death Jagan Nath would succeed to his property. Four months later, on November 16, 1936 he made an oral gift of the land in dispute in favour of Jagan Nath and put him in possession. At his instance, the revenue authorities sanctioned the mutation in favour of Jagan Nath. The present suit was instituted by Bir Bhan, a collateral of Uma Dutt in the third degree, claiming to succeed to his property as the next heir. He denied the factum and validity of the adoption and also impugned the gift and bequest. He averred that the parties were governed by "the custom of the argicultural tribes of the Punjab," according to which a sonless proprietor cannot adopt a non-agnate, nor devise by gift inter vivos or will ancestral property to a stranger.

The suit was resisted by Jagan Nath, who pleaded that the parties were governed by Hindu Law and not by custom, and that Uma Dutt had full power to adopt him and also to devise his property, whether ancestral or not. The Courts below have upheld the defence and dismissed the suit. The factum of the adoption is no longer disputed. The only question agitated in this appeal is that the parties were governed by custom and that the adoption of the defendant by Uma Dutt is invalid. After hearing Counsel and examining the evidence, I can find no force in this contention. As stated adove, the parties are Sarsut Brahmins. The initial presumption therefore is that they are governed by Hindu Law. In the plaint it was alleged that they were groverned "by custom of the agricultural tribes of the Punjab." In his evidence as a witness the plaintiff, however, shifted his ground and stated that they did not follow the custom of the agricultural tribes of the Punjab or of Thanesar Tahsil; but a special family custom of the Barhmins of Mouza Jandola. Not a single instance has been proved from the family or from amongst the Brahmins of Mauza Jandola or the neighbouring village in which Hindu Law has been departed from in matters relating to adoption or succession. There is no documentary evidence whatever and the oral evidence produced is of the vaguest possible kind, the bald statements made by the witnesses not being supported by any instance. Counsel for the appellant solely relied upon the fact that one-half of the village is owned by this family of Brahmins, and a lambardar has invariably been appointed from amongst them. But these facts, by themselves, are wholly insufficient to prove that in matters relating to adoption the parties do not follow Hindu Law.

The kafiat dehi prepared in the settlement of 1887, produced by the plaintiff himself, shows that the land in dispute originally belonged to the Raja of Ladwa and was a part of Mauza Bahain. During the Sikh times, the Raja gifted it by way of charity to his prohit Sobha Ram Brahmin, who got it cultivated by tenants. The gifted land was separated from Mouza Bahain and given a separate name as Mauza Jandola. Subsequently, one of Sobha Ram's sons sold his half share of the village to certain Mahajans. The village was then divided into two Pattis called Patti Brahmanan and Patti Mahajanan. It will thus be seen that the ancestors of the plaintiff performed priestly functions and acquired the land by way of charity. Since then some descendants of Sobha Ram have been cultivating the land themselves, while others have been following trade and other avocations in life. Uma Dutt himself never cultivated land. He had left Jandola and settled at Ladwa where he had a shop for selling milk. This being the history of the family, the mere fact that they owned one-half of the village raises no presumption that they have given up Hindu Law and adopted the custom of agricultural tribes in all matters.

As the village is owned by Brahmins and Mahajans alone, the lambardar must necessarily be appointed from amongst them. The fact, therefore, that he has invariably been a descendant of Sobha Ram, has no bearing on the question whether the family follows Hindu Law or custom. In my opinion, the lower Courts have rightly held that the plaintiff, on whom the onus lay, has failed to prove that in matters relating to adoption this family is governed by custom. Admittedly, the adoption is valid under Hindu Law and therefore, the defendant Jagan Nath, as the adopted son of Uma Dutt, is entitled to succeed to his property, apart from the gift or will. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Civil Appeal No. 2 of 1937

YORKE AND GHULAM HASAN, JJ.

BELAHRI CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

PUTTU LAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

Co-operative Societies Act (II of 1912), s. 23—Scope—Section, if has reference to debts of outgoing members due to Society—U. P. Co-operative Societies Rules, rr. 20 (7), 20 (12) (ii), 20 (i) — Violation of r. 20 (7)—Effect—Award, if invalid—Award invalid—Failure to appeal—Award, whether become final and conclusive—Bar of jurisdiction of Civil Court, if absolute—Reference to arbitration pending — Fresh reference to another arbitrator is incompetent and of no legal effect.

The words "the debts of a registered society as they existed at the time when he ceased to be a member" in s. 33, Co-operative Societies Act refer to the debts due from the Society to third persons and it is with regard to these debts that the liability of a past member has been confined in the section to a period of two years from the date of his ceasing to be a member and no further. The debts referred to in the section have no reference whatever to the debts of the outgoing members due to the Society itself. [p. 526, col. 2.]

The provisions of rr. 20 (7) (i) (ii) and (iii) of the Rules framed by the U. P. Govt under the Co-operative Societies Act, refer merely to defects of procedure and do not invalidate the award by reason of such defects or irregularities. [p. 527, col. 1]

Even if the award is invalid on the ground that it was ante-dated or had been made after the expiration of the time fixed for making the award and without obtaining any extension of time or because it was inoperative on the ground of certain procedural defects and irregularities, the proper course for setting aside the award is by means of an appeal to the Assistant Registrar as provided by r. 20 (12) (i). If no such appeal is preferred within limitation, the award becomes final and conclusive between the parties. [p. 527, col. 2.]

The bar of jurisdiction of a Civil Court created by r. 20 (12) (ii) of the Co-operative Societies Rules is not absolute but limited only. A Civil Court is perfectly competent to entertain a suit in all cases where it can be shown that the act of the authorities of the Co-operative Societies is not within the scope of the Act or is otherwise without jurisdiction. [p. 525, col. 2; p. 530, col. 1.]

Where a dispute referred to arbitration is still pending a fresh reference to another arbitrator is not competent and must be disregarded as of no legal effect upon the rights of the parties.

S. C. A. against the order of the Civil Judge of Kheri, dated September 30, 1936.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Appellant.
Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal has been referred by a learned Single Judge of this Court for decision to a Bench of two Judges under s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act. The appeal is by the defendant and is directed against the decree dated September 30, 1936, passed by the Civil Judge of Kheri setting aside the decree passed by the Additional Munsif of Kheri and decreeing the plaintiffs' suit.

The facts out of which this appeal has arisen are as follows : —

The plaintiffs-respondents four in number became members of the defendant society known as Belahri Co-operative Society in Kheri District some time in 1919. Some time before 1925 the defendant Society borrowed Rs. 1,615-8-0 from the Central Bank of Gola. The debt not having been paid, the Bank obtained a decree on March 30, 1926, against all the members of the Society including the present plaintiffs-respondents. In the course of execution proceedings taken by the Bank against the Society a compromise was effected between the Bank and the plaintiffs on March 12, 1927, whereby the liability of the plaintiffs to the Bank was apportioned. Under this compromise the plaintiffs were made liable to pay Rs. 889-10-0 to the Bank.

The plaintiffs' liability inter se was separated as follows :

	Rs.	A.	P.
Puttu Lal ...	309	8	0
Suraj Prasad ...	157	10	0
Bhagwan Din ...	212	8	0

Inspite of this compromise the Bank took out execution of the entire decree against the plaintiffs. The application was rejected by the Munsif of Kheri and the order of dismissal was upheld by this Court on appeal. The plaintiffs ceased to be members of the Society on May 2, 1929. After the plaintiffs had severed their connection with the Society, the latter applied to the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, to appoint an arbitrator to settle the disputes between them and the plaintiffs. Mr. Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi, Inspector of the Co-operative Societies, was appointed an arbitrator and made his award on February 7, 1930 under which he rejected the claim of the Society. In September 1933, the Society passed a resolution asking for the appointment of a fresh arbitrator to settle the dispute with the plaintiffs. The Registrar of the Co-operative Societies appointed Mr. Puttu Lal Bisaria, Circle Inspector, as the sole arbitrator in the case. Mr. Bisaria also rejected the claim of the Society by his award dated February 17, 1934. On March 12, 1935, the Sociey preferred an appeal to the Assistant Registrar of the Co operative Societies and the latter set aside the order and decreed the claim of the Society on April 10, 1935.

The plaintiffs thereupon instituted a suit on January 10, 1936, in the Court of the Munsif of Kheri for a declaration that the decision of the Assistant Registrar be set aside as being ultra vires. The cause of action is alleged in the plaint to have accrued on April 10, 1935, the date of the decision of the Assistant Registrar. The ground of the claim as put forward in the plaint was that the decision of Mr. Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi, the first arbitrator, had become final by reason of the fact that no appeal had been preferred against his award to the Assistant Registrar as provided by r. 29 (12) (i) of the rules framed by the Local Govt. under s. 43 of the Co-operative Societies Act (II of 1912).

The principal defence to the suit was that as the decision of the Assistant Registrar of Co-operative Societies in appeal against the award of Mr. Bisaria had become final under r. 20 (12) (ii) of the U. P. Co-operative Societies Rules, the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The learned Munsif framed the following two main issues in the case :

1. Is the order of the Assistant Registrar, Co-operative Societies, ultra vires and not binding on the plaintiffs as alleged ?

2. Is the suit not maintainable in this Court?

On the first issue the learned Munsif held that the order of the Assistant Registrar (Ex. 1) is perfectly valid and legal. In dealing with this issue the learned Munsif held that the award of Mr. Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi the first arbitrator, was not valid and binding and for the reasons mentioned by the Assistant Registrar in his order (Ex. 1) accepted the opinion of the Assistant Registrar.

These reasons were that the arbitrator did not record evidence of the parties, that he made the award after the expiration of the period fixed by the Registrar and without obtaining any extension of time and that the award had not been communicated to the parties. He also held that the award was alleged to have been made on February 7, 1930, while the proceedings of the case continued till February 22, 1930 and hence the award was ante-dated. He agreed with the opinion of the Assistant Registrar that the award was of no legal effect, that the Society was perfectly justified in asking for a fresh reference to another arbitrator and that the decision of the Assistant Registrar was, therefore, perfectly valid and binding upon the parties. It was also contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that their liability for the debt of the Society had ceased in 1934 when the second reference to arbitration was made inasmuch as by virtue of s. 23 of the Co-operative Societies Act their liability for the debts of the Society as they existed at the time when they ceased to be members could continue for two years only, namely, up to 1931. The learned Munsif repelled this contention and held that s. 23 of the Co-operative Societies Act refers to the debts due by the Society to third persons and not to the debts due to the Society by its members. As regards the second issue the finding of the learned Munsif was that the bar of jurisdiction of a Civil Court created by r. 20 (12) (ii) of the Co-operative Societies Rules was not absolute but limited only. He was of opinion that the jurisdiction of a Civil Court is barred only when the order of the Registrar or the decision of an arbitrator is in accordance with the provisions of the Co-operative Societies Act and the rules made thereunder. If the order was not in consonance with the provisions of the Act or if the authorities of the Co-operative Societies had exercised power which was not vested in them by the Co-operative Societies Act, it was open to the parties to challenge the validity of such an order by means of a suit for declaration in a Civil Court. Upon these findings the suit was dismissed. In appeal by the plaintiffs the learned Civil

Judge of Kheri held that the award of Mr. Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi was inoperative and did not require the filing of an appeal to set it aside. He disagreed with the learned Munsif about the interpretation of s. 23 of the Co-operative Societies Act and expressed the opinion that s. 23 relates to those cases also in which a past member is liable to the Society for the debts due from the Society to third persons and that this liability was discharged after two years of the termination of the plaintiffs' membership.

According to the learned Civil Judge therefore no dispute touching the business of the Society as contemplated by r. 20 and consequently the arbitration proceedings of Mr. Bisaria were perfectly invalid and inoperative and the decision of the Assistant Registrar in appeal based on an invalid arbitration was equally inoperative and not binding upon the plaintiffs. The result was that he set aside the decision of the learned Munsif and decreed the suit.

The defendant then preferred a second appeal to this Court which originally came up before a learned Single Judge of this Court, who in view of the public importance of the questions involved referred it for decision by a Bench of two Judges under s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act. Learned Counsel appearing for the defendant-appellant has argued three points before us :

Firstly, it is contended that the interpretation put upon s. 23 of the Co-operative Socities Act by the lower Appellate Court is erroneous. Secondly he has contended that the award of Mr. Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi was a nullity and the order of the Assistant Registrar on appeal in the second reference to the arbitration of Mr. Bisaria is valid and binding upon the parties. Thirdly, his argument is that the suit for cancellation of the order of the Assistant Registrar is not maintainable in a Civil Court.

We have heard learned Counsel of both parties at great length. We are of opinion that the first contention put forward on behalf of the appellant is well-founded and must be accepted. Section 23 of the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912, runs thus :

"The liability of a past member for the debts of a registered society as they existed at the time when he ceased to be a member shall continue for a period of two years from the date of his ceasing to be a member."

We have no doubt whatever upon a plain construction of the language used in this section that the words "the debts of a registered Society as they existed at the time when he ceased to be a member" clearly refer to the debts due from the Society to third persons and it is with regard to these debts that the liability of a past member has been confined in the section to a period of two years from the date of his ceasing to be a member and no further. In our opinion, the debts referred to in the section have no reference whatever to the debts of the outgoing members due to the Society itself. A reference to s. 24 of the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912, also supports the above construction. According to s. 24 the estate of a deceased member shall be liable for a period of one year from the time of his decease for the debts of a registered Society as they existed at the time of his decease. A further corroboration of this view may be found in para. 167 (ii) in Chap. XIV of the General Instructions, printed in the Manual for Co-operative Societies in the United Provinces (1923) Vol. I, which is to the following effect:—

"The liquidator should also bear in mind the provisions of ss. 23 and 24 of the Act in determining contributions. A past member is liable only for such debts of his Society as were contracted while he was still a member, and he remains liable for such debts only for two years from the date on which he ceased to be a member. If, therefore, the Society came under liquidation after more than two years from the date on which he ceased to be a member, he would not be liable to pay any contributions. Similarly, the estate of a deceased member remains liable only for one year from the date of the deceased member's death and for such debts of the Society as existed at the time of his death."

A similar construction was placed upon the language of s. 23 in a case, Dhanpat v. Anjuman Dehi Alo Maha, (A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 947 (1) where it was held that though s. 23 limits the liability of a past member for the debts of the registered Society, there is no limitation either in the Act or in the rules under the Act for a debt of a past member due to a registered Society.

The decision in Anjuman Dehi v. Keshar Singh, (A. I. R. 1936 Lah. 901), (2), while dissenting from the decision taken in Dhanpat v. Anjuman Dehi Alo Mahar (A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 947, (1) upon another point, did not touch the question of the interpretation of s. 23 of the Act which did not arise in that case.

As regards the second contention put forward on behalf of the appellant, it has been argued that the award of Mr. Muhammad Ahmad Siddiqi must be disregarded as a nullity by reason of the fact that he had violated the imperative provisions of r. 20 (7) (i), (ii) and (iii). Rule 20 (7) (i) requires an arbitrator to record the evidence of parties. Rule 20 (7) (ii) requires that a copy of the award shall be given to each party. Rule 20 (7) (iii) requires that the arbitrator shall give an award within the time fixed by the Registrar. Provided that no award shall be invalid by reason of its being given after the expiry of the time fixed, if an application for extension is made and granted previously or subsequently by the Registrar. Rule 20 (8) (iii), however lays down that no award shall be invalid by reason of its not complying with the provisions mentioned above or by reason of other irregularities. This rule seems to indicate that the provisions of r. 20 (7) (i), (ii) and (iii) refer merely to defects of procedure and do not invalidate the award by reason of such defects or irregularties. Rule 20 (12) (i) and (ii), however, clinches the matter as far as the present question goes. It runs:—

"(12) (i) Any party considering itself aggrieved by the award of an arbitrator or arbitrators may appeal to the Registrar within one month of the date of the award, and the Registrar shall pass such order as he deems fit; Provided that the time taken in obtaining a copy of the award shall be excluded in counting the period of one month."

(ii) A decision of an arbitrator or arbitrators under these rules if not appealed against within the said period and an order of the Registrar shall, as between the parties of the dispute, not be liable to be called in question in any Civil or Revenue Court and shall in all respects be final and conclusive."

By a correction slip dated January 2, 1924, the words "the date of the award" in r. (20) (12) (i) have been replaced and substituted by the words "the communication of the award". It is admitted that no appeal was filed by the Society against the award of Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi to the Registrar as required by the aforesaid rule and by the operation of r. 20 (12) (ii) the decision of Mr. Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi, not having been appealed against become final and conclusive between the parties.

According to Ex. 1 Mr. Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi was required to give his award by January 15, 1930. The case remained with him till a report was made by the Supervisor of the Society and the Bank to the Assistant Registrar in May 1931. The case was not traced till 1932, when Mr. Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi submitted the award along with his explanation. The papers were again misplaced and were not traced till January 26, 1934, when it was discovered that the award had been made on February 7, 1930, rejecting the claim of the Society. We however find that the second reference to the arbitration was made in September 1933 and no attempt was made to prefer an appeal either in 1932 when the award came to the notice of the Society or in 1934 when the award was re-discovered. In any view of the matter, we are of opinion that even if the award of Mr. Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi was invalid on the ground that it was ante-dated or had been made after the expiration of the time fixed for making the award and without obtaining any extension of time or because it was inoperative on the ground of certain procedural defects and irregularities, the proper course for setting aside the award was by means of an appeal to the Assistant Registrar as provided by r. 20 (12) (i). Further, we are of opinion, that the second reference to the arbitration of Mr. Bisaria in September 1933, while the dispute was still pending before Mr. Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi assuming that he had not decided the matter by then and the award is ante-dated was not competent, and consequently all subsequent proceedings based upon that reference must be disregarded as of no legal effect upon the rights of parties. The position seems to us to be perfectly clear. Rule 20 (1) runs as follows:

"Any dispute touching the business of a registered Society between members or past members of a Society or persons claiming through a member or past member, or between a member or a past member or persons so claiming and the committee or any officer, or between two or more registered Societies, shall be referred in writing to the Registrar."

If the award of Mr. Mohammad Ahmad Siddiqi was valid, then the dispute had determined and there was no dispute left touching the business of the Society between the past members and the Society which could be referred to the Registrar within the meaning of r. 20 (1) of the Co-operative Societies Rules. If, however, the award was invalid on any grounds whatsoever, then it should have been set aside by means of an appeal and the arbitrator should have been asked to make a fresh award. There could however, be no second reference while the first reference was pending and had not terminated.

In this connection an alternative argument has been put forward before us on behalf of the respondents that assuming that a second reference to arbitration was competent, the award of Mr. Bisaria dated February 17, 1934, become final inasmuch as no appeal was filed against it until more than a year after, namely on March 12, 1935. An appeal against a decision of an arbitrator must be filed according to the provisions of r. 20 (12) (i) within one month from the communication of the award. There is no evidence, however, on the record to show that the appeal to the Assistant Registrar was filed within time. We do not think it necessary to express any opinion upon this latter point.

As regards the question of jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain the present suit reference has been made on behalf of the appellant to Zamindara Bank v. Suba, (A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 418), (3) Muhammad Barkat Ali Khan v. Anjuman Imdad Qarza Dehi (A. I. R., 1935 Lah. 330), (4) Dhanpat v. Anjuman Dehi Alo Mahar (A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 947 (1), Beni Madho Singh v. Tahsildar of Unao, Liquidator of Dewara Bank (44 Ind. Cas. 353 (2)), (5) Sadasheo v. S. N. Fadnavis (A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 379) (6) Mathura Prasad v. Sheobalak Ram (I. L. R. 40 All. 89) (7) and Ganpat Ramrao Masur v. Krishnadas Padmanabh Chanaawarkar (I. L. R. 44 Bom. 582) (8).

The Zamindara Bank v. Suba, (A. I. R. 1924. Lahore, 418) (3). In this case the plaintiff sued for a declaration that certain bonds alleged to have been executed by him in favour of the Co-operative Society, called the Zamindara Bank, Sherpur Kalan, were forgeries. The defence of the Soiety was that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to hear and determine the suit and that the only remedy open to the plaintiff was by way of a reference to the Registrar, who could either decide the case himself or refer it to an arbitrator. The plea was given effect to by the trial Court but was negatived by the District Judge. The learned Judges of the Lahore High Court restored the decision of the trial Court holding that the plaintiffs suit was not maintainable in the Civil Court. This decision was based upon r. 18 of the rules made by the Punjab Govt. under the Co-operative Societies Act of which cl. (g) is more or less similar to r. 20 (12) (ii) of the Rules framed by the U. P. Govt. It was held that by the substitutional remedy provided under r. 18 in the shape of a reference to the Registrar in the matter of a dispute between a member and a Society the common law remedy by an action in a Civil Court has by necessary implication been taken away.

Muhammad Barkat Ali Khan v. Anjuman Imdad Qarza Dehi, (A. I. R. 1935 Lahore, 330, second column) (4). This was a case in which a Society had gone into liquidation and the liquidator had held the plaintiff liable to pay a certain amount as a past member of the Society. The suit for declaration that he was not liable for the said amount as a contribution due from him was dismissed on the ground that under s. 42, sub-s. (2), cl. (d) of the Co-operative Societies Act the liquidator had jurisdiction to decide the amount of the contribution due from him and the Civil Court was held to have no jurisdiction to go into the matter:—

Dhanpat v. Anjuman Dehi Alo Mahar, (A. I. R. 1935 Lahore 947) (1). In this decision it was held that in a dispute concerning the business of a Co-operative Society the only remedy open to the member is to appeal to arbitration; the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to impugn the award is barred. The case reported in A. I. R. 1924 Lahore 418 (3), quoted above was relied on. This decision was, however, dissented from by a Division Bench of the Lahore High Court in Anjuman Dehi v. Keshar Singh, (A. I. R. 1936 Lahore 201) (2). In this case the execution of an award settling the dispute between the Society and its members, was held by the executing Court as time-barred and the Society again referred the same dispute to arbitration and obtained an award. It was held that the dispute between the Society and its member was determined by the first award and the subsequent dispute referred by the Society to arbitration was one which under the rules made under s. 43 could only be decided by the execution Court, for it related wholly to the discharge of the award. It was held that the second award was one which could not be passed within the scope of the Act and the rules made under it and a suit could lie to have it declared void. Reliance was placed by the learned Judges on two decisions of their own Court in Mohammad Sharif v. Union

In the former case the award of the Deputy Registrar was declared invalid by the Civil Court as the submission of the dispute to the Registrar for decision was not within the rules framed under the Act. In the latter case the awards made by the arbitrator were transferred for execution to the Civil Court. The decree was held by the Court to be fully satisfied and the execution proceedings came to an end. The Society thereupon referred the matter again to the Registrar and an award was made. In a suit filed for a declaration that the arbitration proceedings and the award were ineffectual, it was held that the matter could not be referred to arbitration again as the dispute had ended by the order of the executing Court, and the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit for a declaration.

Beni Madho Singh v. The Tahsildar of Unao (44 Ind. Cas 353) (5), Sadasheo v. S N. Fadnavis (A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 379) (6), Mathura Prasad v. Sheobalak Ram (I. L. R. 40 All. 89) (7) and Ganpat Ramrao Masur v. Krishnadas Padmanabh Chandawarkar, (I. L. R. 44 Bom. 582) (8), were cases where the liquidator had made certain orders of contribution against the members during the course of winding up of the Society, and it was held that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit by those members to have the orders declared null and void under cl. (6) of s. 42 of the Co-operative Societies Act of 1912.

Reference has been made by learned Counsel for the respondents to a decision of the Lahore High Court in Mukand Lal v. Malhotra Bank, Hafizabad, (A. I. R. 1933 Lah, 442) (11), where it was held that the liquidator has power to determine the contribution to be made by a member, but he has no power to determine whether a particular person is a member or not, and if a person disputes his membership, the dispute can be decided by a Civil Court.

Reference has also been made on behalf of the respondents to—

1. Balwant Singh v. Anjuman Imdad Bahami Qarza. (A. I, R. 1939 Lah. 40) (12).

2. Ramendra Nath Mukherjee v. Balurghat Central Co-operative Bank, Ltd. (A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 317) (13).

4. Arya Co-operative Bank Society v. Pandit Shiv Charan (A. I. R. 1940 All. 482) (15).

It was held in Balwant Singh v. Anjuman Imdad Bahami Qarza, (A. I. R. 1939 Lah. 40) (12), that where an award made under the Co-operative Societies Act is alleged to have been made without jurisdiction and not according to the terms of the Act, it is open to the person aggrieved to bring a suit to that effect but such objections cannot be taken in the execution proceedings, started in pursuance of the award, the objector's remedy being an appeal to the Registrar.

Remendra Nath Mukherjee v. Balurghat Central Co-operative Bank Ltd. (A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 317) (13). In this case the Society not only purported to acquire all the preference shares but proceeded to so modify its Regulations as to make itself a "pure type Society", that is to say, to adopt a new constitution on the footing that it had no preference share-holders, and no members other than the registered Societies who held ordinary shares. The plaintiff filed a suit for a declaration that the resolution passed by the Society was ultra vires and illegal. It was held that the plaintiff's cause of action was not withdrawn from the Courts by r. 22 of the Rules made under s. 43 (1) of the Act, which was to the effect that "any dispute touching the business of a registered Society between members... shall be referred in writing to the Registrar."

Chatra-Serampore Co-operative Credit Society Ltd. v. Gopal Chandra Mitra, (A. I. R. 1940 Cal. 198) (14). In this case it was held that where an award by an arbitrator appointed under the rules of the Co-operative Societies Act was without jurisdiction or there was violation of the rules regulating the arbitration in matters of substance, a Civil Court could certainly declare it to be a nullity.

who owed money to it. The Registrar referred the matter to an arbitrator. The arbitrator passed a personal decree against the person. Thereupon he brought the suit for a declaration that the personal decree was null and void and that the property attached in execution of it was not liable for attachment. It was held that the suit was maintainable and the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to pass a personal decree.

Having regard to the trend of authorities cited above we are of opinion that a Civil Court is perfectly competent to entertain a suit in all cases where it can be shown that the act of the authorities of the Co-operative Societies is not within the scope of the Act, or is otherwise without jurisdiction. It may also be mentioned that the plaintiffs' liability to the Bank has already been apportioned by means of a compromise entered into between the Bank and the plaintiffs and it would not be consonant with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience to saddle the plaintiffs with the liability for the same amount twice over.

We maintain the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Civil Rule No. 1348 of 1939

May 3, 1940

B. K. MUKHERJEA AND MOHAMMAD AKRAM, JJ.

GOBARDHAN BAR—PETITIONER

GUNADHAR BAR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885 as amended in 1938), ss. 26-F and 26-C—Right of pre-emption when accrues, whether at date of registration or at date of execution of deed of transfer — Right of re-purchase under s. 26-F and pre-emption under Muhammadan Law, compared and distinguished from Roman Law —Co-sharer tenant exercising right of re-purchase under s. 26-F, whether should make other co-sharers parties to proceedings — Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 47—Registered document when takes effect— Position of parties to document and third parties in the matter, explained.

It is perfectly true that the Amending Act of 1938 is not retrospective in its operation. It does not take away or impair any vested right that accrued under the old section and the rights which it creates could arise only in respect of transfers taking place after it came into force.

But the rights of pre-emption under both the Amending Act and the old Act accrue only at the date of registration of the deed of transfer and not at the date of its execution. Hence no question of the Amending Act being retrospective can arise. Sections 26-F and 26-C as amended read with ss. 26-F and 26-C of the old Beng. Ten. Act make it clear, that the provisions of the new Act would be applicable in respect of transfers which were registered after the new Act came into force, whereas the old Act would apply to the cases where the document of transfer was registered at a time when the old Act was still in operation.

The right of Shafa as recognized by the Muhammadan Law as well as the right of re-purchase created by s. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act, are not rights of pre-emption in the sense in which they were used by the Roman lawyers. Pre-emption, according to Roman Law, connoted an obligation on the part of the intending vendor to sell preferentially to the pre-emptor, if he offered as good conditions as any intending vendee The right of purchase that is created by s. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act, like the right of pre-emption under the Muhammadan Law, attaches an obligation to a particular status which binds the purchaser from the person obliged to hand over the property purchased to the obligee on receiving the price paid by him for it with or without additional compensation. The obligation can only arise when the property passes from the original owner to the purchaser. Under s. 26-C, Ben. Ten. Act, the transfer can only be made by registered document and title cannot possibly pass to the transferee till registration is effected. 23 Ind. Cas. 385 (1), relied on.

There is no provision in the Ben. Ten. Act, which makes it necessary that the co-sharer tenant who seeks to exercise his right of re-purchase under s. 26-F, of the new Act should make the other co-sharers parties to the proceeding. The provision of s. 188 cannot be attracted to the present s. 26-F and, as such the non-joinder of the other co-sharer tenants would not in any way make the proceeding defective.

It is undoubtedly true that as between the transferor and the transferee the registered document takes effect from the date of execution; and if there is a competition between two documents relating to the same property both of which are registered, the one executed earlier in point of time will have priority, but as regards third party the point of time at which the deed is to be effective is when it is registered. 160 Ind. Cas. 730 (4), relied on.

C. Rule from the order of the 2nd Court, Sub-Judge, Midnapur, dated May 30 1939.

Mr. Gopendranath Das for Mr. Ambica Prasanna Sen Gupta, for the Petitioner.

Dr. Radha Binode Pal and Mr. Shyama Pada Mojumdar, for the Opposite Party.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—This rule is directed against an appellate judgment of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Midnapur dated May 30, 1939, reversing an order of the Munsif, first Court, Tamluk, made in a proceeding under s. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Amendment Act of 1938. There is no dispute about the material facts which lie within a narrow compass. There was an occupancy holding recorded in interest No. 79 of the finally published Record of Rights mouza Nilkanthea, which belonged jointly to Indra Mull and Barada Dei. One of the plots comprised in the said holding which is C. S. plot No. 1050 was sold by these tenants to two persons, namely Gobordhan Bar, the petitioner, and Nakul Bar his brother. On August 9, 1938, a kobala was executed by Nakul Bar in respect of his half share of plot No. 1050 in favour of the opposite party and the document was registered on August 24 following. On August 18, 1938, the Ben. Ten. Amendment Act of 1938 came into force and the petitioner who was a co-sharer of the vendor presented an application within four months from the date of the sale claiming to exercise his rights of purchase under s. 26-F of the new Act. The application was resisted by the opposite party purchaser on two grounds. It was contended in the first place that the kobala being executed before the new Act came into force, even though it was registered after that the provisions of the old Act would apply and the rights of pre-emption could be exercised by the immediate landlord and not by the co-sharer tenants. The second point taken was that the application was not maintainable in the absence of the other co-sharer tenants as parties to the proceeding.

The trial Court overruled both these contentions and allowed the petitioner's prayer. On appeal the decision was reversed and the lower Appellate Court gave effect to both the contentions urged by the opposite party and rejected the petitioner's application. It is against this order that the present rule has been obtained and Mr. Das who has appeared in support of the rule has challenged the propriety of the decision of the lower Appellate Court on both the points. On the first point the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that as in this case the kobala was executed on August 9, 1938 when the old Act was still in force, a right of pre-emption vested in the immediate landlord under s. 26-F of the Act and this could not be taken away by the Amending Act of 1938 which came into force only on August 18, 1938; the co-sharer tenants likewise could not claim any right of pre-emption under the new Act as the transfer took place before and not after the new Act became operative. It is perfectly true that the Amending Act of 1938 is not retrospective in its operation. It does not take away or impair any vested right that accrued under the old section and the rights which it creates could arise only in respect of transfers taking place after it came into force. The question however for our consideration is whether the rights of pre-emption would accrue in favour of the immediate landlord under the old section or in favour of the co-sharer tenants under the new, as soon as the conveyance is executed or would they come into existence only when the document is registered. If the date of execution is the material date, the decision of the Subordinate Judge is right and neither the landlord would lose any right which he acquired on the date of the execution of the deed nor would the co-sharer tenants gain any advantage which was created by a statute not then in existence. If, on the other hand, the rights could not arise unless there was a completed transfer by registration of the sale deed, it is the co-sharer tenants who would be entitled to exercise the right of pre-emption and not the immediate landlord. I am inclined to hold that the date of registration is the material date and both under the old Act as well as under the new, no right could possibly accrue in favour of the landlord or the co sharer tenants as the case may be, until the document of transfer was registered.

A transfer of occupancy holding can be made only by a registered document and no title would pass to the transferee unless registration is effected. Under s. 26-C of the old Act the registering officer would not register a deed unless the landlord' fees and the process-fees for service of notice on the landlord were paid by the vendee, and under s. 26-F the immediate landlord had two month's time after the service of notice under s. 26-C, to present his application for pre-emption. Not only there was no valid or complete transfer till the document was registered, but so long as it was not registered, the landlords' right to apply for pre-emption did not arise. If therefore the document was not presented for registration till after the expiry of the old Act, there was no accrued right in favour of the landlord which could be said to have been saved by the repealing enactment. Then again, as in the present case, if the document is registered after the new Act came into force, the provision of the new s. 26-C would certainly be attracted to it. The purchaser would not have to pay landlord's fees even though the kobala was executed when the old Act was still in force, and notice would have to be served upon the co-sharer tenants within four months from the date of service of which they would have the right to come up and apply for re-purchase of the share. It is fairly clear from these sections that the intention of the Legislature was that the provisions of the new Act would be applicable in respect of transfers which were registered after the new Act came into force whereas the old Act would apply to the cases where the document of transfer was registered at a time when the old Act was still in operation.

It may be noted here that the Government of Bengal passed an Ordinance known as the Bengal Tenancy Ordinance which came into force on May 31, 1938. By this Ordinance the time for registration of documents of transfer relating to occupancy holdings was extended and the provisions of the new Act were made available in cases where the last date for presentation of the document for registration expired any time between May 31 and September 8, 1938. These were documents executed admittedly when the old Act was in force, but the parties were given the privilege to wait till the new Act became operative so that they might have the advantages of the provisions of the new Act. The view I am taking does not militate in any way, with the general principles relating to the law of pre-emption. Under the Muhammadan Law also, no right of pre-emption can arise unless the sale is complete and there is a total cessation of the vendor's right to the property. It may be pointed out here that the right of Shafa as recognised by the Muhammadan Law as well as the right of re-purchase created by s. 26 F, Ben. Ten. Act, are not rights of pre-emption in the sense in wrich they were used by the Roman lawyers. Pre-emption, according to Roman Law, connoted an obligation on the part of the intending vendor to sell preferentially to the pre-emptor, if he offered as good conditions as any intending vendee. The right of purchase that is created by s. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act, like the right of pre-emption under the Muhammadan Law, attaches an obligation to a particular status which binds the purchaser from the person obliged to hand over the property purchased to the obligee on receiving the price paid by him for it with or without additional compensation: vide Budhai Sirdar v. Sonaulla Mridha (1). The obligation can only arise when the property passes from the original owner to the purchaser. There is undoubtedly some conflict of judicial opinion as to when a sale under Muhammadan Law becomes complete, and it has been held by some authorities that for purposes of giving effect to the right of pre-emption a sale would be deemed to be complete under Muhammadan Law as soon as the price is paid and possession of the property delivered to the puchaser : vide Begum v. Muhammad Yakub (2) and Abdulla Avjal Momin v. Ismail Mugal Foda (3). But this discussion is immaterial for our present purpose, as under s. 26-C, Ben. Ten. Act, the transfer can only be made by registered document and title cannot possibly pass to the transferee till registration is effected.

Much stress has been laid by the opposite party on s. 47, Regis. Act. It is undoubtedly true that as between the transferor and the transferee the registered document takes effect from the date of execution; and if there is a competition between two documents relating to the same property both of which are registered, the one executed earlier in point of time will have priority, but as regards third party the point of time at which the deed is to be effective is when it is registered vide Naresh Chandra v. Girish Chandra (4) I hold, therefore that the view taken by the lower Appellate Court on the first point cannot be sustained. On the second point also I am of the opinion that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is wrong. There is no provision in the Ben. Ten. Act, which makes it necessary that the co-sharer tenant who seeks to exercise his right of re-puchase under s. 26-F, of the new Act should make the other co-sharers parties to the proceeding. It was necessary in the case of the immediate landlord under the old s. 26-F by reason of the provision of s. 188 which laid down that such applications must be made by all the co sharer landlords jointly. The provision of s. 188 cannot be attracted to the present s. 26-F and, as such, I hold that the non-joinder of the other co-sharer tenants would not in any way make the proceeding defective. The result is that the Rule is made absolute and the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the trial Court restored. The petitioner will have his costs in this rule, the hearing-fee being assessed at one gold mohur.

Appeal from Original Decree No. 168 of 1938

January 22, 1941

CHATTERJI AND MEREDITH, JJ.

GULAB CHAND PRASAD—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

RAM KUMAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND AJODHYA PRASAD AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 76 (h)—Essentials for applicability of s. 76 (h)—Mortgagee in possession of mortgaged property as mere tenant under lease-deed—S. 76 (h) does not apply—Equitable set-off, if can be allowed.

Before s. 76 (h), T. P. Act can be applied it must be shown that the possession of the mortgagee is by way of security for the debt, or in some way referable to the mortgage. [p. 535, col. 1.]

A mortgagee had entered into possession of the mortgaged property under a lease-deed as a mere tenant and not in his capacity of the mortgagee, on agreement of paying certain rent. In the suit on the mortgage the subsequent transferee from the mortgagor contended that the rents from the mortgagee should be set-off against him in reduction of the interest on mortgage money under s. 76 (h), T. P. Act:

Held, that the transaction referred to in the lease-deed was merely a lease with a provision for the payment of rent in advance and could in no sense be described as a mortgage of any sort. There was no question of property being held in mortgage unless it was held as security for the debt, and to constitute a mortgage there must also be provision, express or implied for a right of redemption. As in the lease-deed there was neither any provision whereby the property was held as security for the debt nor for redemption, the lessee came in purely as tenant, and not as mortgagee. Nidha Sah v. Murli Dhar (1) and 68 Ind. Cas. 394 (2), relied on. [p. 534, col. 2.]

Held also, that even if it could be held that the possession under the lease-deed was possession as mortgagee, it was not as mortgagee under the mortgage in suit, and possession was in no way referable to the mortgage upon which the suit had been brought. Hence as the mortgagees were not in possession as mortgagees, but as tenants upon rent under a lease which had nothing whatever to do with the mortgages in suit, s. 76, T. P. Act did not apply to the case for s. 76 (h) to be applicable the possession of the mortgagee must be qua mortgagee. 172 Ind. Cas. 584 (4), referred to, 58 Ind. Cas. 291 (5) and 105 Ind. Cas. 419 (6), explained. [p. 535, col. 1.]

Held further, that there was no question of equitable set-off as it had not been shown that the rent was due to the subsequent transferee nor had the transferee shown that he had any right, legal or equitable, to raise the plea of set-off.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated July 8, 1938.

Messrs. P. R. Das, S. M. Mullick, B. C. De and M. Azizullah, for the Appellant.

Meredith, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated July 8, 1938, decreeing a suit to enforce three simple mortgage bonds. The appeal is by the defendant No. 10 alone, who is a subsequent purchaser of one item of the mortgaged property.

The first of the bonds in suit was executed on May 13, 1925, for a sum of Rs. 6,000 bearing interest at 14 annas per cent. per mensem compoundable with annual rests. The property mortgaged was a house (holding No. 27) in the town of Gaya. This bond is Ex. 1. The amount said to be due at the time of the suit was Rs. 20,619-5-6. Only a sum of Rs. 15,500 was claimed, and the balance was given up. The second bond (Ex. 7) was executed on February 2, 1929, for a sum of Rs. 3,200. The property mortgaged was the same and there were the same provisions with regard to interest. The claim in this case was for Rs. 7,593-2-3. The third bond (Ex. 66) was executed on August 21, 1929, for a sum of Rs. 5,000. It contained similar provisions with regard to interest, and the same property was mortgaged together with another house (holding No. 66). The claim in this case amounted to Rs. 12,076-12-0. These sums claimed were decreed in full. As however, the interest allowed was compound interest, the learned Subordinate Judge allowed no interest pendente lite, or for the period of grace. He ordered that after expiry of the date fixed for redemption interest should run at six per cent. per annum.

The first point taken in the appeal is that the rule of damdupat as contained in s. 7 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act must be applied. Section 7 of this Act provides that no Court shall, in any suit brought by a money-lender before or after the commencement of the Act in respect of a loan advanced before or after the commencement of the Act or in any appeal or proceedings in revision arising out of such suit, pass a decree for an amount of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit, which, together with any amount already realised as interest through the Court or otherwise, is greater than the amount of loan advanced, or, if the loan is based on a document, the amount of loan mentioned in, or evidenced by such document. It would follow from this that the amount decreed by way of interest for the period to the institution of the suit cannot be in the case of the first bond more than Rs. 6,000 in the case of the second bond more than Rs. 3,200 and of the third bond Rs. 5,000. The decree of the learned Subordinate Judge will, therefore, have to be modified to this extent, and this is conceded by the respondents.

The principal point argued for the appellant, and indeed the only other point, arises out of the fact that two of the plaintiff-respondents were in possession of the mortgaged house in holding No. 27, which has been purchased by the appellant, upon a rental of Rs. 81 per mensem during the continuance of the mortgage. This rent was admittedly not paid, and the appellant consequently claims that the mortgagees in possesssion must render an account for these rents under s. 76 (h) of the T. P. Act, or failing that by way of equitable set-off.

The document by virtue of which the respondents have been in possession is on the record, and is Ex. A. It appears that these respondents had asked the mortgagors, the defendants Nos. 1 to 5, for a lease of the house in question in order to open a shop and, and upon this lease they came into possession on October 20, 1922. The kabuliyat (Ex. A), however, was not executed until June 23, 1934. The recitals in this kabuliyat may be summarised as follows. The respondent Siri Niwas and his son state that they asked the mortgagors Babu Ajodhya Prasad and Babu Lakshmi Prasad, to rent the house to them to open a shop, and requested them to put the house into repair. The said Babus replied that the repair and reconstruction of the house would cost about Rs. 4,000 and they had not that money available. If however, the lessees were prepared to advance the sum of Rs. 4,000 without interest and agreed to its set-off against the rent, they were prepared in return to give the lease requested and to repair the house. This was accordingly done, and the lessees, therefore, paid in all Rs. 4,000 to the proprietors on account of rent for a period of four years, eight months and ten days at the rate of Rs. 71 per mensem, covering the rent from October 20, 1922 to May 11, 1927. It is then recited that the tenants had come into occupation under this agreement and maintained a cloth shop, and lastly there was a provision that if the lessees on the expiry of June 30, 1927, wished to retain the shop as tenants paying rent, they would pay a rental of Rs. 81 per mensem which had been agreed to by the proprietors.

The argument for the appellant based upon s. 76 of the T. P. Act is that this was actually a zarpeshgi lease, and the lessees were in possession as mortgagees. The interest on the first bond for the two years, from May 13, 1925 to May 12, 1927, at 14 annas compoundable annually would amount to Rs. 1,260. Adding this to Rs. 6,000 the amount of the bond, we get a sum of Rs. 7,260 upon which sum the interest of 14 annas per cent. per mensem would amount to Rs. 63 per mensem. It is accordingly argued that Rs. 63 out of the rent of Rs. 81 should be set-off under s. 76 against the interest due on the bond, and the balance of Rs. 18 per month should be set-off towards reduction of the principal of the debt.

It is argued that for the application of s. 76 it is sufficient if the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property. The section does not in terms state that the possession of the mortgagee must be taken qua mortgagee.

In my view, the contention of the appellant on this point can by no means be accepted. In the first place, I am of opinion that the transaction referred to in Ex. A is merely a lease with a provision for the payment of rent in advance and can in no sense be described as a mortgage of any sort. It has been held in a number of cases that there is no question of property being held in mortgage unless it is held as security for the debt, and to constitute a mortgage there must also be provision, express or implied for a right of redemption. Upon this point indeed only cite the Privy Council case, Nidha Sah v. Murli Dhar (1) and a decision of this High Court, Kesho Prasad Singh v. Chandrika Prasad Singh (2). In Ex. A there is neither any provision whereby the property is held as security for the debt nor is there any provision at all for redemption. It is clear, in my view, that under Ex. A the lessees came in purely as tenants, and not as mortgagees.

Apart from that however, there can be no question that the lessees remained in possession purely as tenants upon a rental of Rs. 81 per mensem from May 12, 1927, which is the only period with which we are concerned in the present case. That is the clear provision which is found in Ex. A itself.

Lastly, even if it could be held that the possession under Ex. A was possession as mortgagees, it was not as mortgagees under the mortgage in suit, and possession was in no way referable to the mortgages upon which this suit has been brought.

It is quite clear, therefore, that respondents were not in possession as mortgagees but as tenants upon rent under a lease which had nothing whatever to do with the mortgages in suit. This being so, s. 76 of the T. P. Act has, in my opinion no application to the case. It has been held that for s. 76 (h) to be applicable the possession of the mortgagee must be qua mortgagee, Page v. Linwood (3). To a similar effect is the decision of the Bombay High Court in Chunilal Bulakidas Patel v. Abdul Karim Shaikh Subrati (4) where it was held that for the mortgagee in possession to be held liable to account it must be proved that the mortgagee had received possession by virtue of the agreement. There are certain cases which have perhaps gone a little further than this, for example, Kishundayal Bhagat v. Mahabir Bhagat (5) where s. 76 was held applicable when the mortgagee was in possession not directly upon the terms of the mortgage but under a lease which provided that the rent should be set-off towards the interest due upon the mortgage. This decision has been followed in a Madras case, Vengubai Ammal v. Ramaswami Iyer (6). But the principle applied in those cases was that the mortgagees had actually taken possession by way of further security for the debt, and they do not in any way conflict with the contention, which is, to my mind, unassailable, that before s. 76 (h) can be applied it must be shown that the possession of the mortgagee is by way of security for the debt, or in some way referable to the mortgage. In the present case the possession was in no way referable to the mortgage, and, as I have said, s. 76 has clearly no application.

It is argued, as I have said in the alternative that the appellant should get an equitable set-off of the amount due as rent. That amount, however, if due to any one would be due to the mortgagors, defendants Nos. 1 to 5, and the defendant has not shown that it is a sum in any way due to him. His purchase of the property was only just before this suit was brought. He came into possession under his purchase on May 6, 1937 and the suit was brought on May 15, 1937. In the circumstances the question of equitable set-off cannot arise as between the respondents and the appellant. That plea might possibly have been taken by the mortgagors, defendants Nos. 1 to 5, though it may be noted that one of the plaintiffs stated on oath that the rents had actually been set-off against other debts due from the mortgagors. However that may be, no such plea for set-off was raised by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5, and the appellant-defendant No. 10 has not shown that he has got any right, legal or equitable, to raise it.

There is no substance in this contention for the appellant, and, except with regard to the application of the rule of damdupat under s. 7 of the Money-lenders Act, the appeal must fail. For the respondents it was at first argued that interest pendente lite should be allowed, if necessary, by the application of O. XLI, r. 33 of the Civil P. C. Apart, however, from the fact that no cross-objection was filed by the respondents, it appears that it was because compound interest had been allowed at a fairly heavy rate that the learned Subordinate Judge did not allow interest pendente lite. Before his decision could be reversed upon that point, it might be necessary to consider the whole question of the interest allowed, and upon this being pointed out Sir Manmatha Nath Mukharji has not pressed this point for the respondents.

In the result I would allow the appeal to this extent that the decretal amount will be reduced to give effect to the provisions of s. 7 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge with regard to interest pendente lite and for the period of grace will not be altered. A fresh preliminary decree will be drawn up in these terms providing that the amount due must be paid within three months from the date thereof, failing which the property shall be sold in the manner and order directed in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. From the date, if not paid, interest will run at six per cent. per annum. In my opinion, each party to this appeal should bear its own

VELLAYAN CHETTIAR AND OTHERS—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73—Decrees by A, B and C against D and his father E who became insolvent—In execution of A's decree Court allowing Official Receiver to sell entire property as Court's agent within certain time and to pay D's share into Court—Property sold beyond period fixed—Execution petitions by B and C—Sale proceeds subsequently deposited into Court—B and C held entitled to rateable distribution.

A, B and C obtained decrees against D and his father E who became insolvent. On application of A for the execution of his decree, the Official Receiver was permitted by the Court to sell the entire property as an agent of the Court within certain time and deposit into Court the share of D who was non-insolvent. The property was however sold after the period fixed by the Court. B and C applied for execution of their decrees and subsequently the Official Receiver paid into Court D's share in the sale proceeds B and C applied for rateable distribution:

Held, that the receipt by the Official Receiver in contravention of the rules under which he should have been operating, could not by virtue of subsequent ratification of his irregular sale, be deemed to have been a receipt by the Court It could not be said that there had been, at the time when these two execution petitions of B and C were filed, any receipt of these sale proceeds by the Court. All that had then happened was an unauthorized and irregular sale by the Official Receiver and an unauthorized receipt by the Official Receiver of the proceeds of that sale. There was nothing in the hands of the Court resulting from this sale and there was at the time when these execution petitions were filed no subsisting authority to the Official Receiver to sell. Hence the date of the receipt of the assets by the Court must be the date on which the money was actually paid by the Official Receiver into the Court. B and C were therefore entitled to rateable distribution. 35 Ind. C. R. P. to revise the order of the Sub-Judge, Devakottai, dated April 14, 1936.

Mr. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Rajah Ayyar, for the Respondents.

Order.—This petition raises a question relating to rateable distribution which is not, so far as I am aware, covered by any precise authority. The petitioner respondent No. 1 and respondent No. 2, all had decrees against respondent No. 3 and his father who became an insolvent. Respondent No. 1 executed his decree on October 15, 1934, and on January 5, 1935, the Court ordered sale of the entire properties of the father and the son. This order was modified by a later order restricting the sale only to defendant No. 2's half share and after this order, the Official Receiver was impleaded and when he did not appear, the order was again revised directing that the entire properties should be sold. At this stage the Official Receiver wrote to the Court pointing out that if he were permitted to sell the entire property as the agent of the Court and deposit into Court the share of the non-insolvent son, this procedure would be for the benefit of the attaching decree-holder. The Court on February 13, 1935, passed an order permitting the Official Receiver to sell the entire property as desired by him and directing him to hold the sale within three months. The Official Receiver did not hold the sale within the time allowed and the executing Court was approached to withdraw the sale from the Official Receiver and sell through the Court While correspondence between the Court and the Official Receiver was proceeding with reference to this proposal, the Official Receiver actually sold the property on October 28, 1935, the price being received by the Official Receiver in two instalments, on October 29, 1935 and November 7, 1935. It is common ground that on the latter date the execution petitions of the petitioner and respondent No. 2 had not yet been filed. The petitioner's execution petition was filed on November 30, 1935, and that of respondent No. 2 on December 20, 1935. After the Official Receiver's sale was concluded, there was further correspondence and no sale deed was drawn up until on March 30, 1936, the Official Receiver paid the son's share of the sale proceeds into Court and on April 8, 1936, the sale was finally ratified by the Court.

Quite clearly, if the date of the payment of the sale proceeds to the Official Receiver is the date of the receipt of the assets by the Court, for the purpose of s. 73, Civil P. C., the petitioner and respondent No. 2 have no right to share rateably in these assets. If, on the other hand, the date of the receipt is the date when the money was actually paid by the Official Receiver into Court, then both the petitioner and respondent No. 2 are entitled to rateable distribution. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken the view that the date of the receipt of the assets is the date of the receipt by the Official Receiver acting as the agent of the Court. He rests his view largely on the decision in Galstaun v. Woomesh Chandra Banerjee (1), which can hardly be said to be a case exactly covering the facts with which we now have to deal. That was a case of the sale of movable property by the Court and with reference to movable property the rules prescribe that the price of each lot shall be paid at the time of the sale, presumably to the officer who holds the sale. The learned Judges, distinguishing a case relating to immovable property, point out that if the entire purchase money was paid by the purchasers into the hands of the auctioneers in one instalment, it was immaterial for the purpose of s. 73 whether the purchase money was actually paid into the treasury or into the hands of the person employed by the Court to hold the sale.

The present case however presents certain special features. At the time when the Official Receiver held this sale, he was not authorized to hold it. He had failed to hold it within the time allowed and when he actually held the sale, the Court had apparently decided to withdraw from him the power to hold the sale. Presumably, he must be regarded as having been appointed in the first instance as the selling officer under O. XXI, r. 65. But it does not appear that there was any regular proclamation by the Court, though the value for the purpose of the proclamation had been settled at an earlier stage. Assuming that the Official Receiver was the selling officer appointed by the Court under r. 65, his proceedings would necessarily be governed by the provisions of O. XXI. In accordance with those provisions he would have authority to receive a deposit of 25 per cent. of the purchase price, but the balance would under r. 85 be payable into Court. Assuming that the lack of authority of the Official Receiver to sell at the time of the sale and the lack of regularity in the manner of the sale have been condoned by the subsequent ratification of the Court and by the absence of any objection to the irregularities of the procedure, it seems to me difficult to hold that the Official Receiver was the agent of the Court to receive this money when, in the case of sales of immovable property, the rules under which the Official Receiver was authorized contemplate only the power of the officer to receive 25 per cent. of the purchase price, the balance being payable into Court. When there is clearly no authority given to the agent to receive the full amount of the purchase price, I find difficulty in holding that the receipt by the agent in contravention of the rules under which he should have been operating, can, by virtue of subsequent ratification of his irregular sale, be deemed to have been a receipt by the Court; and there is the further difficulty that the adoption of such a view would deprive the other decree holders of their accrued rights of sharing in any assets which might be received by the Court after the date on which their execution petitions were filed.

It cannot, in my opinion, be said that there had been, at the time when these two execution petitions were filed, any receipt of these sale proceeds by the Court. All that had then happened was an unauthorized and irregular sales by the Official Receiver and an unauthorized receipt by the Official Receiver of the proceeds of that sale. There was nothing in the hands of the Court resulting from this sale and there was at the time when these execution petitions were filed no subsisting authority to the Official Receiver to sell. We are not now concerned with the final validity of the sale. That has been accepted by the Court and no one has objected. But it does seem to me apparent that this subsequent ratification by the Court cannot transmute the unauthorized receipt of this money by the Official Receiver into a receipt by the Court. My attention has been drawn to numerous cases relating to the receipt of assets by Collectors executing decrees under Sch. III, Civil P. C. I do not propose to discuss those cases, for it seems to me that they depend upon the special statutory provisions which give to the Collector functions to some extent analogous to those of executing Courts and have no real bearing on the facts of the present case. It is clear that the Official Receiver in this case might have been either the officer appointed by the Court to sell under r. 65, or a party selling with the permission of the Court under r. 83, if the sale is to have any validity so far as the son's share was concerned. In the Court below it was not suggested that he acted under r. 83 and it seems to me unnecessary to consider the case from this aspect.

In the result therefore I am of opinion that the date of the receipt of the assets by the Court must be the date on which the money was actually paid by the Official Receiver into the Court. The petition is therefore allowed with costs here and in the Court below. The petitioner and respondent No. 2 will be entitled to share rateably in the proceeds of the sale of respondent No. 3's share in the property.

HARRIES, C. J. AND MANOHAR LALL, J.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 49—Document connected with partition not registered—Inadmissible to prove actual partition or share of party—Admissible to prove jointness or otherwise of person—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c)—Suit by Hindu widow for possession of husband's property, against his relatives, whether for declaration and consequential relief.

A document connected with a partition is not admissible in evidence in the absence of registration, to prove actual partition and to prove what was allotted to any person by that partition. It is, however, clearly admissible to establish the status of a party to the document or to establish separation in the family and to rebut any case that such party died in a state of jointness. 53 Ind. Cas. 901 (2), relied on.

On the death of a Hindu leaving his property in possession of members of another branch of his family, his widows brought a suit on the allegation that he died in a state of separation and that they as his widows were entitled to possession of the property left by him:

Held, that the suit was one for possession and not for a declaration and consequential relief namely possession of the property following the declaration.

F. A. from the original decree of the Sub-Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated June 30, 1937.

Sir Sultan Ahmed, Messrs. Ray Parasnath and Prem Lall, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. M. Mullick and Rai T. N. Sahay, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is a first appeal brought by plaintiffs from a decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur dismissing their claim for a declaration and recovery of possession of certain property. The plaintiffs were the widows of one Shivaraj who died in the month of September 1934. They alleged that Shivaraj died in a state of separation and that they as his widows were entitled to possession of the property left by Shivaraj. The defendants were the male members of another branch of the family and they claimed that Shivaraj died in a state of jointness with them and, therefore, the plaintiffs had no right to possession of any property and that their only rights were to maintenance out of the joint family properties. The learned Subordinate Judge eventually came to the conclusion that Shivaraj died in a state of jointness and therefore dismissed the plaintiffs' claim in its entirety.

In this appeal the plaintiffs-appellants have urged that certain important documents were tendered by them in evidence in the Court below but were wrongly rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge. These documents have been printed in a supplementary paper-book. The first document, which is printed at pp. 1 and 2 of that supplementary paper-book, is headed "Statement of the exclusive share of Babu Sheoraj Nandan Singh in Mauza Dagar, 1927-28," and, on the face of it, the document appears to have been signed by Shivaraj and Harihar Prasad Singh who is defendant No. 2 in the suit. The other document is printed at pp. 3 to 10 of the supplementary paper-book and is called "Kurra Barawarda of village Madanpur." This document also appears to bear the signature of Shivaraj and Ramhit Singh, defendant No. 1 in this suit. Both the documents are papers connected with a partition, and the learned Judge was of opinion that they were not admissible in evidence by reason of the fact that they were not registered. He accordingly refused to admit them in evidence for any purpose whatsoever. Sir Sultan Ahmed who has appeared on behalf of the appellants concedes that these two documents cannot be admissible in evidence to prove an actual partition by metes and bounds or to prove what share was allotted to any particular person by such partition. As the documents have not been registered as required by s. 17, Regis. Act, they are inadmissible to prove partition or possession of property on partition. Counsel, however, has strongly urged that these documents are admissible to establish the status of Sheoraj Singh or to establish the nature of his possession over property held by him at his death. On the other hand, Mr. S. M. Mullick, who appears on behalf of the respondents, contends that as these papers on the face of them suggest partition they should not be admitted for any purpose whatsoever. In my judgment, the learned Judge was wrong in refusing to admit these documents in evidence. It is true that in the absence of registration they are not admissible in evidence to prove actual partition and to prove what was allotted to any person by that partition. They are, however, in my view, clearly admissible to establish the status of Shivaraj or to establish separation in the family and to rebut any case that Shivaraj died in a state of jointness.

A similar point arose for consideration in Subba Rao v. Mahalakshamamma (1). In that case it was held that a document between two persons containing lists of properties that fell to the share of each on a partition, written in duplicate, signed by each and attested and intended to be evidence of the partition, must be regarded as the formal and operative deed of partition between them; and unless registered as required by s. 17, Regis. Act, such documents are inadmissible in evidence to prove what properties were taken by each on partition. The Court, however, held that the documents were admissible to prove a division in status. There is no real distinction between this Madras case [Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal] (2), and the present case before the Court. The learned Judges of the Madras High Court relied upon a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (2), where their Lordships held that though a certain unregistered document was not admissible to prove a gift it was admissible in evidence to show the character of the possession of the alleged donee. There was a conflict of opinion concerning this question in the past; but such conflict appears to have now been resolved, and the trend of judicial authority is to the effect that documents of a nature of the two excluded documents in the case are admissible in evidence not to prove partition or to prove what properties were allotted but for the limited purpose of proving separation and the status of any of the parties. That being so, the two documents to which I have referred should have been admitted in evidence and considered if they were satisfactorily proved by the plaintiffs who adduced them. In my view these documents must be considered before findings of fact can be arrived at upon the question of separation or otherwise.

Both parties agree that the most convenient course would be to remand the case to the Court below to enable the plaintiffs to tender these two documents in evidence. The plaintiffs will be entitled to call evidence as to their execution and custody and generally to prove their genuineness. The defendants on the other hand will be entitled to call evidence directed to establish that the documents are not genuine and should not be accepted as such. After the Court below has considered the matter, it will forward its report to this Court as soon as convenient. A period of three months should be sufficient for the lower Court to hear this evidence and to forward its report to this Court. Sir Sultan Ahmed has also argued that certain other documents were wrongly rejected by the Court below, apparently, on the ground that they were tendered too late. His complaint is that a document tendered on behalf of defendants on April 6, 1936, and exhibited on April 12, 1936, has been relied upon by the learned Judge, whereas certain documents which were tendered before this date were rejected as being tendered too late. No copies of these documents, the rejection of which is now complained of, have been filed in this Court, and it is impossible for us to say whether the documents were or were not rightly rejected. The matter is left open, and the appellants may ask this Court when the matter again comes before it for hearing to admit the documents if the Court thinks that they were wrongly rejected.

It was reported by the office in this case that there was a deficiency of court-fee in the Court below. The suit was really a suit for possession, but the office appears to think that it was a suit for a declaration and consequential relief, namely possession of the property following the making of a declaration. It is true that something in the nature of a declaration was asked for in the plaint, but in reality the suit was an ordinary suit for possession. In all cases where possession is claimed, the plaintiffs must establish title, and all that the plaintiffs claimed in this case was possession after they had established that they were entitled to it. They were not claiming, firstly, a declaration which would give them a title and then consequential relief after obtaining such relief. It was wholly unnecessary for the plaintiffs in this case to obtain any declaration whatsoever before they were entitled to possession. A recent Special Bench of this Court held that cases of this kind must be regarded as suits purely for possession and that being so, the court-fee levied in the Court below was sufficient.

The result, therefore, is that this case is remanded to the Court below to receive in evidence the two documents to which I have referred and which are printed in the supplementary paper-book and to receive evidence of both parties relating to the same. The learned Judge, after hearing the witnesses and the cross-examination, will forward his report upon these two documents to this Court within a period of three months from to-day. Fourteen days time is given to the parties to make any objections they may desire to make to the report of the learned Judge when received. Let the case be listed before this Bench at the expiry of the fourteen days for objection.

April 22, 1940
HENDERSON AND SEN, JJ.

MAHAMMAD ALI—APPELLANT
DINESH CHANDRA ROY CHOUDHURY AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Muhammadan Law—Waqf—Gift in future, validity—Waqif must be owner at time of dedication—Waqf found to be invalid—Beneficiary, if trespasser until it is set aside—Mussalman Waqf Validating Act (IV of 1913), s. 3—Waqf for maintenance of family and children—Ultimate gift to religious, pious or charitable purpose, is essential—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 53—Transfer in pursuance of contract prior to insolvency—Transfer not in terms of contract—Transfer, if voluntary—Waqf in pursuance of contract found to be invalid—Transfer can be set aside—Creation of waqf by debtor, a day prior to insolvency, in favour of wife and children—Waqf held mala fide—Will—Construction—Intention—Memorandum held neither will nor gift but contract.

Under the Muhammadan Law immediate possession is essential for gift. A gift in future is void. Where the donor retains possession during his lifetime and the donee is to take after his death, the gift is void. Yusuf Ali v. Collector of Tipperah (1), relied on.

There are many kinds of waqfs but the term waqf has a definite legal meaning; it cannot be said that an undertaking to create a waqf is void for uncertainty. If nothing more is said the undertaking means that the person has contracted to create such a waqf as to him seems suitable or best. He is, however, not free to dispose of the property in any way he likes: the disposition must be by way of a valid waqf. When he makes the waqf he will have to specify the objects of the waqf with reasonable certainty or the waqf will be void for uncertainty; but the contract to make a waqf would not be invalid because the terms of the proposed waqf are not mentioned in the contract [p. 544, col. 1.]

Under Muhammadan Law the property dedicated by way of waqf must belong to the waqif at the time of dedication. [p 544, col. 2; p. 515, col. 1.]

The fact that the deed is not a waqf will not make it a void deed. It is a deed by which an interest has been conveyed by the waqif to the beneficiary and until it is set aside, the beneficiary can not possibly be called a trespasser. [p. 545, col. 2; p. 516, col 1.]

In the case of a waqf for the maintenance of the waqif's family and children, an ultimate gift for a religious, pious or charitable purpose is essential for its validity as a waqf and the intention to make such a gift cannot be inferred from the mere use of the word waqf. 147 Ind. Cas. 196 (2), relied on. [p. 544, col. 2]

The waqif by the waqfnama provided for the payment of certain trivial sums payable annually to the Imam of a Masjid, to a High School, a Girl's School and a Madrasa. He also awarded two gold medals. The rest of the income was divided among the members of his family and on their deaths among their eldest male issue. He then further stated that if any of the beneficiaries died without male issue the income would "revert to the waqf estate and will be appropriated by the mutwalli";

Held, that there was no ultimate gift to a religious, pious or charitable purpose and consequently the waqf was invalid.

A transfer which the debtor is bound to make in pursuance of a contract entered into prior to his insolvency petition is voluntary within the meaning of s. 53, Prov. Insol. Act if it is not in terms of the contract. Consequently where a waqf, which the debtor was found to create under a contract, is found to be invalid, the transfer is voluntary and is liable to be annulled if it falls within the mischief of s 53.

The deed of transfer purported to be a waqfnama executed by the debtor just one day before he applied for insolvency. Although he could retain considerable benefits out of the properties, he divested himself of all the rights therein and conferred them almost wholly on his wife and children.

Held, that the transaction was mala fide and without consideration and was liable to be annulled under s 53, Prov. Insol. Act.

In construing a document alleged to be a will the intention of the person executing it must be deduced from the language of the document itself. It is entirely wrong for a Court to interpret a document in a particular way because some one taking under the document chooses to put that interpretation upon it. The intention of a party to a document must be deduced from the document itself by giving the words therein their ordinary natural meaning. [p. 543, col. 1.]

On the objection of the son to the father's application for revocation of the settlement of his properties under the Ben. Settled Estates Act, the son and the father entered into a transaction on condition that the son should withdraw his objections. The transaction was embodied in a memorandum which was executed by both the parties. By its terms the son was to withdraw his objections if he was allotted roughly one-third of the property. The father agreed to this, provided, the son did not take possession of the property till after the father's death and provided, the son undertook to execute a suitable waqf of the remaining two-thirds when he got the property. The son accepted these terms and the settlement was accordingly revoked by their joint application. After the father's death the son created a waqf of the properties in pursuance of the agreement appointing his son as mutwalli. It was contended that the document operated as a will:

Held, that the terms of the memorandum were irrevocable. The memorandum was not a will since it was executed both by father and son who took benefit under it and it took effect during the lifetime of the father, nor was it a gift. The memorandum evidenced a contract between the parties for which there was a consideration given by both parties.

A. from the original order of the District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated May 29, 1939.

Messrs. Atul Chandra Gupta and Subodh Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Phani Bhusan Brahma, Rajendra Chandra Guha, Abul Quasem No. II, Bama Prasanna Sen Gupta and Amiya Ranjan Roy Choudhury, for the Respondents.

Sen, J.—This appeal arises out of an application made by the Official Receiver of 24-Parganas under s. 53, Prov. Insol. Act, for the setting aside of a transfer made by Altaf Ali, an insolvent, on the ground that it was a voluntary transfer made without consideration and not in good faith. The deed of transfer purports to be a waqfnama executed by Altaf Ali on August 27, 1934, just one day before he applied for insolvency. The deed is Ex. F. For a proper appreciation of the different points urged, it will be necessary to state the following facts. The property transferred together with other property belonged to Nawab Bahadur Nawab Ali Chaudhuri. In 1911 Nawab Bahadur Nawab Ali Choudhuri settled all his property under the Bengal Settled Estates Act (III of 1904) by which he became the first life-tenant, Altaf Ali the second life tenant, and Mahammad Ali, Altaf Ali's eldest son, the third life tenant. In 1927 the Nawab wanted to revoke this settlement and to make a waqf of this property, and on September 24, 1927, he applied under s. 24 of the aforesaid Act for a revocation of the settlement. Altaf Ali opposed this application. Sir Provash Chandra Mitter, a friend of the family, intervened and the dispute between father and son was settled on certain terms. These terms were recorded in a document which is dated October 20, 1928, and which is described in the heading thus:

"Memorandum of points of settlement arrived at between the Hon'ble Nawab Bahadur Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri Khan Bahadur, C. I. E. and Nawabzada Saiyed Altaf Ali, in connection with the application of the Nawab Bahadur to the Govt. of Bengal for permission for revocation of the settlement of certain properties of his settled estates and of other differences and disputes between the parties."

The document is referred to in the learned Judge's judgment as Ex. E. On October 29, 1928, a joint petition was filed by father and son by which both parties stated that they had come to terms and that they desired that the settlement under the Bengal Estates Settlement Act should be cancelled. They made the memorandum, Ex. E, a part of this petition. It will now be necessary to say something about the terms of compromise between Nawab Bahadur Nawab Ali Chaudhuri and his son which were recorded in the memorandum of October 20, 1928. The terms substantially were these: The Nawab Bahadur proposed to execute a waqf of all his properties except a certain portion approximating roughly one-third. Regarding this one-third the Nawab Bahadur would remain in possession thereof during his lifetime, but without any power "to sell, transfer, encumber, deteriorate or damage it in any way." On the death of the Nawab Bahadur Altaf Ali would take possession of part of this one-third immediately and of the remaining part after three years. The Nawab Bahadur also agreed to set apart an income of Rs. 500 out of his estate for specific charities the administration of which would be entrusted to Altaf Ali. Then comes a term which is embodied in para. 8 of the memorandum. As this is a most important provision regarding the interpretation of which there has been a great deal of discussion, I consider that it should be set out verbatim. Paragraph 8 runs thus: "Nawabzada Altaf Ali agrees to make a suitable waqf of the interest allotted to him herein."

The memorandum goes on to state that the parties agreed that there should be an application filed before the Govt. asking for the cancellation of the settlement under the Bengal Settled Estates Act and that within one month of the date of the memorandum the parties, their heirs, executors and administrators would execute necessary documents to give effect to the compromise arrived at. If any party failed to do this the other would have the right to enforce the terms of the agreement through

Court. The last paragraph of the memorandum states that the compromise has been arrived at on the mediation of Sir Provash Chahdra Mitter and that if any difficulty or difference arose in regard to the drafting of the documents or in regard to any points not provided for in the memorandum the matter would be referred to him and his decision on the matter would be final. On November 13, 1928, the Govt. of Bengal gave effect to the joint application of the Nawab Bahadur and Altaf Ali and cancelled the settlement of properties of the Nawab Bahadur made under the Bengal Settled Estates Act. On April 25, 1929, the Nawab Bahadur executed a waqfnama with respect to two-thirds of his property leaving out the portion allotted by the compromise to Altaf Ali. In this document, which is Ex. D, there is a recital of the history of the family and property of the Nawab Bahadur. Mention is made in the waqfnama of the compromise between the Nawab Bahadur and his son with respect to the application for the setting aside of the settlement under the Bengal Settled Estates Act and the terms of the compromise are set out in para. 7 of the deed. These terms are in the main the same as those contained in the Memorandum of Points (Ex. E), but they are given in greater detail. The nature of the waqf which Altaf Ali agreed to create is described as a

"waqf-alal-aulad for the purposes of making proper provision for the maintenance of himself (Altaf Ali) and of all his children after his death : (vide para. 7 (ka) of the waqfnama, Ex. D)."

Again in para. 7 (jha) of the waqfnama Ex. D, the kind of waqf which Altaf Ali is to create is described in these words :

"I have agreed to give properties to Sriman Syed Faizal Bari Mohamed Altaf-ul-Ali Choudhuri for enjoyment and possession by him till his death, on executing a wdqf-alal-aulad, and after his death for enjoyment by his heirs according to the shares as provided by Muhammadan Law; but in the notes of memo it has not been stated through mistake who shall be the mutwalli after his death."

There is a further statement in this paragraph that Altaf Ali should be the first mutwalli and after him any one of his sons as he may appoint. The Nawab Bahadur states in this document that a draft agreement of the terms of the compromise had been sent to Altaf Ali for his signature and complains that Altaf Ali had raised certain objections and refused to sign it. He says that thereafter Sir Provash Chandra Mitter after considering the objections of Altaf Ali made alterations in the draft and sent it to Altaf Ali but that he had not yet signed it. The Nawab Bahadur goes on to say that there had been great delay already and that he was executing his waqf deed, in accordance with the terms of the agreement, without waiting any further.

On April 16, 1929, a few days after executing this deed, the Nawab Bahadur died. On August 5, 1929, his heirs other than Altaf Ali executed releases in favour of Altaf Ali with respect to the one-third share allotted to him. Nothing further appears to have been done to carry out the terms of the compromise by Altaf Ali till August 27, 1934, when he executed the deed Ex. F, which purports to be a deed of waqf-alal aulad appointing his son Mahammad Ali mutwalli. On the next day Altaf Ali applied to be adjudicated insolvent and he was so adjudicated on April 8, 1935. Thereafter the Official Receiver applied under s. 53, Pro. Insol. Act, for the setting aside of the waqf. The application was opposited by Altaf Ali, his wife, the Commissioner of waqf and the mutwalli Mahammad Ali. The learned District Judge has annulled the waqf and the mutwalli Mahammad Ali appeals. I do not propose to deal with every point taken before the learned District Judge and disposed of by him but shall confine myself to those arguments which have been persisted in in this Court.

Mr. Brahma appearing for the Official Receiver contended that the memorandum of the points of compromise operated as a will and that Altaf Ali got the property which is the subject-matter of these proceedings by way of bequest. He then argues that under the Muhammadan Law a conditional bequest takes effect free from the condition and that Altaf Ali got the property free from any obligation to create a waqf. The disposition by Altaf Ali was therefore a voluntary disposition and as it was without consideration and not in good faith it should be set aside under s. 53, Prov. Insol. Act. This contention has found favour with the learned District Judge who has held that the memorandum of agreement was a will. Mr. Gupta for the appellant contends that it is impossible to treat this memorandum as a will as it contained terms which were irrevocable and as there is nothing in the terms to suggest that the Nawab Bahadur was making a will. The reasons which induced the learned Judge to hold that the memorandum is a will appear to me to be quite inadequate and erroneous. He says that in determining this question the intention of the party executing the document must be considered and that no one was likely to know that intention better than Altaf Ali, the son of the Nawab Bahadur. He then points out that in the document Ex. F by which Altaf Ali purports to create a waqf he recites that the property was "bequeathed" to him. Next the learned Judge says that the dispositions made in the memorandum were revocable as the terms were vague. On these grounds he holds that the memorandum is a will.

In my opinion, the learned Judge has gone quite wrong both in his method of approach and in his conclusions. A very obvious fact which the learned Judge has failed to notice is that the memorandum Ex. E is not a document executed by Nawab Bahadur Nawab Ali alone but by Nawab Bahadur Nawab Ali and Altaf Ali. It is difficult to conceive of a will being executed jointly by the testator and legatee. Next, if the document be treated as having been executed by Nawab Bahadur Nawab Ali alone his intention must be deduced from the language of the document itself. It is entirely wrong for a Court to interpret a document in a particular way because some one taking under the document chooses to put that interpretation upon it. Altaf Ali's interpretation of the document is entitrely irrelevant. The intention of a party to a document must be deduced from the document itself by giving the words therein their ordinary natural meaning. I have set out how the document describes itself in the earlier part of this judgment. It is merely a record of the points of a compromise arrived at between Altaf Ali and his father, the Nawab Bahadur. There are no words in the document which can by any straining of language be interpreted as words denoting a bequest. A will takes effect after the death of the testator. In this case the document took effect during the lifetime of Nawab Bahadur Nawab Ali. The settlement under the Bengal Settled Estates Act was to be revoked at once and this was done. The Nawab Bahadur was to make a waqf of about two-thirds of his property during his lifetime and this was done. Next a will under the Muhammadan Law is revocable except a will whereby a slave is emancipated. I find it difficult to understand how the learned Judge could hold that the terms of this document were revocable. He says that some of the terms were vague and unenforceable and conculdes from this that the terms were revocable. I do not think, that the terms are vague but even if they were vague I would point out that the question whether a contract can be enforced or not is quite a different one from the question whether a disposition is revocable. By this memorandum both parties bound themselves to do certain things and pursuant to the agreement the Nawab Bahadur did certain things and Altaf Ali allowed the settlement under the Bengal Settled Estates Act to be revoked. The terms were in my opinion irrevocable. I hold therefore that the memorandum was not a will and that Altaf Ali did not get the property under any will. If Altaf Ali got the property under a will, then no doubt, under the Muhammadan Law he would take it free from any condition, but as the memorandum is not a will this argument fails.

Mr. Brahma next argued that if Altaf Ali did not get the property under a will he got it by way of gift and that a condition attached to a gift being invalid under the Muhammadan Law he got it absolutely. Mr. Gupta contends that there was no gift at all and that Altaf Ali got the property under a contract and was bound by the terms of the contract. I agree with the view of Mr. Gupta. It cannot be said that the memorandum of the agreement between the Nawab Bahadur and Altaf Ali is a deed of gift. The memorandum evidences not a gift but a contract between the parties for which there was consideration given by both parties. It is hardly necessary to consider the Muhammadan Law regarding gifts as Altaf Ali took not under a deed of gift but under a contract by which he undertook to withdraw his opposition to the Nawab Bahadur's application for revocation in return for certain benefits. I might say incidentally however that in no view can it be said that there was a valid gift of the property to Altaf Ali. Under the Muhammadan Law a gift in futuro is void. Immediate possession is essential for a gift. Here the Nawab Bahadur retains possession during his lifetime and Altaf Ali is to take after his death. Such a gift is void under the Muhammadan Law. This was decided in Yusuf Ali v. Collector of Tipperah (1).

The transaction should be interpreted by reference to its terms and not by having recourse to ingenious fictions. The transaction between the parties broadly speaking was this. Altaf Ali would withdraw his objection to the application of the Nawab Bahadur for revocation if he was allotted roughly 1/3rd of the property. The Nawab Bahadur agreed to this provided Altaf Ali did not take possession of the property till after the Nawab Bahadur's death and provided Altaf Ali undertook to execute a suitable waqf when he got the property. Altaf Ali accepted these terms. It is argued by Mr. Gupta that Altaf Ali, having agreed to these terms, was bound thereby to create a waqf with respect to these properties and that the waqf created by him not being a voluntary transfer it could not be set aside under s. 53, Pro. Insol. Act, as that section applied only to voluntary transfers. Mr. Brahma's answer to this argument is two-fold. He says that if the transaction recorded in the memorandum Ex. E is interpreted as being an agreement, it cannot be enforced as the term "suitable waqf" is too vague, therefore Altaf Ali when he got the property could not be compelled to execute a whqf. That being so, the waqf was a voluntary one and liable to be set aside. The next branch of his argument is that by the document Ex. F Altaf Ali has not created a waqf at all as there is no ultimate gift to religious or charitable purposes; it is not such a transfer as was contemplated by the agreement and therefore it is liable to be set aside as a voluntary transfer made without consideration and in bad faith.

I am not inclined to accept the first branch of Mr. Brahma's argument. True, there are many kinds of waqfs but the term waqf has a definite legal meaning; it cannot be said that an undertaking to create a waqf is void for uncertainty. If nothing more is said the undertaking means that the person has contracted to create such a waqf as to him seems suitable or best. He is however not free to dispose of the property in any way he likes; the disposition must be by way of a valid waqf. True, when he makes the waqf he will have to specify the objects of the waqf with reasonable certainty or the waqf will be void for uncertainty; but the contract to make a waqf would not be invalid because the terms of the proposed waqf are not mentioned in the contract. I hold therefore that the contract of which the notes are recorded in the memorandum Ex. E is a valid and enforceable contract binding on Altaf Ali and had created a valid waqf in terms of the contract I am of opinion that it could not be annulled.

The next branch of Mr. Brahma's argument creates difficulties in the way of the appellant. He says that the waqf is invalid as there is no ultimate gift for a religious, pious or charitable purpose. An examination of the terms of the deed Ex. F executed by Altaf Ali which he describes as a waqfnama shows that there is no ultimate gift to a religious, pious or charitable purpose. By this deed Altaf Ali provides for the payment of certain trivial sums payable annually to the Imam of the Bogra Jumma Masjid, to a High School, a Girl's School and a Madrasa. He also awards two gold medals. The rest of the income is divided among the members of his family and on their deaths among their eldest male issue. He then states that if any of the beneficiaries die without male issue the income would "revert to the waqf estate and will be appropriated by the mutwalli." Now the Waqf Validating Act, VI of 1913 states that it is lawful for a Mussalman to create a waqf for the maintenance and support wholly or partially of his family children or descendants or if he is a Hanafi Mussalman for his own maintenance and support during his lifetime provided that the ultimate benefit in such case is expressly or impliedly reserved for the poor or for any other purposes recognized by the Mussalman Law as a religious, pious or charitable purpose of a permanent nature. This is s. 3 of the said Act. The present disposition is for the maintenance of the waqf's family, but there is no ultimate gift for a religious, pious or charitable purpose. A waqf has therefore not been created by Altaf Ali. In this connection I would refer to the case in Tahiruddin Ahmad v. Masihuddin Ahmad (2) where it was held in the case of a disposition like the present one that an ultimate gift for religious, pious or charitable purposes was essential for its validity as a waqf and that the intention to make such a gift cannot be inferred from the mere use of the word waqf.

Mr. Gupta for the appellant admits very frankly that a valid waqf has not been created by Altaf Ali but he argues that this does not matter. He contends that the Receiver has nothing to do with the validity of the waqf and that it is for the mutwalli or the beneficiaries to compel Altaf Ali to make a valid waqf. I am unable to accept this view. Altaf Ali is the owner of the property by virtue of the contract with Nawab Bahadur Nawab Ali Choudhury and the subsequent releases executed by the Nawab Bahadur's heirs, with this limitation that he is bound to make a valid waqf with respect to this property in terms of the contract. Indeed if he be not the owner he could not under the Muhammadan Law make a waqf of the property as under that law the property dedicated by way of waqf must belong to the waqif at the time of dedication. This view is expressed by Sir Dinshah Mulla in his treatise on Muhammadan Law relying on a passage at p. 562, Vol. I of Baillies' Digest of Muhammadan Law. That being so, until Altaf Ali makes a valid waqf in terms of the contract his creditors have the right to have recourse to this property to the extent of his interest therein. If Altaf Ali makes a transfer which is not in accordance with his contract it cannot be said that the transfer is one which he is compelled to make; it would be a voluntary transfer and if it fell within the mischief of s. 53, Prov. Insol. Act, in other respects it would be liable to be annulled. Only such a transfer is protected as Altaf Ali is bound to make in terms of his contract with his father. For instance a gift by Altaf Ali to a friend within two years of his application for insolvency would be liable to annulment on an application under s. 53, Prov. Insol. Act.

In the present case Altaf Ali has not made a valid waqf of the property, the transfer is therefore not in terms of his contract and must be treated as a voluntary transfer. That it is without consideration and not bona fide is quite apparent from the admitted circumstances and indeed this is not seriously challenged. The waqf was created a day before the application for insolvency; although under the terms of the contract Altaf Ali could retain considerable benefits out of the property he divests himself of all rights therein and confers them almost wholly on his wife and children. The transaction is clearly mala fide and is liable to be annulled under s. 53, Prov. Insol. Act. I express no opinion whether the other terms of the deed Ex. F which is described erroneously as a waqfnama, are in accordance with the terms of the compromise. It is not necessary to decide that now as the transfer is not a waqf at all. The order of the learned District Judge is maintained but for reasons other than those on which his decision is based. The Receiver shall take immediate possession of the property but he shall not sell the property. He will be entitled to appropriate the income thereform for distribution among the creditors. The respondents shall give up possession to the Receiver forthwith. The appeal is dismissed. There will be no order for costs.

Henderson, J.—I agree and have little to add. The Receiver's application, though under s. 53, Insol. Act, raises a question under s. 4, probably in anticipation of the objection which the appellant would almost certainly make. The appellant could not even pretend that the insolvent received any consideration for the deed. Furthermore inasmuch as it was executed on the day preceding the application for insolvency and reserved nothing for the executant it could not be said that it was executed in good faith. It would therefore be impossible for the appellant to resist the Receiver's application if the deed was a voluntary one. The contention of the appellant is that the insolvent was legally bound to execute a waqf and that he had no interest in the property which could pass to the Receiver. This is the substantial question which has been contested between the parties.

In support of his case the Receiver attempted to show that the property passed to the insolvent either by a will or on intestacy. I agree with what has been said by my learned brother on that aspect of the case. The points of agreement between the insolvent and his father are contained in the memorandum which was attached to the petition to His Excellency the Governor-in-Council. As a result of the agreement the insolvent withdrew his opposition and the Governor-in-Council sanctioned the revocation of the settlement. It is therefore perfectly idle to contend that the agreement was not acted upon. When the settlement was revoked the Nawab Bahadur did not obtain the property in its original state but subject to the terms of the agreement for example, it would not have been open to him to transfer or mortgage the property.

In the second place the Receiver contends that even if he is not entitled to sell the property, he is entitled to be put into possession, the deed executed by the insolvent not being a waqf within the terms of the agreement. On this branch of the case Mr. Gupta contended that that was not a matter in which the Receiver could intervene at all. The insolvent was legally bound to execute a valid waqf and if there was any defect in the deed actually executed, that was not the business of the Receiver. His proper course would be to take steps to eject the appellant as a trespasser. In my judgment that is putting the case far too high. The deed is certainly not a waqf but that will not make it a void deed. It is a deed by which an interest has been conveyed by the insolvent to the appellant and until it is set aside the appellant could not possibly be called a trespasser.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 41, 42—Insolvent directed to apply for discharge within certain time, making delay in applying—If ground for refusing absolute order of discharge — Application for discharge delayed—Petition giving reasons for delay filed—Application admitted and notices for hearing issued—Whether amounts to extending of time and condoing of delay—Court considering that discharge should be refused under cl. (a) of s. 41 (2)—Application of cl. (b) or (c) or both should be considered.

Where a person is adjudged insolvent and directed to apply for his discharge within certain time, the delay in so applying is not one of the grounds specified in s. 42, Pro. Insol. Act at all for refusing to grant an absolute order of discharge. It may be a ground for annulling the adjudication.

No doubt, even in a case where the application for time had not been filed until after the expiry of the time fixed, it is still open to the Court in a proper case to allow time, provided that the adjudication has never been actually annulled under s. 43. But whether that should or should not be done upon the merits is a question for consideration.

An insolvent applied for his discharge beyond the time within which he was directed to so apply explaining his failure to apply in time. Upon this petition the order passed by the Court was: "Separate petition showing cause of delay filed. Admit the discharge petition. Issue notice to creditors fixing February 19, for hearing." When the matter came up for hearing, the Court refused the final discharge on the ground that the application was time-barred and no sufficient cause was shown for the delay:

Held, that the order of the Court admitting the discharge petition and directing issue of notice for hearing, could not be taken to mean that the time was extended by the Court and the delay condoned. Until the order refusing discharge was passed the question of the sufficiency of the cause for delay had never received judicial consideration from the Court at all, and the order in the order-sheet was a mere routine order placing the whole matter for consideration after notice.

If the Judge is of opinion that an absolute discharge should be refused under cl. (a), of s. 41 (2), Pro. Insol. Act then he should consider the possible application of cls. (b) or (c), or both, to the case, and pass an order accordingly.

Mr. K. N. Lal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Hareshwar Prasad Sinha and S. M. Saleem, for the Respondents.

Meredith, J.—This is an appeal by an insolvent against an order of the learned Additional District Judge of Darbhanga, dated December 11, 1939, under s. 41 (2) (a) of the Act, refusing an absolute discharge.

The appellant filed his application for adjudication on August 20, 1935. He was adjudicated insolvent on December 5, 1936 and directed to apply for his discharge within one year. He did not do this. He applied only on December 21, 1937 sixteen days late, stating in his application as a reason for the delay that he had been suffering from fever. He was directed to file a separate application, explaining his failure to apply in time, and on January 17, 1938 he did file a petition with an affidavit again ascribing the delay to his illness. Upon this petition the order passed by the Court was: "Separate petition showing cause of delay filed. Admit the discharge petition. Issue notice to creditors fixing February 19, 1938, for hearing". When the matter came up for hearing, the contesting respondent (creditor No. 18) opposed the discharge. The learned Judge observed that the first ground for refusing final discharge was that the application was time-barred, since the petition for final discharge had not been filed within the time fixed. This ground, he said, was to his mind decisive, because he did not consider that sufficient cause had been shown for the delay. Apart from this, he considered that absolute discharge should be refused, because the insolvent had not filed registers and accounts regarding the shop kept by him before adjudication, and also he appeared to have run a rice and dal shop while under adjudication. For all the above reasons, he said, he refused an absolute order of discharge.

The order of the learned Judge is defective in several respects. First of all, the ground mentioned by him as decisive for refusing discharge, namely, the delay in the application, is not one of the grounds specified in s. 42, at all for refusing to grant an absolute order for discharge. It might have been a ground for annulling the adjudication. But that is an aspect of the matter which the learned Judge did not consider at all. The main ground given for the order is, therefore, not a sound one, and the point which should have been considered in that connection, namely, whether the adjudication should have been annulled, was not considered. It has been argued that by the order of January 17, which was to admit the discharge petition and issue notice for hearing, time must be taken to have been extended by the Court and the delay to have been condoned. If that were really so, then it would not have been open for the learned Judge in his final order to consider that question fresh and come to a different conclusion. In fact, however, I am satisfied that until the order under appeal the question of the sufficiency of the cause for delay had never received judicial consideration from the Court at all, and the order in the order-sheet was a mere routine order placing the whole matter for consideration after notice. No doubt, even in a case where the application for time has not been filed until after the expiry of the time fixed, it is still open to the Court in a proper case to allow time, provided that the adjudication has never been actually annulled under s. 43. This has been laid down by this Court in Gopal Ram v. Magni Ram (1). But whether that should or should not be done upon the merits is a question for consideration.

In the second place, the order of the learned Judge is an incomplete order. It simply refuses to grant an absolute discharge, but does not specify any further conditions, and does not settle the future position of the insolvent. It can hardly have been the intention of the learned Judge that the appellant should remain an undischarged insolvent for the rest of his life The Act has provided for cases of this kind in s. 41 in the provisions of s. 41 (2) (b) and (c). If the learned Judge was of opinion that an absolute discharge should be refused under cl. (a), then he should have considered the possible application of cls. (b) or (c), or both, to the case, and passed an order accordingly.

Furthermore, it appears from the report of the Receiver that there were certain assets of the insolvent for which up to that date he had been unable to realise anything. Amongst these assets were included certain lands, and it appears from the evidence of the contesting creditor in this matter that he was willing to take these lands in part satisfaction of his claim. This also would afford an additional ground for considering the application of s. 41 (b) or (c) to the case.

In the circumstances the most equitable course, in my opinion, is to set aside this order, and remand the case for fresh consideration in the light of these observations. It is stated on behalf of the appellant that the respondent-creditor No. 18 has never proved his debt, though it may be noted that in the very application for adjudication of the appellant he stated that he was under arrest in execution of this creditor's decree. It is also stated for the appellant that out of the amount owing to this creditor a sum of about Rs. 300, has been realised by the creditor in execution proceedings against the insolvent's brother. Both these matters are matters which it will be open to the appellant to place before the learned Judge for consideration when the case comes up for re-consideration under this order. The parties will bear their own costs of this appeal.

Chatterji, J.—I agree.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), s. 3 (ii), Proviso A—Criterion for applicability of proviso is date of assessment and not period for which it is made.

The criterion for the applicability of Proviso A to s. 3 (ii), Mad. Agri Relief Act, is not the period in respect of which the assessment is made but the date of the assessment. Proviso A only disqualifies persons who have been assessed to income-tax in either of the two financial years ending March 31, 1938, and it does not lay down any restriction regarding the period in respect of which that assessment might have been made. C. R. P. No. 1020 of 1939, relied on.

C. R. P. under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Periakulam, dated August 19, 1938 and passed in M. P. No. 734 of 1938 in E. P. No. 648 of 1937 in O. S. No. 15 of 1937.

Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Petitioners.

Mr. T. P. Gopalakrishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

Wadsworth, J.—These revision petitions all arise out of applications by sons of the late Bommayya Goundan under s. 19 of Act IV of 1938, to scale down decrees on promissory notes passed against their father.

It is contended that Bommayya Goundan was the manager of a joint family consisting of himself and his sons and that the debts in respect of which the decree were passed were joint family debts. The learned District Munsif has found that the sons were not entitled to the benefit of the Act, because Bommayya Goundan was in the year 1936-1937 assessed to income-tax at the time when he was the manager of the joint family. The main contention urged in these petitions was that Proviso A to s. 3 (ii) of the Act did not apply in a case in which the assessment was made in the year 1936-1937 but in respect of the income of the previous year. This contention cannot succeed having regard to the words of the proviso which are not identical with but substantially the same as those in Proviso B in respect of which we have held in Pandiri Sarveswara Rao v. Maturi Umamaheswara Rao (1), that the criterion is not the period in respect of which the assessment is made but the date of the assessment. Proviso A only disqualifies persons who have been assessed to income-tax in either of the two financial years ending March 31, 1938 and it does not lay down any restriction regarding the period in respect of which that assessment might have been made.

A further contention relates to the question whether Bommayya Goundan was assessed in his individual capacity or as manager of the joint family. No doubt, if he was assessed expressly as manager of the joint family, all the members of that family would be disqualified from claiming to the agriculturists. The Collector's certificate Ex. 1 does not state that he was assessed in his capacity as manager of the joint family. The actual order of assessment was not produced in the trial Court but we are informed that it shows Bommayya Goundan could have been assessed in his individual capacity. The learned District Munsif does not appear to have applied his mind to the distinction between the assessment of a person in his individual capacity or the assessment of that person as manager of a joint family. He seems to have assumed that, because Bommayya Goundan was in fact the manager of a joint family at the time when he was assessed to income-tax, the assessment was necessarily in respect of joint family income. It seems to us that this is a question which should be elucidated by the production of the actual order of assessment, and in view of the way in which the learned District Munsif has regarded the question we do not think it proper to allow the petitioners an opportunity to produce the order of assessment at this stage. We may point out that the revision petitions are filed only on behalf of three of the sons, the other son being disqualified from claiming as an agriculturist on personal grounds. We, therefore, allow the three revision petitions and remit the applications so far as these petitioners are concerned to the lower Court for fresh disposal after allowing both parties to adduce evidence on the question whether Bommayya Goundan's assessment was in his individual capacity or on his capacity as manager of the joint family. The petitioners having failed on their main contention we think it proper that each party should bear his own costs in revision.

October 17, 1940
YOUNG, C. J. AND BLACKER, J.
MUHAMMAD YAR—PETITIONER
versus
ALI MUHAMMAD—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Person of 20 years age and healthy must be presumed to be capable of maintaining himself — Burden is on him, to establish contrary.

A person who is 20 years old and who is healthy and does not suffer from any illness must be presumed to be capable of maintaining himself. His station in life does not make any difference in this question and the burden of proving to the contrary is on him. [p. 550, col. 2.]

Facts—By order dated July 4, 1932 a sum of Rs. 15 per mensem was granted to Muhammad Yar, son of Ali Muhammad, as maintenance allowance under s. 488, Criminal P. C., by Mr. Mieen-ud-Din, Magistrate, First Class, Fazilka. Ali Muhammad prayed for cancellation of this order in the Court of Rai Sahib Lala Vidya Dhar, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Fazilka, on the ground that Muhammad Yar was no longer a child as he had attained majority. A copy of the birth certificate of the boy was filed showing that he was born on February 14, 1920, and therefore had attained majority on February 14, 1938. This was not contested. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate held that Muhammad Yar was no longer a child within the meaning of s. 488, Criminal P. C., and therefore cancelled the maintenance order. Against this order, Muhammad Yar has come up in revision.

Report.—The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds: The petitioner is the legitimate son of the respondent Ali Muhammad, who is a substantial land-owner, being the proprietor of some 5000 ghumaons of land. The learned Counsel for the petitioner has drawn my attention to the rulings reported in Bhagat Singh v. Emperor (1) and Khedani Rajwarin v. Lagan Singh (2), which lay down that the word "child" as used in s. 488, Criminal P. C., simply means a son or daughter and reference to age is purposely omitted therein. The proposition is laid down that any son or daughter is entitled to claim maintenance whatever his or her age may be, so long as he or she is unable to maintain himself or herself. In the first case, a lame boy, aged 22, was held unable to maintain himself. In the second case, it was remarked that the ability of a child to maintain itself is a question of fact in each case. The lower Court has relied on Gangaramsa v. Vishnusa (3) and Abdul Rahim v. Ma Shwe May (4) for the contrary view that a boy who has attained majority cannot legally demand maintenance from his father under s. 488, Criminal P. C. These rulings were based on the Madras ruling reported in Krishnaswami Iyer v. Chanda Vadana (5). The same view was apparently taken in Hemanta Kumar v Monorama Debi (6). I have however not been referred to any ruling of our own High Court taking a different view from that expressed in Bhagat Singh v. Emperor (1). This ruling was referred to in Shanno Devi v. Dayaram (7), a case of revision; but the point does not appear to have been decided.

I feel bound by the Punjab ruling referred to above. The view taken by the lower Court therefore seems to me to be erroneous. It should have been held, in my opinion, that a boy is entitled to claim maintenance from his father under s. 488, Criminal P. C., as long as he is unable to maintain himself. Inability to maintain himself may be due to mental physical or other causes. The petitioner is at present a student in a local school. His academic career has been none too bright. But that by itself is no ground for withholding maintenance from him. In any case, the learned Magistrate has not gone into the question of the boy's own ability to maintain himself. Prima facie it seems to me that he being the son of a substantial zamindar is not expected to earn his livelihood as an ordinary labourer. But this is an aspect of the matter which should, in my opinion, be decided on proper evidence by the learned Magistrate, I would, therefore, recommend that the order of cancellation be set aside and the learned Magistrate directed to go into the question of the ability of the boy to maintain himself and then pass an order in accordance with law.

Order of Reference.

Ram Lall, J.—The sole point raised in this order of reference is whether the word "child" used in s. 488, Criminal P. C., can apply to a person who has attained the age of majority. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Fazilka, held that as the boy in respect of whom a maintenance allowance of Rs. 45 per mensem had been fixed under s. 488 had now attained the age of 18 the maintenance order was discharged. The learned Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, on revision held that the word "child" was not confined to minors and was synonymous with son or daughter of whatever age and that so long as this person was unable to maintain himself or herself, he or she was entitled to claim maintenance. Whether he or she was unable to maintain himself or herself was always a question of fact. In support of this view the learned Judge relied on a decision of the Punjab Chief Court reported in Bhagat Singh v. Emperor (1) where Chevis, J. held that the word "child" simply meant son or daughter and that reference to age was purposely omitted from the section.

The current of authority seems to be the other way. In Abdul Rahim v. Ma Shwe May (4), it was held that a child of 17 or 18 could not insist on staying in school in order to better his prospects. The boy in this case had only passed the VII standard of Anglo-Vernacular Examination and the ratio decidendi appears to be that such a boy could maintain himself by manual labour or because of the small amount of eduction that he possessed.

In U Ba Thaung v. Ma Aye (8) a girl of 22 was held not to be entitled to maintenance after she had attained majority. The learned Judges, who decided this case, however, refused to lay down a rigid rule and left the question open whether a person who, by reason of physical infirmity, was unable to earn his livelihood could still claim maintenance after attaining majority. The learned Judges merely observed that the section ordinarily contemplated the case of a child unable to maintan itself owing to its tender year; but when the child attained majority, a strong presumption arose that the child was no longer unable to maintain itself. This case, therefore, did not directly decide the point but the observations made therein, though not necessary for the purpose of decision, strongly support the view that on attaining majority the right to maintenance ceases. In Baran Shanta v. Ma Chan Tha May 85 Ind. Cas. 375 (9) it was again held by the Rangoon Court that a father was bound to maintain his child under the age of majority. In the Madras Court the view has been consistently held that the word "child" means a person who has not attained the age of majority: vide Krishnaswami Iyer v. Chanda Vadana (5). In Hemanta Kumar v. Monorama Debi (6) the same view appears to have been taken and the word "child" has been understood to be "a person who is incompetent to enter into any contract or to enforce any claim under the law." In the Nagpur Court it was assumed in Gangaramsa v. Vishnusa (3) that a boy who had attained the age of majority was therefore capable of earning his livelihood. In Khedani Rajwarin v. Lagan Singh (2) it was held following the Punjab case referred to above that no limit of age was placed by s. 488 and that it included any person unable to maintain himself otherwise due to some mental or physical defect.

The question was again considered by Punjab Court in Shanno Devi v. Dayaram (7) where Addison, J. allowed maintenance allowence to a boy till he attained the age of 18. This decision, though not in so many words, seems to indicate that the boy in that case ceased to be a "child" within the meaning of the section on attaining majority. Thus, it appears to me that there is a conflict of authority both in this Court as reflected in Bhagat Singh v. Emperor (1), on the one side and Shanno Devi v. Dayaram (7), on the other and also as reflected in Khedani Rajwarin v. Lagan Singh (2), on the one side and Baran Shanta v. Ma Chan Tha May, 85 Ind. Cas. 375 (9), Krishnaswami Iyer v. Chandra Vadana (5), Gangaramsa v. Vishnusa (3) and Hemanta Kumari v. Monorama Debi (6), on the other. The matter appears to me to be of some importance because if the word 'child' is to be restricted to a person who has not yet attained the age of majority, a cripple or an imbecile would be left without any legal remedy against his well-to-do parents. I consider therefore that the point is one which should be settled by a Division Bench and I accordingly direct that these papers be laid before the Hon'ble Chief Justice with a recommendation that the case be sent for decision to a Division Bench.

Mr. R. P. Khosla, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Mela Ram Aggarwal, for the Respondent.

Order of the Division Bench.

The facts of this case are given in the orders of the Courts below and of the learned Judge in Chambers who referred this case. We have been asked to give a definition of the word 'child' appearing in s. 488, Criminal P. C. It does not however appear to us to be necessary for the decision of this case to define that word. It is clear that whatever view is taken, that is to say, whether the word 'child' means a human being under any particular age or whether it is used in the statute in the more general sense as meaning any offspring however old, of a human being, it is qualified by the phrase "unable to maintain itself." In this case the person for whose maintenance allowance was sought was at the time of the proceedings aged 18 and we are informed is now 20. The learned Magistrate has found positively that he is healthy and does not suffer from any illnes. Such a person must be presumed to be capable of maintaining himself. His station in life does not appear to us to make any difference in this question and he is not entitled to any particular luxuries or comforts. He is merely entitled to be maintained. Not only is there a presumption that a person of his age who is healthy is able to maintain himself but it should be noticed that the burden of proving to the contrary was in any case on him. If a person applies for an order under s. 488, Criminal P. C., on the ground that he is a child and unable to maintain himself it is for him to prove that he is unable to maintain himself. It appears to us in this case that he has failed to prove this and we are unable to see why having once failed he should be allowed a further opportunity to lead evidence on the point. We are of opinion that the Magistrate's order in this case was perfectly correct and we see no reason for accepting the recommendation of the learned Sessions Judge. This being our view, we consider it unnecessary to send the case back to the learned Judge in Chambers and we ourselves order that the petition for revision of the order of the Magistrate be dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Application No. 1900 of 1939
December 8, 1939
LEACH, C. J. AND KRISHNASWAMY AYYANGAR, J.
Khan Bahadur ABDUL KAREEM SAHIB—APPLICANT
versus
THE COMMISSIONER, CORPORATION OF MADRAS—RESPONDENT

Madras City Municipal Act (IV of 1919, as amended by Act X of 1936), s. 287—Power of Commissioner to refuse renewal of license.

There is nothing in s. 287, Mad. City Municipal Act, which indicates an intention on the part of the Legislature to withhold from the Commissioner the power of refusing to renew a license when the circumstances demand it. The Commissioner has in a proper case the power to refuse a renewal. The refusal should not however be arbitrary or prompted by some ulterior motive. Haji Ismail v. Municipal Commissioner of Bombay (1), relied on.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar and K. S. Rajagopal Iyengar, for the Applicant.

The Advocate-General and A. Suryanarayanayya, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—The petitioner is a manufacturer of beedis and has been carrying on business in Madras for 25 years. As the result of his industry he has succeeded in building up a very substantial concern. The business is carried on in five buildings in Sembudoss Street, George Town, Madras. In No. 41, Sembudoss Street, he stores the tobacco required for the making of his beedis. He stores beedi leaves in No. 56 and uses Nos. 48, 57 and 58 for the handling and storage of the finished products. Sembudoss Street is in residential part of Madras. It is a very narrow street and it is said that the growth of petitioner's business has resulted in a grave nuisance and a menace to health. On August 19, 1938, thirteen people living in the neighbourhood presented a petition to the Commissioner of Police, complaining of the nuisance and asking that action be taken. The Commissioner of Police had no jurisdiction to interfere, and the petition was forwarded to the Commissioner of the Corporation of Madras. The Commissioner inquired into the complaint and considered it to be well-founded. As the result the corporation refused the petitioner a license to carry on his business in the premises in Sembudoss Street from April 1, 1939. Section 287, Mad. City Municipal Act, as amended by Act X of 1936, requires a person to take out a license before he uses premises for the storage, packing, pressing cleansing, preparing or manufacturing by any process whatever, tobacco, which the Act states shall include cigars, cigarettes and beedis. The petitioner asks this Court to direct, either by certiorari or mandamus, the corporation to issue a license permitting him to carry on his business in these premises as heretofore. He alleges that the corporation in refusing to grant him a license has acted arbitrarily and he says that inasmuch as a license was granted to him in respect of the previous year, the corporation is not entitled in law to refuse to renew it. For the corporation it is said that the refusal to grant the petitioner a license is fully justified by the facts and that it cannot be compelled to renew the license.

On the evidence before the Court it must be held that the carrying on of the petitioner's business in Sembudoss Street does constitute a nuisance and a danger to health. The process of broiling to which the tobacco leaves are subjected creates an offensive smell, and the storage of large quantities of tobacco results in tobacco dust being carried by wind to adjoining houses and causes the inhabitants to cough and sneeze. The business involves the attendance at the premises of large numbers of coolies and other people for whom there is no proper accommodation or sanitary arrangements. The noise also adds to the discomfort of the residents. The Commissioner of the corporation in an affidavit states that he has been advised by the Health Officer of the corporation that the continuance of the business in this locality will positively endanger the health of the residents. The Health Officer of the corporation has sworn an affidavit in which he confirms the advice given to the Commissioner. In addition, Mr. B. W. Batchelor, a director of Messrs. Binny & Company and a member of the Standing Committee of the corporation, took part in the inspection and has endorsed the opinion of the Commissioner in a separate affidavit. The petitioner denies that there is any nuisance, but his denial is only supported by his own affidavits, and they cannot be accepted in view of what the Commissioner, the Health Officer and Mr. Batchelor have said. It has not been suggested that these gentlemen are not speaking the truth. There is a suggestion that they have perhaps exaggerated the situation, but I am not prepared to accept it. In any event, there is ample evidence on the record to show that the corporation in refusing to renew the petitioner's license has not acted arbitrarily, but in the interest of the health of the residents of locality. The question then resolves itself into this. Has the corporation the power under the Act to refuse the license? Before the Act was amended in 1936, no license was required; but by reason of the amendment of s. 287 and Sch. VI, a license is now requisite. Sub-s. (1) of s. 287 says:

"No place within the limits of the City shall be used for any of the purposes mentioned in Sch. VI without a license obtained from the Commissioner and except in accordance with the conditions specified therein"

Sub-s. (3) says:

"The owner or occupier of every place for the use of which for any purpose a license is required shall apply to the Commissioner not less than thirty days before the place is used for such purpose."

Sub-s. (5) says:

"The Commissioner may grant a license subject to such restrictions and regulations as may be specified by him therein or he may refuse to grant the license."

Sub-s. (6) states that every license shall expire at the end of the year for which it is granted, or at such earlier date as the Commissioner may, for special reasons, specify in the license. By reason of sub-s. (7), an application for renewal of a license must be made not less than thirty days before the commencement of the year for which renewal is sought. Mr. Vekatarama Sastriar on behalf of the petitioner has conceded, as he must, that when s. 287 was amended by Act X of 1936 the Commissioner had the power to refuse to issue a license, notwithstanding that the business had been carried on in the same premises for a quarter of a century. But he says that inasmuch as sub-s. (7) does not state that the Commissioner may, if he so chooses, refuse a license, it cannot be withdrawn once it has been issued, and must be renewed, although on renewal conditions may be imposed. Where there is a power to grant a license, there is power to refuse, and where an act requires a person to apply for the renewal of a license at the expiry of the period for which it is granted, it must, in my opinion, necessarily imply a right to refuse to renew, unless there is indication to the contrary in the statute.

In Haji Ismail v. Municipal Commissioner of Bombay (1) the Bombay High Court held that the power of the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay to grant a license under s. 394, City of Bombay Municipal Act, (III of 1888), included the power to refuse it. It was also held that unless it was clear that the Commissioner had used his authority with some indirect motive and for a collateral purpose not for the purpose for which the Legislature had armed him with the power, the Court could not interfere with his discretion. There is nothing in s. 287, Mad. Act, which indicates an intention on the part of the Legislature to withhold from the Commissioner the power of refusing to renew a license when the circumstances demand it. Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar has laid great stress on the provisions of s. 282 of the Act which requires the owner or occupier of a stable, veterinary infirmary, stand, shed, yard or other place in which quadrupeds are kept or taken in for purposes of profit, shall take out a license in the first month of every year. Sub-s. (2) of that section says that the Commissioner may, by an order and under such restrictions and regulations as he thinks fit, grant or refuse to grant the license. Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar argues that because there is no special power given under s. 287 to refuse renewal, it must in view of the terms of s. 282 be taken that the Legislature intended a license for the carrying on of a business to be on a different basis. In this connection he has also drawn attention to the provision of s. 284 which states that if any stable, cattle shed or cow-house is not constructed or maintained in the manner required by or under the Act, the Commissioner may by notice direct that it shall no longer be

The argument here is really met by the provisions of s. 304. That section says that no person shall, without or otherwise than in conformity with an annual license granted by the Commissioner continue to keep open a private market. Application for the renewal of the license shall be made not less than thirty days before the commencement of the year for which the license is sought. The Commissioner may by an order grant or refuse to grant or renew the license or withhold the license until the owner or occupier executes such works as may be specified in the order. Then follows the important proviso that the Commissioner shall not refuse or withhold the license for any cause other than the failure of the owner or occupier to comply with some provision of the Act or some regulation made under s. 303 or some by-law made under s. 349, or without the approval of the Standing Committee. The proviso indicates that where the Legislature intended that there should be no power to refuse to renew, or intended to limit the exercise of such power, it has used appropriate language. The arugment which s. 304 provides for the respondent corporation is certaily as strong, if not a stronger one, than the argument which can be based for the petitioner on ss. 282 and 284. In my judgment s. 287 must be construed according to the words used therein and when it is so construed, I consider that there is no room for reasonable doubt that the Commissioner has in a proper case the power to refuse a renewal. I say in a proper case, because if the refusal was arbitrary or prompted by some ulterior motive, the position would be different. That cannot be said to be the case here. There is no ground for suggesting that the Commissioner has acted in any way contrary to his duty. For the reasons indicated the petition will be dismssed with costs, and we fix the Advocat's fee at Rs. 250.

Krishnaswamy Ayyangar, J.—I am of the same opinion. I agree that a consideration of the language of not only s. 304 but also of s. 285 C, cl. (3) gives a clear indication that where the statute intends that the Commissioner is not to have the power of refusiug a renewal, it has said so. The effect of the refusal is not to prohibit the petitioner from carrying on his business altogether but only to prohibit it in the premises in which it is now being carried on. There is nothing inherently wrong in the legislature placing a restriction upon the right of an individual in the in'erest of the residents in general of the locality.

EAST BENGAL BANK, LTD.— PETITIONER
versus
JOGESH CHANDRA BANERJEE—
DEFENDANT—OPPOSITE PARTY

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 152—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), applicability of—Arbitration with Court's intervention and in which company is interested—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), does not apply but is governed by Sch. II, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)—Arbitration—Held on fact that Bank could not repudiate Pleader's authority to refer dispute to arbitration and that it was bound by the award.

The Arbitration Act, applies in a case falling within the scope of the Act even when the locus of the subject-matter was outside a presidency town, provided, one of the parties or both of them were companies registered under the Companies Act. The Preamable of the Act makes it clear that that Act has application only to arbitrations without the intervention of the Court. Where, therefore, a reference to arbitration, in which a company is interested, with the intervention of the Court is governed by Sch II, Civil P. C, relating to arbitrations with the intervention of the Court. The Arbitration Act has no application to such a case. 188 Ind. Cas 143 (1), relied on.

The local agent of the Bank had undoubtedly authority to engage a Pleader and to deliver a vakalatnama on behalf of the Bank. It was on the vakalatnama so delivered that the suit had been instituted in the name of the Bank. That vakalatnama contained a power given to the Pleader to enter into arbitration on behalf of the Bank The Pleader himself moved the application for reference to arbitration and participated in the arbitration proceedings on behalf of the Bank :

Held, that the vakalatnama was not the vakalatnama of the agent but the vakalatnama of the Bank itself. The Bank was bound by the terms of that vakalatnama and although the agent might not have the power from the Bank to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration, the Pleader, on the basis of that vakalatnama had authority to apply for re ferring the matter to arbitration. Where the award was against the Bank, the Bank was not entitled to repudiate the authority of the Pleader for the purpose of nullifying the proceedings.

Mr. Ajit Kumar Dutta, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Priya Nah Dutt, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The petitioner before me is the East Bengal Bank Ltd. (hereinafter called the Bank), a company registered under the Companies Act. The said Bank filed a suit in the Court of the Small Cause for the recovery of Rs. 408 from the defendant opposite party on the basis of a promissory note executed by the latter in its favour. The suit was filed on the basis of a vakalatnama executed by the local agent of the Bank on its behalf. The plaint was also verified by the said local agent. On July 28, 1939, a joint petition was filed on behalf of the Bank and by the defendant asking the Court to refer the matter to arbitration. The petition was signed by the legal agent of the Bank but it was approved of by the Pleader engaged by the Bank and was moved by him in Court. On the said petition, an order was passed by the learned Small Cause Court Judge referring the dispute to the named arbitrators. The arbitrators filed their award in Court on August 3, 1939 and in accordance with the award the suit was dismissed by the lower Court after overruling the two material objections of the Bank which are material for the purposes of the present rule. One objection was that the Court could not make the reference in view of the provisions of s. 152, Companies Act, which according to the petitioner required an arbitration, in which a company was interested to be made in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act and to which the procedure laid down in the said Act was to be followed. The second objection was that the local agent had no authority to apply for referring the matter to arbitration on behalf of the Bank.

The rule has been issued on the aforesaid two points. I do not think that any of those contentions raised by the Bank in the lower Court and overruled by it can be given effect to. The Preamble of the Arbitration Act makes it clear that that Act has application only to arbitrations without the intervention of the Court. Having regard to the provisions of s. 89, Civil P. C., the rules contained in Sch. II relating to arbitrations with the intervention of the Court would be applicable in such a case and not the provisions of the Arbitration Act. Section 2, Arbitration Act, limits the applicability of the said Act, in the absence of a notification by the Local Govt. to private arbitrations, that is arbitrations out of Court, if a suit, either with or without leave, could have been instituted in a presidency town relating to the subject-matter of the dispute. Section 152 Companies Act, deals with the matter of arbitration in which company is interested.

As I pointed out in Jhirghat Native Tea Co. Ltd. v. B. Gupta (1), (a case of arbitration out of Court), sub-s. 3 (1) of s. 152, Companies Act, is of prime importance and it gives a clue to the meaning of s. 152 (1), Companies Act. That section was interpreted in that judgment and according to the interpretation there given, the scope of s. 152 Companies Act, is that the provisions of ss. 3 to 22, Arbitration Act, would apply where one or both the parties to arbitration are companies registered under the Companies Act by force and effect of the Companies Act itself irrespective of the provisions of s. 2, Arbitration Act; that is to say, the said Act would apply in a case falling within the scope of the Act even when the locus of the subject-matter was outside a presidency town, provided one of the parties or both of them were companies registered under the Companies Act. As the Abritration Act has no application to arbitration with the intervention of the Court, the contention raised by the petitioner cannot be given effect to. I accordingly overrule the first point raised before me and also before the lower Court.

I do not also see any substance in the second ground. The local agent of the Bank had undoubtedly authority to engage a Pleader and to deliver a vakalatnama on behalf of the Bank. In fact, it is on the vakalatnama so delivered that the suit had been instituted in the name of the Bank. That vakalatnama contained a power given to the Pleader to enter into arbitration on behalf of the Bank. The vakalatnama is not the vakalatnama of the agent but the vakalatnama of the Bank itself. The Bank is bound by the terms of that vakalatnama and although the agent may not have the power from the Bank to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration, the Pleader, on the basis of that vakalatnama had authority to apply for referring the matter to arbitration. The Pleader himself approved of the arbitration and he, in fact, moved the petition on which reference was made. Before the arbitrator, he took part in the proceedings on behalf of the Bank and now that the award is against the Bank, the Bank is not entitled to repudiate the authority of the Pleader for the purpose of nullifying the proceedings. The second ground is accordingly overruled.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Civil Revision Petition No. 245 of 1936

March 15, 1939

SOMAYYA, J.

GOVADA BALABHARATHI CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETY, GOVADA—PETITIONER

ALAPATI VENKATAKRISHNAYYA AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Madras Co-operative Societies Act (VI of 1932), s. 51—Registrar or arbitrator in passing award under Act, if acts as Court—Proceedings under Act, whether suit and award if decree within meaning of s. 51 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920)—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 51 (1) and (3)—S. 51 (3), if restricted to sale in execution of decree — Sub-ss. (1) and (3), whether refer to same classes of cases.

The Registrar or the arbitrator in passing the award under the Mad. Co-operative Societies Act certainly acts as a Court. The procedure laid down under the Act is a substitute for an ordinary suit in a Civil Court and the requirements of a suit are, satisfied in a proceeding under the Act. An award under the Act is a decree as used in s. 51 (1), Prov. Insol. Act. There is however no reason to suppose that a decree-holder under an award under the Act is intended to be placed on any higher footing than an ordinary decree-holder.

Section 51 (3), Prov. Insol. Act, does not restrict the sales to those held in execution of a decree but applies to sales in execution in general. Therefore, the sale in execution of an award of the Registrar or the arbitrator under the Mad. Co-operative Societies Act gives a good title to the purchaser who in good faith purchased it as against the Receiver in insolvency. Both ss. 51 (1) and 51 (3) refer to the same classes of cases. 147 Ind. Cas. 614 (1), distinguished.

C. R. P. to revise the order of the District Court, Guntur, in C. M. A. No. 53 of 1935.

Messrs. V. Subramaniam and V. Satyanarayana, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Kotayya, for the Respondents.

Order.—Bala Bharathi Co-operative Credit Society of Govada had to get some money from one Ramatulasamma. The Society proceeded under s. 51, Madras Co-operative Societies Act of 1932 to recover the dues and an award was passed directing payment of the sum due. The award was being executed against the property of the debtor. At that stage another creditor of the debtor who is respondent No. 1 in this civil revision petition filed I. P. No. 105 of 1934 to adjudicate Ramatulasamma as an insolvent and applied for the appointment of a receiver under s. 20, Prov. Insol. Act. The Subordinate Judge before whom the application was made rejected the application holding that the Co-operative Credit Society had a first charge upon the entire estate of the debtor. The matter was taken up on appeal, and the District Judge held that the Co-operative Society had no prior charge over the general estate of the debtor and that the prior charge refers only to the interest of the member in the share capital of the Society. By the time the appeal was decided by the District Judge, the properties of Ramatulasamma had been sold by the sale officer under r. 22 of the rules made under the Act, and hence there was no scope for the appointment of a Receiver of the properties. The District Judge therefore dismissed the appeal with a direction that the appellant before him might take necessary steps as regards the sale proceeds in the hands of the Society.

The application out of which the present revision arises, was filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court under s. 51 (1), Prov. Insol. Act, and s. 151, Civil P. C., requesting the Court to call for the entire sale proceeds of about Rs. 2,100 or at least the balance due after deducting the amount due to the Society. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the application holding that neither s. 51 (1), Prov. Insol. Act nor s. 151, Civil P. C., applied to this case. On appeal, the District Judge came to the conclusion that s. 51 (1) Prov. Insol. Act, applies and that the Co-operative Society was bound to remit the sale proceeds to the Insol. Court. The Appellate Court held that the Co-operative Society is not entitled to the benefit of the execution against the Receiver in the insolvency because the assets were realized after the date of the admission of the insolvency petition. This revision petition is filed in this Court by the Co-operative Credit Society. It is argued that s. 51 (1), Prov. Insol. Act, applies only where execution of a decree has issued against the properties of the judgment-debtor. It is said that in this case the property was sold not in execution of a decree but that it was sold in execution of an award under the Co-operatives Societies Act (Mad. Act VI of 1932). The expression "decree" is not defined in the Prov. Insol. Act and under s. 2 cl. 2 of the Act:

"Words and expressions used in this Act and defined in the Civil P. C. 1908 and not herein before defined shall have the same meaning as those respectively attributed to them by the said Code."

Under s. 2 (2), Civil P. C., decree means:

"The formal expression of an adjudication which so far as regards the Court expressing it conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit."

What is urged is that the Registrar or arbitrator is not deciding a suit. The Registrar or the arbitrator in passing the award under the Act is certainly acting as a Court. So, the real question is whether a proceeding under the Act is a 'suit'. The procedure laid down under the Co-operative Societies Act is a substitute for an ordinary suit in a Civil Court and the requirements of a suit are, I think satisfied in a proceeding under the Co-operative Societies Act. Under r. 15, cl. (1) of the rules made under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act the reference under s. 51 of the Act is required to be in writing. This corresponds to the plaint in an ordinary suit; the other clauses of r. 15 show that the subsequent procedure is substantially the same as that followed in an ordinary suit. But Mr. V. Subramaniam, the learned Counsel for the petitioner, relies upon the decision of the Full Bench in Rajagopala Chettiar v. Hindu Religious Endowments Board (1). The decision was rendered under the Hindu Religious Endowments Act and it was held that a proceeding under s. 84 (2) of the Act was not a suit. There are various provisions in that Act where the proceedings are referred to as suits, but the proceeding under s. 84 (2) is referred to as a petition and the decision of the Full Bench may be distinguishable on this ground. But the decision lays down that an adjudication in a proceeding will be a decree only where the proceeding starts with a plaint I do not therefore wish to base my judgment on the question whether a proceeding under the Madras Co-operative Socities Act is or is not a decree within the meaning of s. 2 (2) Civil P. C., and therefore covered by s. 51 (1), Prov. Insol. Act, though, my own view is that an award under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act is a decree as used in s. 51 (1), Prov. Insol. Act.

Under s. 28 (7), Prov. Insol. Act the order of adjudication relates back to and takes effect from the date of the presentation of the petition. Under s. 28 (2) on the making of an order of adjudication the whole property of the insolvent vests in the Court or in the Receiver and shall be divisible among the creditors. Reading s. 28 (2) and s. 28 (7) together the result is that on an adjudication the properties of the insolvent vest in the Receiver with effect from the date of the presentation of the petition. There are similar provisions in Presidency Towns Insol. Act and in the English Bankruptcy Act. If matters stood there, all dealings with the property after the date of the insolvency petition would be null and void but certain provisions are enacted to protect persons who deal bona fide with the insolvent before the date of actual adjudication. A payment by the insolvent to any of his creditors, a payment or delivery to the insolvent, any transfer by the insolvent for valuable consideration and any contract or dealing by or with the insolvent for valuable consideration, are protected provided that the transaction took place before the date of the order of adjudication and the person with whom such transaction takes place had not at that time notice of the presentation of any insolvency petition by or against the debtor: see s. 55, Prov. Insol. Act. Then we have s. 51 of the Act which provides for sales in execution of the property of the insolvent. Under s. 51 (3):

"a person who in good faith purchases the property of the debtor under a sale in execution shall in all cases acquire a good title to it against the Receiver.'

This does not restrict the sales to those held in execution of a decree but applies to sales in execution in general. Therefore, the sale in execution of an award of the Registrar or the arbitrator under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act gives a good title to the purchaser who in good faith purchased it as against the Receiver in insolvency. Section 51 (1) deals with the assets realized in execution. The clause itself begins with the expression "where execution of a decree has issued against the property of the debtor" and provides that in such a case no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the execution against the Receiver except in respect of assets realized in course of the execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the admission of the petition. It appears to me that both ss. 51 (1) and 51 (3) refer to the same classes of cases; under cl. (3) the sale itself is good and under cl. (1) the sale proceeds go to the Receiver if realized after the date of the admission of the petition and to the creditor if realized before that date. There is no reason to suppose that a decree-holder under an award under the Act is intended to be placed on any higher footing than an ordinary decree-holder.

(1) 57 M 271; 147 Ind. Cas. 614; A I R 1934 Mad. 103; 66 M L J 43; (1933) M W N 1385; 6 R M 362; 39 L W 4 (F B).

If the contention advanced by Mr. Subramanian is correct, then the protection given under s. 51 (1) will not apply. If the award under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act is not a decree, then the whole of s. 51 (1) becomes inapplicable. In such a case there is no other provision in the Act which will give the Society any immunity even to the extent to which such immunity is provided in the case of executions of decrees by s. 51 (1). The acceptance of the argument far from benefiting the petitioner, is against him. I think therefore that s. 51 (1) should be held to apply to all execution sales and should not be confined to assets realized in execution of "decres" as restricted by the decision of the Full Bench in Rajagopala Chettiar v. Hindu Religious Endoments Board (1). In either view therefore whether the word "decree" as used in s. 51 Prov. Insol. Act is to be understood in a general sense or in the restricted sense, I think the same result follows so far as this revision is concerned. This civil revision petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 526, 476, 197—Any person, irrespective of status can be prosecuted for making false complaint—Fact that member of Legislature is figuring in case is no ground for transfer—Prosecution of M. L. A. under s. 476—Sanction is not required.

The Magistrate when he tries a case under s 406, I. P. C., should be alert to see that his Court is not used for the purpose of oppression by introducing the evidence of any zemindar or any Member of the Legislative Assembly who as such has no special position or privilege at all in any Court of Law, and the Magistrate must deal with the case as it comes before him strictly upon its merits. If for instance he believes the case is a false case inspired by some prominent person, he will, if he thinks that that prominent person has aided or abetted the making of a false complaint or has given false evidence in Court, not hesitate to take such action under s. 476, Criminal P. C., as the interest of justice requires. It must be made known that Magistrates will not be deterred from doing their duty merely because a person concerned is a zemindar, an M. L. A., or a prominent person It is, a truism that wherever British concepts prevail, all men are equal before the law, and a zemindar, an M. L. A., or a prominent person has no special privilege under the Criminal P. C., and should any such person make or aid in making a false complaint or give false evidence on oath, then the law must be put in motion against him in the same way as against any other person. Hence the fact that such a person is figuring in a case is no ground for transferring it.

No sanction under s 197, Criminal P. C., is required for the prosecution of a Member of Legislative Assembly under s. 476.

Order.—I have here before me what are in effect two applications for transfer of cases against the same accused Haji Imamdino, one under s. 498, I. P. C. before the first class Magistrate, Sujawal, and another, a case before the second class Magistrate at Dokri under s. 406, Penal Code, which relates to the criminal breach of trust of a horse under somewhat rather unusual circumstances. But the broad ground on which these applications for transfers are based is that these cases are part of a campaign conducted by one Mr. Muhammad Usman Sumro, a Member of the Legislative Assembly who it is said in this application for transfer, is a person of some notoriety and of such influence that a Magistrate before whom he appears as a witness would find it difficult to reject his evidence. I have a distinct recollection that this Court itself has on one occasion rejected this gentleman's evidence and that the gentleman concerned was prosecuted for perjury with results which are not precisely known to us. I should think myself therefore that the Magistrate should have no difficulty whatever in rejecting this gentleman's evidence as false or incorrect, if from the evidence itself and the evidence of the other witnesses the Magistrate came to the conclusion that on this occasion this gentleman had not or had been unable to testify with truth and accuracy, and though from the statement of the case in the application for transfer it does appear at first sight that there is some support for the case that this Mr. Muhammad Usman Sumro is the person behind three separate complaints made in three separate Courts in two separate districts for the purpose of harassing the applicant, on inquiry the case for the applicant is by no means so pathetic as his Advocate suggests. For instance, it is said that as the result of the trouble with the woman not only has the applicant, and others been the subject of a compliant under s. 498, I P. C before the first class Magistrate at Sujawal, but in order further to harass, the accused has been the subject of another complaint under s. 406, I. P. C. before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate at Shahbunder. This relates to a criminal breach of trust in respect of a gold ornament (dhurri) ; but he has also been made the subject of a complaint under s. 406, I. P. C. relating to a horse before the second class Magistrate of Dokri.

Now so far as the case under s. 406, I. P. C. regarding the gold ornament is concerned, it appears that that case was withdrawn. The complaint is dated March 31, 1939, while the complaint under s. 498, I. P. C. relating to the woman is dated May 22, 1939 : so that the complaint under s. 406 relating to the ornament is prior in time to the complaint under s. 408, I. P. C. relating to the woman; not very much prior in point of time, and the two cases, of course, may be connected. But it does appear that permission to withdraw the case under s. 406, I. P. C. relating to the gold ornaments was made as a result of a compromise between the parties. That compromise has been read out to me, and one cannot say from the way it is worded that it is not what it purports to be—a real compromise between the parties relating to the offence involving this gold ornament. So that I cannot say that this complaint relating to the gold ornament has anything to do with the complaint relating to the woman or that it is subsequent in time. But the complaint before the second class Magistrate at Dokri relating to the horse is subsequent in time; it is dated November 17, 1939. It is said that that case is false on the face of it, and the Magistrate should have dismissed it and that in any case the Magistrate should not have issued warrants. But the Advocate-General has read out the diary of that case to me, and it does not appear that the Magistrate issued warrants until he had tried other means to secure the presence of the accused. The warrants issued by the Dokri Court were bailable warrants. and so far as this Dokri case is concerned, I cannot say that there is any action on the part of the Magistrate which would justify the transfer of the case.

The Magistrate, however, when he tries this case under s. 406, I. P. C. should be alert to see that his Court is not used for the purpose of oppression by introducing the evidence of any zamindar or any Member of the Legislative Assembly who as such has no special position or privilege at all in any Court of Law, and the Magistrate of Dokri, though a second class Magistrate must deal with the case as it comes before him strictly upon its merits. If for instance he believes the case is a false case inspired by some prominent person, which, I believe, is a phrase now much in vogue, he will, if he thinks that that prominent person has aided or abetted the making of a false complaint or has given false evidence in Court, not hesitate to take such action under s. 476, Criminal P. C., as the interest of justice requires. It must be made known that Magistrates will not be deterred from doing their duty merely because a person concerned is a zamindar, an M. L. A., or a prominent person. It is, as I have said before, a truism that wherever British concepts prevail, all men are equal before the law, and a zamindar, an M. L. A., or a prominent person has no special privilege under the Criminal P. C. and should any such person make or aid in making a false complaint or give false evidence on oath, then the law must be put in motion against him in the same way against any other person. But, once the attention of the Magistrate has been directly drawn to this aspect of the case—and I do not even say that it was necessary to draw his attention to this aspect of the case—he will, I have no doubt, do his duty. I see therefore no reason to transfer this case from the second class Magistrate at Dokri, and I wish to make it clear that nothing that I have said should be taken to mean that I have formed any opinion in any way as to the truth or falsity of this case relating to this horse. The Magistrate will deal with the case upon its merits.

Similarly with regard to the case under s. 498, I. P. C. before the first class Magistrate at Sujawal. The case may be true or false; I say nothing whatever about its merits at this stage, And even if this Mr. Muhammad Usman Sumro, an M. L. A., should be a witness in this case and his name appears as witness No. 16 on the list in the complaint, in view of what I have said the Magistrate should have no difficulty in forming an unbiased opinion as to the truth or falsity of the evidence given by this Mr. Muhammad Usman Sumro; if he should give evidence, and if the Magistrate should find that his evidence is false, then he knows his duty under s. 476, Criminal P. C. No sanction by Govt. no reference to Govt. no consultation with Govt. is in any way required under the provisions of the Criminal P. C. by which this Magistrate, as all other Magistrates are bound, for the.

prosecution of this Mr. Muhammad Usman Sumro, if within the provisions of s. 476, Criminal P. C., this Magistrate should think that the interest of justice so require. Again I do not wish it to be inferred in any way that I think this Mr. Muhammad Usman Sumro wil give false evidence. The Magistrate must deal with his evidence without any bias and impartially consider and weigh it in relation to the other evidence on the record, direct or circumstantial. It may very well be that the influence of this Mr. Muhammad Usman Sumro has been exaggerated because in one of the cases referred to in the application as an instance of his influence and power, the accused was discharged by the Magistrate.

Lastly, I have before me on the record what purports to be a letter from one Mr. Khushaldas Moolram, Advocate, to the first class Magistrate at Sujawal (Ex. F, p. 22 of the paper-book), written, it is said, to this Magistrate to postpone the case under s. 498, I. P. C. which appears to be a most improper letter to be written by an Advocate to a Magistrate trying a case in which he is appearing. But I do not even know that that letter was written by Mr. Khushaldas because I have not yet asked him, and I will make no further remark upon this letter until the Registrar shall have, under my direction, written to Mr. Khushaldas in this matter and I shall have had his reply. It seems to me therefore that there is no reason whatever to transfer either one or the other of these cases from the first class Magistrate, Sujawal, and the second class Magistrate at Dokri, and I dismiss these transfer applications accordingly.

VEMURI RAMJEE RAO—APPELLANT
versus
THE MUNICIPAL COUNCIL MASULIPATAM—RESPONDENT

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 72—Tax paid under misapprehension as to liability for it—If can be recovered back.

A person who makes payment under a mistake of law cannot recover it back again. Hence, a person who makes a payment of tax under a misapprehension as to his liability to do so cannot recover it in a Court of law, either under s. 72, Contract Act or under equitable principles.

[Case-law referred to.]

Messrs. Ch. Raghava Rao and V. V. Sastry, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Govindarajachari, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The only question that arises in this appeal is whether the plaintiff, who had paid property tax to the defendant Municipality upon demand in a wrong belief that he was bound to pay that tax, is entitled to have it refunded. Both the lower Courts held that as the payment was a voluntary one, he is not entitled to have any such refund. His suit was therefore dismissed and his appeal to the Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, was also dismissed. Mr. Raghava Rao, in his very able argument, has put forward two contentions. They are that under s. 72, Contract Act, the plaintiff is entitled to a refund of money paid by mistake of law and that even though s. 72 would debar a person from recovering money paid under a mistake of law in a quasi-contract, there would still be open to such a person the equitable relief that a Court can give to a person who has wrongly parted with money independently of any contract. Municipal Council, Dindigul v. Bombay Co. Ltd. (1) is a decision on which Mr. Raghava Rao has placed great reliance. It discusses the English principles to be applied in a case somewhat similar to the present one, in which a person made a payment to a corporate body under protest and then claimed it back. The question that arose was whether the suit was in time; because it had been filed more than six months after the payment had been made, six months being the period allowed by s. 350, Mad. District Municipalities Act, for bringing a suit against a municipality in certain classes of suits. Both Couts-Trotter, C. J. and Madhavan Nair, J. held that the suit claim was not one arising out of a contract and that therefore principles of the English Courts of Equity could be applied; for, in Indian Courts no distinction had ever been drawn between equitable jurisdiction and legal. Such equitable principles being applied, it was considered by these learned Judges that the suit was one for "money had and received" and not an action for damages and compensation. It was held therefore that s. 350, Mad. District Municipalities Act, did not apply, but Art. 62, Lim. Act. It has therefore been argued by Mr. Raghava Rao that it is unnecessary to apply the principles of the Common Law

Courts of England, which, he says, have been reproduced in s. 72, Contract Act, and that this suit may be looked upon as one in the general equitable jurisdiction of Civil Courts. Municipal Council, Dindigul v. Bambay Co. Ltd. (1) may be regarded as an authority for the position that either a cause of action arises independently of s. 72, Contract Act, or that when applying s. 72, Contract Act, one should not be bound by the somewhat narrower principles of the Common Law Courts of England; but may well have regard to the decisions of the Court of Equity.

That a suit for "money had and received" will lie apart from s. 72, Contract Act, has been held in Narayanasami Reddi v. Osuru Reddi (2), where a person was obliged to pay his landlord some money which was really not due, in order to avert a summary sale of his land. It was held that although the money was not paid by mistake yet the person who paid it was entitled to have it back. But even if we regard this suit as one to which s. 72, Contract Act, does not apply, I do not consider that the plaintiff's claim would be any stronger; because Courts have generally held that where a payment is made by mistake of law, there is no room for the application of equitable principles. The person who makes the payment is under no obligation to do so; and if he, of his own free will and accord, having the same opportunity of knowing the general law as the person to whom he pays it, makes such a payment, there is no injustice done which Courts of Equity should remedy. It is pointed out in Halsbury's Laws of England (Vol. 23 at p. 168, in para. 246 and Vol. 7 at p. 278 in para. 249) that it is not an absolute rule that a payment made under a mistake of law cannot be recovered. A few exceptions do exist, especially where the person who makes the payment has much less opportunity of knowing the law than the person to whom he pays it and relies on the word and experience of the person paid. It has however never been held, even by Courts of Equity, that a payment made under circumstances like the present is recoverable in a Court. Mr. Raghava Rao has been at some pains to point out that in more recent decisions in England there has been a tendency to interpret more liberally the rule against the recovery of money paid by mistake of law; but Ramesam, J., who was apparently dealing with the same argument in Appavoo Chettiar v. South Indian Railway Co. (3), thought that the recent decision of the House of Lords and the remarks* of Scrutton, L. J. indicated that there had been no modification of the general principal against forcing a person to return money paid under a mistake of law.

Returning to s. 72, Contract Act, it has been held in a number of cases that payments made in India by mistake of law cannot be recovered. Appavoo Chettiar v. South Indian Railway Co. (3) is a direct authority with regard to a payment of the kind here made. In Raja of Ramnad v. Secretary of State (4) it was held that a wrong payment of income tax could not be recovered for the same reason. In recent cases the principle that a person who makes payment under a mistake of law cannot recover it back again has been accepted without question : see Municipal Council, Tuticorin v. Ralli Brothers (5) and Chairman, Municipal Council, Rajahmundry v. Subba Rao (6). I have therefore no doubt that as the law stands at present, a person who makes a payment of tax under a misapprehension as to his liability to do so cannot recover it in a Court of law, although one would expect a corporate body to refund voluntarily any amount which had been paid to it in error. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

GOPI CHAND SINGH JAWAHAR MAL AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

N.-W. F. P. Agriculturists Debtor's Relief Act (IV of 1939), s. 2, Proviso (1)—House or shop property mortgaged—Proviso, if contemplates that equity of redemption should not be worth more than Rs. 500.

The Proviso (1) to s. 2, N.-W. F. P. Agri. Debtor's Relief Act, does not contemplate that in a case of morgaged property the equity of redemption should not be worth more than Rs. 500. It merely states that relief will be denied to a person who is the owner of shops in municipal limits and that the value of those shops is more than Rs. 500.

A. from a decision of the Senior Sub-Judge, Mardan, dated September 28, 1939.

Mr. P C. Kapur, for the Appellant.

Sardar Bahadur Sardar Raja Singh, for the Respondents.

Almond J. C.—This is an appeal preferred by Habibgul whose application for relief under s. 9, Agriculturists Debtors Relief Act, IV of 1939, was dismissed on the ground that he was not an agriculturist in view of proviso 1 to s. 2 of the Act. It is not disputed before us that the petitioner was the owner of a Mandi including shops in the Municipality of Hoti and that a mortgage decree amounting Rs. 19,000 had been passed against the petitioner on the basis of the motgage of that property. It is contended however by learned Counsel for the appellant that the petitioner was not given an opportunity of proving that the value of the equity of redemption was less than Rs. 500 the sum mentioned in the proviso. The proviso reads as follows :

"Provided that a person who owns house other than his own residential house or shop property within municipal or cantonment limits of the value of Rs. 500 or more will not be considered an agriculturist."

Learned Counsel has contended that the proviso contemplates that in a case of this nature the equity of redemption should not be worth more than Rs. 500. That however is not what the section states. It merely states that relief will be denied to a person who is the owner of shops in municipal limits and that the value of those shops is more than Rs. 500. It is clear that the petitioner is the owner of shops and as they were mortgaged originally for Rs. 10,000 they are certainly worth more than Rs. 500. We find that the decision of the original Court was correct and therefore dismiss this appeal with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 32.

Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 252 and 253 of 1940

HARRIES, C. J. AND FAZL ALI, J.

Smt. JAGATMAYA KUMRI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Munshi RAM BAHADUR PRASAD—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), ss. 8, 7 — Mortgage for Rs. 960 at Re. 1-4-0 interest per mensem in 1928 — Rs. 203 only paid in cash, balance set-off against previous mortgage of 1925 for Rs 486—Payment by mortgagor of Rs 100 in 1929 and Rs. 800 in 1934 appropriated towards interest—Suit on mortgage—Payment appropriated towards interest held could not be used to reduce principal under s. 8—Mortgagee held entitled to decree for Rs. 689 only, which was total of advances made in 1925 and 1928—Plaintiff held not entitled to claim any further interest in suit.

The Bihar Money-lenders Act, was enacted for the protection of such debtors as needed some relief on account of their property or inability to pay their debts. That may be the reason why proviso to s. 8 excludes from the operation of s. 8 such debtors as were able to pay their interest at the agreed rate and had already paid it. [p. 563, col. 1]

The plaintiff brought a suit on the basis of a mortgage bond, executed by the defendant on August 11, 1928, to secure a loan of Rs. 960 which was to bear interest at the rate of Re. 1-4-0 per cent. per mensem. with yearly rests Out of the sum of Rs. 960 a sum of Rs. 203 only was paid in cash and the balance was set-off against a previous debt which was due to the plaintiff under a mortgage bond executed in 1925 for a sum of Rs. 486. Sum of Rs. 100 had been paid by the defendant towards the dues under the bond in suit on June 25, 1929, and a further sum of Rs. 800 had been paid by him on September 30, 1934. The plaintiff, after giving credit as to these two amounts, claimed that a sum of Rs. 2,100 was still due to him;

Held, that as on the dates on which the sums of Rs 100 and Rs 800 respectively were paid by the defendant, the Bihar Money-lenders Act, was not in operation the creditor was entitled to charge interest at the bond rate on that date and the interest which was due to him on those dates was far in excess of the amounts actually paid. Under the law the creditor was entitled to appropriate these payments towards interest and after the appropriation had been made those amounts could not be used to reduce the principal under s. 8 according to the proviso to s. 8 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to a decree for a sum of Rs. 689 which was the total of the principal sums which were advanced by him 1925 and 1928 respectively. If interest was calculated at the rate of nine per cent. per annum, as it should be under s. 8 of the Act, the amount which was payable as interest on the total principal sums advanced by the plaintiff was much less than the sum of Rs. 900 which had already been paid towards interest. That being so, the plaintiff was not entitled to claim any further interest in the suit. Section 7 of the Act was not applicable to the case. [p. 562, col. 2; p. 563, col. 1.]

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Monghyr, dated September 30, 1939, modifying that of the Munsif First Court, Begusarai, dated June 24, 1939.

Mr. Ray Parasnath, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. K. Banerji and G. C. Banerji, for the Respondent.

Fazl Ali, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the appellant to recover a sum of Rs. 2,100 on the basis of a mortgage bond. This bond was admittedly executed by the defendant and his father on August 11, 1928, to secure a loan of

Rs. 960 which was to bear interest at the rate of Re. 1-4-0 per cent. per mensem with yearly rests. It is common ground that out of the sum of Rs. 960 which is stated to be the amount of the loan under this bond a sum of Rs. 203 only was paid in cash and the balance was set-off against a previous debt which was due to the plaintiff under a mortgage bond executed in 1925 for a sum of Rs. 486. The plaintiff has stated in the plaint that a sum of Rs. 100 had been paid by the defendant towards the dues under the bond in suit on June 25, 1929, and a further sum of Rs. 800 had been paid by him on September 30, 1934. The plaintiff, after giving credit as to these two amounts, claimed that a sum of Rs. 2,100 was still due to him and prayed for a decree for that sum.

The defendant contested the suit mainly on the ground that the interest was excessive and he was entitled to relief under the Bihar Money-lenders Act.

Both the Courts below have upheld his contention and re-opened the transaction under s. 8 of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions Act, 1939). The first Court, after making certain calculations, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for a sum of Rs. 472; but the lower Appellate Court found that there were certain errors in this calculation and it has awarded a decree to the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 402-12-0. That Court, after showing that for the purposes of determining the amount to which the plaintiff is entitled, it must be held that the principal amounts should be the sum of Rs. 203 paid in cash on August 11, 1928, and the sum of Rs. 486 which had been paid under the earlier bond of 1925, observed as follows:—

"The total amount of interest on Rs. 486 and Rs. 203 up to September 30, when the repayments amounted to Rs. 300 came to Rs. 518 (Rs. 406 + Rs 112). The repayments exceeded the amount of interest by Rs. 382 which went towards the payment of the principal reducing it to Rs. 307 Interest on this amount up to the date of the suit came to Rs. 90-4-0. The plaintiff, therefore, was not entitled to more than Rs 397-4-0 on the date the plaint was filed. The amount which should have been awarded according to the defendant viz. Rs. 402-12-0 exceeds the amount allowable. As the defendant himself prays for a decree for Rs. 402-12-0 the amount cannot be further reduced."

The learned Advocate for the appellant conceded in this Court that the Courts below were entitled to re-open the transactions under s. 8 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act; but he has pointed out that the learned Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal from the judgment of the trial Court has entirely overlooked the proviso to s. 8 of the Money-lenders Act. That proviso runs thus:—

"Provided further if anything has been paid or allowed in respect of any liability for interest in excess of nine per centum simple per annum in the case of a secured loan and twelve per centum simple per annum in the case of an unsecured loan, nothing in cl (a) or (b) shall be deemed to require the creditor to repay any amount so paid or allowed in excess or to reduce the amount of the principal of the loan."

It may be stated here that cl. (a) of s. 8 enables the Court to re-open the transaction, take an account between the parties, and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any interest in excess of nine per centum simple per annum in the case of a secured loan and twelve per centum simple per annum in the case of an unsecured loan.

Clause (b) of that section provides that

"nothwithstanding any agreement purporting to close previous dealings and to create a new obligation, the Court may re-open any account already taken between them and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any interest in excess of nine per centum simple per annum in the case of secured loan and twelve per centum simple per annum in the case of an unsecured loan."

Now, from the passage which I have quoted from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, it will appear that, in his opinion inasmuch as the sum of Rs. 900, which has been admittedly paid by the defendant towards the loan, exceeded the interest which was payable on the principal sums (calculating interest at the rate of nine per cent. per annum) the excess amount paid by the defendant must go to reduce the amount of the principal sums. But this is exactly what the proviso to s. 8 provides against. That proviso states that if any amount has been paid in respect of any liability for interest in excess of nine per cent. simple in the case of a secured loan, nothing in cl. (a) or (b) shall be deemed to require the creditor to reduce the amount of the principal of the loan. On the dates on which the sums of Rs. 100 and Rs. 800 respectively were paid by the defendant, the Bihar Money-lenders Act was not in operation. The creditor was, therefore, entitled to charge interest at the bond rate on that date and on calculation it appears that the interest which was due to him on those dates was far in excess of the amounts actually paid. Under the law the creditor was entitled to appropriate these payments towards interest and after the appropriation had been made those amounts could not be used to reduce the principal under s. 8 according to the proviso to s. 8 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act. It was contended by the learned Advocate appearing for the respondent that the proviso, if it bears the construction which is put upon it on behalf of the appellant, creates a somewhat anomalous position inasmuch as a debtor who has been making payments towards his debt is in a much worse position than one who has made no payments whatsoever. That may be so, but we have to give effect to the plain words of the proviso which clearly states that if a payment has been made in respect of any liability for interest that payment will not go to reduce the principal. It must be remembered that the Bihar Money-lenders Act was enacted for the protection of such debtors as needed some relief on account of their poverty or inability to pay their debts. That may be the reason why this proviso excludes from the operation of s. 8 such debtors as were able to pay their interest at the agreed rate and had already paid it.

Now, if the proviso is given effect to, it seems to me that the appellant is entitled to a decree for a sum of Rs. 689 which is the total of the principal sums which were advanced by him 1925 and 1928 respectively. It is not difficult to explain how this result is arrived at. I have already shown that the payments which have been made by the defendant cannot go to reduce the principal. These payments must be taken as payments towards interest. Now, if interest is calculated at the rate of nine per cent. per annum as it should be under s. 8 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, the amount is payable as interest on the total principal sum advanced by the plaintiff is much less than the sum of Rs. 900 which has already been paid towards interest. That being so, the plaintiff is not entitled to claim any further interest in the suit. He is entitled only to recover the principal sums which amount to Rs. 689.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that he is entitled to a decree at least for a sum of Rs. 1,020. The reasoning upon which this argument is based is this. The learned Advocate for the appellant points out that under s. 7 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act he is entitled to a decree for at least such amount of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit as is together with the amounts already realised by him equal to the amount of the principal sums advanced. In the present case it is pointed out that the loan advanced was Rs. 960, and if to this sum is added an equal sum as representing interest and from the total amount is substracted the sum of Rs. 900 already paid by the defendant, the balance will be Rs. 1,020. But argument, however, can be accepted only if it is held that s. 7 only is applicable to the case and s. 8 does not apply to it. That once s. 8 is found to be applicable as was conceded by the learned Advocate for the appellant in the course of his arguments, I think that the only mode of calculation is the mode which I have already indicated.

I would, therefore, partly allow this appeal and direct that a mortgage decree be passed in favour of the appellant for a sum of Rs. 689 instead of a sum of Rs. 402-12-0 for which decree was passed by the lower Appellate Court. This sum will carry interest at the rate of nine per cent. per annum up to the expiry of the period grace which is fixed as three months from to-day and after the expiry of the period at six per cent. until realisation.

The defendant moved this Court at the time of the argument to fix instalments for the payment of the decretal amount. It appears that the Munsif thought that the sum decreed by him should be paid in four instalments but the learned Subordinate Judge on appeal observed that as the defendant could pay Rs. 800 in one instalment and has given no reason why he required instalments for a smaller amount, this was not a fit case for fixing instalments for the payment of the decretal amount. The defendant did not appeal from this part of the decree and we have no materials before us to enable us to pass a suitable order for making the decree payable in instalments. It is however, conceded on behalf of the appellants that the matter can be agitated at the time of the execution of the decree under s. 13 of the Money-lenders Act. That being so, no order need be passed in this respect in the present decree. The plaintiff shall get costs in all the Courts proportionate to his success but the cost incurred by him on account of the court-fee on the plaint shall be paid in full.

Harries, C. J.—I agree.

Criminal Revision Petitions Nos. 233 and 280 of 1939

DIN MOHAMMAD AND RAM LALL, JJ.

Khwaja GHULAM SADID-UD-DIN—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 435 439—Order of District Magistrate under s. 3, Sarais Act (XXII of 1867), calling upon certain persons to register their Sarais, if subject to revision by High Court.

The District Magistrate as the chief officer charged with the executive administration of a district, in criminal matters can under no stretch of language be treated as a Court His function as an executive officer are poles asunder from his functions as a judicial officer and it is only in his judicial capacity that he is subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. His order calling upon certain persons to register their Sarais, under s. 3, Sarais Act, not being a judicial order is not subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court.

Cr. R. Ps. from the order of the Sessions Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated December 16, 1938.

Order of Reference.

Abdul Rashid, J.—On September 17, 1938, the District Magistrate of Dera Ghazi Khan gave a notice to Khwaja Nizam-ud-Din to register his Sarai under s. 3, Sarais Act of 1867. Against this order, Khwaja Nizam-ud-Din preferred a petition for revision in the Court of the learned Sessions Judge. The learned Sessions Judge is of the opinion that he cannot interfere under s. 435, Criminal P. C. as the District Magistrate in giving notice to Khwaja Nizam-ud-Din to register his Sarai was acting as the Chief Officer charged with the executive administration of a District in criminal matters. Against this order of the learned Sessions Judge, Nizam-ud-Din has preferred a petition for revision to this Court. Under s. 3, Sarais Act, "the Magistrate of the District" can call upon the keeper of any Sarai to register his Sarai. "The Magistrate of the District" has been defined in the Act as "the chief officer charged with the executive administration of a district in criminal matters whatever may be his designation."

Mr. Mohsin Shah, on behalf of the petitioner, urged that by virtue of s. 3 (2), Criminal P. C. "the Magistrate of the District" shall be deemed to mean "the District Magistrate" and that as the notice to register has been given by the District Magistrate, this order is subject to revision under the provisions of the Criminal P. C. Mr. Asadullah Khan on behalf of the Crown contends that the words "the Magistrate of the District" should be replaced by the words "the District Magistrate" not only in s. 3, Sarais Act, but also in the definition clause. If the words "the Magistrate of the District" in the definition clause are replaced by the word "the district Magistrate," then the 'District Magistrate' will mean "the chief officer charged with the executive administration of a district in criminal matters." The contention is that, as far as the Sarais Act is concerned, even the District Magistrate would be acting as the head of the executive administration and that his order giving a notice to the keeper of the Sarai to register the Sarai is not subject to revision under the provisions of the Criminal P. C. The point involved in this revision petition is one of great importance. Subject to the orders of the learned Chief Justice, I refer this petition for revision for decision to a Division Bench.

Mr. Mohsin Shah, for the Petitioner.

Chaudhuri Asadullah Khan, for the Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Order of the Division Bench.

Din Mohammad, J.—This order will dispose of Criminal Revisions Nos. 233 and 280 of 1939. They have been referred to a Division Bench in the following circumstances: There is a shirne at Taunsa in the District of Dera Ghazi Khan and two "Sarais" are maintained by the persons in charge of the shrine for the accommodation of pilgrims. On a report made by the Police to the District Magistrate he issued notices to Hafiz Sadid ud-Din and Khwaja Nizam-ud-Din respectively under s. 3 of Act XXII of 1867 (the Sarais Act). The two persons mentioned above appeared before him and raised certain objections. He, however, called upon them to register their Sarais under s. 3. Against this order of the District Magistrate, petitions for revisions were made to the Sessions Judge, but he declined to interfere on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the same. A further petition for revision was submitted to this Court in each case and Abdul Rashid, J. who heard these petitions, recommended to the Hon'ble Chief Justice to refer the matter to a Division Bench.

It is contended before us that inasmuch as the order complained of was made by the District Magistrate, Dera Ghazi Khan, as such, his order can be interfered with by this Court under its revisional powers. The main ground urged in support of this contention is that sub-s. (2) of s. 3, Criminal P. C. has substituted the word "District Magistrate" for the words "Magistrate of the District" wherever they appear and that consequently the words "Magistrate of the District" as used in s. 3 mean the District Magistrate as contemplated by the Criminal P. C. and the District Magistrate under that Code is an inferior Criminal Court in relation to the High Court. In our opinion there is no substance in this argument It is true that sub-s. (2), s. 3 has enacted that wherever the words "Magistrate of the District" occur the words "District Magistrate" will be substituted, but this does not, affect the provisions of the Sarais Act in any manner. In s. 2 of that Act "Magistrate of the District" means the chief officer charged with the executive administration of a District in criminal matters whatever may be his designation. Under s. 3 it is the Magistrate of the District who is empowered to take action against the keeper of a Sarai. If the words "Magistrate of the District" as occurring in the definition as well as in s. 3 are replaced by the words 'District Magistrate' the District Magistrate as defined in s. 2 will be empowered to take action under s. 3 and the District Magistrate there is described as the chief officer charged with the executive administration of a district in criminal matters. What difference will this replacement make in the nature of the powers exercised by the District Magistrate under the Sarais Act passes our comprehension.

Section 435, Criminal P. C. clearly says that it is the record of any proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court which can be called for and examined. Under s. 436, it is only in relation to such records that further enquiry can be ordered. Under s. 438 it is only such cases as are referred to above that can be reported to the High Court for necessary action. Under s. 439 it is only in the case of any proceeding, the record of which has been called for by the High Court or which has been reported for orders, or which otherwise comes to its knowledge, that the High Court can exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of appeal. No doubt the word "proceeding" in s. 439 is not further qualified as it is in s. 435, but on a well established principle of the interpretation of statutes this word can only be interpreted in the manner in which it is used in the foregoing sections and there, as stated above, it is confined to the proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court. The District Magistrate as the chief officer charged with the executive administration of a district in criminal matters can under no stretch of language be treated as a Court. His functions as an executive officer are poles asunder from his functions as a judicial officer and it is only in his judicial capacity that he is in our view subject to the revisional jurisdiction of this Court.

It may be added that it is not only under this Act but under various other Acts that the District Magistrate exercises his powers as such which are not open to revision by this Court. This fact is conceded by the petitioner's Counsel. He, however, contends that inasmuch as some sort of enquiry was made in this matter and certain objections were allowed to be raised the District Magistrate acted as a Court and his order should be treated as judicial and not as executive. We are not disposed to agree. The authorities relied on are not relevant to the case. In In re Horniman (1) it was held that a Magistrate acting under s. 113, Railways Act, exercised a judicial function and in Emperor v. Devappa Ramappa (2), a Division Bench came to the conclusion that the order passed by a Magistrate under para. 1 of s. 2, Workmen's Breach of Contract Act, 1859, was open to revision by the High Court. The present case bears no analogy to them. There the law contemplated that the powers to be exercised were judicial and here quite the contrary has been laid down in the definition of the word "District Magistrate." We accordingly hold that the order of the District Magistrate calling upon the petitioners to register their Sarais under s. 3 was not a judicial order and is consequently not subject to the revisional jurisdiction of this Court and dismiss these petitions.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Appeal from Appellate Order No. 278 of 1940

January 30, 1941

HARRIES, C. J. AND SHEARER, J.

M. NOORUL HODA—DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANT

RAI NOHAR PRASAD VARMA—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 179—Order permitting decree-holder to withdraw money awarded to him upon rateable distribution is ministerial order—Application for withdrawal is not step-in-aid—Subsequent execution petition held barred by limitation.

In execution of his decree, a decree-holder realised the decretal amount in part after the sale of certain properties. On February 28, 1936, the Court approved the schedule of rateable distribution and dismissed the execution case on part satisfaction. On March 18, 1936, the decree-holder applied for the withdrawal of the amount lying in Court. Subsequent execution petition was filed on March 18, 1939, and it was urged on behalf of the judgment-debtor that the application was barred by limitation:

Held, that the Court had on February 28, 1936, decided the matter once and for all, and all that was necessary for the decree-holder to do was to comply with the ministerial rule for allowing him to withdraw the money lying in Court. His application on March 18, 1936, and the order passed thereon was a purely ministerial order and was not a judicial order in any sense of the word. The subsequent application being, therefore, presented over three years from the termination of the earlier execution case was barred by limitation. Sadananda Sarma v. Kali Sankar Bajpai (1), followed.

A. from an order of the District Judge, Shahabad, dated June 1, 1940, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad, dated June 23, 1939

Mr. M. Azizullah, for the Appellant.

Messrs. D. N. Varma and Kanhaiyaji, for the Respondent.

Harries, C. J.—This is a second appeal in an execution matter.

The decree-holder appellant held a decree against the judgment-debtor-respondent, datad July 3, 1931. He put the decree into execution, and on February 10, 1936, the decretal amount was realised in part after the sale of certain properties. On February 28, 1936, the Court approved the schedule of rateable distribution and dismissed the execution case on part satisfaction. On March 18, 1936, the decree-holder applied for the withdrawal of the amount lying in Court.

The present execution petition was filed on March 18, 1939, and it was urged on behalf of the judgment-debtor that the application was barred by limitation. Both the lower Courts have held that the application was barred, hence this second appeal.

There can be no doubt that on February 28, 1936, a Court had finally determined the matter, it had approved of the schedule of rateable distribution, had approved of the actual sum which the decree-holder was entitled to and had approved that such a sum should be paid to the decree-holder out of the amount in Court. The Court treated the matter as at an end, because it dismissed the execution case in part satisfaction. In my view the moment this order was passed the decree-holder was entitled to the amount rateably awarded to him, and all that was necessary for him to do was to comply with the ministerial rule for allowing him to withdraw the money lying in Court. His application on March 18, 1936, and the order passed thereon was a purely ministerial order and was not a judicial order in any sense of the word. The learned Judge had on February 28, 1936, decided the matter once and for all, and all that was necessary was a ministerial order authorizing the subordinates in the office to pay out the money.

In my judgment this case is clearly covered by authority, the most recent case being Sadananda Sarma v. Kali Sankar Bajpai (1). The facts of that case are very similar to the facts of the present case, and it was held that an order permitting a decree-holder to withdraw moneys awarded to him upon rateable distribution amongst several decree-holders of proceeds realised in execution was in substance as well as in form a ministerial order. The application for withdrawal which the rules of the High Court require to be made to the Chief Ministerial Officer of the Court is not a step taken in aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 179 of Sch. II, of the Lim. Act, although it has finally to be submitted to the Judge in charge of the account department.

The application in the present case as in the Calcutta case for the payment of the money was required to be made under the General Rules and Circular Orders, and in the present case the order of the Judge was necessary before the money could be paid over. The only possible distinction that can be drawn between the two cases is suggested by Counsel on behalf of the appellant. He has argued that in the Calcutta case there was in the order dismissing the application in part satisfaction a direction that a certain sum should be paid to the decree-holder. The actual words were :—

"The decree-holder will get Rs. 32-10-3 from the sale proceeds of the execution case No. 103 of 1899."

In the present case the actual order is not before the Court, but the learned District Judge has summarised it by stating that the Court approved the schedule of rateable distribution and dismissed the execution case on part satisfaction. It appears to me that the order in the present case was an order that the decree-holder was to get a certain amount, and that being so there is no difference whatsoever between the present case and the Calcutta case. The Calcutta decision followed a large number of earlier decisions which are mentioned in the judgment in that case. It appears to me that this Court is bound to follow this long series of decisions, and that being so, I would hold that this application was barred by limitation in that it was presented over three years from the termination of the earlier execution case.

In the result, therefore, I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Shearer, J.—I agree.

Madras Debt Conciliation Act (XI of 1936), s. 4 (1)—Application under, by insolvent debtor without permission of Insolvency Court—Jurisdiction of Debt Conciliation Board to entertain it.

An application to a Debt Conciliation Board when the debtor is an insolvent and the Insolvency Court has not given its consent, is in direct contravention of s. 28 (2) of the Prov. Insol. Act and the Board has no jurisdiction to entertain it. The position is the same whether the application to the Debt Conciliation Board is made by the insolvent or by a creditor. An insolvency takes away the jurisdiction of the Debt Conciliation Board. 179 Ind. Cas. 47 (1), followed.

C. Misc. P. praying that, in the circumstances stated therein, the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of certiorari calling for records in A. P. P. No. 47 of 1938 on the file of the Debt Conciliation Board, Nellore and to quash the proceedings therein dated December 13, 1938, preferred therefrom to the High Court.

Mr. P. Chendra Reddy, for the Petitioner.

Leach, C. J.—The rule nisi must be made absolute. The respondent Board has entirely misconceived the law. On March 15, 1935, one Rahimtulla Hussani was adjudicated in the Court of the Subordsnate Judge of Nellore. On June 28, 1938 he filed an application to the respondent Board for settlement of his debts under s. 4 (1) of the Mad. Debt Conciliation Act, 1936. The applicant had not obtained his discharge and is still an insolvent. The petitioner objected to the Board entertaining the application on the ground that the applicant's estate had vested in the Official Receiver. The leave of the Insolvency Court has not been obtained for the filing of the petition and the Official Receiver was not a party to it. Thereupon, the Board directed notice to be issued to the Official Receiver who replied that he could not be made a party to the application as the applicant had not obtained the consent of the Insolvency Court.

The Board overruled the objection and refused to accept the decision of this Court in Gaddipati Venkayya v, Chanduru Sambayya (1) which was in point. In that case Pandrang Row, J., held that an application to a Debt Conciliation Board when the debtor was an insolvent and the Insolvency Court had not given its consent was in direct contravention of s. 28 (2) of the Prov. Insol. Act. The applicant happened to be a creditor and the respondent Board considered that that made all the difference. This is an opinion which certainly cannot be accepted. The position is the same whether the application to the Debt Conciliation Board is made by the insolvent or by a creditor. The debtor's estate has become vested in the Official Receiver and the Prov. Insol Act requires that it shall be administered by the Insolvency Court. An insolvency takes away the jurisdiction of the Debt Conciliation Board.

The order of the Board contains other statements which are equally open to objection but it is not necessary to discuss them. It is sufficient to say that in the circumstances the Board had no jurisdiction to accept the petition and the proceedings must be quashed. The petitioner is entitled to his costs and we fix the Advocate's fee at Rs. 50.

Execution—Payment by judgment-debtor to one of joint decree-holders, if binding on others.

The payment made by the judgment-debtor to one of several joint decree-holders is not binding on others, unless the decree-holder to whom the payment is made represents the other decree-holders in some way or the other. 103 Ind. Cas. 75 (1), distinguished.

Ex. D. A. against the order of the Civil Judge of Fyzabad, dated April 22, 1939.

Mr. S. N. Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. H. Zaidi holding brief of Mr. Haider Husain, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9 and 10.

Judgment.—This is an execution appeal. The respondents Jairaj Singh and others obtained a decree for costs against the appellant Inderdawan Singh and others. Inderdawan Singh preferred an objection under s. 47 of the Civil P. C., that he had paid the entire decretal amount to one of the decree-holders Bhipraj Singh. The lower Court held that the payment made to Bhipraj Singh, even if proved, could not give a discharge in respect of the judgment debt, nor could it amount to the entire satisfaction of the decretal amount. He ordered the decree for the full amount to be executed against the appellant Inderdawan Singh.

It is argued in appeal that Bhipraj Singh, one of the decree-holders, could give a valid discharge in respect of the entire decretal amount and reliance is placed on Jhakhri Gope v. Phagu Mahto, (A I R 1927 Pat. p. 329) (1). In that case the payment was made to the karta of the joint family, and so it was held to be binding on all the other decree-holders who were members of the family. There is one passage in the judgment of Mr. Justice Ross which gives support to the argument of the appellant's Counsel. That passage is "Under O. XXI, r. 15 any one of joint decree-holders can execute the whole decree. Consequently the judgment-debtor was entitled as the decree was a joint decree, to look for a valid discharge to any one of the joint decree-holders who executed the decree."

This observation must be considered to be made in connection with the facts of that case. If his Lordship meant to hold that in other cases payment made to one joint decree-holder discharges the debt of all the decree-holders I most respectfully dissent from him. I hold that the payment made by the judgment-debtors to one of several joint decree-holders is not binding on others, unless the decree-holder to whom the payment is made represents the other decree-holders in some way or the other. I agree with the lower Court that the payment made to Bhipraj Singh was not binding on the other decree-holders. It has not been argued before me that Bhipraj Singh represented the entire body of decree-holders. I, however, think that payment, if proved, is binding on Bhipraj Singh himself, if he could give a valid discharge of his own share. These points have not been gone into by the lower Court.

I allow the appeal and direct the lower Court to determine whether the payment has been proved or not, and if proved whether Bhipraj Singh could, under the law, give a valid discharge of his share, and if it comes to the finding that he could, the decree to the extent of his share should be considered satisfied. The payment made to Bhipraj Singh is not binding on other decree-holders, and the appeal against them except the portion allowed above is dismissed. Parties to bear the costs of the appeal.

SUBA SINGH AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Perjury by contradictory statements—Prosecution for, under s. 193, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Essentials—Duty of Court—Prosecuting Court must state particular contradictions.

The fact that a witness appears to have made contradictory statements at two different stages of a case is not by itself always sufficient to justify his prosecution for perjury. The fact that the evidence is given in a case of a grave nature should only make the Court the more careful to weigh all the circumstances before embarking on prosecutions for perjury on the basis of contradictions, for, it is in the interests of the Crown as well as in the interests of justice that prosecution witnesses should be free to tell the truth to the Court of Session irrespective of whatever evidence they may have given in the Court of the committing Magistrate. 164 Ind. Cas. 107 (1), relied on.

It is usual, as it is so very desirable, in cases of perjury by contradictory statements for the prosecuting Court not to leave the matter at large but to specify the assignments of perjury, so that the Magistrate who deals with the case will know precisely what it is for which the accused is being proceeded against.

C. Cr. A. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Gaya, dated July 10, 1940.

Mr. Rajkishore Prasad, for the Appellants.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal under s. 47t-B, Criminal P. C., against a decision of the Additional Sessions Judge of Gaya to prosecute the three petitioners under s. 193, I. P. C., in respect of contradictory statements made by them in course of a Sessions trial held by him and previously in the course of the commitment proceedings. The learned Judge below observed that mere perusal of the statements alleged to have been made by the petitioners in the two Courts was sufficient to show that false statements had been made, and he declined to allow any locus poenitentiæ apparently because of the interval between the depositions in the committing Court and those in the Court of Session. The depositions related to a case of rioting with an offence under s. 304, I. P. C. and the learned Judge said that in cases of so grave a nature it was clearly against the public interest that perjured statements should be allowed to be made with impunity.

It has been repeatedly pointed out how the fact that a witness appears to have made contradictory statements at two different stages of a case is not by itself always sufficient, to justify his prosecution for perjury. Not only do such contradictions frequently arise from such causes as mere carelessness or exaggeration due to the inability of ignorant witnesses to keep apart what they really saw from what they have since been hearing from others about the occurrence, but they may testify to the skill of the cross-examiner in inducing witnesses, notwithstanding previous stories to the contrary to tell the truth at the Sessions trial. The fact that the evidence is given in a case of a grave nature should only make the Court the more careful to weigh all the circumstances before embarking on prosecutions for perjury on the basis of contradictions, for, as was pointed out in Pragi v. Emperor, 164 Ind. Cas. 107 (1).

"It is in the interests of the Crown as well as in the interests of justice that prosecution witnesses should be free to tell the truth to the Court of Session irrespective of whatever evidence they may have given in the Court of the committing Magistrate."

What the learned Sessions Judge, should have considered was the character of the contradictions, and this he has failed to do. Nor has he made it clear for which particular contradictions he considered it necessary to proceed against any of the petitioners. What he did was to mark in red certain passages in the copies of the depositions given to the petitioners in calling upon them to show cause why they should not be prosecuted for perjury in respect of them, and finally to decide to prosecute without any consideration of any specific contradictions. And further, the record does not by any means make it clear what passages exactly from the depositions were so marked. I understand, however, from learned Counsel for the petitioner Suba Singh that the marked passage from this man's deposition before the committing Magistrate was :

"I remember about the last survey. My lands were recorded in the name of my father. Even at the time of survey the disputed land was in possession of Deodhari Singh."

(In the original deposition this passage is marked in blue, like one sentence in the examination-in-chief of another petitioner Kirit Singh in the Court of Session, though several sentences in cross-examination are marked in red.) At the trial, Suba Singh deposed :

"I was present at the time of survey. My father got his name recorded. I do not remember the survey. I cannot remember if I told the S. D. O., that I could remember the survey. I cannot remember in whose possession the disputed land was at the time of survey. The survey was about 26-27 years ago. I saw Deodhari in possession 18 to 20 years after the survey. I cannot remember if I deposed before the S. D. O. that Deodhari was in possession at the time of survey. I have had kosh since the age of 15-16 years. I cannot remember if I told the S. D. O. that I had seen Deodhari in possession since my kosh."

It is impossible to say from the papers before me what contradictions the learned Judge had in mind when he decided to prosecute this petitioner. Some of them are plainly not irreconcilable. The petitioner does however seem to have gone back upon one or two statements about the last survey, but that was an affair of 26 or 27 years ago. It seems to me that those contradictions are moreover, far from material, the important point being that the petitioner still continues to be a witness to Deodhari Singh's possession, though not indeed from the time of the Record of Rights. He was apparently a very young man at the time of the survey, and to expect absolute accuracy from witnesses of this kind in such matters on pain of prosecution for perjury will merely result in preventing them from admitting the truth in the Court of Session. In my opinion, the learned Judge would have been better advised in refraining from prosecuting the petitioner for perjury on the basis of such contradictions.

Coming to Naurangi Singh, this petitioner claimed to be an eye-witness to the riot and homicide (s. 304) and spoke in the commitment proceedings of two of the accused striking Deodhari Singh (the man who lost his life in the affair) with lathis and the latter falling down. In his cross-examination before the Magistrate he said that Rambilas Lal, one of the accused, was not on horseback but was on foot. At the trial, however, he said in examination-in-chief that Rambilas was on horse (back), though in cross-examination he had to admit that Deodhari was surrounded by a large number of men at the time of the assault and that therefore he could not see what he (Deodhari) was doing, nor what the people surrounding him were doing, nor whose lathi struck Deodhari. This is plainly not a case of correcting misstatements previously made through inadvertence and reverting to the truth. The man had obviously been making conscious improvements upon what he had really seen, and doing so without any excuse that can be seen at the present moment.

Petitioner No. 3, Kirit Singh, spoke in the commitment proceedings of himself and his uncle stopping the rioters from moving the ploughs. In the Court of Session, he denied obstructing any plough himself and said that he could not remember if he had told the Deputy Magistrate that his uncle and himself had obstructed the ploughs. It seems to me that this is precisely the kind of contradiction which ought not to be made the subject of a prosecution for perjury. There is also some contradiction about the malik's possession over some plots of land, but I do not think that anything very much turns on it. The gravamen of the proceeding against this petitioner, I take it, is the part that he assigns to the accused Mukhdeo Singh in the assault on himself. In his cross-examination he had admitted before the Magistrate that Mukhdeo Singh "is crippled from both hands." In the Court of Session however he again spoke of Mukhdeo Singh among others assaulting him with lathis, and in his cross-examination said "Mukhdeo wielded the lathi with both hands. I did not tell the Deputy Magistrate that Mukhdeo is crippled in both hands." The petitioner may or may not have remembered when deposing in the Sessions trial what exactly he had stated in the commitment proceedings, but Mukhdeo's physical disability is not a matter on which a witness of his standing could be mistaken either on one occasion or on the other. The inference is that the part he repeatedly assigned to Mukhdeo is false. The learned Judge below had Mukhdeo before him at the Sessions trial and said in his judgment that the man's hands appeared both to be crippled. No plausible explanation has been offered of how the petitioner first admitted, and afterwards, in substance went back upon, Mukhdeo's disability. There is also no reason to think on present materials that he went back upon his former statements in the interests of truth. He has therefore been rightly considered by the learned Judge below to be a man who ought to be prosecuted.

It is usual, as it is so very desirable, in cases of perjury by contradictory statements for the prosecuting Court not to leave the matter at large as has been done in the present case, but to specify the assignments of perjury, so that the Magistrate who deals with the case will know precisely what it is for which the accused is being proceeded against. The result is that the prosecution of Suba must be quashed and the complaint, if any, made against him by the learned Additional Sessions Judge withdrawn. The appeal of the other two petitioners is dismissed.

S. Order accordingly.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Second Appeal No. 60 of 1939
August 23, 1940
BRAUND, J.

LACHHMI PRASAD AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
BAHRAICH RAM—PLAINTIFF AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law—Partition—Separation in status and actual separation of assets, if different—Subsequent agreement between members to effect partition referring to previous agreement to same effect and cancelling it—Subsequent agreement held re-affirmation of intention—Joint family—De facto manager—Mortgagee dealing with him in good faith, if protected—Manager—Finding that loan was borrowed for family benefit is one of fact—Joint family business—Transaction by manager—When supported—Principles governing transactions relating to joint family business, stated—Creditor, if must show actual benefit—Business mainstay of family, whether prima facie evidence that loan borrowed for business was for benefit of family—Practice—Issues—Joint family business—Transactions by manager challenged—Issues to be framed, stated.

A separation 'in status' may well be different thing from an actual separation of assets. It is possible, that a family may have divided 'in status' notwithstanding that the physical partition of the assets was not yet complete [p 573, col. 2.]

Where a subsequent agreement between the members of a joint Hindu family to effect a partition of family property referred to a prior agreement between them to the same effect and cancelled it:

Held, that the subsequent agreement was a 'reaffirmation' rather than a 'cancellation' of any intention to separate which might be found to be contained in the earlier agreement. [ibid.]

A person dealing in good faith with the de facto manager of a joint Hindu family is not affected with notice of any defect in his de jure title. A mortgagee dealing with a member of a joint Hindu family acting as a de facto manager of the family properties until they are actually divided, cannot be defeated on the ground that such member was not de jure manager of the family, where there is no proof that mortgagee was aware that proposal for a partition were on foot or that he dealt with the mortgagor otherwise than in good faith and in the belief that he was also the de jure manager. [p. 575, col. 1.]

A finding that a loan was barrowed by the manager of the joint Hindu family for the benefit of the family is a finding of fact and when supported by evidence, is binding in second appeal even though the second Appellate Court were disposed to disagree with it.

There are two separate and distinct grounds upon which the power of a manager of a joint Hindu family can be "rightly exercised" either "in a case of need" or "for the benefit of the estate." That these grounds are separate and alternative. Where the question involves the consideration of a transaction relating to a business, the following principles apply: (1) If the business is merely the individual enterprise of any particular member or members of the family as distinct from a 'family' business, no question either of 'need' or 'benefit' can arise and the transaction can never bind the interests of the other members of the family. (2) Where the business is strictly 'ancestral', then either 'need' or 'benefit' to the estate or family will be presumed. (3) Where the business is a 'family' business but is either new or "newish" no such presumption in favour of the mortgagee arises but the question becomes one of fact whether there has been "benefit to the estate or family". In that case, when no actual benefit is positively proved, the mortgagee has to show that he made reasonable enquiries as to the purpose for which the loan was required and was reasonably satisfied that the purpose was beneficial. (4) Finally, where it is shown that the business in question is the 'mainstay' of the family, in the sense that it is all, or practically all, the family has to depend upon, then, the proposed mortgagee is entitled to accept that fact as prima facie evidence that a loan taken for the purposes of that business is a transaction for the benefit of the estate or family. He is not required to go further and to enquire into the technical business necessity for raising the money. 155 Ind Cas. 136 (7) and 164 Ind. Cas. 572 (10), relied on. [p. 576, cols 1 & 2; p. 577, col. 1.]

In a case challenging transactions relating to joint Hindu family business in which the existence of a joint Hindu family is denied, that, of course, is a distinct issue. Where that is not disputed, the general issues which arise are these:—(1) Whether the business was 'ancestral'. (2) If the business was not 'ancestral' then whether it was a 'family' business at all or whether it was merely an 'individual' business. If it was merely an 'individual' business no question of 'need' or 'benefit' can arise. (3) If the business was not 'ancestral', but was a 'family' business, then: (a) Was there any 'actual' benefit or 'actual' need. If no 'actual' benefit is proved, then (b) whether the business was the 'mainstay' of the family; and (c) whether the mortgagee advanced the money in the bona fide belief that it was borrowed for the purpose of the 'need' of the business or for the purpose of the 'benefit of the estate or family', and (d) whether such belief, if any, was the result of bona fide inquiries which were reasonable and sufficient in the circumstances of the particular case.

S. A. from the decision of the Civil Judge, Basti, dated September 19, 1938.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This suit is a mortgage suit brought upon a mortgage dated January 11, 1936. The mortgage was made by one Bechu Ram, in favour of the plaintiff-respondent, who is the mortgagee. Bechu Ram was himself the first defendant to this suit, but he at no point defended it and suffered a mortgage decree to be passed against him by default. He died during the pendency of this appeal to which he was not a party but the defendant-respondent, Hari Kishan, is in fact his heir.

The question involved in this appeal is, subject to a preliminary point, the old but troublesome one relating to the power of the manager of a joint Hindu family to dispose of the assets, so as to bind the interests of the members of the family. It is sufficient for the purposes of this appeal for me to say that the remaining defendant-respondents are all members of the family, who dispute their liability, or rather the liability of their shares in the mortgaged property, upon the mortgage. They put forward a two-fold defence, the first disputing that, at the date of the mortgage, the family was a joint Hindu family at all, and the other denying that there was any consideration for the mortgage and, if there was consideration, that it was a transaction for legal necessity or for the benefit of the estate or family. On the face of it, the mortgage of January 11, 1936 purports in the clearest possible terms to have been made by Bechu Ram as the manager of the joint Hindu family, whatever his actual position may have been. It is important, I think, to begin by examining the terms of the mortgage itself. It is a unilateral document and starts with a number of recitals. It recites that Bechu Ram was indebted to various persons upon 'sarkhats' and promissory notes in respect of which he was being pressed and it asserts that "...the said amount was borrowed for a legal necessity—allowed under the Hindu..." but is silent as to what that 'legal necessity' was. It then goes on to explain that Bechu Ram had incurred obligation in the marriage of a daughter and a niece and asserts again :"...I am the head of the joint Hindu family governed by the Hindu Mitakshara Law." Bechu Ram then proceeds to explain that he has borrowed Rs. 975 for these purposes at a rate of interest of 12 annas per cent. per mensem and again insists upon the character of the loan. He says :

"The above-mentioned debt has been borrowed for a lawful necessity allowed under the Hindu Law and the entire members of the family have been benefited therefrom."

I have set out sufficient of the mortgage to leave no room for doubt, I think, that, whatever the position of the 'family' may actually have been at the date of the mortgage and whatever the character of the transaction really was, there can be no shadow of doubt that Bechu Ram purported to be exercising his power as the manager of the joint family. The matter can be somewhat shortened at this point because it is common ground between the parties and has been conceded, that, out of the aggregate principal sum secured by the mortgage Rs. 975 the sum of Rs. 746-5-0 was borrowed to pay off an outstanding 'sarkhat' in favour of one Mangru Ram, Rs. 218 were borrowed to pay off a promissory note held by one Jagmohan which represented the expenses of the two marriages referred to in the mortgage and Rs. 10-11-0 represented a fee paid to a Sub-Registrar in connexion with the mortgage. As to the expenses of the marriage, I understand that no resistance is now offered by the defendant-appellants and this appeal has been argued before me on the footing that the sum of Rs. 218 is to be taken to have been raised 'for the benefit of the family.' The real bone of contention is the sum of Rs. 746-5-0 which represents the money borrowed to pay off the 'sarkhat' held by Mangru Ram. Beyond the bare recitals in the mortgage itself that "the said amount was borrowed for a legal necessity allowed by the Hindu Law," I have been able to find only one solitary piece of evidence as to the actual purpose for which it was borrowed. I have read the whole of the evidence with some care and that is all I can find. It is a passage in the evidence of Mangru Ram the holder, presumably, of the 'sarkhat' for Rs. 746 in which he says :

"He (Bechu Ram) had gone out to purchase goods and had taken this loan from me for that purpose. The shop of all the brothers was joint. The shop-keeping business of the executant and his brothers had been started by the executant himself. It did not come down to him from his ancestors. My amount has been shown in the khata (accounts) of the shop of the executant and his brothers."

That, I think, is the only evidence there is as to the character of the business or the purpose of the loan taken on the 'sarkhat' from Mangru Ram and paid off out of the proceeds of the mortgage. It is, I think, a remarkable circumstance of this case that Bechu Ram, who was better situated than anyone to explain the transaction, has given no evidence at all. He was alive at the date of the trial before the Munsif. In order that the appeal may be understood, it is necessary now to relate some further facts which are in evidence. The mortgage was executed on January 11, 1936. We then have a document of some importance in the case dated May 1, 1936, Ex. C. It is an agreement to refer to "arbitration" certain unspecified disputes which had arisen and to submit to the arbitrators the duty to "partition" the joint property. The parties to this instrument were Bechu Ram and his brother, Mannu Ram Kandu, who, it is sufficient to say, was the parent or grandparent of the other defendant members of the joint family who were not descended from Bechu Ram himself. Exhibit C describes itself as being: ". . . . for settlement of the dispute and for partition of the shop, property, etc' as between us the executants . . ." It then contains what is, in effect, a recital that some nine or ten months previously—obviously, prior to the execution of the mortgage:

".....We appointed Sheo Balak Ram Sahu Kandu, Mallu Ram Sahu Kandu and Ram Kishan Ram Sahu Kalwar as arbitrators and Ram Deo as umpire and stipulated that any partitton, with respect to the property, etc. and shop, honestly effected by them would be admitted and accepted by us. But a period of nine or ten months has passed and the umpire or the arbitrators have not so far given any decision. We have now cancelled and invalidated the arbitration agreement aforesaid. We are now executing another arbitration agreement ....."

They then proceed to appoint a number of new arbitrators and say that:

"...Whatever they honestly effect would at all events, be admitted and accepted by us. None of the executants shall have any objection of any sort to it..."

The previous "arbitration agreement" of nine or ten months earlier is not itself in evidence. But it has not been argued in either of the Courts below or before me that the fact of its existence and its tenor as recited in Ex. C has not been strictly proved and this appeal has proceeded before me on the footing that there was an agreement to the effect recited. I shall therefore accept that position. It is common ground that the property covered by Ex. C includes the mortgaged property and that, in due course it was actually partitioned in pursuance of the agreement. When the case came before the Additional Munsif of Basti he framed two issues, the first, whether 'the mortgage deed in suit was executed for consideration and legal necessity," and the second, whether Bechu Ram and the other defendants were at the date of the mortgage joint or separate. The second of these two issues was, at any rate, a question of fact. He dealt with the second issue first and concluded that at the time the mortgage was executed the family was still joint. He considered the recital to which I have drawn attention in Ex. C as to the previous agreement of nine or ten months earlier and discarded it as "of no importance" on the ground that it was subsequently "superseded" by Ex. C and that the parties had "mutually agreed to cancel it." Had it been material for me to consider the point, I am not sure that I could have agreed with his way of putting it. It is possible that another way of looking at Ex. C is that it expresses a 'reaffirmation" rather than a 'cancellation' of any intention to separate which might be found to be contained in the earlier agreement. However that may be, the Munsif did decide that at the date of the mortgage the family was still joint. He proceeded therefore to consider the other issue and he came to the following three conclusions of fact: First, that the business was not an 'ancestral' business; secondly, no case of "necessity for the loan" had been "strictly proved" nor that it was "actually required for the family business" and, thirdly, that it had not even been shown that the money was actually spent on the business. The Munsif therefore dismissed the suit.

On first appeal to the Civil Judge of Basti, he too considered first the question whether the family was still a joint Hindu family at the date of the mortgage and, relying upon a view that, if the previous agreement had really effected a "partition of the assets of the famly" prior to May 1, 1936, there would have been no need for the subsequent agreement of that date and also upon certain general statements made by the witnesses that the family were still joint in January 1936, he came to the same conclusion as had been reached by the Munsif, that the family continued to be a joint Hindu family. Again I am not altogether sure that I should agree with the learned Judge's reasoning, as it seems to me, upon the authorities, that a separation 'in status' may well be a different thing from an actual separation of assets. It is possible, I think, that a family may have divided 'in status' notwithstanding that the physical partition of the assets was not yet complete. If separation depends on 'intention,' as most of the authorities appear to agree, that is an arguable view. The learned Judge then went on to discuss the other issue. Here he took a different view of the facts from the Munsif. He agreed that the business was not an ancestral business, but came to the conclusion that:

"In my opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to recover all the items of the mortgage bond with the exception of Rs. 10-11-0 because he has succeeded in proving that they were borrowed either for legal necessity or for the benefit of family members..... ....."

He found further, as a fact, that the firm was "the mainstay of the family" and that the family had no other business than this. To put it briefly, he found as facts: (a) that the money borrowed on the 'sarkhat' was borrowed and used for the purposes of the business and (b) that it was a transaction for the benefit of the family. There was evidence before the learned Judge to support such a finding. I have already drawn attention to that passage in Mangru Ram's evidence in which he says that the money borrowed from him was shown in the firm's books. There is evidence that this was the only business the family had. In conformity with these conclusions, the learned Civil Judge gave the plaintiff a mortgage decree in respect of the full amount claimed by him, less only the sum of Rs. 10-11-0.

That is the condition in which the appeal comes before me in second appeal. The first point taken by the defendant-appellants in this appeal is that both the Munsif and the learned Civil Judge have wholly misconceived the legal effect of the former of the two agreements for arbitration. I have already said that the existence and contents of this document have been accepted throughout and here. An able argument has been addressed to me by the learned Advacate appearing for the appellants to the effect that, once there is found a definite and unambiguous indication by a member or members of a joint Hindu family of an intention to separate and to enjoy his or their share or shares in severalty, then from that moment a severance 'in status' takes place quite independently of the physical division of the joint property which may take place later. It would necessarily follow as the logical outcome of this argument that, once the severance in status has taken place, the powers of the manager would lapse and not less so in a case, such as this one, in which the manager himself is one of the persons severing his connection with the joint family. I think there may be great force in this argument that 'intention is the real test': See Syed Kasam v. Jorawar Singh (1), Balmakund Lal v. Sohano Kueri (2) at p. 173 and Harkishan Singh v. Partap Singh (3). Interesting as this question is, however, I do not feel it necessary to determine it in this appeal because the point, as it arises here, can, in my opinion, be effectively disposed of on another ground altogether.

The plaintiff-respondent has contended that the question is not open at all in second appeal, inasmuch as the finding that the joint Hindu family was in existence at the date of the mortgage is a pure finding of fact. He relies upon the well-known observations of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Durga Chowdharani v. Jewahir Singh (4), in which it is said that there is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact, "however gross or inexcusable the error may seems to be." I need only say as to this that, had the matter been material to the decision of this appeal, I should have found it difficult to agree with the appellant's contention that the Munsif and the learned Judge in the Courts below had completely misapprehended the legal effect of the proved fact of the previous agreement having challenged an erroneous finding of fact at all. The error alleged is, I think, not one in the finding of the facts, but in the appreciation of the legal consequences of the facts which have been found and remain unchallenged. This however is again only of academic interest in view of the conclusion I have reached and I only mention it in deference to the arguments which have been addressed to me. For the most complete answer to this contention of the appellants we have, I think, to go back to the case which has always been accepted as the locus classicus in questions of this nature and of which a Bench of two Judges of this Court once found it necessary to say that we are "bound and wholly bound" by it: Hunooman Pershad Pandey v. Bibooee Mundraj Koonweree (5). Though occasions have arisen from time to time to explain the classic passage at the end of Knight Bruce, L. J's. judgment in that case, no one has yet, I think, improved upon it. The particular passage of the judgment however which is material to the point with which I am now dealing is that which is to be found at p. 412*;

"Upon the third point, it is to be observed that under the Hindu Law, the right of a bona fide incumbrancer who has taken from a de facto manager a charge on lands created honestly for the purpose of saving the estate or for the benefit of the estate is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager) affected by the want of union of the de facto with the de jure . . . ."

In my judgment, this completely disposes, in the present circumstances, of the appellants' first contention. Whatever may have been the legal effect of the first agreement to separate upon the status inter se of the members of the joint Hindu family of which Bechu Ram was up to that time admittedly both the de jure and the de facto manager, it is plain that no actual or de facto dissolution of the family, nor any distribution of the family property, took place until long after the mortgage of January 11, 1936. Whatever his de jure position may have been, there is nothing whatever in the evidence to suggest that he did not remain the de facto manager of all the family properties until they were actually divided. Nor is there any suggestion made that the mortgagee was aware even that proposals for a separation were on foot or that he dealt with Bechu Ram who was the ostensible and de facto manager for the family, otherwise than in good faith and in the belief that he was also the de jure manager. It is a salutary principle and, I think, a principle which in view of the observations of Knight-Bruce, L. J., admits of no doubt that a person dealing in good faith with the de facto manager of a joint Hindu family should not be affected with notice of any defect in his de jure title for otherwise dealings with such a family would become almost impossible. For these reasons, I think that the appellants contention that the family was not a joint Hindu family at the date of the mortgage even if that contention is well-founded does not assist them in this appeal. That brings us therefore to the second part of the case—whether the mortgage being one made by the manager of a joint Hindu family, it was within his power to make it.

It will be convenient to be reminded of the few material facts which have been found and are not now open to challenge. First, the business for which the original loan on the "sarkhat" was taken was not an "ancestral" business. It was a 'new' business in the sense that it had not descended from the ancestors of the present members of the family, but had been started by Bechu Ram and his brother or brothers within a comparatively recent period. Secondly, the business was the "mainstay" of the family which had no other business to look to for its support. Thirdly, it has been found as a fact (by the learned Civil Judge) that the money borrowed on the "sarkhat" was actually received by the firm and credited in its books and that it was borrowed and received for the purposes of the firm's business. Those, I think, are the established facts with which we have to deal and to which we have to apply the law.

The principles to be applied in cases in which dispositions by managers of joint Hindu families are called in question have been the subject of a long series of judicial decisions both of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and of this and other High Courts in India. Almost without exception they have taken as their point of departure the short passage at the end of the judgment of Knight-Bruce, L. J., in Hunooman Pershad Pandey v. Babooee Mundraj Koonweree (5) to which I have already referred :

"The power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own, is under the Hindu Law a limited and qualified power; see Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (6). It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need or for the benefit of the estate. But where, in the particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted or the benefit to be conferred upon it in the particular instance is the thing to be regarded. But of course, if that danger arises or has arisen from any misconduct to which the lender is or has been a party, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong to support a charge in his own favour against the heir, grounded on a necessity which his wrong has helped to cause. Therefore the lender in this case unless he is shown to have acted mala fide will not be affected though it be shown that with better management the estate might have been kept free from debts. Their Lordships think that the lender is bound to enquire into the necessities for the loan and to satisfy himself as well as he can with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the manager is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. But they think that if he does so inquire, and acts honestly the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge and they do not think that under such circumstances, he is bound to see to the application of the money. It is obvious that money to be secured on any estate is likely to be obtained on easier terms than a loan which rests on mere personal security and that therefore the mere creation of a charge securing a proper debt cannot be viewed as improvident management; the purposes for which a loan is wanted are often future as respects the actual application, and the lender can rarely have unless he enters on the management the means of controlling and rightly directing the actual application. Their Lordships do not think that a bona fide creditor should suffer when he has acted honestly and with due caution, but is himself deceived."

It is clear from this that there are two separate and distinct grounds upon which the power of a manager of a joint Hindu family can be "rightly exercised" either "in a case of need" or "for the benefit of the estate." That these grounds are separate and alternative grounds has been emphasized time and again since then by the Courts. In 1926 Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (6) at p. 843* two Judges of this Court said in reference to Knight-Bruce, L. J.'s judgment:

"Here we have what is to us a quite unambiguous direction. The former to charge the estate can only arise 'in a case of need' or 'for the benefit of the estate'. . . . . We have emphasized ourselves by placing the word 'or' in italics. . . "

And again in a recent Full Bench case of the Court Ram Nath v. Chiranji Lal (7) at p. 186 it has been emphasized again. The late Sir Shah Sulaiman, C. J. says:

"It seems to follow that the question whether the particular transaction in dispute was for legal necessity or was for the benefit of the estate and the joint family is something more than the mere question whether the money borrowed was required for the purposes of a new business. The fact that it was required for a new business would not be any justification. If in addition, thereto, it could be shown that there was either a pressure of necessity to continue that business, as it was the mainstay of the family or that the particular transaction was at the time of benefit to the family and the family estate, the transaction would be supported but, of course, on the latter ground. The question whether the transaction was for such benefit or not is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of the case, and it is for the Court to decide whether it was so beneficial and was such as an ordinary prudent manager would have entered into in the interest of the family."

The distinction therefore between "a case of need" and 'benefit to the estate" is a well recognized one and has an important practical application. The next thing which, in my view, it is necessary to understand is the rule which has been repeatedly laid down that, where a transaction is defended on the ground of 'benefit to the estate" or of "benefit to the family," the mortgagee must show in a case in which he is not prepared to show any actual benefit that he made reasonable enquiries. That follows from ordinary equitable principles of long standing. This rule also has been repeatedly recognized by the authorities. It does not mean that the mortgagee is bound to prove 'actual' benefit. He may, of course, if he can or it may appear from other sources. It means only that the law allows a person who is dealing with a manager of a joint Hindu family to maintain a transaction, without showing positive benefit, if he can show that he has made "reasonable" inquiries as to the purpose of the loans and has satisfied himself that the purpose was beneficial and has not been indifferent to whether the manager is committing a fraud on the family or not. In Ram Krishna Murarji Ratan Chand (8) on appeal from this High Court, their Lordships have referred with approval to the statement of the law in this respect contained in Bunooman Pershad Panday v. Babooee Mundraj Koonweree (5) in which it is said:

"Their Lordships think that the lender is bound to inquire into the necessities for the loan, and to satisfy himself as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the manager is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate."

See too Benares Bank Ld. v. Hari Narain (9) at p. 570.

With the assistance of the long line of authorities which are available, I think that certain clear principles have emerged. The transaction in question may be supported either on the ground of "need", or, as it is often called or miscalled, "legal necessity" or on the ground of "benefit of the estate or family." Where the question involves the consideration of a transaction relating to a business, the following principles can I think, be deduced from the authorities:

(1) If the business is merely the individual enterprise of any particular member or members of the family as distinct from a 'family' business, no question either of 'need' or 'benefit' can arise and the transaction can never bind the interests of the other members of the family.

(2) Where the business is strictly 'ancestral', then either 'need' or 'benefit' to the estate or family will be presumed: see Ram Nath v Chiranji Lal (7) per Sulaiman, C. J. at p. 183*.

Ram Prasad v. Bishambhar Nath (10)]; no such presumption in favour of the mortgagee arises but the question becomes one of fact whether there has been "benefit to the estate or family." In that case, when no actual benefit is positively proved, the mortgagee has to show that he made reasonable enquiries as to the purpose for which the loan was required and was reasonably satisfied that the purpose was beneficial. What are, in any given case, 'reasonable enquiries,' must, I conceive, vary but I do not think that a mortgagee can be required to do more than to satisfy himself that the manager is acting bona fide and he is not, I think, required to prove the actual application of the money borrowed, provided he has lent it in good faith. He could not, I think, be asked to scrutinise a judgment of the manager or to substitute a judgment of his own for any bona fide judgment of the manager upon a question of what are the technical needs of the business, and

(4) Finally, where it is shown that the business in question is the 'mainstay' of the family, in the sense that it is all, or practically all, the family has to depend upon, then, I think, the authorities justify the conclusion that the proposed mortgagee is entitled to accept that fact as prima facie evidence that a loan taken for the purposes of that business is a transaction for the benefit of the estate or family. I do not think he can be required to go further and to enquire into the technical business necessity for raising the money. In these observations, I have confined myself, of course, to those transactions which relate to money raised in relation to a business and have not considered those transactions which relate to the raising of money in connection with specific property as for instance to rebuild or repair a particular house which are in the nature of cases of 'salvage' and which stand upon a different, and more obvious, footing.

Applying these principles to the present case, I think that the judgment of the learned Civil Judge is conclusive. He has held, and held as a fact that the money borrowed on the 'sarkhat' from Mangru Ram was to use his own words "borrowed for the benefit of the family." That to my mind is the end of the matter. It is the central fact in the whole case and the finding upon it is one which there was evidence to support. It is, I think, binding on me in the second appeal, even if I had been disposed to disagree with it. The learned Judge has not, I think, in any way misled himself upon the law. He had already held that the family was in existence, as a joint Hindu family and I agree with him to the extent of thinking, at any rate, that the mortgagee was, in the circumstances, entitled to treat Bechu Ram as both the de facto and de jure manager of a subsisting joint Hindu family. He has found that the money was borrowed for the business, which was a 'family' business and not an 'individual' business. He has found that it reached the business. And he has found that that business was the 'mainstay' of the family. I am bound to accept it, therefore that the loan in question was for the 'benefit of the family' that is an 'actual' benefit to the family. No question of enquiring on the part of the mortgagee can therefore arise, as when the mortgagee accepts the onus of proving, and does prove, 'actual' benefit, it does not matter whether he inquired or not. There was benefit and that is the end of it. I do not say for a moment that he was legally required to go so far as to have proved actual benefit. It would have been, I think, quite enough, if he had said 'I dealt with the borrower in good faith, believing that the money was required for the needs of the family and my belief was based upon proper and bona fide inquiries made by me. I am not concerned with whether there was actual benefit or not.'

In my judgment, therefore, for the reasons I have expressed, the plaintiff-respondent in this case is entitled to the mortgage decree which he succeeded in obtaining in the Court of the Civil Judge and the appeal must be dismissed The question of the Rs. 10-11-0 has not been pressed before me nor has there been any controversy as to the sum which was raised to defray the marriage expenses of Becnu Ram's daughter and niece. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

I desire, before parting with the case, to indicate very briefly, and in the hope that I may assist Subordinate Judges who have to try such cases as these, what the general issues, in my opinion, are which ought, subject to the requirements of each particular case, to be framed in suits of this kind. In a case, such as the present, in which the existence of a joint Hindu family is denied, that, of course, is a distinct issue. Where that is not disputed, the general issues which appear to me to arise are these :—

(1) Whether the business was 'ancestral' because, if it was, a presumption may be drawn in favour of the mortgagee that the money he lent was for the 'needs' of the business or for the 'benefit of the estate'.

(2) If the business was not 'ancestral', then whether it was a 'family' business at all or whether it was merely an 'individual' business. If it was merely an 'individual' business no question of 'need' or 'benefit' can arise.

(3) If the business was not 'ancestral', but was a 'family' business, then: (a). Was there any 'actual' benefit or 'actual' need, bearing in mind that the mortgagee is under no legal obligation to prove this, if he acted bona fide and made reasonable inquiries. If no 'actual' benefit is proved, then, (b) whether the business was the 'mainstay' of the family; and (c) whether the mortgagee advanced the money in the bona fide belief that it was borrowed for the purpose of the 'needs' of the business or for the purpose of the 'benefit of the estate or family', and (d) whether such belief, if any, was the result of bona fide inquiries which were reasonable and sufficient in the circumstances of the particular case, bearing in mind that the mortgagee is in my opinion, under no obligation to substitute any technical judgment of his own for that of the manager of the business in any matter relating to the needs of that business. If either of the last two issues are answered in the negative, then, I think, the case is concluded against the mortgagee.

I have been asked for leave to appeal under the Letters Patent. In my view, this case raises no new, or doubtful, question of law nor are the authorities governing it either scarce or conflicting. Indeed, they set out the principles with singular uniformity. This is not, in my view, a case in which an appeal under the Letters Patent is justified.

The property in the river bed of a navigable river is in the Crown. [p. 581, col. 2.]

Where a zemindar makes an admission in the road cess return that a certain land is reformation in situ of lands comprised in his tauzi, the admission is almost conclusive as to the nature of that land. It has great weight unless neither explained away or shown to be wrong, but the weight of the admission is nullified, where it is proved that it was made with a view to avoid assessment to further cess. [p. 585, col. 2]

Long possession would raise the inference of title to possession, but it would afford no basis for the further inference that that title rested on reformation in situ and not on accretion. Forbes v. Meer Mahamed Hossein (9), Secretary of State v Durbijoy Singh (10), 1 Ind. Cas. 182 (11) and 38 Ind Cas. 379 (12), distinguished. [p. 587, col. 2.]

Accretions of land to a patni tenure become an increment to the tenure under s. 4, Ben. Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation. The patnidar has the right to possess those lands and the zemindars, have no right to possess in khas. The absence of an offer by the patnidars to pay additional rent for the increment to their tenure cannot, take away the rights conferred on them by s. 4. There can be no question of forfeiture where the patnidars have never denied that the lands were accretions. [p. 588, col. 2; p. 589, col. 1.]

A finding in a Privy Council decision cannot be relied on by a party to a suit for showing that the village in question was a fixed place, where the judgment was not inter partes.

The plaintiff is not relieved of producing the best materials in support of his case, where no admission has been made by the defendants either in their written statement or at the hearing. [p. 584, col. 2.]

The non-mention of the river in the remark column of a dastur rewaz which is only meant to contain a description of the boundaries, does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the river was not within taraf. [p. 583, col. 1.]

In a suit for possession and mesne profits the plaint ought to give a tentative valuation for the claim for mesne profits and on that valuation court-fees ought to be paid. But the Court cannot dismiss the prayer for mesne profits without giving an opportunity to the plaintiff to value the relief and to pay court-fee thereon. A prayer for valuing the claim for mesne profits separately and for payment of deficit court-fee thereon ought to be allowed at any stage of the suit. [p. 589, col. 2.]

The Court cannot take away the right of a party to withdraw any application made by him on which no orders had been made at the time.

The word 'damosh' means a beel or inland pool of shallow water being a part of the deserted bed of a river. Hence the words "damosh koha etc." cannot include the bed of a large flowing navigable river. [p. 581, col. 2.]

The word taraf does not signify a collection of co-terminous villages, villages forming a compact block of land. The word means a sub-division of a pergunah including several villages A pergunah which usually covers a very large tract and means a large local division of the Muhammadan times, which corresponds in idea, though not in extent, with a district of modern times, does not convey the idea of a compact area of land with no public and navigable river cutting through it. Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Secretary of State (1), relied on. Judgment.—Touzi No. 523 of the Murshidabad Collectorate, which comprised Pergunah Goas, was permanently settled in 1793 on the basis of the Decennial Settlement of 1789. It consisted of twelve Huddas, each Hudda being sub-divided into several Tarafs of collection of villages. We are in this appeal concerned with village Udaynagore in Taraf Udaynagore which is in Hudda Ikuri. In 1799 Raja Debi Singh purchased the said touzi or zemindary at a sale for recovery of arrears of revenue. The zemindary ultimately devolved by succession on his descendant Raja Gopal Singh, Krishna Chandra Singh and Ram Chandra Singh. At a partition in or about the year 1830, Ram Chandra Singh got in his eight annas odd share six out of the twelve Huddas, including Hudda Ikuri. On April 8, 1835 he granted patni taluks of two mehals, to one Radhabullav Mukhopadhya (Ex. 6 b (1), B 148). The first mehal, which comprised Taraf Udaynagore with some exceptions, was let out at an annual patni rent of Rs. 1,852-0-11 (Sicca = Rs. 1,975-8-1 in company's coin) and the second mehal called Hat Jelangi at an annual patni rent of Rs. 1,201 (Sicca—Rs. 1,281-1-0 in company's coin). Radhabullav Mukhopadhya sold his patni interest on November 22, 1839 to John & Robert Watson (Messrs. Robert Watson & Co.) (Ex. 7-B 144). Robert Watson & Co in turn sold the same along with other properties to Messrs. Robert Watson & Co. Ltd., on May 26, 1890 (Ex. 27, B 272). The latter conveyed the same to one Crawford on November 29, 1902 (Ex. 27 (a), B 379) who in turn sold the same to the Midnapore Zemindary Co., Ltd., the plaintiff in the suit, on December 3, 1906 (Ex. 27 (b), B 408). The zamindary interest in the aforesaid six Huddas of Touzi No. 523 devolved in the following manner. From Ram Chandra Singh it passed to Robert Watson, James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley and then to James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley (Ex. 26, C 838). The successors-in-interest of James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley sold the same to Rai Bishunchand and Rai Budh Singh Dhudhuria, the predecessors of the contesting defendants, on June 22, 1893 (Ex. 27 (c); B 285). For the purpose of deciding some of the controversies we will have to consider in some detail some of the aforesaid conveyances. In 1850-54 there was a revenue survey of villages Udaynagore and the other adjoining villages. The revenue survey map is Ex. 28 (19) [Map No. 22, M (1)]. The position of the following river Padma is shown in that map. In 1867-68 the revenue authorities again surveyed the locality and prepared a map, Ex. 28 (12) (Map No. 15-M (1)]. This map and other maps prepared at this survey will hereafter be called the Diara maps of 1867-68 and the proceedings for assessment of revenue based on the said survey of 1867-68 as the Diara proceedings of 1869.

The Diara maps of 1867-68 indicated that a good portion of what had been shown in the revenue survey of 1850-54 to be dry lands and appertaining to Touzi No. 523 had gone under the river bed, and a large block of land had emerged out of bed of the river as it flowed in 1850-54, the river having since then moved further east at the place. Proceedings were accordingly taken by the Govt. to assess to revenue what appeared to be "added land" on a comparison of the Diara survey of 1867-68 with revenue survey maps of 1850-54. Objections were filed by Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., as patnidars and by Sreenarayan and Harimohan Bagchis, patnidars of two other Mouzas, Poreshpore and Ramnarayanpore also appertaining to Touzi No. 523. It is unnecessary to detail the nature of those objections which mainly related to the correctness of the boundaries between the different mouzas of the said estate as laid down by the Diara Survey Amin. Those objections were considered by the Survey Deputy Collector, Mr. Bhagaban Chandra Sen, who recorded his findings in his Robokari of August 26, 1869 (Ex. F; B 191). He gave effect to some of the objections, and directed sketch maps to be prepared of the lands which had been found by him to be an increase of area to the mouzas of Touzi No. 523 by the action of the river. He further directed, if the Superintendent of Survey agreed with his views, those maps to be sent to the survey office for calculating the areas.

This was done and in the thakbust statement, which has embodied the modifications made in the said robokary, the details about the increase and the decrease of area of the several mouzas on account of fluvial action since the revenue survey of 1850-54 are noted (Ex. P-4; B 158-163; Ex. P 5; B 164-183). The diluvion was to the extent of 21,087 bighas, 8 cottas, 14 chittaks in villages Atarpara, Chowmadia, Temada, Udaynagore Diara (villages appertaining to Taraf Udaynagore) and other villages. Exhibit L (1); F 2009-2011 and what was treated as accretion came up to 28,388 bighas, 7 cottas 10 chittaks. Out of this area, an area of 22,111 bighas 19 cottas was treated as accretion to Mouza Udaynagore as shown in the revenue survey map of 1850-54 [Ex 28 (19) Map No. 22 M (1)] and marked therein as "Oodaynagore 378". We will hereafter call this Udaynagore either as revenue survey Udaynagore or asli Udaynagore and the aforesaid area of 22,111 bighhs, 19 cottas which was treated by the Diara Officers as accretion either as Char Udaynagore or Udaynagore, Chak No. 1, the latter being the designation given to it in the Diara survey map, Ex. 28 (12) [Map No. 15 M (1)]. The said area of 28,388 bighas, 7 cottas, 10 chittaks was assessed to a revenue of Rs. 3,177-10-0 (Ex. L (2); F 2014-2018) from the year 1870. It was formed into a Touzi No. 512 of the Murshidabad Collectorate, and settled permanently with James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley under the provisions of Act IX of 1847, (Ex. N (1), kabuliat dated August 16, 1870; B 197-200).

We may however point out, though the matter is not of great importance, that the whole of the area, which was treated by the Diara Officers as accretion to asli Udaynagore on the basis of the revenue survey map of 1850-54 was not so, for a good slice of land on the eastern portion of Udaynagore, Chak No. 1 represented the reformation in situ of the western portion of villages Atarpara, Chowmadia and Temadia as depicted in the revenue survey maps of 1850-1854. This is made clear by Mr. R. C. Sen's map [Ex. 28 (25), Map No. 28 M (1)] where the position of the revenue survey river of 1840-54 of the Diara survey river of 1867-68 and the limits of Udaynagore Chak No. 1, which was included in Touzi No. 512, are shown, James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley obtained on their application an abatement of revenue to the extent of Rs. 4,050-2-3 on account of diluvion of the aforesaid area of land of 21,087 odd bighas (Ex. L (1); F 2009 and Ex. L (3) F 2010). In 1915-16 the survey and settlement proceedings under Chap. X, Ben. Ten. Act were commenced and the Records of Rights were finally published, some in 1920 and some in 1921. The lands which were found as accreted lands in the Diara proceedings of 1869 and which were then above water were recorded under Touzi No. 512 and the plaintiffs-appellants recorded as being in possession as patnidar under the principal defendants respondents, the Dhudhurias. Just after the final publication of the Record of Rights probably in the season 1921-22, the lands in suit together with other lands emerged out of the river. Some time after their formation, proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. C., were started on May 6, 1926 with Raja Bejoy Singh Dhudhuria (one of the defendants' predecessor-in-interest) as first party and the Midnapore Zemindary Co, Ltd., as the second party.

The subject-matter of those proceedings was a block of 5000 bighas of land marked with the letters ka, kha, ga, gha, uma, chà and chha in a map prepared by Mr. O'Donel in the season 1924-25 (Ex. 13, C 604). This map is a part of the plaint and has been printed in the volume which we have marked as M. Those proceedings terminated in favour of the first party, the Raja, on September 12, 1927, (Ex. 12; C-617). On September 8, 1928, the Midnapore Zemindary Co., Ltd. filed the suit against Raja Bejoy Singh Dhudhuria and his co-sharers and their tenants for recovery of possession of the said block of 5000 bighas of land on declaration of its patni right and for mesne profits. The said block of land occupies a portion of the bed of the flowing river Padma as at the time of the revenue survey of the year 1850-54. The Subordinate Judge by his judgment and decree dated October 23, 1933. has dismissed the suit. The Midnapore Zemindary Co., Ltd., have accordingly filed this appeal.

As, in our judgment, the learned Subordinate Judge has gone beyond the pleadings and has dismissed the plaintiff's case on a defence not taken in the written statement and, as the learned Advocate for the appellants made persistent attempts to go beyond the case made in the plaint, it is necessary here to summarise the cases of the parties as made in the pleadings. Three cases are made in the plaint. The first is that the lands in suit are reformations in situ of village Udaynagore as it had been permanently settled in 1793 along with the other villages of the 12 Huddas of Pergunnah Goas. This case which is definitely made in para. 21 of the plaint is rested on the broad foundation laid in the preceding paragraphs of the plaint. Therein it is stated that Touzi No. 523, the permanently settled estate, comprised twelve Huddas which comprised several compact blocks of land called Tarafs, each Taraf being made up of several co-terminous villages, para. 2. Taraf Udaynagore in Hudda Ikuri was a Taraf which included co-terminous villages, Udaynagore, Temadia, Chowmadia, etc., para. 6 from before the permanent settlement, para. 8. At the time of the Decennial Settlement and Permanent Settlement the flowing river Padma was not within Touzi No. 523 at all (para. 4) but some time before the revenue survey of 1850-54, the river came inside the touzi, passed through the villages of Taraf Udaynagore and separated them on both its banks, para. 8. Soon thereafter the river Padma receded and large tracts of land reformed in situ of the villages Udaynagore, etc. Those lands were assessed to revenue by the Diara authorities in 1867-68 on an erroneous view of law and formed into a separate estate. Touzi No. 512 thus illegally and erroneously created was settled with the then proprietors of Touzi No. 523. In fact the whole of Touzi No. 512 represented the reformations in situ of the lands of Touzi No. 523.

The second case made in the plaint is the case of estoppel that the principal defendants cannot say that the lands of Touzi No. 512 are not the reformed lands of Touzi No. 523 or question the patni right of the plaintiff over the so called lands of Touzi No. 512. This plea is taken in paras. 13 and 14 of the plaint, though not in the precise form in which estoppel ought to be pleaded. The third case is an alternative case pleaded in para. 24. The plaintiff company claims the right to recover khas possession on the ground that the lands of Touzi No. 512 were accretions to the lands of Touzi No 523 meaning thereby that portion of Touzi No 523 in which it had patni rights. As we read the plaint it is not the plaintiff's case that the flowing river Padma was within the ambit of Touzi No. 523 and that its bed had been assessed to revenue and so included in the said touzi at the time of the Decennial and Permanent Settlements. The reference to assessment of revenue made in the last part of para. 4, cannot, in view of what has been stated before and after, in our judgment, be construed to mean assessment to revenue and inclusion of the bed of flowing river Padma, which was a big public navigable river, within the zamindary, Touzi No. 523. The property in the river bed of such a river is in the Crown and it would require more specific pleading to raise such a case. The word 'damosh' means a beel or inland pool of shallow water being a part of the deserted bed of a river, the words 'Koha Padma' mean the bank of the river and the words, etc. which follow the phrase cannot, in view of the preceding sentence of the said paragraph, include the bed of a large flowing navigable river.

In their written statement the contesting defendants deny all the material allegations in the plaint on which the case of reformation in situ of the lands of Touzi No. 523 had been rested. They deny the fact that Taraf Udaynagore at the time of the Decennial and Permanent Settlements consisted of co-terminous villages and that the flowing river Padma was outside Touzi No. 523. They further state that the lands in suit were outside the said estate, being then in the bed of the flowing river Padma. They further aver that they are not estopped from asserting that Touzi No. 512 represented accreted lands or from questioning the plaintiff's patni right in the lands in suit. They however admit that the lands of Touzi No. 512 were accretions to Touzi No. 523 but attempt to meet the plaintiff's alternative case based on the right of accretion by the defence set out in para. 10, a defence which we will have to consider in detail when dealing with the merits. In para. 21 they state that the plaintiff did not purchase the patni right, if any, in the lands of Touzi No. 512, which were entirely distinct and separate from the lands of Touzi No. 523. By an application for amendment of the written statement made on May 12, 1930, and granted on May 31, 1930 (O. No. 34, A-8), para. 10 of the original written statement as also some other paragraphs were amended. An additional defence was also taken, namely of adverse possession. In this state of the pleadings we can at once state that the learned Subordinate Judge was not right in dismissing from consideration the plaintiff's case of accretion on the footing that the lands which were formed into Touzi No. 512 in 1869 had risen in the river bed as an island chur with unfordable channels all round. Similarly during the course of the hearing before us we stopped the learned Advocate of the appellant from urging in alternative form that the flowing river Padma was inside Touzi No. 523 at the time of the Decennial and Permanent settlements and that its bed had been assessed to revenue and so made a part of Touzi No. 523, on the ground that not only such a case has not been made in the plaint but that it is a case inconsistent with and contradictory to the case made therein.

We would now proceed to consider the arguments advanced before us and record our findings thereon. To establish his case that the lands in suit are reformations in situ of asli Udaynagore, Mr Sen Gupta, the learned Advocate for the appellant, has addressed us on three main lines. He says, first, that the villages of Taraf Udaynagore formed a compact block of land at the time of the Decennial and Permanent Settlements. The revenue survey river of 1850-54 as shown in the revenue survey map [Ex. 28 (19) Map 22 M (1)], which shows some villages of the said Taraf, namely Udaynagore, Diara, Ramnaravanpur and Udaynagore on the western bank of the river and the remaining villages, namely Atarpara, Chowmadia and Temadia on the eastern bank, was not there at the Decennial or Permanent Settlement. To support this contention he relies upon : (a) the meaning of the word Taraf; (b) the area of Taraf Udaynagore as given in the rokbabandi (Ex. 1, B 8) and the area thereof at the time of the revenue survey of the year 1850-54, (c) some entiries in the dastur rewaz (Exs. 2 to 2 (9); B 52 to 110), (d) the terms of the patni potta of April 8, 1836 (Ex. 6 (b) 1, B 148), (e) some entries in the mahal wari register (Ex. 25; C 750-836), and (f) the judgment of Morris and Prinsep, JJ. in 1880 (Ex. 12 (4) B 260).

The second line of argument is directed to show that either the river Padma was entirely outside Pergunah Goas, that is outside Touzi No. 523, at the time of the Decennial and Permanent Settlements, or, if that was not so, the block of land in dispute was firm land then, being a portion of the island of Nipara as shown in Rennel's and Colebrook's map.

To support this contention he relies upon : (a) Rennel's map of 1780 (Ex Z, Map 50 M (2), (b) Colebrook's map of 1796-97 (Ex. 28 (1), Map 4 M (1), (c) a passage at p. 297, Vol II of the fifth report on the affairs of the East India Company (Reprint in 1917 by R. Cambray p. 337 of the original edition) ; a passage at p. 21, Vol. VIII of Hunter's Statistical Accounts of Bengal on the judgment of Morris and Prinsepp, JJ. of the year 1880 (Ex. 12 (4), B 260) and on the Map 2 M (1), which was made a part of that judgment, (d) the plaints in the two suits brought respectively by the patnidars of Sagarpara and the mukarari mourasidars of Chak Mathuranath against Robert Watson & Co. (Ex. 16; B. 244, Ex. A (a) B 248) and the judgment passed in the last mentioned suit (Ex. Y, B 250), (e) admissions made by the contesting defendants and their predecessors-in-interest and (f) the Record of Rights prepared and published under Chap. X, Ben. Ten. Act in 1920 and 1921. In dealing with this part of the case, Mr. Sen Gupta attempted to explain away the robakary of Mr. Bhagban Chandra Sen of 1869 and the act of James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley in accepting the settlement of Touzi No. 512 from the Govt. on the footing that it was an accreted estate. The last line of argument is based on the fact of long possession as patnidars by Robert Watson & Co. and their successors-in-interest of the lands which were designated by Touzi No. 512.

Mr. Sen Gupta contends that the word Taraf signifies a collection of co terminous villages, villages forming a compact block of land. There is nothing to support him. The word means a sub-division of a Pergunah including several villages. This is the meaning given in Wilson's Glossary, p. 511 and is the meaning adopted by the Judicial Committee in Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Secretary of State (1). A Pergunah which usually covers a very large tract and means a large local division of the Muhammadan times, which corresponds in idea, though not in extent, with a district of modern times, does not convey the idea of a compact area of land with no public and navigable river cutting through it.

Moreover, in the province of Bengal in many cases such a river cuts through a Pergunah. The idea of compactness is not conveyed by the word Pergunah and so necessarily not by the word Taraf, which is only a sub-division of a Pergunah.

We do not accordingly see any force or substance in Mr. Sen Gupta's argument. (His Lordship discussed the evidence relating to whether the suit lands were reformations in situ of Touzi No. 523 and proceeded.) At one stage of the argument Mr. Sen Gupta referred to the boundaries of Taraf Udaynagore as given in the Dastur Rewaz (B-105-107) and submitted that the entries in the last column indicated that there was no river there. Section 7, fifth of Regn. V of 1816 casts the duty upon the kanungo to compile informations regarding the local boundaries of estates and Pergunahs in the District of Katak and Pataspore. Regulation I of 1819 authorized the appointment of kanungos throughout the province of Bengal. By Regn. II of 1817 the reform of the officer of patwaris was made. Section 16 required them to keep registers and accounts relating to villages and to deliver such accounts to the kanungo every six months. The Dastur Rewaz filed in this case seems to be the statement of account, village by village, furnished by the patwaris to the kanungos. It does not seem clear whether a kanungo or a patwari was required to note the existence of a public river when such a river did not form the boundary either of an estate, Pergunah, Taraf or village, but went through them. The non-mention of the river in the remark column which was only meant to contain a description of the boundaries does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the river Padma was not within Taraf Udaynagore. It moreover appears to us that the boundaries of Udaynagore as given at B-105-107 cannot be satisfactorily interpreted. The boundary marks mentioned therein can be traced in Smart's map of Pergunah Goas prepared in 1853-54 [Ex. 28 (43)-Map 46 M, (2)]. But then according to the Dastur Rewaz, Taraf Udaynagore would occupy the place which looks like South Africa, a position which would be far away, about 10 miles to the south-west of its actual site. It would further appear from the boundaries of Taraf Ikuri, which is admittedly to the north and west of Taraf Udaynagore that the river Bara Padma (flowing river Padma) was partly on its eastern and partly on its southern boundary. Having regard to relative position of the two Tarafs and the case of the appellant that the two Tarafs formed also a compact block of land the conclusion would be that the said river was then flowing through Taraf Udaynagore (we read as Mr. Sen Gupta suggests the words "to the west" as "to the west of" etc.) When we pointed out these things to Mr. Sen Gupta in the course of his argument he admitted that from the entries of the Dastur Rewaz he cannot say that in 1819-20 the flowing river was not inside Taraf Udaynagore. The terms of the patni potta of April 8, 1836 (Ex. 6 (b) 1; B. 148) do not in our judgment support the contention of Mr. Sen Gupta Taraf Udaynagore, as we have already pointed out does not signify a compact block of land not intersected by a river. The villages making up the said Taraf were known and a grant of the said Taraf would only mean a grant of the said villages. In such document the express mention of the river Padma would not be necessary or required. So from the mere non-mention of the river we cannot safely infer that the river was not in the Taraf. On the other hand, the mention of and inclusion in the grant of two ferry ghats would indicate that the flowing river was there. It would only help Mr. Sen Gupta if the ferry ghat of Atarpara was on the eastern limits of the said village. If it was on its western limits the river must have been flowing in between Atarpara on the east and the other villages of Taraf Udaynagore on the west. Everything indicates that before 1850-54 the river was not so far to the east as to the quite outside of and to the east of village Atarpara. This document is accordingly of no help to Mr. Sen Gupta. (His Lordship further discussed the evidence relating to whether the suit lands were reformations in situ of lands of Touzi No. 523 and proceeded.)

A reference was made by Mr. Sen Gupta to Rennel's map and Colebrook's map Ex. Z-Map No. 50 M (2); Ex. 28 (1) Map. No. 4). He contends that the disputed lands were in the island of Nipara as shown therein. He first submitted that the village Surdah is a fixed village which has not undergone any change in site. It has brick built ancient buildings which are still there. (District Gazeteer of Rajshahi, p. 185.) The village Harisanker in the south is also a fixed place. For showing this he relies upon the findings of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Naresh Narayan

Roy v. Secretary of State (2), at p. 456. That is not an inter partes judgment and so that finding cannot be evidence in this case. But assuming that Harisanker is a village that has never undergone any change in site, the appellant's case on the point is not advanced. What he wishes us to do is to superimpose by reference to Harisanker and Surdah, Rennel's and Colebrooke's map on Smart's map of 1853, which practically agrees with the revenue survey map of 1850-54 (Map. No. 46). Harisanker is not shown in Smart's map but he asks us to put it on Smart's map by measuring the distance from Surdah and from Jellanghy. He even goes to the length of saying that it would serve his purpose if we superimpose the maps by reference to Surdah only keeping in with the north line. We cannot allow him at this stage to proceed in the fashion. If his case was that the disputed land was a part of the island of Nipara he ought to have asked for a local investigation in the lower Court and to have the relay done by a Commissioner from a satisfactorily established fitting point. When we indicated this view in the course of the argument his reply was that as there were admissions, for instance in Ex. 11 (G-1), by the defendants that the lands of Touzi No. 512 were reformations in situ of the lands of Touzi No. 523, he was relieved of the duty of applying for local investigation and for having the relay done by an expert and it was for his opponent to do so. We do not think that this is the correct position. The plaintiff company is not relieved of producing the best materials in support of its case, as no admission had been made by the defendants either in their written statement or at the hearing : s. 58, Evi. Act. For the purpose of superimposition copies of the relevant maps have been made in this Court on the same scale. Their superimposition from Surdah would however indicate that a good portion of the disputed land may fall within the island of Nipara, as shown in Rennel's map but the major portion would fall outside that island as shown in Colebrooke's map.

We are however of opinion that it would not be safe to come to a conclusion in favour of the appellant on such a comparison. The former map has been prepared on a small scale. In both only the village sites are shown, and then only approximately. For instance the relative positions of Surdah and Jellanghy are different in the two maps. Mahuddypore is shown at different places in the two maps. The extent of the villages are not shown. Whether in view of these factors even a relay of these maps by an expert Commissioner would not have afforded a safe and sure criterion, we are unable to say, but if the appellant company wished to rely on the maps for the purpose of determining with the maximum degree of determining with the maximum degree of precision the exact position of the 1789-1793 river in relation to the disputed land it was for it to have enlisted the services of an expert. We accordingly cannot hold that the disputed land was within the island of Nipara as depicted in these maps. We are however of opinion that the position of the river at this part in 1793 can, by this method of rough comparison, be determined with sufficient accuracy for us to say that it was not substantially different from its position at the time of the revenue survey in 1850 1854. (His Lordship resumed discussion of appellants' evidence that suit lands were reformations in situ and proceeded.) On the basis of the Diara Survey of 1867, the lands in situ together with other lands were held as accretions to the lands of Touzi No. 523. A new Touzi was formed and assessed to revenue. James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley who were also partners of Robert Watson & Co. took a permanent settlement of the said touzi on the footing that it was accretion. From the very beginning the lands which formed Touzi No. 512 were thus treated not as reformation in situ but as accretions to Touzi No. 523.

The appellant seeks to explain away the effect of the Diara proceedings of 1869 by saying that the lands were treated in fact as reformation in situ of the lands of Touzi No. 523, but on an erroneous view of the law then prevailing were held by the Diara authorities to be accretions or 'added lands,' for the law of reformation in situ was only correctly formulated and properly understood after the judgment delivered in 1870 in Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (3). The contrary view held the field up to 1870 as is apparent from the Full Bench decision in Katteermonee Dossee v. Rinee Manmohinee Dabee (4), and from the observations of the Judicial Committee in Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gutpa (5), at p. 117 which implies that Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (3), brought about a change in the view of the law on the subject. There is however nothing to show that Mr. Bhagaban Chandra Sen proceeded upon that footing (Ex. F-B 191). The kabuliat (Ex. M (1)-B 197) executed by James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley is sought to be explained on the basis that at that time it was thought that a proprietor was liable to pay additional revenue for the lands which were found on comparison of the revenue survey map and the Diara map to have been inside the river as depicted in the former, though they may have been lands actually included at the Permanent Settlement of 1793. For the purpose of showing what was understood as the law up to 1886, reference was made to Sarat Sundary v. Secretary of State (6), and to the Full Bench decision in Fahamidannissa Begum v. Secretary of State (7), affirmed in Secretary of State v. Fahamidannissa Begum (8), which overruled Sarat Sundary v. Secretary State (6). This argument assumes that James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley knew in 1870 that the lands of Touzi No. 512 were in fact parts of the permanently settled estate No. 523. Of this there is no evidence. The evidence furnished by the Diara proceedings and by the conduct of James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley who were also partners of Rober Watson & Co., the predecessors of the appellant is accordingly against the contention of the appellant.

The patnidars Robert Watson & Co., however, treated their patni with a rental of Rs. 1,975 odd as extending over the lands of both the Touzi Nos. 523 and 512 (Ex. 27 B 272 at 281). In the conveyance by which the Dhudhurias purchased from the successors-in-interest of James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley, the assets were calculated on the basis that the said patni taluk included the lands of both the Touzis Ex. 27 (c) B-285 and 297 and 298. In the conveyance, however, the two touzies were dealt with as separate entities, each as an independent item of property, and Touzi No. 512 was expressly stated to comprise accreted lands (B-290). The Dhudhurias applied for registration and caused their names to be registered in the Collector's register in respect of both the Touzi Nos. 523 and 512 (Ex. 3-B) 313, Ex. S-(3) C 849, Ex. S, C 840 and Ex. S (1) C 843). At this time and up to 1903 they did not treat Touzi No. 512 to be merely a part of Touzi No. 523. On May 5, 1904, however, they made an application to the Collector for excusing them from filing a separate road cess retun for the lands of Touzi No. 512 (Ex. 11-G-1). In that application they stated that Touzi No. 512 had been created in 1870 by taking the lands of Touzi No. 523, that Touzi No. 512 was another appearance of Touzi No. 523, and all its lands were really lands of Touzi No. 523. This application contains a clear admission by the Dhudhurias that the lands of Touzi No. 512 were the reformations in situ of the lands of Touzi No. 523. This application was apparently granted and the Dhudhurias filed one cess return for both the touzis on September 6, 1904, (Ex. 10 (a)-C 730). At p. 748 a statement was made that all the lands of both the tauzis had been let out in patni. Khem Chand Churiar (there is a misprint of the name at p. 748) who was one of the ammuktears of the Dhudhurias and who verified the return has been examined for the purpose of explaining away the return (A. 112). The explanation which he has attempted, that he did not know of the contents of the return, as neither he nor the other ammuktear Joshi could read Bengali is unbelievable as in cross-examination he admits that he can read Bengali. The return must have been written by the filing muktear on the instructions of a responsible agent of the Dhudhurias.

On March 5, 1907, another road cess return was filed by the Dhudhurias (Ex. 10-B 428). In it also an unequivocal admission was made to the same effect as in Ex. 11. These admissions (if they had been the only items of evidence) would have been almost conclusive against the defendants. They would have great weight unless either explained away or shown to be wrong. The purpose of filing one return with a statement that Touzi No. 512 had no assets apart from those of Touzi No. 523 was to lighten their liability for cess. In our judgment the weight of these admissions has been nullified by the explanation furnished by the full evidence which we have as to the formation of Touzi No. 512 in 1870. The Dhudhurias were concerned to avoid assessment to further cess, by pointing out that all the assets of Touzi No. 512 were included in those of Touzi No. 523. Their further statements are unsupported by the history of the facts and have no foundation. The only way in which it could finally have been determined, if at all, that the lands of Touzi No. 512 were actually the lands of Touzi No. 523 was by exact ascertainment of the position of the 17-9-1793 river (we have already seen that the position cannot be determined on the evidence before us with sufficient precision). To know that it is a nice question as to what would be the final result of an exact determination of it. It is to be remembered too that the Dhudhurias were subsequent purchasers and were not in possession necessarily of the same full information as to this matter as their predecessors or as the appellant for that matter. Even as late as the year 1921 the appellant proceeded upon the basis that the revenue survey map of 1850-54 correctly delineated the villages of Taraf Udaynagore of Touzi No. 523 (paras. 2, 4 and 6 of the plaint of Suit No. 21 of 1921 Ex. U, C-492). The settlement records no doubt record the lands both of Touzi Nos. 512 and 523 as within the plaintiff's patni but as the lands thereof were kept separate and distinct and expressly recorded either as within the one or the other tauzi we do not think that those records afford any evidence on the question as to whether the lands of Touzi No. 512 were reformations in situ of the lands of Touzi No. 523. We accordingly overrule this line of argument.

There can be no doubt that Robert Watson & Co., were in possession of the lands of Touzi No. 512 since their formation on the assertion of their patni rights. That fact is recorded in the Diara map of Udaynagore of 1868 [Ex. 28 (12), Map No. 15 M (1)]. There is no evidence that the said company abandoned its possession subsequently and that the then proprietors James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley, took possession. There is no documentary evidence in the shape of kabuliats or other papers to show that the latter settled tenants or possessed any portion in khas. In the conveyance which Robert Watson and Co., executed in favour of Robert Watson & Co., Ltd. on May 26, 1890 (Ex. 27, B-272) the vendors' possession of the lands of Touzi No. 512 on an assertion that they were within their patni Taraf Udaynagore is shown (B 281). In the conveyance by which the Dhudhurias purchased in 1893 the zamindary interest in Touzi Nos. 512 and 523, the assets are calculated on the basis that the said patni covered the lands of both the touzis (Ex. 27 (C), B 285 at 297 298). The income of the zamindars from Hudda Ikuri which includes Taraf Udaynagore is stated to be Rs. 2,171-5-7½ (B 297). The hastabud of the patni comprising the said Hudda is stated to be Rs 8 899-11-2. The sudder jama (revenue) payable by the zemindars in respect of the said Hudda is calculated at Rs. 6,728-5-7½. The figure is not stated in the relevant column at p. 297 but the calculations are in the next two pages The balance of Rs. 2,171-5-7½ was accordingly mentioned as the profits The calculation at p. 298 is significant. The hastabud, i. e., patni rent payable, of the several patnis in Hudda Ikuri is mentioned in detail. The total comes to Rs. 8,899-11-2. There is a mistake no doubt with regard to the patni rent of Udaynagore. It ought to be Rs. 1,975 odd and not Rs 2,055-9-1. The mistake crept in by not converting the patni rent of Rs. 1,201 (sicca) of Jelanghy Hudda as mentioned in Ex 6 (b, (B 148) into Compay's coin. But that mistake is not material for the point we are considering. The figure, Rs. 6,728-5-7½ which was mentioned as the revenue of the said Hudda Ikuri must have been derived in the following manner :

Rs	A.	P.
7,583	3	9½	(Revenue assessed at the Permanent Settlement, the sum mentioned in Rokhabandi, that is, Rs. 7,111-0-6½ sicca) converted into Compay's coin (Ex. 1, B 14-16).
3,177	10	0	Revenue assessed on Touzi No. 512 (Ex. M B. 197).
Total 10,760	13	9½
less 4,032	2	3½	Remission of revenue granted in 1870 on account of diluvion of the lands of Touzi No. 523 (Ex. L 3-F., 2009-2011).
6,728	9	6½

The difference is about 4 annas which may, however, have been due to a little miscalculation. This indicates that the patnis were treated as covering the lands not only of Hudda Ikuri within Touzi No. 523, but also the lands of Touzi No. 512 and that the patnidars were in enjoyment of the last mentioned lands. In the cess returns Exs. 10 (a) and 10 (C 730 and B 428) the Dhudhurias admitted that all but 13 bighas, 14 cottas, 8 chittaks of land, were in the possession of the patnidars. The settlement records prepared under Chap. 10, Ben. Ten. Act, and finally published in 1920 and 1921 record the possession of the appellant as patnidar in such portions of the lands of Touzi No. 512 as were then dry. It has accordingly been conclusively proved that the appellant and its predecessors were all along in possession as patnidars of the lands of Touzi No. 512 and were paying to the Dhudhurias a patni rent of Rs. 1,975-8-1. Whether the appellant Company would be liable to pay additional rent for possessing the lands of Touzi No. 512 as part of its patni over asli Taraf Udaynagore is a question outside the scope of this suit. We cannot also believe the defendants' case that the lands of Touzi No. 512 so far as Udaynagore was concerned went under the river immediately after their formation in 1867-68 and continued to rise up, and go down under the river bed at short intervals. This case is to some extent against para. 10 of their written statement as amended and is moreover not supported by any evidence.

The evidence of Kefatulla Sarkar (A. 94) on which the respondents have relied deals not with the diluvion of village Udaynagore but of portions of the village Atarpara in or about 1869 or 1870. From this long possession the appellant's Advocate wants us to draw an inference not of fact but of law to the effect that the lands of Touzi No. 512 were but lands of Touzi No. 523. For this purpo e he relies upon Forbes v. Meer Mahamad Hossein (9), Secretary of State v. Durbijoy Singh (10), Haidar Khan v. Secretary of State (11) and Secretary of State v. Radha Kisshore Manikya (12). These cases do not support him. The first case laid down the proposition that long possession is proof of title. There the question was whether the jalkar in question was a part of a tenure which had been created before the Permanent Settlement and so protected from the attacks of the purchaser of the zemindary at a revenue sale. It was held to be so on the ground that the tenure-holder was possessing it as such for a long period. In the second case the question was whether the lands in suit had been included in the previous inter partes decree. The decree had not defined with precision the lands decreed. It was held that possession of the lands in suit given to and taken by the decree-holder and retained for a long time on the basis that it was included in the said decree was relevant for the purpose of defining the lands so decreed. In the third case the question was whether Regn. III of 1891 (Assam) could be enforced in respect of the jhum lands in suit. That could be done only if the said lands were at the time of the Permanent Settlement beyond the limits of the estate so settled but its assets had been taken into consideration on account of jhum cultivation. If however the said lands were included within the limits of the estate permanently settled the said Regulation which was exproprietary in nature could not be invoked. The Judicial Committee held that long possession coupled with other important evidence furnished by the proceedings of 1842 and 1843 raised the inference that the said lands had been included within the limits of the respondent's permanently settled zemindary. In the fourth case the question was whether a long strip of land between two hilly spurs had been included in the respondent's permanently settled estate. That portion had not been shown in the revenue survey of 1859 as part of the respondent's estate. On this fact Govt. contended that it was not part of the respondent's zemindary. It was established in fact that it was not subjected to survey operations at all in 1859, being strip of jungle land on the borders of the British territory and the territory of an independent Chief. In those circumstances it was held that long possession by the respondent outweighed the negative evidence furnished by the revenue survey map. These cases are of no help to the appellant company. Long possession would raise the inference of its title to possession, but it would afford no basis for the further inference that that title rested on reformation in situ and not on accretion. We overrule all the three lines of argument advanced by the appellant's Advocate to establish that the lands in suits are reformations in situ of the lands of Touzi No. 523 as permanently settled in 1793.

We find that the lands in suit are not reformations in situ of Touzi No 523; (a) because the case made in the plaint that the river was outside Taraf Udaynagore at the time of the Decennial and Permanent Settlement has not been proved; (b) because the case that they were within the island of Nipara has not been proved, as the precise position of the river in 1709 has not been established and (c) because the admissions made by the Dhudhurias in Exs. 11 and 10 have been explained by the contesting defendants.

The case of estoppel has been presented before us by the learned Advocate for the appellant under two heads : (1) that defendants cannot be allowed to show that the lands of Touzi No. 512 are not the reformed lands of Touzi No. 523 and (2) that the defendants cannot be allowed to show that the plaintiff has no patni right in the lands of Touzi No. 512 and so in the disputed area.

The second head need not be considered in view of what we would hold on the plaintiff's alternative case based on accretion. We do not think that the defendants are estopped from asserting that the lands of Touzi No. 512 are not reformations in situ of the lands of Touzi No. 523 Between 1870, when the new Touzi was created, and 1890, the zemindars were James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley or their successors-in-interst and the patnidars were Messrs. Robert Watson & Co. During this period there is no evidence of any representation made by the zemindars to the effect that Touzi No. 512 was created out of the lands of Touzi No. 523. Over and above this, Robert Watson & Co., knew that the lands of Touzi No. 512 were treated as accretions and were settled with Dalrymple and Laidley on the basis that they were accretions. The zemindars between 1890 and 1893 were the representatives of James Dalrymple and John Watson Laidley who were then dead. In 1890 the patni interest passed from Robert Watson & Co., to Robert Watson & Co., Ltd. There is no evidence of such a representation being made by the zemindars in this period. In 1893 the Dhudhurias became the zemindars and in 1902 Crawford purchased the patni. During this period there was also no representation by the zemindars. A statement to the effect that Touzi No. 512 was formed out of the lands of Touzi No. 523 was made by the Dhudhurias for the first time on May 5, 1904 in their application (Ex. 11) made to the Collector for the purpose of being excused from filing a separate road cess return for Touzi No. 512 In the cess return however (Ex. 10 (a), C. 730) filed by them on September 6, 1904 no such statement was made. The appellant company purchased the patni from Crawford, along with other properties from others by a conveyance dated December 3, 1906. At that time the other road cess return, Ex. 10 (B. 428), which contained a statement similar to the statement made in Ex. 11 (G 1) had not been filed. Sivadass Dutt (A 75) has deposed that he was an officer of Messrs. Andrew Yule & Co., who were the managing agents of Robert Watson & Co. Ltd. and also became the managing agents of the appellant company. He says that just before the purchase of the appellant company he called from the muffasul road cess returns filed by the Dhudhurias. This story is improbale, because those returns would not be necessary either for the investigation of title or for preparing the conveyance. Even if the story be true, the relevant road cess return then available would be Ex. 10 (a). By that return no representation would be conveyed to the appellant that the lands of Touzi No. 512 were reformations in situ of Touzi No. 523, because no such statement was made in Ex. 10 (a). There is also no evidence that the appellant company completed its purchase on the faith of any thing contained in the road cess return, Ex. 10 (a). The said witness does not say anything with regard to Ex. 11. That the existance of Ex. 11 was unknown to the appellant company at or before its purchase, and so it had not acted upon any representation made therein, is quite apparent from the manner in which Ex. 11 was exhibited in the case. The document was not in the appellant's list of documents. It was not called by the appellant from the Collector. Some other papers were called from the latter by the appellant and the bundle sent was found the application and it was at once proved : Judgment of the Subordinate Judge—A 138 l. 10 to 20. We accordingly hold that no case of estoppel has been made out by the appellants.

The defendants admit that Touzi No. 512 was created for lands which had accreted to Touzi No. 523 (para 9 of the written statement). They do not plead, as has been supposed by the learned Subordinate Judge, that those lands first formed as an island chur with unfordable channels all round. Under s. 4 Regn. XI of 1825 those lands became an increment to the patni tenture of Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., the patnidars at the time, and if the rights of Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., had been ultimately conveyed to the appellant, the latter would have the right to possess those lands and the zemindars, the contesting defendants, would have no right to possess in khas. The right so given by law to Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., is sought to be defeated on the pleas taken in para. 10 of the original written statement as amended and in para. 1 of the supplementary statement. The pleas are : (a) that Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., relinquished the right given to them by.

Regn. XI of 1925; (b) that they forfeited those rights by denying the legality of the settlement of Touzi No. 512; (c) that their rights under the regulation had been extinguished as the zemindars were in khas possession for more than twelve years during which the lands remained above water after formation in 1867-68.

In our judgment none of the pleas have been made out by the defendants. In an earlier part of our judgment, we have considered the question of possession in details and have found that Messrs. Robert Watson & Co.. and their successors-in-interest were all along in possession in assertion of their patni right. The absence of an offer by them to pay additional rent for the increment to their tenure cannot, in our judgment, take away the rights conferred on them by s. 4 of Regn. XI of 1825. There can be no question of forfeiture as Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., never denied the legality of the creation of Touzi No. 512 on the basis that the lands thereof were accretions. All the evidence that is on the record shows that they and their successors instead of relinquishing or abandoning their rights were asserting and maintaining the same. The second line of defence is that even if Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., and Messrs. Robert Watson & Co. Ltd. had patni right over the lands of Touzi No. 512, the same was not conveyed either to Crawford or the appellant. The contention depends upon the construction of the conveyances [Ex. 27 (a) (B 379) and Ex. 27 (b) (B. 40)]. In the recitals of the former conveyance the vendors Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., Ltd., declared their intention to convey to the purchaser Crawford the Rajapore concern together with all zamindaris patnis etc., belonging to the said concern. The vendors actually conveyed to the purchaser all their interest in the "said Rajapore concern" and in the zemindaris and all other landed immovable property held therewith or belonging thereto

"all which premises are more particularly described in the schedule annexed.....and all other kinds of jotes... and all other lands and tenure of every description held or belonging to the said concern."

In the schedule the patni mehal is described as "Taraf Udaynagore appertaining to the Murshidabad Collectorate Touzi No. 523". The respondents' Advocate bases his argument on the description given in the schedule and says that the patni in Touzi No. 512 did not pass to the purchaser. The conveyance however expressly conveys to the purchaser not only what was described in the schedule but all the landed property, zemindaris, patnis and other tenures which were being then held as belonging to the Rajapore concern. The patni over the lands of Touzi No. 512 was then undoubtedly held as appertaining to the said concern. This is indicated by the statement made in the schedule to the conveyance executed by Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., in favour of Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., Ltd., (Ex. 17, B. 272 at p. 281). The conveyance Ex. 27 (b), (B. 408) in favour of the appellant substantially takes the same form as the conveyance 27 (a). Several indigo concerns including the Rajapore concern were conveyed to the purchaser "together with all other property whatsoever and wheresoever which the vendors or any of them were entitled in connection with the said concerns. (B. 41 para. 4)."

Schedule 5 annexed to the conveyance puts the matter beyond doubt. Whatever was conveyed to Crawford by Ex. 27 (a) was being conveyed to the appellant. We accordingly overrule this defence also. The appellant company is accordingly entitled to recover possession of the lands in suit on the basis, and on that basis only, that the lands in suit are accretions to its patni in Taraf Udaynagore.

The next question is whether the appellant is entitled to mesne profits. In the plaint the appellant claimed mesne profits from September 12, 1927 till re-delivery of possession. No court-fee was however paid on the claim for mesne profits but a statement was made that court-fee on that relief would be paid when ordered by the Court. The plaint ought to have given a tentative valuation for the claim for mesne profits and on that valuation court-fees ought to have been paid. But as the plaint stood the Court could not have dismissed the prayer for mesne profits without giving an opportunity to the plaintiff to value the relief and to pay court-fee thereon. Even if the suit was confined to a claim for mesne profits only, the plaint could not have been rejected without the plaintiff being given an opportunity to put the matter right [O. VII, r. 11 (c)]. The appellant has made an application before us for valuing the claim for mesne profits separately and has tendered the deficit court-fee. The first technical difficulty in the appellant's way has been now removed by our granting that portion of the prayer made in that application. The reason which led us to grant the prayer was that such an amendment ought to be allowed at any stage of the suit. The second objection of the respondents is that the prayer for mesne profits had been withdrawn by the plaintiff Company in the lower Court by its application dated May 18, 1933. On that day it applied for permission to withdraw the prayer for mesne profits with leave reserved to bring a new suit for the same. The withdrawal of the prayer required an order from the Court as leave to bring a suit was prayed for. The Court did not pass any order on that date but stated in the order sheet that the petition for withdrawal be kept with the record for orders at the time of the judgment (order No. 112, A. 26). No doubt no order was ultimately necessary on the petition in view of the fact that the suit was entirely dismissed. On our reversal of the decree of the lower Court for possession it would have become necessary for us to pass an order on that petition, but before we could do so, when the matter was pending judgment the appellant Company filed an application before us for allowing it to withdraw the application made by him in the lower Court on May 18, 1933 and we granted that application. We cannot take away the right of a party to withdraw any application made by him on which no orders had been made at the time. The prayer for mesne profits accordingly stands and the technical defect has now been removed.

On May 8, 1933 the lower Court however re-framed the issues and the issue on mesne profits previously framed was left out. In our judgment that issue ought to be now framed and decided. We accordingly direct the lower Court to start an inquiry for mesne profits but in the course of the inquiry the Court must also consider the question as to whether the contesting defendants ought to be made liable at all for mesne profits. That question was sought to be argued before us by the respondents' Advocate, but we intimated that we should have the views of the lower Court on the matter. As an inquiry for mesne profits will have to be started and as proceedings for granting mesne profits are entirely distinct proceedings we thought that was an additional reason why the views of the lower Court on that point ought to be ascertained. We accordingly set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Court and decree possession to the appellant. The Court below is directed to take proceedings for determining whether the defendants are liable for mesne profits, and if it answers that question in the plaintiff's favour, then to start an inquiry for ascertaining the amount.

The question of costs will now have to be determined. More than three-fourths of the time that the hearing lasted had been taken by the appellants' Advocate in arguing the question of reformation in situ and of estoppel on which he has lost. We think that in these circumstances although the appeal has succeeded, each party ought to bear the costs incurred by it or them at the hearing, that is no hearing fee ought to be allowed to any. The appellant must have the costs of the court-fee stamps affixed on the memorandum of appeal and the fee payable for drawing the memorandum of appeal. As regards the paper book, we are of opinion that it has been unnecessarily increased in volume. Only three maps No. 46, 50 and 52 out of Part II, Vol. II of the map volumes were referred to at the time of the argument and nearly half the number of maps of Part. II, Vol. I was not opened. Only a few settlement records were necessary and were referred to at the time of the hearing but three volumes, D, E and F have been padded with them. Only the last few pages of Volume F beginning with 2006 were necessary. In these circumstances and having regard to the failure of the appellant Company on the point of reformation in situ we think that it ought to have no costs for printing the maps, except of Colebrooke's map (Map No. 4), Thagbust of Udaynagore (Map No. 15), revenue survey map of Goas (Map No. 22), R. C. Sen's map (Map No. 28), Smart's map (Map No. 46) Rennel's map (Map No 50) and O'Donel's map; and only one-fourth of the other printing costs. It would also have the costs of the lower Court from the contesting defendants.

Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 11—Scope—Section relates to proceedings in which evidence was given and not to all possible proceedings—Evidence on special oath in proceeding under O. XXI, r 100 Civil Procedure Code whether conclusive proof in suit under r. 103.

Primary meaning of s. 11 Oaths Act must be that the evidence given in any proceeding in which a challenge has been made and an oath has been taken shall be in that proceeding conclusive proof of the matter stated. It cannot automatically be evidence at all except in the proceeding in which it is actually being received. If there is a subsequent proceeding, then until that statement made on oath is brought into that subsequent proceeding, it cannot even be considered. No doubt, for some purposes, the suit which follows the order on the claim petition may be a continuation of the same proceedings but the scheme of the Civil P. C., itself shows that there is an essential difference between the two. The claim proceeding is in the nature of a summary proceeding which gives a provisional result, and the scope of the suit is very much wider. Therefore any evidence given under the special provisions of the Oaths Act in a proceeding under r. 100, O. XXI, cannot be conclusive proof in any suit under r. 103.

A. against the appellate order of the District Court, North Aroct, dated January 12, 1939.

Mr. K. V. Ramachandra Aiyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Bhashyam Ayyangar and T. R. Srinivasan, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellant in this appeal claims title to the western half of a certain house. The respondent was a decree-holder against a cousin of the appellant, who, according to the appellant, owned the eastern half. In execution of the decree, the respondent took delivery of the entire house. There was then an application under O. XXI, r. 100 by the appellant asking the Court to re-deliver to him the western half of this house. During the progress of the inquiry into that application, the respondent challenged the appellants in the following words:

"If the petitioner swears on oath that the western half of the suit house belongs to him solely and that he himself built it and at the time when the plaintiff went for taking delivery it was in his possession, then to the extent of the western half, the petition may be allowed."

The appellant accepted the challenge and gave evidence on special oath in the affirmative on all the three points put to him by the respondent. This oath was of course followed by the allowing of the appellant's petition. The respondent then filed a suit under r. 103 against the appellant and his brother and they took the objection that no suit would lie because of the evidence which the appellant had given on oath. This preliminary objection was upheld by the District Munsif. On appeal, the learned District Judge of Vellore found that the oath was no bar to the suit and accordingly remanded the suit for disposal after trial on the other issues. Against that order of remand, the present appeal has been filed. The main question to be decided in this appeal is the interpretation of s. 11, Oaths Act. Section 11 which refers to evidence given on special oath runs as follows:

"The evidence so given shall, as against the person who offered to be bound as aforesaid, be conclusive proof of the matter stated."

And the question which I have now to decide is whether this section relates to the proceeding in which the evidence was given alone or whether it relates to all possible proceedings in which the subject-matter of the evidence given on oath may be involved In favour of the latter view is no doubt the fact that in s. 11 no specific statement is made restricting the particular proceedings in which the evidence shall be conclusive proof. On the other hand, ss. 8 and 9 obviously refer to some judicial proceeding, and it seems to me the only proper method of interpreting s. 11 is to interpret it in conjunction with ss. 8 and 9, and that its primary meaning must be that the evidence given in any proceeding in which a challenge has been made and an oath has been taken shall be in that proceeding conclusive proof of the matter stated. This seems to me clear from the expression "the evidence so given." It cannot automatically be evidence at all except in the proceeding in which it is actually being received. If there is a subsequent proceeding, then until that statement made on oath is brought into that subsequent proceeding, it cannot even be considered.

It is however argued on behalf of the appellant that although the suit under O. XXI, r. 103 may not in one sense be the same proceeding as a petition under r. 100 it is, nevertheless, a continuation of, or in the nature of an appeal from that form of proceeding and therefore any evidence given under the special provisions of the Oaths Act in a proceeding under r. 100 must be conclusive proof in any suit under r. 103. In support of this argument, I have been referred to a decision in Krishnappa Chetty v. Abdul Khader Saheb (1), in which it has been held that a suit of this kind is a continuance of a claim petition with regard to the doctrine of lis pendens. In Krishnappa Chetty v. Abdul Khader Sahib (1) an alienation which took place between the disposal of a claim petition and the institution of a suit was held to be affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. Again in Phulkumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (2) the Privy Council dealing with a question of court-fee, has pointed out how a suit of this nature to set aside an order in a claim petition is in the nature of an appeal or a review and therefore comes within a particular provision of the Court Fees Act and is chargeable with a particular sum as court-fees. It does not seem to me that these rulings afford much guidance in the decision of the present appeal. No doubt, for some purposes, the suit which follows the order on the claim petition may be a continuation of the same proceedings but the scheme of the Civil P. C., itself shows that there is an essential difference between the two. The claim proceeding is in the nature of a summary proceeding which gives a provisional result, and the scope of the suit is very much wider. It seems to me impossible to hold that unless it is clearly present to the minds of the parties that the evidence which is going to be given in the claim petition is in no manner to be challenged in or by a subsequent suit, an oath in those claim proceedings must relate to the claim proceedings themselves and to them alone

If we go back to the terms of the challenge in the present case, we find no doubt that the appellant was called upon to repeat on oath his contention that he was the owner of the western half of the suit house. It does not seem to me reasonable to argue that because the appellant was called upon to make that statement, the respondent was setting the whole question of title in issue between himself and the appellant or that the respondent had in mind a complete promise never to proceed against the appellant in the Civil Courts under r. 103. The limitation within which the challenge was made is clearly to be seen in his own words "that if the appellant makes the statement on oath then the petition may be allowed". All that that means, it seems to me, is that the respondent has no objection to the appellants being put in immediate possession of the western half of the house, if he be resolute enough to restate his contentions by taking a special oath. This is in itself a very real concession and, it seems to me, that on the language of the challenge itself, all that the respondent meant was that the particular petition in which he was engaged might be decided unfavourably to himself. Of course, he has not in so many words reserved in the challenge any right to file a suit. But, it seems to me, that the burden lies upon the other side to establish that the challenge was intended to have any effect upon any possible civil suit which might be filed under r. 103. The only way in which the evidence given in the claim petition could be used to defeat the respondent seems to me to be, if the doctrine of res judicata were to apply to the subsequent proceeding. Obviously, in the present case, the doctrine of res judicata cannot apply because the order on a claim petition is specifically made subject by the provisions of Civil P. C. itself to the result of a suit under s. 103 and the appellant's learned Advocate did not attempt to rely upon the doctrine of res judicata. I am accordingly of opinion that the order of the learned District Judge remanding this suit was correct and that this appeal must fail. It is accordingly dismissed with costs. Leave granted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 6 (2)—Appeal from mortgage decree directed only against interest decreed, pending—Executing Court, if can stay sale of mortgaged property on taking security from judgment-debtor.

An order passed by the executing Court under O. XLI, r. 6 (2), Civil P. C., in execution of a mortgage decree which is not separable, staying the sale of the mortgaged property pending disposal of the appeal directed only against the interest decreed by the trial Court, on condition that the judgment-debtor should furnish security for further interest, is not without jurisdiction and cannot be interfered with in revision. 138 Ind. Cas. 847 (1), dissented from.

C. R. App. from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Darbhanga, dated August 27, 1940.

Messrs. Khurshed Husnain and G. P. Sahi, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. B. N. Mitter and Ajit Kumar Mitter, for the Opposite Party.

Chatterji, J.—This application in revision is directed against an order passed under O. XLI, r. 6 of the Civil P. C. staying sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a mortgage decree. The mortgage decree is for Rs. 15,534-10 6. The defendant has preferred an appeal to this Court against this decree, valuing it at Rs. 3,151-2-6 only, that is to say, the appeal is directed against the interest decreed by the Court below.

The executing Court has stayed sale of the mortgaged property pending disposal of the appeal on condition that the judgment-debtor should furnish security for further interest for one year. Security has been furnished in accordance with this order.

Mr. Khurshed Husnain on behalf of the petitioners contends that the appeal being directed not against the entire decree but only against a part of it, the Court below should not have stayed the sale of the entire mortgaged property. This argument overlooks the fact that the mortgage decree is not separable. Order XLI, r. 6, cl. (2) of the Civil P. C. runs as follows :

"Where an order has been made for the sale of immovable property in execution of a decree, and an appeal is pending from such decree, the sale shall, on the application of the judgment-debtor to the Court which made the order, be stayed on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit until the appeal is disposed of."

Mr. Khurshed Husnain contends that the Court was not bound to stay the sale, and in support of this contention he relies upon a decision of a Single Judge of the Allahabad High Court in Har Narain Sahi v. Sadhu Govind Rai (1), Kendall, J. in that case held that O. XLI, r. 6 (2) of the Civil P. C. was not intended to impose on the Court which ordered the sale an obligation to stay the sale pending an appeal from the decree, merely because the property which is to be sold is immovable property and security is given. With all respect to the learned Judge, I must say that this is against the express provision of the rule itself, which says that the sale shall be stayed.

Having regard to the fact that the Court below has taken security for one year's further interest and that the mortgage decree is indivisible, I do not consider I should interfere in revision with the order of the Court below. I would accordingly dismiss the application, but in the circumstances without costs.

Meredith, J.—I agree. In my view, the order passed by the Court below cannot in any circumstances be said to be without jurisdiction. There is, therefore, no scope for any interference with it in revision.

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), s. 93—Fire brigade, if agent of Municipal Committee — It is independent unit under Crown

The fire brigade maintained by the Peshawar Municipal Committee is not the agent of the Peshawar Municipal Committee. The fire brigade is an independent unit under the control of an officer of the Crown and the mere fact that the Peshawar Municipal Committee pays for it does not make it liable for its acts or omissions.

C. R. from an order of the Additional Judge, Peshawar, dated February 6, 1940.

Mr. Nur Ilahi Khan, for the Petitioner.

Lala Wazir Chand, Messrs. Abdur Rauf Khan and Sher Khan, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 3 respectively.

Order.—On the night between June 6, and 7, 1937 the fuel collected by Abdullah Jan at his brick kiln outside Lahori gate caught fire. The fire brigade under the leadership of Arbab Attaullah Khan went to the spot but they did not take any steps to extingnish the fire and returned. The A. S. P. City, who is in fact the Officer Commanding of the Fire Brigade, was informed at the club. He rushed to the scene of fire and took the fire brigade a second time and threw water on the smouldering heap that remained of the fuel. Abdullah Jan, the owner of the fuel, has brought this suit for recovery of Rs. 875 as damages for the loss he has sustained on account of the failure of the fire brigade to take active steps on arrival at the scene of fire. He impleaded the Peshwar Municipal Committee, Mr. Field, A. S. P., Mir Nawaz, S. I. Fire Brigade and the Crown through Collector. The Municipal Committee pleaded that the fire brigade was not its agent and the Municipal Committee was, therefore, not responsible for the acts or omissions of that brigade. It so happened that the plaintiff withdrew his case against the Crown at the time when the issues were framed. One of the issues framed was: "Is the Municipal Committee liable for the negligence of the fire brigade?" and the onus was placed on the plaintiff, Abdullah Jan.

The trial Judge found that the fire brigade was guilty of negligence in refusing to extinguish the fire when they arrived at the scene on the first occasion, that the fire brigade was the agent of the Peshawar Municipal Committee and that therefore the Municipal Committee was liable for the damages. He relied on the report of a Municipal Commissioner in assessing the quantum of damages. The Municipal Commissioner had assessed it at Rs. 400. The Judge found that Mr. Field had done his duty and was therefore not liable and that Mir Nawaz was under the order of Arbab Attaullah Khan and was consequently not responsible for what happened. He exonerated them from all liability. The Judge passed a decree against the Municipal Committee only for the payment of Rs. 400 and dismissed the suit with costs against the other two defendants. An appeal was preferred to the Court of the District Judge by the Municipal Committee, Peshawar. The Additional Judge came to the same conclusion as the trial Judge about the negligence of the fire brigade. With respect to the liability of the Municipal Committee he referred to the statement of the secretary of the following words:

"It is admitted and proved from the evidence of the Secretary, Municial Committee, that the Fire Brigade is maintained at the expense of the Municipal Committee, but the control is not with the Committee but under the A. S. P. City and in his absence the City Inspector."

He did not definitely find whether the Municipal Committee was liable for the acts or omissions of the fire brigade. In the result, however, he dismissed the appeal with costs. The Municipal Committee has come up on revision to this Court. The learned Counsel for the Municipal Committee has adverted to the statement of the secretary which has been summarized in the paragraph quoted from the appellate judgment above. He also pointed out that Mr. Field said that he used his discretion in the matter of putting out fire. He stated that Mr. Field was admittedly an A. S. P. under the Crown and Arbab Attaullah Khan was also a servant of the Crown being an Inspector of Police. He contended that there was consequently no doubt that the personnel of the fire brigade was under these officers and the Municipal Committee had no control over their activities. The mere fact that the Municipal Committee maintained the brigade did not, in the opinion of the Counsel, necessarily mean that its members were controlling the actions of the brigade and were therefore responsible for its mistakes or negligence.

The learned Counsel for the respondent relies on s. 93, Punjab Municipal Act, which enjoins that the Municipal Committee should establish and maintain a fire brigade. I cannot feel persuaded to agree with the learned Counsel for the respondent that the fire brigade is the agent of the Peshawar Municipal Committee. The fire brigade is an independent unit under the control of an officer of the Crown and the mere fact that the Peshawar Municipal Committee pays for it does not make it liable for its acts or omissions. Consequently, I hold that the two Courts below have committed a material irregularity in passing a decree against the Peshawar Municipal Committee which has nothing to do with the loss sustained by the plaintiff-respondent. The petition is accepted and the suit is dismissed. As the litigation was due to a false legal notion regarding the position of the Peshawar Municipal Committee which the plaintiff could not comprehend I direct that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout. This shall not affect the order of the trial Judge that Abdullah Jan, plaintiff, shall pay the costs of Mr. Field and Mr. Nawaz.

ASHRAF-UD-DIN AND ANOTHER—CONVICTS —RESPONDENTS

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 97, 103, 302—

Accused during altercation disarming deceased and stabbing him to death—No right of private defence can be claimed—Offence held murder.

There was an altercation between the accused and the deceased who was armed with hatchet. The accused first wrested the hatchet from the hands of the deceased and then stabbed him to death while the other accused held the deceased:

Held, that the accused were not acting in the exercise of the right of private defence but were guilty of murder.

Cr. A. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, dated July 12, 1939.

Mr. M. Sleem, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Mr. Farrukh Hussain, for the Complainant.

Mr. Iqbal Singh, for the Respondents.

Sale, J.—Two brothers, Ashraf-ud-Din and Gul Kher-ud-Din, have been convicted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, under ss. 304-I, I. P. C. and 304 (1) read with s. 109, I. P. C. respectively for causing the death of Shah Mir at about 8-45 A. M. in Rawalpindi city on February 12, 1939 and sentenced each to ten years' rigorous imprisonment. The two accused were committed for trial charged under s. 302-34, I. P. C. but the learned Sessions Judge held that the act of Ashraf-ud Din was governed by exception (2) of s. 300, I. P. C. in that he had a right of private defence, but exceeded it "in a most brutal manner" while Kher-ud-Din was held guilty under s. 304 (1), I. P. C. read with s. 109, I. P. C. because he held the deceased while his brother stabbed him. Neither accused has appealed from this conviction and sentence. But an appeal has been preferred by the Crown against the acquittal on the murder charge. We have been asked by the learned Advocate-General to hold that no right of private defence has been established in this case and to alter the conviction to one under s. 302, I. P. C. as charged.

The facts are that there was enmity between the deceased Shah Mir and the two accused arising out of the fact that 20 years ago the deceased abducted one of their sisters, while 4 years ago the brother of the deceased abducted another sister. Both the deceased and the two accused in this case are milk-vendors; and the evidence is that about 8-45 A. M. on the morning of February 12, the deceased had gone with Lal Mir P. W. No. 3, to the shop of Kesar Mal, P. W. No. 5, to settle an account. The deceased went on to a tea-shop near the shop of Kesar Mal (P. W. No. 5) when he was attacked by the two accused. Gul-Kher-ud-Din held him by the arm, while Ashraf ud-Din inflicted a number of stab-injuries with a knife. The eye-witnesses are Lal Mir (P. W. No. 3) who saw the occurrence from the shop of Kesar Mal, Kesar Mal himself (P. W. No. 5) and also Ahmad Gul (P. W. No. 6), Gulzari Lal (P. W. No. 7) and Mohammad Ali (P. W. No. 8). All these witnesses agree in saying that Ashraf-ud-Din accused stabbed the deceased while his brother Gul Kher-ud-Din held him by the arm. This fact is established beyond doubt and is not now challenged by the convicts.

It is common ground in this case that the deceased at the time of the attack had a hatchet. In his evidence before the Sessions Court Ahmad Gul (P. W. No. 6) after stating in his examination-in-chief that "Ashraf accused was stabbing with quick succession and violently" deposed in reply to a Court question that he had seen Shah Mir deceased aim a blow with his hatchet at Ashraf-ud-Din which the witness thought "struck him on the arm. Ashraf-ud Din—he says—then caught hold of the hatchet with one hand and began to stab him with the other, while accused No. 2 was holding him from behind." It appears from the medical evidence given by Dr. Udho Das (P. W. No. 2) that Ashraf-ud-Din when arrested was found to have two superficial incised injuries, one on the back of the right middle finger and the other on the back and middle of the left arm one inch above wrist joint. It is on the testimony of Ahmad Gul, read with the medical evidence, that the learned Sessions Judge appears to have come to the finding that Ashraf-ud Din exceeded his right of self-defence "in a most brutal manner". This argument is repeated by learned Counsel for the respondent accused in this Court who urges that on this evidence the finding of the learned Sessions Judge is right.

The learned Advocate-General has argued that, even conceding that Shah Mir deceased had a kulhari and that in the course of the quarrel which led to this killing Shah Mir might have threatened Asnraf accused with his kulhari, no right of private defence accrues in the circumstances of this case. The onus of proving that the case comes within one of the Exceptions in the I. P. C. is laid by s. 105, Evi. Act, on the accused and the Court "shall presume" the absence of circumstances that would bring the case within the Exception sought to be made applicable. Ashraf in this case pleaded private defence and the question is whether on the evidence, this onus can be said to have been discharged. In addition to the testimony of Ahmad Gul already cited, there were two defence witnesses, who say that in the course of an altercation arising about the settling of accounts between Ashraf-ud-Din and Shah Mir the two started abusing each other; Shah Mir raised a hatchet to strike Ashraf-ud-Din, the latter ran away, but the deceased ran after him with the hatchet, and when Shah Mir attempted to strike a second blow, Ashraf caught hold of the hatchet and stabbed the deceased with his knife. This story about the deceased pursuing Ashraf is not pleaded by Ashraf himself who merely says in his statement that as a result of an altercation Shah Mir attacked him with a hatchet and Ashraf stabbed him with a knife in self-defence. The learned Sessions Judge has rejected this defence evidence holding that neither of the defence witnesses are reliable. Admittedly, though claiming to be eye-witnesses, neither appeared before the Police to make any statement, and both have clearly improved on the accused's own plea. We agree, therefore, with the learned Sessions Judge in rejecting their evidence.

It remains to consider whether on the statement of Ahmad Gul read with the medical evidence the plea that the accused had a right of self-defence can be sustained. As regards the evidence of Ahmad Gul it is necessary to point out that his statement that Shah Mir struck Ashraf-ud-Din with a hatchet did not appear in his examination-in-chief or in his first cross-examination but was made for the first time in reply to a Court question; and this statement does not appear in the evidence which Ahmad Gul had himself given before the committing Magistrate which was transferred by the learned Sessions Judge to the Sessions file under s. 288, Criminal P. C. We are of opinion therefore that the evidence of Ahmad Gul on this point is not reliable. None of the other prosecution witnesses says that the deceased Shah Mir started the fight by striking at Ashraf-ud-Din with his kulhari. The injuries proved to have been sustained by Ashraf-ud-Din are consistent with the prosecution story that the accused attacked Shah Mir and in order to make sure that Shah Mir did not use his kulhari, first wrested it from him; and then while one accused held him by the arm, the other stabbed him.

In any event, even if it be assumed for the sake of argument that Shah Mir may in the course of an altercation have threatened Ashraf-ud-Din with a kulhari the circumstances of this case do not justify a plea of self-defence. Ashraf-ud-Din might have been justified in wresting the kulhari from Shah Mir or even in striking Shah Mir to prevent an attack on his person by Shah Mir, but the evidence in this case is that accused first wrested the kulhari from the hand of Shah Mir and then that Kher-ud-Din seized the deceased by the arm while Ashraf-ud-Din repeatedly stabbed him inflicting as is proved by the medical evidence as many as ten serious incised injuries including a deep penetrating wound into the abdomen. These circumstances show that even giving every possible consideration to the plea of the accused this was not an act committed in the exercise of the right of self-defence but an act of revenge. Ashraf-ud-Din would under s. 97, I. P. C. have had the right to defend his body against a possible attack by Shah Mir (provided of course Ashraf-ud-Din had not himself provoked the attack); but under s. 102, I. P. C. the right of private defence would continue only so long as the apprehension of danger continues.

It is obvious that once the weapon had been seized from Shah Mir the apprehension of danger did not continue; and when thereafter Kher-ud-Din held Shah Mir and Ashraf-ud-Din repeatedly stabbed him in the abdomen they were not acting in the excercise of the right of private defence but committing murder. Nor was Kher-ud-Din "abetting" the act as understood by s. 109, I. P. C. He was acting as a principal in furtherance of a common intention and he should have been convicted under s. 302-34, I. P. C. as charged. Both the accused are therefore guilty under s. 302, I. P. C. But this is not a case for the imposition of the capital sentence. We do not know the immediate cause of the attack, or the circumstance immediately preceding it. It may well be there was some provocation; especially as the deceased was himself armed with an axe and had to be disarmed. We therefore accept the appeal by the Crown against the acquittal of the respondents under s. 302, I. P. C. We convict both accused under s. 302, I. P. C., but for the reasons stated impose on each a sentence of transportation for life.

The plaintiff whose suit for accounts is dismissed is bound to stamp his memorandum of appeal according to the full amount of the valuation in the plaint. 178 Ind. Cas. 159 (3), relied on, 141 Ind, Cas. 602 (1), held overruled in, 175 Ind. Cas. 470 (2).

Section 5, Govt. Securities Act, was enacted only for the protection of the Govt, who can get a due discharge from the person who is the holder of the note. The question as to the benefical ownership of the assignor in the war bonds and Govt. promissory notes deposited by the assignee with the Govt., is not affected by s. 5.

A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Masulipatam, dated April 22, 1936.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Respondent.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff claimed two reliefs in the suit : (1) an account of a certain arrack business alleged to have been carried on by the plaintiff in the name of the defendant, and (2) a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of certain war bonds and Govt. promissory notes described in the schedule to the plaint. The case for the plaintiff is that the defendant was his son-in-law and therefore he allowed the arrack business to be carried on in his name and as security for the said business he had the Govt. promissory notes and war bonds deposited therefor. The learned Subordinate Judge is of opinion that the plaintiff has not made out his case that the defendant was only a benamidar in respect of the arrack business. In regard to the war bonds and Govt. promissory notes, the learned Judge is of opinion that by virtue of s. 5, Govt. Securities Act, the defendant being the holder of the promissory notes and bonds by virtue of the transfer in his favour, he must be deemed to be the owner. The plaintiff preferred this appeal and he claimed both the reliefs again in his memorandum of appeal. He valued the relief as to account at the sum of Rs. 1,000 on the ground that he was entitled to put his own valuation on the strength of the ruling in In re Venkatanandam (1) of Ramesam and Mockett, JJ. which has since been overruled by a Full Bench case which is reported in In re Dhanukodi Nayakkar (2). Under the latest ruling Narayanan Chetty v. Periapoan (3), the plaintiff is bound to stamp his memorandum of appeal according to the full amount of the valuation in the plaint. If this ruling is given effect to, the plaintiff ought to have paid the duty on Rs. 10,000 not on Rs. 1,000. When confronted by this ruling Mr. Satyanarayana Rao under instructions from his client is not prepared to pay the deficit court-fee and abandoning the claim in respect thereof. Therefore the appeal so far as the relief for account is concerned must be dismissed with costs.

He has only pressed the claim with regard to the relief relating to war bonds and Govt. promissory notes. The war bonds are evidenced by Exs. C, D E, F and L series and the Govt. promissory notes by Ex. M series. The documentary evidence in support thereof completely bears out the plaintiff's case. In respect of every one of these war bonds and promissory notes the plaintiff has paid money and become the owner thereof but he deposited them in 1929 as security for the arrack business which was being carried on by the defendent having regard to the relationship with him. Therefore there can be no question that the beneficial ownership in the suit bonds and promissory notes is in the plaintiff and the defendant in his deposition admitted that these bonds and promissory notes belonged to the plaintiff but he set up a claim that he become the owner thereof by virtue of a transfer from the plaintiff in consideration of a sum of Rs. 3,000 paid by the defendant to the plaintiff. As remarked by the learned Subordinate Judge, there is no evidence to prove that the defendant paid the sum of Rs. 3,000. Therefore if this story of transfer is not to be believed the plaintiff's title to the suit war bonds and Govt. promissory notes remains. In our opinion s. 5, Govt. Securities Act, has no bearing on the case, because this section was enacted only for the protection of the Govt. who can get a due discharge from the person who is the holder of the note. The question as to the beneficial ownership is not affected by s. 5. The plaintiff's appeal with regard to the suit war bonds and promissory notes has therefore to be allowed. We therefore set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge in regard thereto and give the declaration asked for. The respondent will pay the costs of the appellant so far as this claim is concerned.

Hindu Law—Impartible estate—Bhamgarh estate in Nimar District—Holder's right to alienate—Succession to ancestral impartible estate in joint Hindu family is governed by Mitakshara — Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 53, 2 (11)—Suit for specific performance—Decree for alternative remedy of compensation—S 53, if applies — Suit for specific performance of contract to alienate part of impartible estate against holder — Decree for compensation and not specific performance—Holder dying—In execution property attached in hands of his son—Son held legal representative.

The holder of an impartible estate (Bhamgarh estate in Nimar District) governed by custom of primogeniture has a power to alienate the estate. Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (3), followed.

The successor to an ancestral impartible estate in a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara is designated by survivorship although he holds the estate according to the custom of impartibility. The estate devolves on the successor. 60 Ind. Cas. 534 (8), followed. [p. 600, col. 1.]

Where a decree has been passed in a suit for specific performance for the alternative equitable remedy of compensation in lieu of specific performance, the decree may be regarded as creating a debt of record without its being a decree on a debt and consequently s. 53, Civil P. C., has no application. [p. 601, col. 2.]

In a suit for specific performance of a contract against the holder of an impartible estate who had contracted to alienate a part of the estate, a decree for compensation instead of specific performance was passed. After his death the estate devolved on his son as his successor and the estate in his hands was attached in execution of the decree:

Held, that the decree was passed against the deceased in his representative capacity and that his successor was his legal representative within the meaning of s. 2 (11), Civil P. C.

Misc. A. from an order of the Court of the District Judge, Nimar, dated September 7, 1936.

Mr. J. Sen with Mr. A. Razak, for the Appellant.

R. B. D. N. Chaudhari with Mr. S. C. Dutt Chaudhari, for the Respondents.

Order.—This is an appeal arising out of execution proceedings. The decree that it is sought to execute was one passed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee who had before them, on appeal, a claim made against one Rao Kishoresingh in a suit claiming inter alia specific performance. There were other alternative claims but they do not arise as under the main prayer it was decided that although specific performance should not be decreed compensation should be decreed. The compensation was in lieu of specific performance and was granted instead of specific performance because their Lordships held that the circumstances were such that the plaintiffs could be adequately compensated in money.

The circumstances were that Rao Kishoresingh was litigating as to the impartibility of the estate. In that litigation, the facts of which will be found in the opinion of the Judicial Committee reported in Kishore Singh v. Gahena Bai (1), Rao Kishore Singh was the plaintiff and was suing for a declaration that he was the sole heir of one Rao Himmat Singh. His claim raised and depended upon the question whether the Hindu joint family of which he, Rao Himmat Singh, and the defendants to that suit were, prior to Rao Himmat Singh's death, members, was governed by a custom of primogeniture. If primogeniture applied then Rao Kishore Singh took the estate subject to certain family rights; if it did not the estate passed by survivorship in the usual way.

To finance that litigation Rao Kishore Singh entered into the agreement specific performance of which was sought in the subsequent suit which also went to the Privy Council and is reported in Ramji Patel v. Kishore Singh (2). The prayers are set out at pp. 122*, 123. The first prayer was for specific performance, the second in the alternative for refund of the money advanced with interest, the third for costs and other relief as the Court thinks fit. The second prayer did not arise, for, as above stated the decree gave compensation in lieu of specific performance. The compensation was fixed at Rs. 20,000. We do not understand this to have been given under the second prayer (which also asked for compensation). We understand it to have been given because although the suit for specific performance in substance succeeded actual specific performance was not decreed because the equities were sufficiently met by compensation.

The money decree thus obtained for Rs. 20,000 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. until realization and for costs had to be executed.

The decree in the specific performance case was in favour of the plaintiff Ramji Patel and has now passed to the respondents to the appeal, Gangaram and others. The date of the decree is about May 9, 1929.

The estate which it was declared in the earlier suit was subject to a custom of primogeniture is known as the Bhamgarh estate and has been in the same family for many hundreds of years.

Apparently Rao Kishore Singh died in 1930 and was succeeded by Rao Bhimsingh who admits that, under pressure from his father Rao Kishore Singh, he signed the "mortgage" (by which we understand the contract in respect of which the compensantion was decreed). Rao Baimsingh "obtained the gadi (throne or seat) in 1930". The estate was under attachment before 1930.

When execution was sought to be effected by a sale of part of the estate Rao Bhimsingh took the point that the estate was inalienable and could not therefore be reached. Among the issues settled was also one: "Is the property in suit an asset of Kishore Singh in the hand of the objector(Rao Bhimsingh)?" That is answered in the affirmative by the trial Court. That finding was based on the view that this estate was not inalienable. That was the question debated before the lower Appellate Court. Before us that was the first point taken but later the matter was alternatively argued on the basis of s. 53 of the Civil P. C.

The question relating to inalienability were it one of first impression, would undoubtedly be one of difficulty. Mr. Sen with his usual ability marshalled the logical difficulties in the way of the conclusion arrived at by the Judicial Committee in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (3). He pointed out that the fact that an estate was impartible did not result in the conclusion that it was not governed by Hindu Law ideas but that it had a special custom engrafted on it for a limited purpose but that outside this purpose, and alienability was outside it, the Hindu Law conception remained in full force. We do not consider any useful purpose would be served by going once again through all the cases. They are, save the most recent, all to be found in Ramesam, J.'s judgment reported in Annadana Jadaya v. Konammal (4). The argument addressed to us was crytallized into a sentence by one of us (Stone, J. as he then was) in Pirumal Sethurayar v. Subbalakshmi (5):

> "It might, of course, have been thought this inroad Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (3), was being referred to upon the normal right to partition created by custom in the case of impartible estates was not merely in the interest of the holder of the samin but was derived from the very nature of the case which imposed an equal obstacle in the way of the holder of the samin compelling separation by unilateral act."

But as was pointed out on the same page in that judgment

> "It Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (3) is, however, not merely binding on us but, as was stated in Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ramsundar Mal (6), has been in force so long that it cannot now be disturbed."

Perumal Sethurayar v. Subbalakshmi (5): is a case which went to the Privy Council. see Perumal Sethurayar v. Subbalakishmi (7),

Before their Lordships Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (3), was relied on (see at p. 97*). It was in no way cut down. We regard this as concluding this branch of the case.

The next branch of the argument is founded on the fundamental point that in the case of a Hindu impartible estate succession, subject to the custom of primogeniture, is as in an ordinary joint family: see Baijnath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali (8), Pratap Chandra Deo v. Jagadish Chandra Deo (9), Konammal v. Annadana Jadaya Goundar (10), Shiba Prasad Singh v. Prayagkumari Debee (11) and Collector of Gorakhpore v. Ram Sundar Mal (6). Thus it is said that in all such cases we are really dealing with survivorship not heirship.

It is, however, to be noted in passing that as was pointed out in Venkata Mahipati Gangadhara Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapore (12), citing with approval Bachoo v. Mankorebai (13), it is of the essence of impartibility that no co-parcenary exists.

In view, however, of Baijnath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali (8), we take it as settled that the successor to an ancestral impartible estate in a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara is designated by survivorship although he holds the estate according to the custom of impartibility.

It is accordingly argued that Rao Bhimsingh in this case is not a "legal representative" of Rao Kishore Singh within the meaning of that term as defined in s. 2 (11) of the Civil P. C.

If he is not the legal representative he cannot be made liable in execution of a decree passed against the deceased unless it be under s. 53, Civil P. C. Section 53, it is said, does not apply because what is sought to be executed is not a decree passed in a suit on a debt but a decree passed in a suit for specific performance of a contract.

It is first desirable to advert to s. 2 (11) of the Civil P. C. which defines "legal representative." The definition is as follows:

"'Legal representative' means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who inter-meddles with the estate of the deceased and where a party sues or is sued in a representative character the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued."

Here Rao Bhimsingh does not represent the estate of the deceased person because that person had no estate. The estate Bhamgarh belonged to a joint Hindu family. For similar reason there is no question here of Rao Bhimsingh intermeddling with the estate of the deceased. But was not Rao Kishore Singh sued in a representative capacity and is not Rao Bhimsingh the person on whom the estate "devolves" on the death of Rao Kishore Singh?

Before discussing this question we pass to the other point which relates to the true construction of s. 53, Civil P. C. That is a section that has caused some trouble in India. It has been construed in Ganesh Sakharam v. Narayan Sri Ram (14) and Meyyappan Servai v. Mayyappan Ambalam (15), in a way which with respect we find it difficult to follow. The learned Judges in Ganesh Sakharam v. Narayan Sri Ram (14), appear to have felt themselves driven to go to s. 53 because they held that a surviving co-parcener was not a legal representative in any case.

Much weight was placed, especially in Spencer, J.'s judgment in Mayyappan Servai v. Mayyappan Ambalam (15), upon the reference in s. 53 to ss. 50 and 52. We apprehend, however, that s. 53 is creating a fiction for purposes. The purposes are the purpose of s. 50 and the purpose of s. 52. Section 50 gives to the decree-holder the right to execute the decree not only against the judgment-debtor but also against the judgment-debtor's legal representative (to the extent of the deceased's a assets in his hands) should the judgment-debtor die after decree. Section 52 deals with the position where the death occurs before decree and the decree is passed after the

Either Rao Bhimsingh was or was not a "legal representative" of Rao Kishore Singh. If he were he could have been brought on record had Rao Kishore Singh died before decree, or the decree could have been executed against him (Bhimsingh) if Rao Kishore Singh had died, as he did, after the decree. Had he been joined as legal representative before decree he would, of course, only be liable to the extent of the assets of Rao Kishore Singh in his hands, apart from s. 53.

What is the position where either the person is not legal representative or the property is not the property of the deceased? In either such case, apart from suit, there are only two ways of executing the decree against that property. One way is provided by s. 53. The other is where s. 2 (11) applies, i. e. where the deceased was sued in a representative capacity and the estate devolves on the legal representative. Section 53 can be used because it creates a fiction. The fiction is that in certain circumstances property, not the property of the deceased and not therefore in A as the deceased's personal representative, shall be deemed to be property held by A as a legal representative. In finding out what those circumstances are we find that neither s. 50 nor s. 52 affords any guide whatever. We have to look at s. 53 and there we find a difficulty due to the curious use of the the definite and indefinite articles.

Property of a class (viz, property which is liable under Hindu Law for the payment of "the debt") in the hands of one of a class (viz. a son or other descendant) in an event (viz. if "a decree" has been passed on the debt) is made the subject of a fiction. The fiction is twofold: The property is deemed to be the property of the deceased (which it is not in cases where s. 53 is involved being joint family property), and the son or other descendant is deemed to be a "legal representative" which he is not in respect of the property in question in many cases. The usual case is that he gets the property in his own right by survivorship. It is not a case of A's property being inherited by B, but of property belonging to a co-parcenary, A plus B, becoming solely B's by A's death.

It seems to us to be plain that if "the debt" means the debt in respect of which the decree being executed was passed s. 53 is limited to cases where the decree that is being executed is a decree passed in a suit on a debt.

But it will be observed that the words are " . . . property . . . liable . . . for the payment of the debt . . . in respect of which a decree has been passed". One would expect the words "for the payment of a debt . . . in respect of which the decree has been passed" at any rate "for the payment of the debt . . . . in respect of which the decree has been passed." "A decree" suggests any decree i. e. in respect of which a decree could have been passed, it also suggests any debt because of course only one decree could be passed in respect of one debt.

The generally accepted view in practice here has been, we believe, that this section makes liable joint family property where the ancestor has been sued on a debt for which the sons are liable under the pious obligation rule. There are difficulties even in this view because the section says "son or other descendant" and the pious obligation rule is limited to son, grandson and great-grandson which obviously does not exhaust the class comprised within the words "son or other descendant."

Of course if the true construction is "property . . . . which is liable . . . . for the payment of the debts of the deceased ancestor" when in the hands of a son, grandson or great-grandson one has made liable all joint property (as under the pious obligation rule) in respect of all decree whether on debts or not. One has also re-written the section. We can make nothing of the words "in respect of which a decree has been passed" except that it relates to a debt and means that this two-fold fiction comes into operation where:

(1) property is liable for the debt

(2) it has come into the hands of a son etc.,

(3) a decree has been passed in a suit on the debt.

Then that son etc., is deemed to hold that property as that deceased debtor's personal representative.

Here no decree has been passed either for a debt or the debt. A decree has been passed in a suit for specific performance for the alternative equitable remedy of compensation in lieu of specific performance. The decree may be regarded as creating a debt of record without its being a decree on a debt.

We feel therefore compelled to conclude that short of a fresh suit their Lordships' decree is going to be evaded or the appellant must be brought within the definition of "legal representative". Should this be impossible we should exercise our powers and treat the proceedings, which are under s. 47 of the Civil P. C., there being no objection as to limitation or jurisdiction, as a suit.

Quite clearly, in view of Baijnah Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali Singh (8) and the several Privy Council decisions which follow that case Rao Bhimsingh took by survivorship and he does not therefore represent the estate of the deceased. He can only be brought within s. 2 (11) if, in the specific performance case Rao Kishore Singh was sued in a representative capacity and the estate "devolved" on Bhimsingh.

That the estate devolved on Bhimsingh we do not doubt. See Kachi Kalyana Rungappa Kalakka Thola Udayar v. Kachi Yuva Rengappa Kalakka Thola Udayar (16) quoted in Baijnah Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali (8). See also the latter case at p. 210*.

The difficulty arises from two facts: (1) it is said that the decree is a personal decree; (2) it is not easy to see who Rao Kishore Singh represented in the suit which resulted in the decree under execution.

As to the first point it must be borne in mind that the defence founded on the argument that the decree is not executable against Bhimsingh because Bhimsingh is not a legal representative and that s 53 does not apply was not taken in the notice of appeal. Ground No. 4 which states that the decree was a personal decree relates to the effect of impartibility. On the other had ground No. 12 takes up the position that Rao Kishore Singh was in the position of a manager of a joint Hindu family. As a result of the point now under consideration being taken for the first time before us the facts are not clear. Rao Bhimsingh in his evidence says: "I am judgment-debtor".

There is some mention in the trial Court's judgment and (as above noted) in the notice of appeal that the decree passed against Rao Kishore Singh was a personal decree. The learned trial Judge says:

"His (Rao Bhimsingh's) story is that the decree in question was a personal decree against the late Rao Kishore Singh."

There is, however, nothing in Rao Bhimsingh's evidence to this effect and the decree is not before us, and its nature is not clear from the Privy Council judgment in the case in question.

The fourth issue "Is the property in suit an asset of Kishore Singh in the hand of the objector?" seems to have been argued on the basis that it would be if the estate was alienable and would not be if it were inalienable.

If the property is alienable and the custom of impartibility and primogeniture applies then this is a case where a joint Hindu family estate passes on death to one, at one time Rao Kishore Singh now Rao Bhimsingh. Either, while in enjoyment of this estate could sell it or any part of it, or mortgage it or otherwise alienate it. In any such transaction the person in enjoyment represented in a most complete way the family. No one suing upon any contract such as the one sought to be specifically enforced in the case reported in Ramji Patel v Kishare Singh (2) could possibly sue anybody save the person in enjoyment. He is not merely manager. He represents the family in all things. If he gave the whole estate away the family could not complain. Any contract to mortgage or sell the entire estate or any part thereof could only be made by him for he alone would have power to mortgage or sell. Any suit on such a contract could only be brought against him. But although he alone could be sued because he alone could alienate and although there is here no managership, no co-parcenary in the ordinary, or indeed in any sense, behind him all the time is the family one male of which will eventually succeed by survivorship subject to the custom of primogeniture.

If such a person is sued on such a contract as was before their Lordships in Ramji Patel v. Kishore Singh (2) is not he sued in a representative capacity? In this particular case it would seem from Rao Bhimsingh's evidence in this present matter that he, Rao Bhimsingh, was a party to the contract (which he calls a mortgage) upon which Rao Kishore Singh was sued. As to this, however, owing to this point not having been raised in the Court of first instance or in first appeal the facts are not clear. It seems to have been admitted that Rao Bhimsingh was the representative of Rao Kishore Singh.

In Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (17) the managing member of a joint Hindu family was sued on a mortgage and a foreclosure decree was passed. Members of the family later resisted execution and claimed to redeem. The question was whether the manager was sued in a representative capacity so as to cause the decree to bind members of the family not parties. It was held that he was.

In this case Rao Kishore Singh was in a much more representative position as regards the estate than the manager of a joint Hindu family. He was solely in enjoyment of the estate. He could have given it away or alienated it in any way. He made a contract to alienate a part. That contract was sued on and instead of ending in a direction to convey it ended in this decree. That decree, we feel, was made against him at least as much in a representative capacity as if he had been sued on a mortgage as manager of a joint Hindu family.

We are accordingly of the opinion that Rao Bhimsingn is a legal representative within the definition contained in s. 2 (11).

As to the third point it is said that the tenure here is such that the person in enjoyment could not alienate. Sir Reginald Craddock's Note on the Statuts of the Zamindars of the Central Provinces is relied on. See paras. 137 to 139, 141, 142, 164 and 165. This Note was produced in 1889. It clearly regards impartibility and alienability as connected so that that which is impartible is inalienable (see for example para. 139). Sartaj Kuari v. Devraj Kuari (3) had been reported in 1888 and altered what had hitherto been thought on this subject. It is not likely that when he wrote his Note Sir Reginald Craddock, then a comparatively young executive officer, would have known of this change. So far as it goes, however, the Note shows that in Sir Reginald Craddock's opinion

"It must at once be conceded that these Zamindars never had any transferable rights in their estates until they were given proprietary rights."

He was speaking of Bhandara, Balaghat, and Raipur Zamindars. We are here concerned with a Nimar Zamindar. There is about 300 miles between these Districts and their historical development is distinct.

Further in this case we have the grant. This grant (Ex. D-9) shows that Rao Doulat Singh in 1865 was given a quit-rent tenure with full power of alienation. We are not disposed in this case to restrict the right of this family to those conferred by this Sunnad. We are prepared to assume that if we looked behind it to the ancient rights we should find something different from a quit-rent holding. We should find a joint Hindu family with an impartible estate devolving by a custom of primogeniture. But we can find nothing to show that this estate was inalienable. On the contrary for many years past the person in enjoyment has alienated.

We are accordingly of the opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

D. Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Suit No. 881 of 1939
May 21, 1940
LORT-WILLIAMS J.

GOALDAS DAGA—PLAINTIFF
MANICKLAL BAITY—DEFENDANT

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Broker acting for customer—Customer gambling — Whether can set up plea of gaming and wagering against broker's claim.

Where a broker acts on behalf of his customer and the customer gambles the customer cannot set up a plea of gaming and wagering against the broker's claim. Thacker v. Hardy (1), relied on.

Messrs. N. C. Chatterjee and G. K. Mitter for the Plaintiff.

Mr. J. C. Sett, for the Defendant.

Judgment.—The plaintiff is a broker and a member of the East India Jute Association Ltd., The defendant also is a broker. The plaintiff's claim relates to a number of transactions in jute carried out by the plaintiff for and on behalf of the defendant and upon his instructions. These resulted in a sum of Rs. 16,511-15-0 becoming due to the plaintiff upon January 28, 1939. On January 30, 1939, defendant paid to the plaintiff Rs. 5 000 on account leaving a balance of Rs. 11,511-15-0. Adding to this interest amounting to Rs. 153-9-6, the plaintiff's claim is Rs. 11,665-8-6. Under the rules of the association future contracts of purchase or sale of jute are made between members of the association only, that is to say, the association only recognizes its members in these transactions. They are forward contracts and are made for a period of three months and each week during the period of the three months a clearing rate is fixed by the board of control of the association and periodical payments of margins have to be made on the basis of the difference between the contract rates and the clearing rates. At the end of the period of three months, if the contract has not been adjusted meanwhile delivery has to be made. Some members of the association both act as brokers and enter into contracts direct as principals with their customers. Other members act only as brokers and never make any such direct contract.

The plaintiff never acts otherwise than as a broker and this is confirmed by a mass of documentary evidence. For his services he charges commission and this is all that he gets out of any business which he does on behalf of his customer. The method of doing such business is as follows: The customer either rings up the plaintiff on the telephone or goes to see him at his office. He instructs him either to sell or purchase so many bales of jute on behalf of the customer. Thereupon the plaintiff goes downstairs into the exchange and makes an appropriate contract with a member of the association. He then returns to the telephone or to his office and tells his customer what he has done. In the evening, in some cases, he goes to see the customer and obtains confirmation of the deal so as to avoid any mistake. The transaction is then entered in his books. Another rule of the association is that one member does not pay or receive directly from the other member; he pays or receives from the association itself, and the association pays or receives from the other party to the contract. The result is that in all such transactions the member makes himself liable to the association for the business which he has done on behalf of his customer.

In the present case the result was that the plaintiff had to pay to the association out of his own pocket the sum of Rs. 16,511-15-0, and all that he has received up to the present from the defendant is the Rs. 5,000 to which I have referred, and commission which he earned on the various transactions. A further condition of the transactions was that interest at six per cent. would be calculated on the periodical margins and would run in favour of either party after the closing of the transaction. It is admitted that the plaintiff has been acting for the defendant for a number of years and that all dealings and transactions between them up to January 13, 1939 were adjusted and paid except an outstanding sale of 1500 bales by the defendant at Rs. 36-12-0. From that date up to January 21, there were a number of other transactions which are set out in the annexure to the plaint. Thus, sales on behalf of the defendant were made to the extent of 2250 bales and purchases on his behalf to the extent of 3750 bales and they resulted in the loss which is represented by the amount paid by the plaintiff to the association. The plaintiff's brokerage was originally at the rate of six pies per bale, and subsequently three pies per bale.

The defendant alleges that there never was any intention on behalf either of himself, or of the plaintiff, or in fact of any members of the association either to take or give delivery of jute, and that in respect of all such transactions no one contemplated anything except that the differences in the prices of jute should be paid. He admits however that the plaintiff was entitled to commission at the rate of three pies per bale on the closing of each transaction. He admits also that the various purchases and sales were as stated by the plaintiff, but he alleges that on January 18, 1939 he asked the plaintiff to purchase the 1500 bales and the 2250, bales which I have mentioned, against the subsisting contracts for sales in respect of the same number of bales by the defendant, instead of which, according to the defendant, the plaintiff failed and neglected to close the various contracts for sale on January 18, and subsequently closed the transactions on the 21st contrary to the defendant's directions, and the defendant therefore refused to be bound by what he termed the unauthorised act of the plaintiff.

Further, he alleges that on January 30 the accounts were adjusted on the basis of the instructions actually given to the plaintiff and were settled for the sum of Rs. 5,000 which the defendant paid and the plaintiff accepted in full satisfaction of his claims in respect of all transactions outstanding. Further, the defendant alleges that all the transactions were gambling transactions and therefore illegal and inoperative. It will be observed at once that the defendant relies upon inconsistent allegations. He alleges on the one hand that contracts in respect of differences only, and therefore gambling transactions, were made between him and the plaintiff acting as a principal, yet, in the same breach he talks of asking the plaintiff to purchase certain bales from him, and alleges that the plaintiff failed and neglected to carry out the defendant's instructions and closed the transactions contrary to his directions, and therefore committed acts which were unauthorised by the defendant. Further, that the accounts were adjusted upon the basis of the instructions actually given.

Every one of these statements is wholly inconsistent with the story that the plaintiff was acting as a principal. They are consistent only with and appropriate to the allegations of the plaintiff that he acted throughout only as an agent and broker. Obviously, instructions cannot be given to a principal, nor can the principal be charged with failing and neglecting to carry out instructions. With regard to the plaintiff's closing of the transactions on January 21 instead of 18th, I accept his evidence rather than that of the defendant. He struck me as a reliable witness and everyone of his statements is corroborated by entries in his books. On the other hand, I am not at all satisfied with the evidence of the defendant. Obviously he has been unfortunate, has been gambling and has lost and as so often happens in such cases he has set up a plea of gaming and wagering.

Upon the assumption therefore that the plaintiff was acting only as a broker it is obvious that he had no interest whatever in postponing the closing of the transaction from January 18 to 21. Upon whichever date, all that he could expect to receive was his brokerage. In fact the defendant accepted this position and could give as the only reason for the plaintiff's failure to carry out his instructions on the 18th that he had forgotten to make the necessary contracts and close the deals. After careful consideration, I do not think that this is likely to have occurred because, in the absence of written orders and instructions the plaintiff makes a practice of making the contracts with members of the association immediately after he has received instructions from his customer. With regard to the alleged settlement on January 30, I am satisfied that the plaintiff's story is true and that Rs. 5 000 was only a payment on account, the defendant being at that time unable to settle the whole of the claim. He said that he had suffered much loss and he asked the plaintiff to pay the sum due to the East India Jute Association, that is to say, the balance of the defendant's losses, and that he would pay the plaintiff later on.

Subsequently, there was an attempt to settle the claim between the plaintiff and the defendant made by a mutual friend or business acquaintance named Dawlal Singh. The defendant upon that occasion said that he had not got the money and though he was willing to pay the full amount he could not pay in cash, but was willing to execute a hundi for that amount. The plaintiff said that no settlement could be arrived at unless a cash payment was made, and so the matter ended.

I am satisfied that the plaintiff acted throughout as a broker and made nothing out of these transactions except his brokerage. It is true that the defendant never intended to give or take delivery and was simply gambling in differences. But there is nothing whatever to show that the plaintiff was a party to those gambling transactions. It takes at least two to make a gaming and wagering contract and while the defendant no doubt never had any intention except to gamble I am satisfied that the plaintiff was no party to any gaming or wagering contract and simply carried out his instructions as a broker. Whether the defendant gambled or not was no business of his. It was immaterial to him what the defendant chose to do, so long as he received his brokerage or commission on each transaction.

There can be no doubt that where a broker acts on behalf of his customer and the customer gambles, the customer cannot set up a plea of gaming and wagering against the broker's claim.

In Thacker v. Hardy (1) "the plaintiff a broker, had been employed by the defendant to speculate for him upon the stock exhange; to the knowledge of the plaintiff the defendant did not intend to accept the stock bought for him, or to deliver the stock sold for him, but expected that the plaintiff would so arrange matters that nothing but differences would be payable by him; the plaintiff knew that unless he could arrange matters for the defendant as the latter expected, the defendant would be unable to meet the engagements which the plaintiff might enter into for him. The plaintiff accordingly entered into contracts on behalf of the defendant upon which the plaintiff became personally liable, and he sued the defendant for indemnity against the liability incurred by him and for his commission as broker.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, for the employment of the plaintiff by the defendant was not against public policy, and was not illegal at common law, and, further, was not in the nature of a gaming and wagering contract against the provisions of 8 & 9 Vict C. 109, s. 18."

The facts in that case are almost upon all fours with the facts of the present case and in a sense it was a much stronger case in favour of the defendant because there the broker had full knowledge of the intentions of the customer and engaged himself to carry out speculation on behalf of that customer.

In the present case the facts are quite different. I am satisfied that any question of speculating on behalf of the defendant never arose, nor was there any discussion about differences between the plaintiff and the defendant. The plaintiff being in the position of a broker only did not care one way or another whether the defendant gambled or not.

In these circumstances there can be no answer to this claim. There must be judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed with costs.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Miscellaneous Case No. 295 of 1937
September 24, 1940
COLLISTER AND BAJPAI, JJ.

GANESHILAL CHHAPPAN LAL
—ASSESSEE—APPLICANT
versus
COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX—
OPPOSITE PARTY

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 13, Proviso—Income-tax Officer exercising his judgment and not acting arbitrarily – Interference with discretion—Assessee doing business of selling gold and silver served with notices under ss.22 (4) and 23 (2)—Books of account accepted in respect of transactions in silver and s. 13, Proviso applied in respect of transactions in gold—Income-tax Officer held justified in doing so.

The language of the proviso to s. 13 makes it clear that discretion is vested in the Income-tax Officer; but obviously it was not the intention of the Legislature that such discretion should be arbitrary. What the Court has to consider is whether the Income-tax Officer exercised his judgment in arriving at the conclusion that the income, profits and gains were not properly deducible from the assessee's regularly kept books of accounts; if he did exercise his judgment and did not act arbitrarily, then having regard to the language of the proviso, his discretion cannot be interfered with. 172 Ind. Cas. 1 (3), relied on. 177 Ind. Cas. 36 (1), referred to. [p. 607, col. 2, p 608, col. 1.]

An assessee who was doing a business of selling gold and silver was served with notices under ss. 22 (4) and 23 (2), Income Tax Act. The munib of the assessee was specifically asked about the profits from the transactions in gold and silver. In respect of the transactions in gold the Income-tax Officer applied Proviso to s. 13:

Held, that the income-tax authorities were justified without giving notice to the assessee, in applying the proviso to the s. 13 in respect to transactions in gold while accepting the books of account in respect to transactions in silver. [p. 609, col. 1.]

Misc. Case from the reference submitted by Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces, dated February 29, 1940.

Messrs. M. N. Agarwala and Brij Lal Gupta, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Opposite Party.

Collister, J.—This is a case which has been stated under s. 66 (3), Income Tax Act. The assessee is a firm at Aligarh named Ganeshi Lal Chhapan Lal. The firm does sarrafa business and its main activity consists in buying ornaments and selling the gold and silver which is obtained from them. The firm melts the ornaments and converts them into gold and silver bars and these it sells in the market, some locally, but the bulk at Bombay. The bars are all tested at the Mint in Bombay and the quantity of dross is there imprinted on each bar and thereafter the bars are sold in the market at a discount which corresponds with the percentage of dross as certified by the Mint. The assessee's account books are maintained according to the mercantile accountancy system. They are regularly kept, and up to the year 1934-35 tax was assessed upon their basis: but in that year the profits in gold transactions, as revealed by the books of the firm, were only 2½ per cent. and this was not accepted as correct by the income-tax authorities, who applied the proviso to s. 13 of the Act and assessed the income of the firm in respect to these transactions upon a 5 per cent. basis. For the year 1935-36 the assessment year with which we are now concerned, it was found that the profits from transactions in gold were only 0.2 per cent. on a turnover of Rs. 5,56,411, and the Income-tax Officer, for reasons which he has given and which we shall discuss hereafter, again applied a flat rate under the proviso to s. 13. He applied a rate of 3 per cent. in respect to the sales at Bombay and 5 per cent. in respect of local sales. He accepted the books of account as regards silver transactions.

There was an appeal to the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax and he agreed with the Income-tax Officer that the profits of gold transactions as shown in the books of the firm, were "ridiculously low" and were not acceptable; but he reduced the rate of profits from 3 to 2½ in respect to the sales which were effected at Bombay. The assessee then applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax for review under s. 33 of the Act, and in the alternative he requested that officer to refer certain questions of law to this Court under s. 66 (2). The Commissioner declined to exercise his powers of review under s. 33 and also declined to state a case under s. 66 (2). Thereafter, the assessee applied to this Court under s. 66 (3) and a Bench of this Court, of which one of us was a member, by its order dated September 1, 1939 directed the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case for the decision of this Court. The question or rather the questions of law, as formulated by the assessee and as now referred to this Court, are as follows:

"Whether under the circumstances of this case the provisions of s. 13, Income Tax Act, at all come into play, and whether there was any legal evidence on the record to justify the order of the income-tax authorities in accepting the book profits of on commodity and rejecting the same for transactions of the other commodity without giving notice."

The opinion of the Commissioner of Income-tax is that the two questions involved should be answered in affirmative. We shall first consider whether the proviso to s. 13 of the Act was in the circumstances applicable. Learned Counsel for the assessee contends that the Income-tax Officer erred in expressing the opinion that the profits of the firm were not deducible from its books; he says that if that officer had applied certain tests, the correctness of the profits as revealed in the books of account would have become manifest. We shall discuss at a later stage the tests which are suggested by the learned Counsel. Meanwhile, we propose to state the view which is taken by the Commissioner and to discuss the law on the subject. The Commissioner says:

"The real point arising in this case, therefore, is whether the method of accounting employed in respect of the transactions in gold is such that the income, profits and gains can properly be deduced thereform. As to this point, I respectfully submit that the words of the section itself show that it is for the Income-tax Officer, and the Income-tax Officer alone, to decide as a question of fact whether the method of accounting reflects the true profits. This position has been repeatedly maintained by the High Courts in India. The only question of law involved is whether there were materials upon which the Income-tax Officer could find as a fact that the method of accounting employed for the gold transactions did not reflect the true profits."

He then refers to the case in Messrs. Ganga Ram Balmokand v. Commissioner of Income-tax (1), and he goes on to say:

"According to this decision the Income-tax Officer was not bound to accept the profits disclosed by the books, but there was no onus on him to prove that those profits were not the real profits. On the other hand, the burden was on the petitioners to show that those profits were in fact the real profits. This burden was not discharged by the petitioners, as their accounts contained no details as to purchases to enable a check to be made of the purchases shown. There were therefore I submit materials for the Income-tax Officer's finding of fact."

The Commissioner then relies upon the case in Badri Shah v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab (2). In that case also the assessee did business in bullion. The rate of profits as disclosed by their books for the year then in question was 0.19 per cent. which was held to be below the average expectation of profits from such transactions in gold. The income-tax authorities accordingly added a lump sum of Rs. 6,000 as additional profits, and the High Court of Lahore held that there was justification for rejecting the accounts inasmuch as there were no vouchers or other material which would have enabled the authorities to verify the correctness of the accounts. The language of the proviso to s. 13 makes it clear that discretion is vested in the Income-tax Officer; but obviously it was not the intention of the Legislature that such discretion should be arbitrary. We may refer in this connection to a decision of the Privy Council, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency and Aden v. Sarangpur Cotton Manufacturing Co Ltd., Ahmedabad (3). In that case the Assistant Commissioner had expressed the opinion that the discretion which vested in the Income-tax Officer was absolute; but this view was not endorsed by the Judicial Committee. The assessee had a regular method of accounting, and at p. 51* their Lordships say:

"It is the duty of the Income-tax Officer, where there is such a method of accounting, to consider whether the income, profits and gains can properly be deduced thereform, and to proceed according to his judgment on this question. It is clear that the Income-tax Officer acted on the same view as that expressed by the Assistant Commissioner, and did not perform the duty above stated."

In Pioneer Sports Ltd., Sialkot v. Commissioner of Income-tax (4), a Bench of the Lahore High Court observed as follows:

"It is true that it has frequently been held by this Court that the Income tax Officer is the sole arbiter for determining under the proviso to s. 13 how the profits are to be computed. But it is a question of law, into which this Court is entitled to inquire, whether there is any evidence on which the Income-tax Officer could come to the decision that the method of accounting is such that the gains could not be computed except by the arbitrary method contemplated by the proviso. If there was no evidence to justify the Income-tax Officer's rejection of the method of accounting in this case, it is clear that the assessment should have been made under the first part of s. 13 and not under the proviso."

In that case a low rate of profits was revealed by the books of account and there was no stock register, nor had the company ever kept such a register. The Court held that there was no sufficient justification for invoking the proviso to s. 13. This view was not altogether approved by another Bench of the same High Court in Messrs. Ganga Ram-Balmokand v. Commissioner of Income-tax (1), which is one of the cases referred to by the Commissioner. At p. 476* Din Mohammad J., who delivered the judgment, says:

"In Pioneer Sports Ltd., Sialkot v. Commissioner of Income Tax (4), a Division Bench of this Court has held that the mere fact that a company shows a low rate of profit was no reason for the Income-tax Officer to reject the total profits nor was the absence of a stock register, which the company had admittedly never used before, and that the use of the proviso to s. 13 for the purpose of introducing an arbitrary manner of computing the profits was not justified in my view, this judgment proceeds on a wrong basis when it criticises adversely the reasons of the Income-tax Officer for rejecting the accounts Whether the account-books are reliable or not is a question of fact to be determined solely by the Income, tax Officer, and when he gives reasons for doing so, which are not apparently capricious or injudicial-it is not possible to disturb his finding merely on the ground that the material in support of those reasons is meagre or insufficient."

It seems to us that what we have to consider is whether the Income-tax Officer exercised his judgment in arriving at the conclusion that the income, profits and gains were not properly deducible from the assessee's regularly kept books of accounts; if he did exercise his judgment and did not act arbitrarily, then having regard to the language of the proviso, his discretion cannot be interfered with. The first thing that the Income-tax Officer noticed was that the profits from the gold transactions were excessively low. This fact by itself of course would not necessarily prove anything, for there can be no assumption that a sarrafa business must show profits; but it would naturally put the Income-tax Officer upon inquiry as to the reason for the remarkable disparity between these profits and the profits from the transactions in silver. In this connexion he, not unnaturally, took account of the fact that in the previous year also when the gold profits were 2½ per cent., as disclosed by the books, a flat rate had been applied under the proviso and the assessee had submitted to it. There may of course have been various reasons why the assessee chose to submit to that assessment; but there are other considerations also which weighed heavily with the Income-tex Officer. In the assessee's books of account there are no details either as regards the nature of the ornaments purchased or as regards the persons from whom they were purchased, and, therefore, verification as regards the amount and price of gold purchased was impossible. In para. 11 of an affidavit which was sworn on April 5, 1937, the assessee stated:

"The applicant emphatically asserts that, the names of sellers and names of ornaments are never recorded by any dealer of this description in the whole of the province; and in the method of accounting employed by the petitioner such details were never recorded."

There is no counter affidavit and, therefore, we must accept this assertion as correct. But the difficulty remains, and the circumstance that it is not customary to give details of ornaments purchased does not necessarily justify the practice. Moreover, it seems improbable that a sarraf would not keep a separate book or memorandum showing such details, if only to protect himself in the event of a Police inquiry as regards ornaments which might still be in his hands and unmelted. Learned Counsel for the assessee has given us a translation of an extract from his client's account books and it shows, as learned Counsel rightly points out, the weight in tolas and mashas of the ornaments purchased each day and the rate per tola which the assessee paid. But in the absence of details as to the nature of the ornaments and who had owned them, no clue was available as to the amount of gold contained in each such article and no facility was offered for verification as to whether the price paid had or had not been overstated. The Income-tax Officer then went on to consider the state of the gold market. He says:

"I have noted the market conditions and find that the price of gold rose from Rs 31-2-0 in Pus to Rs. 32-2-0 in Magh and Rs. 34-7-0 in Phagun. In the months of Chait and Baisakh there was a slight fall as the price ranged from Rs 33-14-0 to Rs 33-9-0. After this from Jeth onwards the market was steady at the higher rate of Rs. 34-4-0 till Sawan and rose to Rs. 35-1-0 in Asoj. In the last month of Kartik the price of gold was also no less than Rs. 34-10-0. It would thus appear that the market was quite favourable and the assessee must not have only a negligible profit as shown in the books."

The value of the opening stock was

Rs. 9,408. Purchases during the year amounted to Rs. 5,49,694. The extract from the assessee's rokar, to which we have already referred, shows that in the last six months of the year the sales amounted to Rs. 2,48,061-7-6, and learned Counsel for the assessee argues from this that a large proportion (actually less than half) of his purchases were made when gold was dear and. therefore, he incurred a less. Possibly the assessee did not invariably sell at a profit, but for the most part the market had an upward tendency, and it is hardly conceivable that in this favourable state of the market the assessee's profits would have been as law as 0.2 per cent. We may mention here that the basis of the Assistant Commissioner's decision in appeal was that the price of the gold exported to Bombay was not known and that the market was favourable, which shows that he approved the two main grounds on which the Income-tax Officer founded his opinion.

Learned Counsel for the assessee contends that there are certain tests which the Income tax Officer should have applied, but did not apply. One of these we have already mentioned and discussed; it is consideration of the fact that purchases amounting to Rs. 2,48,061 out of Rs. 5,49,694 were made in the second half of the year. We have already said what we have to say in respect to this matter. The other test that the learned Counsel says that the Income-tax-Officer ought to have applied is this: The gold which the assessee send to Bombay was found to contain 5 per cent. of dross and Counsel pleads that the Income-tax Officer should have looked at the books of other sarrafs whose gold had 5 per cent. of dross and, if their profits were very low, there would be no ground for suspicion as regards the books of the assessee. For aught we know to the contrary, the Income-tax Officer may have looked at such books if any such were available he certainly mentions having looked at regular account books of other firms in respect to local sales. But even assuming that 5 per cent. of dross was found in the gold exported to Bombay by other sarrafs and that the Income-tax Officer did not examine such books in respect to sales at Bombay, the fact that the Income-tax Officer omitted to apply a particular test suggested by Counsel will not render his opinion ineffective.

Having given the matter our best consideration, we have arrived at the conclusion that the Income-tax Officer did not act arbitrarily, but exercised his judgment, and that there was material before him which was reasonably capable of supporting the opinion which he formed. In this view of the case he was justified in not accepting the firm's books of account as disclosing the true income, gains and profits of the firm. As regards the second question, what we have to consider is whether the income-tax authorities were justified without giving notice to the assessee, in applying the proviso to the s. 13 in respect to transactions in gold while accepting the books of account in respect to transactions in silver. Notices were issued to the assessee under s. 22 (4) and 23 (2) of the Act and the assessee's munib was specifically questioned in respect to the profits from the gold and silver transactions. There was no obligation on the authorities to serve any other kind of notice upon the assessee and we do not see that he has been in any way prejudiced.

Our answer to the questions referred to us is as follows: (1) In the circumstances of this case the proviso to s. 13 of the Act came into operation. (2) There was no necessity for the income-tax authorities to issue a notice to the assessee before accepting the book profits in respect to transactions in silver and rejecting the same in respect to transactions in gold. A copy of this judgment under the seal of the Court and the signature of the Registrar will be sent to the Commissioner of Income-tax. The assessee will pay the costs of this reference. Counsel for the Department is entitled to a fee of Rs. 200.

VILLAGE PANCHAYAT, SEMRI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

C. P. Village Panchayat Act (V of 1920), ss. 12 (1), 15 (1) (c)—C. P. Local Self-Government Act (IV of 1920), s 20, applicability of, to village panchayat—Panchayat, if can control market—If can levy taxes on shops in market—Reference to District Council, if essential.

Section 23 of the C. P. Local Self-Government Act has no application to the village panchayat.

Section 12 of the C. P. Village Panchayat Act confers a discretionary power on panchayats to undertake the control and administration of certain matters specified in that section. That section does not expressly mention markets but there can be no doubt that holding of a market being a measure of public utility would be a matter falling under the head (1) of s. 12 (1). The contention that the village panchayat cannot undertake control of a market without reference to the District Council must fail for the reason that there is no mention of the District Council in that section and a Court of Law cannot insert that expression when it is not there.

The holding of a market is a measure of a public utility and as such the village panchayat can undertake control and administration of it and be responsible for the arrangement of conservancy and cleanliness and general maintenance of order in the market. Where the panchayat has assumed control of the market by a formal resolution, it has power to levy fees on persons exposing goods for sale in that market under s. 15 (1) (c) with the approval of the District Council.

Mr. K. C. Jain, for the Appellant.

Messrs. R. S. Dabir and K. B. Tare, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal from a differing judgment of the Additional District Judge, Narsinghpore, in Civil Regular Appeal No. 43-A of 1937, decided on March 28, 1938.

The appellant filed the suit out of which this appeal arises against the village Panchayat of Semri Harchand for a decree of premanent injunction restraining the village Panchayat from recovering the market fees from him and for refund of Rs. 16-7-6 already recovered from him under coercive process.

It is common ground that up to 1930 Semri market used to be held on the Hoshangabad-Sohagpore road and that it was removed to its present site which is malguzari plot No. 272 at the instance of the Deputy Commissioner Mr. D. J. N. Lee. The plaintiff admittedly keeps his shop in that market on every Monday when a market is held. His contention is that the village Panchayat, viz., the defendant has no power to impose any tax or levy fees from any person having a shop in the market as the market was held on a site which is the private property of the malguzar. This contention was overruled in the lower Appellate Court. It is urged here that the village Panchayat would have the power to levy fees from the shop-keepers in the market only if the control of the market had been vested in the Panchayat by any notification of the Prov. Govt. as contemplated in s. 23 of the Local Self-Govt, Act. It is further contended that the Panchayat could not under s. 12 (1) of th e Village Panchayat Act, 1920, undertake the control and administration of a private market without the permission of either the District Council or the Prov. Govt. I see no force in these contentions. Section 23 of the Local Self-Govt. Act is altogether irrelevant as it has no application to the village Panchayat. It is because the Contral Provinces Local Self-Govt. Act, 1920, does not directly confer on the District Councils the right of levying fees and tools and of control in any market that it vests the Prov. Govt. with power to confer such rights by means of a notification, but s. 12 of the Village Panchayat Act confers a discretionary power of Panchayats to undertake the control and administration of certain matters specified in that section. That section does not expressly mention markets but there can be no doubt that holding of a market being a measure of public utility would be a matter falling under the head (1) of s. 12 (1). The contention that the village Panchayat cannot undertake control of a market without reference to the District Council must fail for the reason that there is no mention of the District Council in that section and a Court of Law cannot insert that expression when it is not there. In fact there was a provision like what is contended for here in the section as enacted originally but the reference to the District Council was deleted by the C. P. Act IX of 1935.

I have no doubt that the holding of a market is a measure of public utility and as such the village Panchayat could undertake control and administration of it and be responsible for the arrangement of conservancy and cleanliness and general maintenance of order in the market. The Panchayat assumed control of the market by a formal resolution; Ex. D-1. It had, therefore, power to levy fees on persons exposing goods for sale in that market under s. 15 (1) (c) with the approval of the District Council. The procedure as laid down in that section relating to imposition of any tax, toll or fees was followed in this case and no contention is raised in that behalf.

There is no substance in this appeal which is, therefore, dismissed with costs in all Courts.

S. C. A. against the order of the Civil Judge of Sultanpur, dated April 30, 1937.

Mr. Akhtar Husain, holding brief of Mr. Bhagwati Nath, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. N. Chaudhri, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

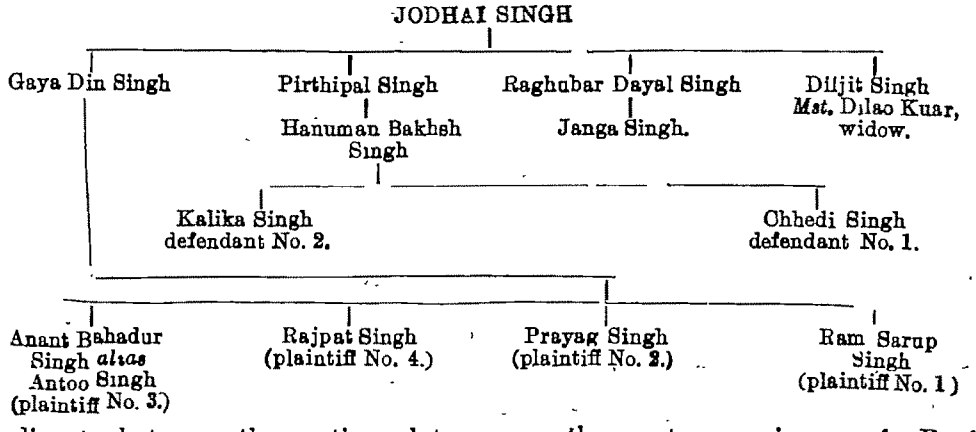
Judgment—This is a second civil appeal against the judgment and decree dated April 30, 1937, passed by the learned Civil Judge of Sultanpur setting aside in first appeal the judgment and decree dated January 22, 1937, passed by the learned Munsif of Amethi at Sultanpur, dismissing the plaintiffs' suit.

The suit was brought by the four sons of one Gaya Din Singh against the two sons of Hanuman Bakhsh Singh who was the son of Pirthipal Singh, brother of Gaya Din Singh, for possession over certain property. The pedigree material to the case is given below:



JODHAI SINGH
Gaya Din Singh
Pirthipal Singh
Raghubar Dayal Singh
Diljit Singh
Mst. Dilao Kuar, widow.
Hanuman Bakhsh Singh
Janga Singh.
Kalika Singh defendant No. 2.
Chhedi Singh defendant No. 1.
Anant Bahadur Singh alias Antoo Singh (plaintiff No. 3.)
Rajpat Singh (plaintiff No. 4.)
Prayag Singh (plaintiff No. 2.)
Ram Sarup Singh (plaintiff No. 1)

The dispute between the parties relates to the property of Raghubar Dayal Singh who died in 1932. His son had predeceased him. There had been a separation amongst the sons of Jodhai Singh, each becoming owner of one-fourth share in his property. On the death of Mst. Dilao Kuar, widow of Daljit Singh who died issueless Raghubar Dayal succeeded to the whole of Daljit Singh's share in the ancestral property as next reversioner, his brothers Gaya Din Singh and Pirthipal Singh being dead at that time. Raghubar Dayal Singh thus became the owner of a half share in the ancestral property. In addition he had acquired some other property. It is not disputed that the plaintiffs are the next reversioners of Raghubar Dayal Singh, and as such would be entitled to the whole of his property if no valid disposition of his property otherwise had been made by Raghubar Dayal Singh. It was on this basis that the suit was brought by the four sons of Gaya Din Singh, mutation having been effected on the death of Raghubar Dayal Singh in respect of a half share in the property in the names of the defendants Kalika Singh and Chhedi Singh. A copy of the order of the Assistant Collector in the mutation case is on the record. It shows that the case came before him on the basis of succession, and that the parties, namely, the four plaintiffs on the one side and the two defendants on the other, were in possession in equal shares. Mutation was accordingly ordered on the basis of possession.

The defendants' case was that Raghubar Dayal Singh executed a will in 1928 providing that after his death the plaintiffs and the defendants should be owners in equal shares. Subsequently on October 17, 1929, he executed a registered deed of gift to the same effect. The defendants obtained possession on the basis of this deed of gift, and, therefore, the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief.

A replication was filed by the plaintiffs to the effect that they had no knowledge about the execution of this deed of gift, and if any deed of gift were proved they did not accept it; it had not been acted upon and no right accrued to the defendants under it. During the proceedings of the case, however, the plaintiffs' Counsel admitted the genuineness of the deed of gift, Ex. A-10, on which the defendants relied.

The Munsif found that Raghubar Dayal Singh had executed the will as alleged in 1928, but the original will was not produced, only a copy, and the document had not been registered. The loss of the original was not proved and the copy could not, therefore, be admitted in evidence. Moreover the Munsif thought that the deed of gift amounted to a revocation of the will.

The Munsif found that under the deed of gift the plaintiffs and the defendants were each given a moiety in the property of Raghubar Dayal Singh, and they took possession accordingly during his life time. On this finding he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

In first appeal the Civil Judge apparently accepted the finding that the will had not been proved, and thereafter considered certain arguments put forward with regard to the deed of gift. Unfortunately he has referred in numerous places in his judgment to the will where apparently he intended to refer to the deed of gift. We take it, however, that he found that the will was invalid and that the deed of gift was valid. He agreed with the Munsif that the defendants were entitled to the property gifted to them by Raghubar Dayal Singh, but did not agree with him that Raghubar Dayal Singh had gifted his property to the parties in equal shares, that is, a half share to the four plaintiffs and the other half share to the two defendants. He observed that according to the deed of gift the donor gave his property to these six persons without indicating that he was giving a half share to the first four and the other half share to the other two. He could find no justification for the Munsif's construction that the donor was gifting his property per stirpes. In his opinion, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the gift must be taken to have been made per capita. He accordingly held that the plaintiffs were entitled to a two-thirds share and the defendants to a one-third share in the property gifted.

The Civil Judge then considered a matter which had been brought to his notice namely, that the deed of gift did not include all the property in dispute, certain khatas being omitted. He thought, however, that these khatas were shamilat khatas the ownership of which would go with the ownership of the parent khatas. There was, however, another Khata No 229 of Keshopur which was not a shamilat khata and which was not included in the deed of gift. Consequently the defendants were not entitled to possession of any portion of this khata, and the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for possession of a half share in it, being already in possession of the other half.

The Civil Judge accordingly allowed the appeal of the plaintiffs in his Court, awarding them a decree for possession of a one-sixth share in respect of the entire property in dispute except as regards Khata No. 229 of Keshopur in which they were given a decree for possession to the extent of a half share. The Civil Judge did not, however, express himself at all clearly, for he first said that he gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession of a one-sixth share in respect of the entire property in dispute, and added afterwards that he gave them a decree for possession to the extent of half share in Khata No. 229. We, have, however, no doubt that he intended to award a decree for possession of one-sixth share in the property in dispute excluding the property in Khata No. 229 of Keshopur in respect of which he awarded a decree for possession to the extent of a half share.

This second appeal has been preferred by the defendants Chhedi Singh and Kalika Singh. The grounds of appeal suggest that they rely rather on the will than on the deed of gift. The reason for this is clearly that under the will they were expressly entitled to a half share in the property, while the deed if gift, considered by itself, indicates rather that it was intended to give them only a third share. At the same time it was urged in one of the grounds of appeal that as the possession of the parties was in accordance with the deed of gift, the lower Appellate Court was in error in holding that the gift must be taken to have been per capita. It was also contended by the appellant that s. 233-K of the Land Revenue Act was applicable to the facts of the case, and that the plaintiffs should not have been awarded a half share in Khata No. 229 of Keshopur.

Cross-objections were filed by the respondents contended that they should have been given a larger share in certain khatas which were not included in the deed of gift.

The principal question that arises for determination in this case is whether upon a construction of Ex. A-10 the deed of gift, the donor intended that the donees mentioned therein should take per stirpes as contended for on behalf of the defendants-appellants or per capita as contended for on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents. The learned Munsif accepted the contention of the defendants, while the learned Civil Judge has accepted the contention of the plaintiffs. We have carefully considered the language of the deed of gift and we have no doubt whatever that the construction placed upon the deed by the lower Appellate Court is perfectly justified and must be maintained. It is well-settled that the cardinal rule of construction of deeds is to ascertain the intention of the donor as disclosed from the language used in the deed. It is also a well-understood rule of construction that such intention should be effectuated so far and as nearly as may be consistent with the law to which the donor was subject. It is clear from the circumstances that had the donor died without making any disposition of his property by a gift inter vivos, the plaintiffs alone would have been entitled to inherit his property to the exclusion of the defendants, inasmuch as under the Hindu Law the plaintiffs, who are nephews of Raghubar Dayal, would come in preference to the defendants who are the grandsons of another brother of Raghubar Dayal. It may be taken for granted that by executing the deed of gift and including the defendants therein as objects of his bounty in conjunction with the plaintiffs the donor wanted to avoid the exclusion of the defendants which would have inevitably resulted had he not chosen to make a gift. There is, however, no rational ground for thinking that the donor would wish to divide his property between the descendants of his two brothers per stirpes and not allow them to take a share equally. Under the Hindu Law persons of the same relationship to the deceased take per capita, that is, the estate of the deceased is divided into as many shares as the number of heirs, each heir taking one share, and the exception is confined only to two cases of sons, grandsons and great-grandsons of a deceased male Hindu on partition, and to sons' sons, daughters' sons and daughters' daughters succeeding to stridhan (vide Mulla's Hindu Law, p. 24, 1940 Edition). Even if the defendants had been of the same relationship to the deceased as the plaintiffs, namely, that if they had been also nephews instead of being grand nephews, they would not have been entitled to take per stirpes under the Hindu Law. There is, therefore, no good ground for holding, in the absence of any special indication in the deed of gift itself, that the donor intended the plaintiffs and the defendants to take per stirpes and not per capita. If the donor did really intend to divide the property per stirpes upon the parties, there was nothing to prevent him from expressing that intention in clear and unambiguous words. We are, therefore, of opinion that the contention advanced on behalf of the defendante-appellants has no substance and must be rejected.

The learned Munsif on this part of the case observes :

"Further it is clear from the sworn testimony of D. W. No. 1 that half of the property was gifted in favour of the plaintiffs and the other half was gifted in favour of the defendants. Exhibit A-4 which is the report of the Naib Tahsildar also shows that the plaintiffs and the defendants were in possession of half of the property of Raghubar Dayal Singh each during the lifetime of Raghubar Dayal Singh."

It has been urged on behalf of the defendants-appellants in this Court that the evidence of D. W. No. 1 and the conduct of the parties as evidenced by Ex. A-4 should be taken into consideration in interpreting the deed of gift. As regards the evidence of D. W. No. 1, we have no doubt whatever that that evidence is clearly excluded from consideration in view of the provisions of s. 92 of the Indian Evi. Act. As regards the conduct of the parties, namely the possession of the property half and half by the plaintiffs and defendants during the lifetime of the donor, we are of opinion that as against the plain construction of the deed of gift which we have adopted, the so-called conduct—assuming that it were admissible to take it into consideration—affords no reliable or strong indication that such possession was in pursuance of the deed of gift or with the consent of the plaintiffs. Exhibit A-4 is the report of the Naib Tahsildar made to the Sub-Divisional Officer and Ex. 10 is the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer. It appears from both these documents that the application for mutation was made by the defendants upon the basis of succession and no claim was made on the basis of the deed of gift. The Naib Tahsildar reported that the parties were in possession of the property half and half and they were also the legal heirs of the deceased. The Sub-Divisional Officer agreeing with his report ordered mutation on the ground of possession. If the plaintiffs did not dispute the right of the defendants to a mutation of half the property in their favour on the ground that the deed of gift awarded the property to them half and half, it was scarcely necessary to go into the question of possession or legal heirship to the deceased. The very fact that evidence was recorded itself shows that the plaintiffs must have contested the right of the defendants to mutation of half of the property, although there are no other documents on the record to show what the position precisely was.

In this view of the matter it is not necessary to consider whether the conduct of parties as shown by their possession of property half and half during the lifetime of the donor and after his death is admissible for the purpose of construing the deed of gift. We are nevertheless of opinion that where the language of the deed is clear and free from ambiguity, as in the present case, any consideration of the conduct of the parties with a view to ascertaining the intention of the grantor or the donor is beside the point. Reference may be made in this connection to 34 Halsbury's Laws of England, p. 165, para. 217, where it is stated that "extrinsic evidence is not to be resorted to except for the purpose of proving a fact which makes intelligible something in the will which without the aid of such evidence, would not be intelligible."

In the leading case of Balkishen Das v. Legg (L. R. 27 I. A., 58), (1), it was laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that oral evidence of intention is inadmissible for the purpose either of construing the deeds or of proving the intention of the parties: see s. 92 of the Indian Evi. Act, 1872. It was observed by Lord Davey:

"The cases in the English Court of Chancery which were referred to by the learned Judges in the High Court have not, in the opinion of their Lordships, any application to the law of India as laid down in the Acts of the Indian Legislature. The case must therefore be decided on a consideration of the contents of the documents themselves, with such extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances as may be required to shew in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts."

These observations were made in an appeal from the Allahabad High Court and the question involved was whether the deed in question was a mortgage by conditional sale or an out and out sale with a condition of repurchase.

This view was confirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe La (L. R. 44 I. A., 236) (2).

In Baraboni Coal Concern Co., Ltd. v. Servitors and Shabaits of Sree Sree Gopinath Jiu (L. R. 61 I. A., 35) (3), the question was whether in a mining lease executed by four shebaits of a family deity of the idol's interest in a village, one of them could alone maintain a suit against the lessee for a fourth share in the royalties reserved. Their Lordships answered the question in the negative. It was contended that the conduct of parties, after the lease was signed, in accordance with which each lessor for a time accepted separate payments of royalties, controls the stipulations in the lease, and vouches an agreement between parties to vary its terms. Their Lordships rejected the contention and observed:

"The facts do not support it. Nay, more: it sins against the familiar principle affirmed in the case of the North Eastern Railway Co. v. Hastings (4), that where the words in a deed are clear, as they are in this case, the subsequent conduct of parties is an irrelevant consideration".

In a case decided by the Allahabad High Court in Mst. Dhanpatti v. Badri Singh (A. I. R. 1935 Allahabad, 729) (5), it was held relying upon the authority of decisions in L. R 27 I. A., 58, (1) and L. R. 44 I. A., 236, (2), that so far as the interpretation of a document is concerned the subsequent conduct of the parties cannot be taken into account.

It is not necessary to multiply authorities on the point. Reference has, however, been made on behalf of the defendants-appellants to 1. Ma Thaung v. Ma Than (I. L. R. 51 Cal., 374 P. C.=L. R. 51 I. A., 1) (6). 2. Hanif-un-nisa v. Faiz-un-nisa (L. R. 38 I. A., 85) (7). 3. Gangaram v. Mst. Kanchanbai (A. I. R. 1932 Madras, 689) (10), 6. Aya Ram v. Rup Chand (1937 O. W. N. 1084. P. C. (11).

It was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ma Thaung v. Ma Than (I. L. R. 51 Cal. 374 at 382) (6), that "the conduct of the parties to a contract reduced into writing may not vary or alter it, but their conduct may help to explain or elucidate a contract open to different meanings", but the question in the present case is whether the document is open to different meanings.

In Hanif-un-nissa v. Faiz-un-nisa (L. R. 38 I. A., 85) (7), their Lordships held that under s. 92 of the Indian Evi. Act extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that a deed which was in form a deed of sale with a receipt for the consideration was in reality intended to operate as a deed of gift. In this case the Allahabad High Court had held that the defendants were precluded by s. 92 from giving such evidence, considering that it was evidence "to vary a deed the language of which is plain and unambiguous". Their Lordships merely observed that the decree appealed from could not be sustained and remitted the case to the High Court to be dealt with on the evidence.

The cases of Gangaram v. Mst. Kanchanbai (A. I. R. 1936 Nagpur, 168) (8), Narayan Sakharam Patil v. Co-operative Central Bank, Malkapur (A. I. R. 1938 Nagpur, 434) (9) and Appa v. Kachai Bayyan Kutti (A. I. R. 1932 Madras, 689) (10), do not take us much further, as they merely lay down that where an ambiguous document is to be construed the Court is not confined to the narrow limits of its uncertain terms: it has to look wider and view the surrounding circumstances and gather the intention from the subsequent conduct and acts of the parties.

In Aya Ram v. Rup Chand (1937 O. W. N. 1084, P. C.) (11), the question was whether the sale of certain land 'with external and internal rights' included the shamilat or village common land of which at the date of sale no division had been effected. Their Lordships held upon a construction of the language of the sale deed that the words "external and internal rights for ever" were quite appropriate to include a right in respect of the shamilat land and observed :—"There could be no more emphatic words of divestiture". No doubt in the concluding portion of their judgment their Lordships expressed agreement with the view taken in Shahamad v. Ibrahim (57 P. R., 1915) (12), that the conduct of the vendor in quitting the village and showing no more interest in the property might be regarded as an important indication of the intention and they added,

"In their Lordships' opinion regard may be had to such considerations in construing the unsophisticated conveyancing of which the deed before them is an example and to which it would be unreasonable to apply the rigid canons of interpretation appropriate to the finished products of Lincoln's Inn."

We are of opinion that the aforesaid observations must be read in the light of the facts and circumstances of the particular case decided by their Lordships.

The above case, therefore, does not advance the case of the defendant-appellants at all.

The ground of appeal taken by the appellants with regard to s. 233-K of the Land Revenue Act was not pressed by their Counsel.

The position in regard to the property which was not expressly the subject of the deed of gift is not at all clear. The appellants argued in their seventh ground of appeal that a half share in Khata No. 229 of Keshopur had been decreed arbitrarily to the respondents while the respondents claimed that they should have been given a larger share in the property in certain khatas which were not included in the deed of gift. Learned Counsel were not able to throw much light on these points. Apparently the mutation order related to the whole property of Raghubar Dayal, although the deed of gift did not expressly do so. Certain khatas are not referred to in the deed of gift, and the lower Appellate Court, as already noted, thought that these were shamilat khatas which would go with the parent khatas which were included in the deed of gift. We do not, however, know what the parent khatas were, and Counsel have not been able to say. We consider that in these circumstances the burden lay on the respondents to show that the mutation entry was wrong, and we are unable to find that they have succeeded in doing so. The position, however, with regard to Khata No. 229 of Keshopur does seem to be different in that this khata is neither mentioned in the deed of gift nor is it a shamilat khata. It apparently stands by itself and we are unable to see how the defendants-appellants could have obtained it by virtue of the deed of gift. We think, therefore, that so far as this khata is also concerned, the decree of the Civil Judge must be upheld.

The result is that we maintain the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal and the cross-objections with costs.

SIND CHIEF COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 34 of 1940

August 30, 1940

DAVIS, C. J.

SANOO MANAJI—APPELLANT

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 297, 441—S. 297, whether to be interpreted by reference to s. 441—Meaning and scope of "trespass" in s. 297—S. 297, if limited to religious feelings—Feelings contemplated by it are limited by reference to place of worship on sepulture—Whether refers to intention only—Accused held committed trespass—Criminal trial—Evidence—Statements by persons not called as witnesses—Court, if bound to accept their statement because case is criminal.

Section 297, I. P. C., fully deals with offences to which it refers and is self-contained and requires interpretation by no reference to s. 441, I. P. C. The word "trespass" in s. 297, I. P. C., means any violent or injurious act committed in such place and with such knowledge or intent as defined in that section. Section 297, I. P. C., does not refer to "religious feelings," though the kind of feelings, which comes within the section is clearly limited in its nature by the second paragraph to the section by reference to a place of worship, to a place of sepulture, to feelings of a spiritual nature than a material kind, feelings associated with such sacred places. It does not punish acts which are merely of earthly vanity or pride. That s. 297, is not limited to feelings of a religious nature is clear by the fact that in s. 298, which follows it, "religious feelings" are expressly referred to, Section 297, does not refer only to "intention". It refers also to trespass which is likely to wound the feelings. [p. 617, cols. 1 & 2.]

The complainant erected stones in memory over his dead daughter and two children, over their ashes in the cremation ground. The complainant's son-in-law, eleven years after the death of his wife as a result of a dispute about money matters with the complainant went to the cremation ground and deleted the name of the complainant from all the stones on the ground that they were erected out of money provided by him:

Held, that on the evidence and circumstances of the case the accused's (son-in-law's) trespass was committed with something more than knowledge; it was committed with intent to wound the feelings of the complainant. It was done in a spirit of spite and vindictiveness, and it was by injuring the complainant's feelings that the accused's feelings of spite and vindictiveness had to be satisfied. This was not a case where the feelings which were wounded were merely worldly feelings of vanity and pride. The fact that the stones were erected out of the money provided by the accused did not give him the right to enter the cremation ground and delete the name of the complainant therfrom. [p. 619, col 1.]

The Court is not bound to accept statements made by persons who were not called as witnesses merely because the case is a criminal one. [p. 618, col. 2.]

Cr. A. against conviction and sentence passed by the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, dated March 5, 1940.

Messrs. Gopaldas and N. Lalla, for the Appellant.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against a judgment of the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, who convicted the appellant Sanoo, a Police constable, of an offence under s. 297, I. P. C., but instead of sentending him to imprisonment directed him to be released on his entering into a bond of Rs. 300 with one surety for twelve months to keep the peace and be of good behaviour under s. 562, Criminal P. C. I admitted this appeal though no substantive sentence of imprisonment and no fine had been imposed because the section was a section which does not often come before the Courts, and because there was not much authority as to its interpretation. But even now I have been referred to only three cases; the principal case is reported in Jhulan Sain v. Emperor (1), which is followed by the Rangoon High Court judgment in Mustan v. Emperor (2), while there is a third judgment of the Allahabad High Court reported in Queen-Empress v. Subban (3) and which was prior in time to the Calcutta judgment. There is a case of the Bombay High Court, but this is an unreported case, and I see no reason to refer further to it, which differs from the Calcutta case and takes the view that trespass under s. 297, I. P. C., has the same meaning as criminal trespass under s. 441, I. P. C.

But after having heard arguments upon this point, I am quite satisfied that s. 297, I. P. C., is a section which fully deals with offences to which it refers and is self-contained and requires interpretation by no reference to s. 441, I. P. C., and I would say at once that I agree, with all respect, with the view of Richardson, J. in Jhulan Sain v. Emperor (1), that "trespass" in s. 297, I. P. C., appears to mean any violent or injurious act committed in such place and with such knowledge or intent as defined in that section. Further, it is to be noted that s. 297, I. P. C., does not refer to "religious feelings," though the kind of feelings, if I may use the phrase, which comes within the section is clearly limited in its nature by the second paragraph to the section by reference to a place of worship, to a place of sepulture, to feelings of a spiritual nature than a material kind, feelings associated with such sacred places.

(1) 40 C 548; 18 Ind. Cas. 677; 14 Cr. L J 117; 17 C W N 534.

(3) 18 A 395; A W N 1896, 119.

It does not, as the learned Advocate for the appellant, I think, rightly contends, punish acts which are merely of earthly vanity or pride. But that s. 297, I. P. C., is not limited to feelings of a religious nature is, I think, clear by the fact that in s. 298, I. P. C., which follows it, "religious feelings" are expressly referred to. Further, while the learned Advocate for the appellant has based his case upon the argument that there was no intention on the part of the appellant to wound the feelings of the complainant s. 297, I. P. C., does not refer only to 'intention." It refers also to trespass which is likely to wound the feelings. It will however make the matter clearer if the section is cited, and the section is as follows :

"297.—Whoever with the intention of wounding the feelings at any person, or of insulting the religion of any person, or with the knowledge that the feelings of any person are likely to be wounded, or that the religion of any person is likely to be insulted thereby, commits any trespass in any place of worship or on any place of sepulture, or any place set apart for the performance of funeral rites or as a depository for the remains of the dead, or offers any indignity to any human corpse, or causes disturbance to any persons assembled for the performance of funeral ceremonies, shall be punished...."

Now, the facts of this case are that the appellant, one Sanoo, was married to one Aushabai, daughter of the complainant. The appellant himself does not in his statement say when he was married to Aushabai. The complainant says that it was about sixteen years before he gave evidence; but the exact date is not of much importance, and there is no reason to doubt the complainant's word when he said that his daughter died about eleven years ago, and thereafter he erected in her memory in the cremation ground a stone over her ashes and stones over the ashes of his two children who had also died, and the appellant admits that he went to the cremation ground, and there is no reason to doubt the accuracy of the date given by the complainant, November 15, 1939, and deleted the name of the complainant from the stone in memory of his wife and two other stones in memory of the complainant's children. The appellant said in his statement he did this because he had given month after month his salary to the complainant, it was his money that was spent on the stones and not the complainant's money : therefore, the complainant had no right to have engraved upon these stones the words "Built by Eknath Sakaram", and therefore his Advocate says that in assertion of his rights the appellant went and deleted the name of Eknath Sakaram from all three stones. In any case if this act did not fall within s. 207, I. P. C. it would apper to mean a despicable act arising, as it clearly does, from a dispute about money matters between the appellant and the complainant who was his father-in-law. It appears from the evidence of one Babu, the secretary of the Daxni Mahratta Panch, that the complainant on Decembar 11, 1936, sent an application asking the Panchayat to be summoned so that he might obtain money due from the appellant himself. He gave details of his claim which amounted to Rs. 2,056. The appellant in his reply stated that from 1924 to 1931 he had paid the complainant month by month Rs. 30 and paid him also other money. He had in fact paid him Rs. 3,335, of which Rs. 1,985 had been spent and properly spent by the complainant and he, the appellent, should receive the balance of Rs. 1,350. There was also a dispute about ornaments and this dispute the Panchayat could not decide.

The learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that the appellant's contention that he paid Rs. 30 month after month to the complainant and that these stones were built with his money could not be believed. He relied upon the evidence of one Haridas a pujari, who lives near Eknath, the complainant, who lives in one of the tenements in the mandir belonging to Marhattas and who knows something of the way of life of the complainant and his family, to prove that the appellant and his wife, the complainant's daughter, did not live always with the complainant, but as might be supposed, lived from time to time in the Police quarters. The Magistrate has rejected, as he was entitled to reject, the evidence of Mohandas, whom he describes as a discharged pujari and a discontented man of this temple. The learned Advocate for the appellant has drawn my attention to the evidence of La Fransis, a sergeant in the Karachi Police to support the defence contention that he lived with his wife in the house of the complainant and gave him all or nearly all his pay. He also argues that the complainant could not on Rs. 80 a month support without the assistance of the appellant's money two wives, two daughters, a brother's wife and a son and himself. But as he paid only Rs. 11 a month rent, I see no reason why he should not decently support these women and these children out of this money; and even if the appellant did for some time or from time to time with his wife, the daughter of the complainant, live and mess with the complainant and paid him from time to time money, the messing charges, that does not appear to me to give him the right to enter the cremation ground and delete in a vindictive spirit, and because of his quarrel about money, the name of the complainant from the three stones. The Magistrate says that he did not believe the appellant's contention that the stones were erected at his expense. It is said on behalf of the appellant that he could not be expected to prove this, but it would appear to me that if he had some real and just grievance in the matter, he would not have allowed the matter to rest for eleven years since the death of his wife, and that if he did not enter this cremation ground in the vindicative spirit, that it was not his intention to wound the feelings of the complainant, he would long before this have given notice to the complainant that his name should be deleted from the stones of his wife and children which were built and erected with the appellant's money.

It is said that if the appellant desired to wound the feelings of the complainant he would not have gone openly to this cremation ground and in the presence of a keeper deleted these names from the stones. The keeper of the cremation ground was not called as a witness and I do not know whether the appellant did or did not under the keeper's eyes mutilate these stones in this manner. Antarsing is mentioned as a chowkidar or watchman of the cremation ground in the evidence of Eknath, and Eknath says that he prohibited the appellant from doing this but the appelalnt insisted that he would do this and enter his name in the book. I can see no reason, merely because this is a criminal case and certain facts were admitted, why I should accept statements made by persons who were not called as witnesses. But I do not think it makes any difference to the case whether the apdellant did do this in spite of Antarsing's prohibition. It cannot be expected that a chowkidar would enter into a brawl with this Police constable in this sacred place.

It might be said that if it could be proved that there was not the intention of the appellant to wound the complainant's feelings, but merely to assert his rights, and that merely because as a result of such assertion the feelings of the complainant were wounded, the offence under s. 297, I. P. C. would not have been committted. Section 297, I. P. C. refers to something more than an intention: it refers to trespass committed with the knowledge that feelings of any person are likely to be wounded. But I am satisfied that the evidence and the circumstances in this case show, that the appellant's trespass was committed with something more than knowledge; it was committed with intent to wound the feelings of the complainant. It was done in a spirit of spite and vindictiveness, and it was by injuring the complainant's feelings that the appellant's feelings of spite and vindictiveness had to be satisfied. This is not a case where the feelings which were wounded are merely worldly feelings of vanity and pride. It appears to me therefore that the conviction was perfectly proper and all the essential conditions for an offence under s. 297, I. P. C. have been proved. The trespass and deletion of the names from the three stones or their disfiguration was never denied. The third condition, that of intention, within the meaning of s. 297, I. P. C. has, in my opinion, been fully proved. The sentence errs, if anything, on the side of leniency. The appellant should, I think, consider himself fortunate that he has been so leniently dealt with. The appeal therefore is dismissed.

Special Second Appeal No. 87 of 1940

DUNKLEY, J.

MA KALEMA AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

MA KYAING AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 7—Applicability to agreements made during execution proceedings—Minor seeking to avoid compromise voidable at his instance—Compromise must be declared void against all parties to compromise.

Execution proceedings are a continuance of the suit, and O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil P. C., is applicable to an agreement or compromise made in the course of proceedings for the execution of the decree obtained in the suit.

It is clear from the provisions of sub-r. (2) of r. 7, O. XXXII, that when a minor desires to avoid a compromise, which is voidable at his instance, it is voidable against all parties, and therefore must be declared void against all parties and not against some of them only. 34 Ind. Cas. 213 (1) and 186 Ind. Cas. 72 (2), explained.

Sp. S. A. against the decree of the District court, Pyapon, dated December 8, 1939.

Mr. A. H. Paul, for the Appellants.

U Tha Kin, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The suit out of which this second appeal arises was a suit by the plaintiffs-respondents against the defendants-appellants and one U Pan On for a declaration that a compromise effected between person named U On Pe and U Pan On in Civil Execution Case No. 27 of 1935 of the Assistant District Court of Pyapon was void. U Pan On is not a party to this present appeal. He has not appealed against the judgment and decree of the District Court of Pyapon on first appeal, which decreed the suit against him and the two appellants. The two appellants and respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are the heirs of one U Tha Maung. Ma Kyaing, respondent: No. 1, is the mother of the other respondents In a suit for the administration of the estate of U Tha Maung, she acted as the next friend of the other three respondents who were all minors at that time. A decree was obtained in connexion with that administration suit against U Pan On for a sum of Rs. 6,750, being the rent of a rice mill. The decree was obtained by the Receiver of the estate, and after it had been obtained it was transferred by him to the appellants and respondents jointly. Ma Kyaing had no personal interest in this decree and she is not really a proper party to the present proceedings. After the decree had been transferred to them, the appellants and Ma Kyaing executed a power-of-attorney in favour of one U On Pe so that he could execute the decree on their behalf. U On Pe obtained a transfer of the decree to the Assistant District Court of Pyapon and applied in that Court for execution thereof. In November 1934, Ma Kyaing cancelled the power-of-attorney which she had given to U On Pe and, therefore, from that stage onwards he had no authority to act as the agent of the next friend of the other three respondents. However, in spite of Ma Kyaing having cancelled his power, U On Pe filed a fresh execution application in Civil Execution Case No. 27 of 1935 of the Assistant District Court of Pyapon and in that application, which is signed by U On Pe and the appellant Maung Than only, U On Pe did not give any description of his status or state what was his right to execute the decree on behalf of the other decree-holders. Unfortunately, the learned Assistant District Judge held no enquiry whatever into this important point and did not question the status of U On Pe.

In first appeal the learned District Judge, in the course of a long and discursive judgment, which contains several unfortunate clerical errors, has discussed this question of U On Pe's status in Civil Execution Case No. 27 of 1935 of the Assistant District Court of Pyapon at great length, but it is quite unnecessary, for the purpose of the point for decision in these proceedings, to come to any definite decision regarding the status of U On Pe in those execution proceedings, and it may be accepted that, so far as respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were concerned, he was acting as their next friend. At the same time as the execution application was filed, U On Pe and U Pan On presented to the Court a joint petition for the compromise of the decree, and in this petition U On Pe described himself as the agent of the decree-holders. This compromise was recorded and in furtherance thereof a registered security bond was executed by U Pan On and certain sureties. This is the compromise which is called in question in the present proceedings. The orders of the Assistant District Court in regard to the matter are as follows:

"September 24, 1935. A joint application is filed by the parties praying that a settlement in terms of the said application be recorded in the case. A security bound is executed. Let it be registered. Put up registered bond on September 26, 1935.

September 26, 1935. Bond duly registered. Case closed. Enter non-satisfaction."

Hence the learned Assistant District Judge recorded this compromise without any enquiry as to whether the compromise was for the benefit of the minor decree-holders or not, and in so doing contravened the provisions of O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil P. C. As I have said, the most favourable view of U On Pe's status, as representing the respondents in regard to this compromise, was that he acted as the next friend of the three respondents who were minors at the time; and r. 7 of O. 32 reads as follows:

"(1) No next friend or guardian for the suit shall without the leave of the Court, expressly recorded in the proceedings, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor with reference to the suit in which he acts as next friend or guardian.

(2) Any such argument or compromise entered into without the leave of the Court so recorded shall be voidable against all parties other than the minor."

Execution proceedings are a continuance of the suit, and O. XXXII, r. 7, is applicable to an agreement or compromise made in the course of proceedings for the execution of the decree obtained in the suit. The compromise now in question was recorded without the leave of the Court, and no such leave was expressly recorded in the proceedings. Hence there was a contravention of sub-r. (1) of r. 7, and consequently, under sub-r. (2) the compromise is voidable against all parties other than the minors. The learned Advocate for the appellants admits that this compromise must be declared void so far as the respondents are concerned, by reason of sub-r. (2) of r. 7, but he argues that the appellants still support this compromise, and that, therefore it should not be set aside so far as they are concerned. He urges that sub-r. (2) of r. 7 has no application to the adult parties to such a compromise and he refers in support of his argument to the cases of Jama Bai Saheb Mohitai Avergal v. Vasanta Rao Ananda Rao (1) and Somorendra Nath v. Ashutosh Ray (2). But the proposition laid down in these cases is not the proposition for which learned Counsel for the appellants contends: in fact, these cases lay down that it is only the minor who has the right to avoid such a compromise, and that the adult parties have no right to avoid it on the ground that the necessary leave of the Court has not been obtained. That proposition is undoubtedly correct, but it is clear from the provisions of sub r. (2) of r. 7 that when a minor desires to avoid a compromise, which is voidable at his instance, it is voidable against all parties, and therefore, the appellants cannot now be permitted to act on the compromise, which must be declared to be void against them. This is the decision at which the learned District Judge on first appeal arrived, though on somewhat different grounds. The result, therefore, is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, Advocate's fee five gold mohurs. The decree of the District Court also contains a clerical error, copied from the judgment.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision Application No. 278 of 1940

September 23, 1940

BROOMFIELD AND WASSOODEW, JJ.

DR. H. L. BATLIWALLA SONS & CO., LTD. AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED—APPLICANTS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 73 — Strict construction —Burden to establish infringement of law is on prosecution —"Outside the office" in s. 73 (a), if mean outside premises—S. 73, object.

Section 73 of the Companies Act, being a penal provision has to be construed strictly, and therefore the burden is very strongly on the prosecution, to show that there really has been an infringement of the law and that in circumstances in the case a meaning must be given to the section which is not the literal one.

By s. 73 the Legislature desired to make the company itself continually bring to the notice of those who dealt or might deal with it the fact that it was limited. The section has nothing to do with advertising the whereabouts of a company or affording facilities to members of the public in finding its place of business. The requirements of the Act would be satisfied by a board of the necessary conspicuousness and legibility outside the office room inside the building in which it is situated. It cannot be held that when an office is situated within a compound the law requires the name of the company to be painted or affixed outside the compound as well as outside the office. The words "outside the office" in s. 73 (a) do not mean outside the premises.

Cr. R. App. from the conviction and sentence passed by the Presidency Magistrate, Fourth Court, Girgaum, Bombay.

Messrs. G. O'Gorman and J. C. Tarapore, for the Applicants.

Messrs. H. Coyajee and V.N. Chhatrapati, for the Complainant.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Broomfield, J.—This revision application involves a question of the construction of s. 73 (a), Companies Act. The applicants are (1) Dr. H. L. Batliwala Sons & Co., a limited company, which manufactures and sells a patent medicine called Batiwala Ague Mixture, (2) Kaikobad Cawashaw Batiwalla, who is one of the directors of this company. They have been prosecuted for an alleged contravention of s. 73 (a), Companies Act, which requires that every limited company shall paint or affix, and keep painted or affixed, its name on the outside of every office or place in which its business is carried on, in a conspicuous position, in letters easily legible and in English characters. The complaint was that on the first three days of September 1937, this company had not got its name painted or affixed outside its office or place of business as required by the section, and the learned Presidency Magistrate has found this proved as a fact and has convicted the applicants under s. 74 (1) of the Act which makes the contravention of s. 73 penal, and imposed sentences of fine. The firm in question is a family firm. The complainant in the case is a member of the family. It appears that he has had disputes with the directors of the company for some time, and so far as the facts of the case are concerned, it is a purely private quarrel of no general importance. The point of law involved is, however, of some importance to companies generally.

The office of the company is situated in a bungalow at Worli which is surrounded by a compound. The office is on the first floor. There are two entrance gates to the compound. At one of these gates there is a board bearing the name of the bungalow "Saklat Villa," but no board bearing the name of the company. It was disputed whether there was a board bearing the company's name at the other gate of the compound, which was on the north. The accused alleged that there was such a board and called evidence to prove it. The learned Magistrate, while apparently prepared to accept the view that there normally was a board at that gate, has found that on these particular days in September 1937, there was no board there. On behalf of the complainant, it is now contended that the evidence showed that there was no board anywhere on these three particular days. The learned Magistrate in the course of his judgment says that he visited the premises on December 14, 1939. He was then shown a board on one of the pillars of the north gate of the compound, i. e., the board which, as I say, he has found was not in existence at that place on the relevant dates. He also says that he was taken upstairs to the landing of the upper story of the bungalow where the office room is located and on the wall opposite the landing he found a small board, as he describes it, with the words "Dr. H. L. Batiwalla Sons & Co. Ltd." This board was fixed in such a manner that it would be visible to anyone who goes up the staircase but would not be visible from the road. The board was two feet by one foot and the largest capital letters were two and a half inches, the others about one inch.

A perusal of the very long and careful judgment of the learned Magistrate points to the conclusion that the question between the parties was as to the existence of the board at the northern gate of the compound and as to whether it was necessary that there should be a board at one of the compound gates in order to comply with the terms of s. 73. Elsewhere in the judgment the learned Magistrate says: "I may add that the fact that there has been a board inside on the first floor landing does not help the defence." The reason he gives for this finding is that the whole bungalow and the compound constitute the company's premises, and on the view he took of the construction of s. 73, it was necessary that there should be a board outside the premises and not merely outside the office room situated in a bungalow in the comrpound. There is nothing in the whole of the judgment to suggest, as far as we can see, that it was seriously argued before him, or at any rate that he found as a fact, that the board, the nature of which I have described was not in existence on the relevant dates outside the office room. The question for our consideration therefore is whether this board was a sufficient compliance with s. 73 or whether that section requires that the company should have maintained a board with its name outside one or other of the compound gates. In the view we take the requirements of the section are satisfied by the board outside the office room.

The learned Magistrate's view is that "outside the office" in s. 73 (a) means outside the premises. But that is not what the section says. According to the literal meaning of the words used there has been no contravention of the section. It is a penal provision and has to be construed strictly, and therefore the burden is very strongly on the prosecution, i. e., the opponents in this application to show that there really has been an infringement of the law and that in circumstances such as those existing in this case a meaning must be given to the section which is not the literal one. The learned Magistrate's reason for holding that the words "outside the office or place where the business is carried on" mean outside the premises or in this particular case outside the compound seems to be that in the absence of a board outside there would be a difficulty or might be a difficulty in finding one's way to the office. That is to say, he takes the object of this provision to be to require that companies should advertise their whereabouts and assist members of the public to find their way to the office of the company. There does not however appear to be anything in the Act to suggest that that is the object, and no authority of any kind has been cited in that connection. On the other hand, in Palmer's Company Law (at p. 261 of the fifteenth edition) the learned commentator in dealing with the corresponding sections of the English Companies Act gives the object of this provision as something quite different. He says:

"Why this solicitude on the part of the Legislature as to the publication of a company's name? The answer is, that the Legislature, whilst allowing limited liability, desired by this means to make the company itself continually bring to the notice of those who dealt or might deal with it the fact that it was limited. This policy it has fortified by pecuniary penalties."

According to that view at any rate—and in our opinion, that is at least as likely to be the correct view as that now put forward on behalf of the prosecution—s. 73, has nothing to do with advertising the whereabouts of a company or affording facilities to members of the public in finding its place of business. It is well known that in most cities there are large buildings which contain a considerable number of offices of companies and it might be extremely inconvenient if the law required that boards bearing the names of these various companies should be affixed or that the names should be painted outside the building. We think that in such a case clearly the requirements of the Act would be satisfied by a board of the necessary conspicuousness and legibility outside the office room inside the building. No doubt, in the present case, the company owns the whole of the premises, but we do not consider that that makes any difference in principle, and we are not prepared to hold that when an office is situated within a compound the law requires the name of the company to be painted or affixed outside the compound as well as outside the office.

Our attention was drawn to evidence that was given in the case to show that certain persons who desired to enter the compound were prevented from doing so or obstructed in doing so by a watchman maintained by the company. We do not consider however that this fact has anything to do with the construction of s. 73 (a). The learned Magistrate has not found and we do not think that it could have been found that the board outside the office room did not comply with the section in respect of conspicuousness and legibility. It was not a large board nor were the letters on it very large. But the Magistrate said that it would be visible to anyone who gets up to the landing where the office is situated. The letters were obviously large enough to be read with ease and the board seems to have been sufficiently conspicuous. In our opinion, the law does not require anything more than this. This being our view of the construction of s. 73 (a), we are of opinion that the conviction under s. 74 cannot be sustained. We therefore make the rule absolute, set aside the convictions and direct that the fines be refunded.

S. Rule made absolute.

Usurious Loans Act (X of 1918), as amended by C. P. Amendment Act (XI of 1934), s 3—Suit instituted after amendment in respect of transactions prior to amendment—Amendment, if applies—Court, if bound to re-open such transactions if interest is excessive.

The provisions of the Usurious Loans Act as amended by the Central Provinces Amendment of 1934 will apply to a suit instituted long after the amendment came into force but in which transactions of dates prior to the amendment are called in question and sought to be re-opened on the only ground that interest is excessive within the meaning of the amendment. Consequently the Court is bound to re-open the transactions if it finds that interest alone is excessive as defined in the amendment. 169 Ind. Cas. 832 (2) and 179 Ind. Cas. 129 (3), distinguished. S. A. No. 479 of 1936 S. A. No. 43 of 1937 and C. R. No. 832 of 1937 relied on. [p. 625, col. 1.]

C. R. App. for revision of the order of the Court of the Small Causes, Bilaspur, dated February 6, 1939.

Mr. N. T. Mangalmurti, for the Applicants.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The defendant borrowed a sum of Rs. 600 from the plaintiffs on October 4, 1930, and executed a bond for the same agreeing to re-pay it with interest at Rs. 1-12-0 per cent. per mensem. He borrowed a sum of Rs. 600 against on November 17, 1930, and executed a fresh bond for the same agreeing to repay it with interest at 2 per cent. per mensem. The defendant's case is that he re-paid Rs. 163 on May 27, 1931, Rs. 400 on May 4, 1932, and Rs. 200 on September 7, 1932, total Rs. 763. An account of what was due on the two bonds was made on March 15, 1933, and it was found that an amount of Rs. 1,014 was still due. The defendant paid Rs. 474 in cash on March 15, 1933, and executed a fresh bond in favour of the plaintiffs for the balance, viz. Rs. 540. This amount of Rs. 540 was agreed to be repaid with interest at Rs. 1-12-0 per cent. per mensem on June 27, 1934. Towards this bond also the defendant repaid Rs. 471-15 0 in two instalments of Rs 221-15 0 and Rs. 250 on July 22, 1936, and October 10, 1936, respectively. The plaintiffs, however, instituted the present suit on November 27, 1938, for Rs. 622-8-0 as the balance still due to them after giving credit for repayments.

The defendant claimed a re-opening of the accounts between the parties on the ground that the interest was excessive and stated that by reason of the provisions of the Reduction of Interest Act the plaintiffs were not entitled to interest at more than 10 per cent. per annum from January 1, 1932. He wanted the accounts to be recast and pleaded that the plaintiffs' claim may come to Rs. 110-14-0. The applicability of the Usurious Loans Act as amended in 1934 in C. P. was not expressly pleaded. The plaintiffs did not agree to the re-opening of the accounts pleading that the Reduction of Interest Act did not permit this. They agreed to a reduction of interest at 10 per cent. per annum from the date, of bond, dated March 15, 1933.

The Court below agreeing with the plaintiffs did not re-open the transactions but reduced the interest at 10 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond in suit dated March 15, 1933, and decreed the claim for Rs. 300 and made the same payable by instalments. The defendant feeling himself aggrieved by this decision has filed the present revision application in this Court.

The main contention raised before me is that not only the provisions of the Reduction of Interest Act but the provisions of the Usurious Loans Act as amended by the Central Provinces Amendment Act of 1934, applied to the facts of the case and the Court was bound to re-open the transactions and allow only a reasonable rate of interest upto January 1, 1932, from which date under the provisions of Interest Act, interest at the reduced rate of 10 per cent. per annum will be applicable. It is contended that the Usurious Loans Act as amended in C. P. in 1934 casts a duty on the Court to grant relief to the debtor by re-opening the transactions in suits to which the Act applied if interest is shown to be excessive and interest above the rate of Re. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem in case of an unsecured loan is deemed to be excessive. Reliance was placed on Bajirao v. Kesar Bai (1) and Gulabdas v. Bahirmal (2) and also on observations in Nilkanthrao v. Vishwanath, Second Appeal No. 479 of 1936, Asaram v. Shrawan Second Appeal No. 43 of 1937, and Kesheorao v. Damodhar, Civil Revision No. 832 of 1937. The plaintiffs, however, relied on Bhagwant Rao v. Damodhar (3), and argued that the Central Provinces Amendment of 1934, will affect transactions entered into after the amendment came into force in 1934 and did not permit the Court to re-open transactions already effected before the Amendment came into force. What their Lordships meant to lay down in Bhagwant Rao v. Damodhar (3), does not appear to have been properly stated in the head-note of the case as reported. Their Lordships were dealing with a suit instituted and closed by a judgment followed by a preliminary decree before the amendment of 1934 came into force and stated with reference to such a case that amendment could not be held to apply retrospectively. There are no doubt observations in the body of the judgment which has led to a wrong head-note which runs as under:

"Acts which have the effect of impairing contracts and affect vesting rights must be strictly construed and in interpreting such laws the Courts must lean against giving retrospective effect to their provisions.

Unless there is something in the language of an Act showing a contrary intention, the duty and the practice of the Courts of justice is to presume that the Act is prospective and not retrospective.

Kerr v. Marquis of Ailsa (4), Gardner v. Lucas (5), Colonial Sugar Refining Co. Ltd. v. Irving (6), Sardar Ali v. Doliluddin (7) and Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. v. Income-tax Commissioner, Delhi (8), followed.

Section 2 of the Usurious Act (X of 1918), as amended by the Usurious Loans (Central Provinces Amendment) Act, 1934, is not retrospective in operation so as to enable the Court to exercise the wider power to re-open loan transactions made before June 15, 1934."

It is this head-note which is relied on by the plaintiffs and on the basis of this note it is argued that the Court cannot re-open transactions entered into before the Act of 1934 and as the bond in suit is of the year 1933 and the two previous bonds are of 1930 the transactions cannot be re-opened. The observations of their Lordships in Bhagwant Rao v. Damodhar (3), were, however, made with reference to a case instituted in 1931 and the preliminary decree wherein was passed on February 19, 1934, i.e., both these events had occurred before the amendment. The Appellate Court was examining this decree after the amendment came into force and it was decided that the mere fact that the decree comes to be examined after the Act was passed would not enable the Court to apply the amendment which came into force on June 15, 1934. See p. 97* of the report. Their Lordships made this clear when they stated their conclusion at p. 100* as under:—

"Applying the principles expressed in the above cases, we are of the opinion that s. 2 (a) of the amending Act XI of 1934 is not retrospective in operation so as to enable the Court to exercise the wider power to re-open loan transactions made before June 15, 1934, at any rate when the amount due under such a loan has become the subject-matter of a litigation instituted before that date."

The words underlined (here italicised) have not been reproduced in the head-note of the case with the result that it has been possible to argue that the Act is not retrospective and loan transactions before the amendment came into force cannot be re-opened even in a suit instituted after the amendment came into force. Reading the ruling carefully it is clear to me that it was only with a view to demonstrate properly that the amendment of 1934 which came into force in June 1934, will not affect transactions which had already formed the subject-matter of litigation before the amendment that the Court entered upon an elaborate discussion about the retrospective nature of a legislation and not with a view to say that transaction entered into before the amendment of 1934 will not be liable to be re-opened in suits instituted after the amendment came into force though the Act with the amendment applied to them.

My attention is invited to an unpublished decision of the Divisional Bench Mst. Begabai v. Tarachand, First Appeal No. 13 of 1936, decided on December 8, 1939, and it was argued that the view taken in Bhagwant Rao v. Damodhar (3), was adhered to in this case and it was expressly stated that Gulabdas v. Bahirmal (2), which is a ruling to the contrary was overruled.

Mst. Begabai v. Tarachand, First Appeal No. 13 of 1936, decided on December 8, 1939, was again a case in which the suit was instituted in 1932 and it was with reference to such a suit that the observations were made. Ruling to the contrary in Gulabdas v. Bahirmal (2), which was stated to be overruled laid down that the amendment of 1934 was applicable to suits pending on the date of the amendment. This view taken in Gulabdas v. Bahirmal (2), was declared as overruled. Pollock, J. in Gulabdas v. Bahirmal (2) and in Vishwanath v. Janardhan (9), had taken the view that from the date on which the amendment came into force Courts were bound to take note of it and apply it even to pending litigation if the facts of the case warranted the application with a view to afford relief to the debtor. All that has been done by Bhagwant Rao v. Damodhar (3), is to overrule this view and substitute in its place the rule that the amendment will not affect suits instituted before the amendment came into force and in such suits transactions will not be re-opened unless the conditions laid down in the Usurious Loans Act as it originally stood in 1918 are complied with.

The point that I have to decide is whether the provisions of the Usurious Loans Act as amended by the Central Provinces Amendment of 1934 will apply to a suit instituted long after the amendment came into force but in which transactions of dates prior to the amendment are called in question and sought to be re-opened on the only ground that interest is excessive within the meaning of the amendment.

The ruling in Bhagwant Rao v. Damodhar (3), does not apply to the facts of the present case nor does the case fall within the category of the cases referred in Gulabdas v. Bahirmal (2). It may be that the view taken in Bhagwant Rao v. Damodhar (3), is open to doubt as was argued before me but as I am not dealing with a suit instituted the amendment of 1934 nor with a case pending on the date on which the amendment came into force but with a suit instituted long after the amendment came into force, I do not think it necessary to pursue this subject further.

It is, however, argued before me that transactions entered into between the parties when the Usurious Loans Act of 1918 without the amendment was in force will be governed by the provisions of the said Act and in cases of such transactions the debtor will have to show that not only the interest was excessive but that the transaction was substantially unfair and even in such a case the Court is not bound to re-open the transaction but may do so if the circumstances so require. It is further argued that the amendment of 1934 must be given effect to only from the date on which it came into force and will affect only transactions entered into after that date. In this view of the case it is contended that the fact that the suit was instituted after the amendment came into force is not of any significance. It is in support of this proposition that observations in Bhagwant Rao v. Damodhar (3), are again relied on.

I have already stated that the entire discussion in Bhagwant Rao v. Damodhar (3), regarding the retrospective and pr spective nature of legislation was intended to state forcibly the view that the amendment will not affect suits already instituted or decided before the amendment came into force. Every legislation is ordinarily prospective and unless there is something in the legislation itself to indicate that it was intended to affect past transactions, it will not so affect. The law governing the case is the Usurious Loans Act of 1918 and under s. 2 (3) thereof suit to which the Act applies means any suit for the recovery of a loan made after the commencement of this Act (of 1918), or for the enforcement of any security taken or any agreement, whether by way of settlement of account or otherwise, made after the commencement of this Act, in respect of any loan made either before or after the commcement of this Act, or for the redemption of any security given after the commcement of this Act. This definition of suit has not been amended by the Central Provinces Amendment Act. The Central Provinces Amendment Act (XI of 1934) only amended s. 3 and the effect of the amendment is that in Central Provinces on and after June 15, 1934, in respect of suits to which the Usurious Loans Act of 1918 applied a debtor is entitled to ask for a relief on the simple ground that the interest is excessive and that it is not necessary to prove in addition to the excessive nature of the interest that the transaction was substantially unfair as he was required to prove under the Act as it stood before the amendment. The amendment went further and laid down that interest in excess of Rs. 1-8 0 per cent. per mensem on unsecured debts and 1 per cent. per mensem on secured debts will be deemed to be excessive. One more change brought about by the amendment is that a duty is enjoined on the Court to exercise all or any of the powers mentioned in s. 3 in any suit to which the Act applies whether heard ex parte or otherwise. The word 'may' was substituted by the word 'shall.'

Even under the original Act of 1918 if the conditions in s. 3 were complied with, the Courts were empowered to exercise all or any of the powers mentioned in s. 3 and the only restrictions imposed on them were:—

that the Courts shall not—

(i) re-open any agreement purporting to close previous dealings and to create a new obligation which has been entered into by the parties or any persons from whom they claim at a date more than twelve years from the date of the transaction;

(ii) do anything which affects any decree of a Court. Subject to these two restrictions very wide powers of re-opening past transactions were conferred on the Courts.

The Central Provinces amendment, as shown already, went further and it not only enabled but required the Court to exercise the powers conferred by s. 3 only on the ground that interest was excessive as explained in the amendment. I am clearly of opinion that inasmuch as the original Act itself contained provisions which indicated that transactions entered into within 12 years of the transaction in dispute in a suit to which the Act applied were to be affected by it and inasmuch as the Central Provinces Amendment of 1934 did not in any way curtail that power, transaction before the year 1934 could be re-opened if the Act read with the amendment applied to the transaction.

The present suit is certainly one for recovery of a loan made after the commencement of the Usurious Loans Act of 1918, as the loans were advanced in 1930 and renewed in 1933. The suit for recovery of this loan was instituted long after the Central Provinces Amendment of 1934 had come into force. The Act as amended does apply to the facts of the case. The Court is, therefore, bound to re-open the transactions if it finds that interest alone is excessive as defined in the amendment. The ruling in Bhagwant Rao v. Damodhar (3), does not apply as it related to a suit instituted before the amendment came into force. This ruling nowhere lays down that in a suit instituted after the amendment came into force transactions before the date of amendment will not be questioned and tested with reference to the amendment. It only says that suits pending on the date of the amendment will be governed by the Usurious Loans Act as it originally stood.

I am fortified in my view by the observations of Niyogi, J. in Nilkanthrao v. Vishwanath, Second Appeal No. 479 of 1936 decided on November 2, 1938, Asaram v. Shrawan, Second Appeal No. 43 of 1937, decided on December 21, 1938, and of Gruer, J. in Kesheorao v. Damodar, Civil Revision No. 832 of 1937, dated August 24, 1938. All these were suits instituted after the amendment came into force, in which transactions before the amendment were re-opened simply on the ground that interest was excessive within the meaning of the terms as defined in the amendment. I hold that inasmuch as interest at a rate exceeding Re. 1-8 0 per cent. per mensem is mentioned in the bonds of 1930 and as the bond of 1933 is in suit, and inasmuch as the suit was one instituted in 1938, the transactions in suit are such to which the Usurious Loans Act, 1918 as amended by Central Provinces Act XI of 1934 applies and the Court shall exercise all or any of the powers mentioned in s. 3 of the Usurious Loans Act. As the lower Court has not done this, the case has to be remanded.

The Court was also wrong in not charging interest at 10 per cent. per mensem from January 1, 1932 as required by the Reduction of Interest Act which was then in force. The Court in its judgment stated that it could not find out the principal due on January 1, 1932, and the Reduction of Interest Act did not say that a transaction closed after January 1, 1932, should be re-opened. This is a wrong reasoning. The Reduction of Interest Act s. 3 clearly lays down that notwithstanding any contract to the contrary interest shall not be recoverable from any debtor on a debt incurred by him whether before or after the passing of this Act in respect of any period between January 1, 1932, and such other date as the Provincial Govt. by notification appoint, save at the rate shown in the schedule. Though a fresh bond was executed by the defendant in 1933, it was with respect to debt already incurred in 1930 and the Court could have ascertained the principal due on January 1, 1932, and granted the debtor a relief. I set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case for a fresh trial and decision with advertence to my observations in this decision. Costs will be costs in the case. The trial Court in deciding the case will take into consideration the fact that the defendant had admitted plaintiff's claim to the extent of Rs. 110-14-0.

Before closing I must state that at one time during the hearing I thought that I ought to refer the matter and request the Hon'ble the Chief Justice to have the points raised in this case decided by a Full Bench but on reconsideration I thought that as the ruling in Bhagwant Rao v. Damodhar (3), did not stand in the way of granting the relief to the defendant and that as the ruling did not go further than laying down that pending suits were not to be affected by the amendment and as the head-note of the case was somewhat misleading, the purpose will be served by making the position clear in this judgment. Under the circumstances I declined to make a reference. It may be made in another suitable case.

Criminal Revision No. 157 of 1940
January 23, 1941
BENNETT, J.
PADAM SINGH—APPLICANT
KING-EMPEROR—COMPLAINANT—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 514, 537—Forfeiture of security bond — Failure to record grounds of proof—No prejudice to surety nor failure of justice—Defect is curable—Security bond for keeping peace—Person under recognizance convicted—Forfeiture proceedings, whether must be started by same Court and at time of conviction—Forfeiture proceedings, if must be started before expiry of period of bond.

Where in proceedings for the forfeiture of the security bonds the Magistrate holds for good and justifiable reasons that the bonds had been forfeited but fails to record the grounds of proof as required by s. 514, Criminal P. C, such an omission is merely an irregularity curable under s. 537 when the surety is not prejudiced thereby and no failure of justice has occasioned. 184 Ind Cas 742 (3), relied on. 67 Ind. Cas. 830 (1) and 122 Ind. Cas. 532 (2), dissented from.

It is not necessary that proceedings for the forfeiture of the security bond for keeping peace should be taken only by the Court which convicts the person under recognizance and at the time of the conviction. 18 Ind. Cas. 403 (4), not followed. Emperor v. Raja Ram (5) and 92 Ind. Cas. 742 (6), relied on.

The proceedings for the forfeiture of a bond for keeping the peace need not be commenced before the expiry of the period for which the bond was given. [p. 629, col. 2.]

Cr. R. of the order of the Sessions Judge of Unao, dated October 21, 1940.

Mr. Akhlaque Husain, for the Applicant.

The Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision against the order of the learned Sessions Judge of Unao summarily dismissing an application in revision against an order passed by the District Magistrate of Unao modifying an order forfeiting certain security bonds passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Unao.

The order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, dated April 12, 1940, shows that three persons, namely Bachani, Ganga Bishun and Suraj Bakhsh Singh, were required to furnish security under s. 117 (3) of the Criminal P. C., on November 20, 1937, pending the completion of an enquiry under sub-s. (1) of that section. Each of them executed a bond for Rs. 1,000, and the present applicant Padam Singh stood surety for each of them in this amount.

It is stated that during the proceedings against these three persons under s. 107 a man named Sundar Lal was murdered by them and that they were all convicted under s. 302 of the I. P. C. Bachani is said to have been hanged, and the other two to have been either transported or sentenced to imprisonment. Learned Counsel for the applicant states that the conviction of the other two was not under s. 302, but it is so stated in the Magistrate's order. It is not disputed that they were all found guilty of an offence involving a breach of the peace. No action was taken at the time for the forfeiture of the bonds. The Magistrate before whom the proceedings under s. 107 were pending considered after Sunder Lal's murder that no purpose would be served by continuing the proceedings and he accordingly passed an order quashing them, meaning by this, I understand, that he was not going on with them further. The case against the three men for the murder of Sunder Lal pending at the date of this final order on March 21, 1938, in the s 107 case. Bachani, Ganga Bishun and Suraj Bakhsh Singh are said to have been convicted on November 19, 1938.

Proceedings for the forfeiture of the bonds were taken on an application by the brother of the murdered man made on August 31, 1939. The question of taking action for the forfeiture of these bonds had apparently not been considered previously. The application was ordered to be put up with the connected file, that is the file under s. 107 and notice was issued to Padam Singh on February 24, 1940. This notice contained full details of the bonds and the reasons why Padam Singh was being called upon to show cause why they should not be forfeited.

Padam Singh put forward three grounds against the forfeiture of the bonds, none of which has been pressed in this application in revision. The first was that he was not liable because he had filed an application under the Encumbered Estates Act. The Magistrate was clearly justified in holding that this did not protect him. Secondly it was contended that the bonds had not been stamped at the time of execution. The Magistrate observed that the court-fee stamps had been supplied after execution of the bonds and that this could not make the bonds invalid. Thirdly Padam Singh said that he did not understand the meaning of the bonds. The Magistrate disbelieved this, and there has been no contention to the contrary in this Court.

A number of legal points have, however, been put forward on behalf of the applicant. It is sought to show that there were legal defects in the procedure which invalidated the order. Before considering these objections it should be mentioned that there was an appeal to the District Magistrate against the order requiring Padam Singh to pay Rs. 3,000, that is, Rs. 1,000 in respect of each of the bonds forfeited, and that the District Magistrate reduced the amount from Rs. 3,000 to Rs. 2,000, taking into consideration his financial position.

The first contention advanced on behalf of the applicant is that no action could be taken under s. 117 (3) because the previous proceedings in the case under s. 107 had been quashed by the final order in those proceedings passed on March 21, 1938. I do not think that there is any force in this contention. The Magistrate did not by his order cancel those proceedings altogether. He merely terminated them. He did not and he could not pass an order setting them aside as if they had never been taken

Secondly it has been contended that the forfeiture of the bonds is invalid because there was no preliminary enquiry or order under s. 514 of the Criminal P. C This section provides that when it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court by which a bond under the Code has been taken that such bond has been forfeited, the Court shall record the grounds of such proof and may call upon any person bound by such bond to pay penalty thereof, or to show cause why it should not be paid. In the present case the Magistrate did not record the grounds of proof that the bonds had been forfeited. He sent for the record of the case under s. 107 and satisfied himself from it that proceedings in that case had been dropped because Bachani, Ganga Bishun and Suraj Bakhsh Singh were being prosecuted for the murder of Sunder Lal, committed while those proceedings were pending. Probably, though the record does not show this, he had also before him some evidence to show that they had all been convicted in this case. There is no reason for holding in these circumstances that the Magistrate was not justified in thinking that the bonds had been forfeited, and the only question for consideration is whether the subsequent proceedings were vitiated by his omission to record the grounds for coming to this conclusion. On this point I have been referred to two rulings of the Patna High Court. In the first, Thakur Kishan Narain Singh v. King-Emperor (A. I. R 1922 Patna, 242) (1), it was held that where there has been a failure to carry out the express provisions of s. 514, the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in failing to record proof before he issued notice to show cause and the proceedings should be set aside on this ground. The judgment in the case mentions that the petitioners had been in no way prejudiced by the procedure adopted, and the learned Judge only allowed the application because there had been a failure to carry out the express provisions of the law with the result that in his opinion the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction.

In the second case, Zulmi Kahar v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1929 Patna, 643) (2), it was held that the proper course for a Magistrate proceeding to pass an order under s. 514 is to come to a finding based on some evidence that the bail bond executed by the surety has been duly forfeited, and then only to issue a notice to show cause why the penalty should not be realised from him.

It cannot be said in the present case that the Magistrate had no evidence before him that the surety bonds had been forfeited. He had at least before him the record of the proceedings under s. 107 which showed why those proceedings had been dropped.

With all respect for the authorities relied upon I am unable to agree, that in the present case the proceeding was vitiated by the failure of the Magistrate to record his reasons for coming to a prima facie conclusion that the bonds had been forfeited. He had clearly good reasons to think that they had been forfeited; this is not disputed. When Padam Singh appeared before him he did not dispute the facts stated in the notice which was issued to him, that is that he had stood surety for these persons and that these persons had been found guilty of an offence involving a breach of the peace during the pendency of the proceedings against them under s. 107. The objections which are now being raised were not raised by Padam Singh when notice was issued to him. He did not object to the procedure nor did he dispute the facts. The applicant not being prejudiced and the omission to record the grounds of proof not occasioning a failure of justice, the defect in the procedure was merely an irregularity of the kind referred to in s. 537 of the Criminal P. C. In support of this view I would refer to a ruling of a Bench of this Court in Emperor v. Abdul (1939 O. W. N. 960) (3), where a similar contention that a conviction under the Motor Vehicles Act was invalidated by a defect in the summons was rejected.

I do not consider that the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction merely because he failed to record the reasons for holding that notice should be issued to the applicant.

Thirdly, it is contended that proceedings for the forfeiture of a bond can be taken only by the Court which convicts the person who was furnished the bond at the time of his conviction. In support of this contention reference was made to the case of Emperor v. Mawaz (18 Ind. Cas. 403) (4). This was a Full Bench case of the Punjab Chief Court.

The headnote reads:

"If, in convicting a person of a offence involving the forfeiture of a bond for keeping the peace, a Magistrate, who has knowledge of the fact that the person before him has, by his conduct, forfeited his bond, does not make any order for forfeiture he must be taken to have decided not to take action on the bond in respect of that particular breach of the peace, and he cannot thereafter reconsider and add to his order by directing forfeiture of the recognizance".

To the contrary effect is a ruling of the Allahabad High Court, in Emperor v. Raja Ram (1. L. R. 26 Allahabad 202 (5), where it was held that the mere fact that no immediate action under s. 514 of the Criminal P. C., is taken against a person under recognizances to keep the peace, or against his surety, on the conviction of the former of an offence involving a breach of the peace is no bar to the taking of such proceedings at a subsequent time.

Similarly in a case of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind, Jeomal v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1926 Sind, 180) (6) it was held that there is no objection to a Magistrate proceeding to take steps to forfeit the recognizance, although he had omitted to do so at the time of the conviction of the person concerned.

It has also been argued that the proceedings should have been started while the interim order was in force. No direct authority has been referred to in support of the argument, and I am clearly of opinion that there is no force in it. In an other Allahabad case Emperor v. Uma Dait Misir (I. L. R. 44 All. 657) (7), it was held that where proceedings for the forfeiture of a bond for keeping the peace have been commenced before the expiry of the period for which the bond was given, the fact that such period has expired is no bar to their continuance. It was sought from this ruling to argue that proceedings should have been started before the expiry of the period, but I do not consider that this conclusion is warranted.

It has further been argued that action should not have been taken in the present case against Padam Singh at the instance of a private person who was merely interested in gratifying his spite against him. But action was not taken by the Magistrate with this object. The brother of the murdered man brought to his notice the fact that no action had been taken to forfeit the bonds and the Magistrate presumably considered that it was in the public interest that such action should be taken, the matter previously having overlooked.

Lastly, it has been argued that the amount which Padam Singh has been required to pay is very large and that it will bear hardly on him as he is already financially embarrassed. The District Magistrate took his financial position into consideration in reducing the amount from Rs. 3,000 to Rs. 2,000 and I see no reason to reduce it further.

I can find no good ground therefore for interfering with the order passed and I dismiss this application.

Hindu Law — Adoption — Adoption by widow on death of her adopted son—Estate vested in her as heir of deceased adopted son, if divested.

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Mayavaram, in A. S. No. 42 of 1936.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer and C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The subject-matter of this appeal is part of the property admittedly left by one Venkatachala Pillai who died in May 1890. At that time Venkatachala Pillai was a young man, married to defendant No. 1 who was shortly expecting a child. She was delivered of a still born female child in July. It is not now seriously disputed that shortly before he died Venkatachala Pillai orally authorized his wife to make an adoption in case the child she was expecting should prove to be a girl. On February 9, 1891 defendant No. 1 adopted one Pichai Pillai who lived to become a major, but shortly afterwards (in February 1907) was murdered while still unmarried. In 1922 defendant No. 1 executed Ex. W, by which the estate which had originally belonged to Venkatachala Pillai and was then in her hands, was divided into two portions, the larger half being retained by defendant No. 1 and the smaller conveyed to Muthukumara Pillai, the nearest reversioner. In May 1926 defendant No. 1 made a second adoption to her deceased husband, the person chosen as adopted son being the plaintiff who happens to be the natural son of the man who was convicted and hanged for the murder of Pichai Pillai. In 1934 plaintiff filed the present suit for recovery of the property conveyed to Muthukumara Pillai and his principal opponent is defendant No. 2, Muthukumara Pillai's widow. The suit has been decreed by both Courts below and defendant No. 2 has filed this second appeal. The first point taken in the appeal is to contend that the adoption of plaintiff is invalid. It is so contended on two grounds: (i) that defendant No. 1's motive in making the adoption was a corrupt one. It is asserted that she adopted plaintiff only because she had been living in criminal intimacy with his father; and (ii) that the authority to adopt given by Venkatachala Pillai was confined to the adoption of Pichai Pillai. I have had to disallow any argument on the first ground. The intimacy was found against as a fact by the first Court, and the Subordinate Judge's judgment shows that no attempt whatever was made before him to challenge that finding.

The second ground also seems to me to be equally barred by the provisions of s. 100. No doubt there is no precise finding of the exact words used by Venkatachala Pillai in conferring the authority upon his wife, and two views are certainly possible on an examination of some of the exhibits filed in the case which refer to the authority (see Ex. B, Ex. G and Ex. J); but the learned Subordinate Judge has definitely found that Venkatachala Pillai's intention was to confer a general power of adoption on his wife and that he 'simply indicated preference' for Pichai Pillai. This finding, it seems to me, is unquestionably a finding of fact with which I cannot interfere in second appeal. The second point taken in the appeal, however, is equally undoubtedly one of law. It relates to the effect of plaintiff's adoption upon the title to the subject-matter of this suit. The argument is put in this way: When Pichai Pillai died defendant No. 1 succeeded to his estate in her capacity as his adoptive mother. Plaintiff's relationship to Pichai Pillai is that of brother. Of the two relations, defendant No. 1 and plaintiff, defendant No. 1 is the preferential heir. Her estate cannot therefore be divested by the adoption, and must continue till she dies. So long as she is alive defendant No. 2, whose title is good for her lifetime, cannot be dispossessed.

Now, if one considers this matter solely from the point of view of the devolution of property this argument would appear to be unanswerable; but unfortunately for the appellant, the authorities in this matter are almost uniformly against her. The only direct authority in her favour is found in Gobindo Nath Roy v. Ram Kandy Chowdhry (1), a judgment delivered so long ago as 1875. Against her is a direct authority in Rai Jatindranath v. Amritlal (2), followed in Hamed Gazi v. Sadat Ali (3), and also the opinion of Mayne in para. 197 of Edn. X, of his Hindu Law, where it is stated that

"Where on the death of an aurasa or adopted son the estate which has descended to him from his father vests in his mother as heir, and she makes an adoption to her deceased husband, it is well-settled that the estate so vested in her will be divested."

The principle of this, according to Mayne, is either that the mother elects to hold the property as her husband's property when she exercises her power of adoption or that the title of the adopted son relating back to his father's death is the necessary legal result of the power to substitute another son for the deceased. I need now refer only briefly to other cases which have been cited before me by the appellant's learned Advocate. They are Subramania Chettiar v. Somasundaram Chettiar (4), Amarendra Man Singh v. Sanatan Singh (5), and Radha Bai v. Rajaram (6). The first of these is a case in which it was found that though a custom amongst Natukottai Chetties permitted the adoption of a second son even when the first adopted son had died leaving a widow that adoption did not affect the rights of that widow to the estate. The facts there are thus different and there is no direct pronouncement by the learned Judges which could be applied to the present facts. Amarendra Man Singh v. Sanatan Singh (5), is a judgment of the Privy Council in which the question at issue was the right to succeed to an impartible estate. The rival claimants were an adopted son, who was adopted after the death of a natural son who had survived his father, and a reversioner who claimed to be next in succession to the natural son. The reversioner's suit was dismissed by the Privy Council. This case affords no support to the view that the devolution of this property was unaffected by the adoption—and is of little assistance either way as no woman could ever be entitled to the property. Radha Bai v. Rajaram (6), again deals with quite different facts. The widow who made the adoption in that case, was the widow of a man who never himself had any exclusive title to the property in dispute. Her adoption therefore could obviously never affect the devolution of her property which descended to her only through her husband's brother. In the result I see no reason at all to interfere with the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs. Leave granted.

Mir Ahmad, J—Jwala Singh died leaving a widow Mst. Jasodan Devi, and a son Mela Ram. Mela Ram was married to Mst. Manoran Devi also known as Mst. Rameshro Devi. Jwala Singh left a house. On January 8, 1932, Mela Ram mortgaged this house to Mst Ram Ditti for Rs. 1,000. He then mortgaged the house to one Hari Chand on January 5, 1933, for Rs. 3,000. Mela Ram paid off Rs. 1 000 due to Mst. Ram Ditti out of this amount. Mela Ram died and so did Hari Chand. Jai Gopal, the grandson of Hari Chand, obtained a decree for sale of the property under O. XXXIV, Civil P. C. Musammat Jasodan Devi brought this suit for a declaration that she had a right of residence and of maintenance in the house. The Counsel for Mst. Jasodan Devi has admitted before us that what he meant in the plaint was that this house should be sold subject to his client's rights of residence and maintenance. The defence taken was that the debt was incurred for legal necessity and that the rights of residence and maintenance could not therefore be claimed in the encumbered property, It was also pleaded that Mst. Jasodan Devi was estopped by her conduct from claiming the rights of residence and maintenance because she had witnessed the mortgage deed. The following issues were framed by the trial Judge:

"1. Is the plaintiff not entitled to right of residence and maintenance in the house in question? On defendants.
2. Is the plaintiff estopped from bringing this suit by her own conduct? On defendants.
3. Can the suit not lie in its present form, and is not properly stamped? On defendants.
4. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled? On defendants."

Hari Chand, the scribe of the mortgage deed, definitely stated that the two ladies signed the mortgage deed in his presence. They were identified by Mela Ram to be his mother, Mst. Jasodan Devi, and his wife Mst. Manoran Devi. The witness read out the contents of the documents to them. Amir Chand, a marginal witness, deposed that he was the broker who arranged the transaction, that Hari Chand, mortgagee, told Mela Ram to get his mother and wife to sign the mortgage deed and that they did so in his presence. Pandit Rup Chand averred that the mother of Mela Ram did not observe pardah from him and the witness was certain that the two ladies who signed the mortgage deed were Mst. Jasodan Devi and the wife of Mela Ram. Musammat Jasodan Devi appeared in Court and the last sentence she uttered was that she had not signed the document. Counsel for Jai Gopal presented a petition to the trial Judge, after the statement of Mst. Jasodan Devi had been recorded, that the thumb impression of Mst. Jasodan Devi on the mortgage deed should be sent to Phillaur for comparison with her admitted thumb mark. This application was rejected. The trial Judge found that the woman had a right of residence; that the debt was not contracted for legal necessity and that her thumb impression on the mortgage deed did not estop her, because the Privy Council had laid down in the ruling reported in Pandurang Krishnaji v. M. Tukaram (1) that mere attestation of a document did not amount to estoppel as to the contents of the document. The trial Judge also held that the suit had been properly framed and stamped. The Judge granted a declaratory decree to the plaintiff. The decree was worded as follows:

"It is ordered that a decree for declaration to the effect that the plaintiff has the right of residence in the house in suit and therefore it is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree of defendant No. 1 against defendants Nos 2 and 3 so far as her rights are concerned, be and the same is hereby passed in plaintiff's favour."

An appeal was preferred by Jai Gopal to the District Court. The District Judge remanded the case to the trial Judge for recording his findings as to the right of maintenance. The trial Judge found that the plaintiff was entitled to the right of maintenance also. At the final hearing the District Judge came to the conclusion that Mst. Jasodan Devi could not have her right of maintenance enforced against the property because she had not managed to make it a charge on the house either by decree or by a private agreement. He held that Mst. Jasodan Devi had surrendered her rights in the house at the time when the mortgage was being effected because she had signed the deed. The Appellate Judge therefore accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout. Musammat Jasodan Devi has come up on further appeal to this Court. In our opinion the judgment of the lower Court should be maintained on the point of estoppel only. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have, in the ruling reported in Pandurang Krishnaji v. M. Tukaram (1), laid down the following proposition.

"Attestation of a deed by itself estops a man from denying nothing whatever excepting that he has witnessed the execution of the deed. It conveys, neither directly nor by implication any knowledge of the contents of the document, and it ought not to be put forward alone for the purpose of establishing that a man consented to the transaction which the document effects It is, of coures, possible, as was pointed out by their Lordships in the case in Banga Chandra Dhur v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (2) that an attestation may take place in circumstances which would show that the witness did in fact know of the contents of the document but no such knowledge ought to be inferred from the mere fact of the attestation."

It is obvious that their Lordships did not mean to extend the dictum laid down by them as regards the effect of attestation to cases where the person signing the document had become cognisant of the text of the document and had signed it in token of consent. This was the interpretation of their Lordships' judgment made by a Single Judge of the Patna High Court, in the ruling reported in Bhagwat Rai v. Gorakh Rai (3). The Judge said :

"Where an attesting witness is present at the transaction and attests the deed having heard its contents, he is estopped from challenging the right of the transferee."

We have given above the names of the witnesses who appeared and said that Mst. Jasodan Devi had signed the document after hearing its contents and that the reason for her signing it was that the mortgagee insisted that she should do so in token of consent. We do not see any reason for disbelieving them. Applying the principle laid down above we think Mst. Jasodan Devi had acquiesced in the transaction to the extent of surrendering her rights of residence and maintenance. She is now estopped and cannot claim those rights against the mortgagee. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is consequently maintained. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Revision Application No. 79 of 1940

CHAIRMAN, TOWN AREA COMMITTEE, SAIDPUR—DEFENDANT—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Suit for refund of amount recovered as tax with prayer for declaration of plaintiff's non-liability—Second appeal does not lie.

A suit for refund of amount recovered as a tax with a prayer for declaration of plaintiff's non-liability to pay the tax, is a suit of Small Cause nature and hence no second appeal lies under s. 102, Civil P. C. 17 Ind. Cas. 704 (1) and 134 Ind. Cas. 251 (2), relied on.

C. R. App. against the order of the Additional Civil Judge, Benares, dated November 30, 1938.

Mr. B. S. Shastri, for the Applicants.

Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is a plaintiff's application in revision under s. 115, Civil P. C. The suit out of which the application arises was instituted by the plaintiff for (1) a declaration that he was not carrying on business within the limits of the Town Area Committee of Saidpur in the District of Ghazipur and was therefore not liable to pay tax, (2) for the refund of a sum of Rs. 143-14-0 illegally realised from the plaintiff by the Town Area Committee on account of tax, plus Rs. 35 as interest, and (3) for release of the goods belonging to the plaintiff which had been attached by means of a distress warrant. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court. The plaintiff—the applicant before me—appealed, but on the date of hearing neither he nor his Counsel was present and the Court dismissed the appeal.

The plea taken before me by learned Counsel for the applicant is that the learned Judge of the Appellate Court dismissed the appeal on merits and thereby acted without jurisdiction; he ought to have dismissed the appeal for default under O. XLI, r. 17, Civil P. C. Learned Counsel for the opposite party concedes that the appeal was dismissed on merits and that it ought to have been dismissed for default under O. XLI, r 17, Civil P. C., but he has advanced a preliminary objection to the effect that a second appeal from the decree of the Appellate Court was competent to the High Court and therefore no revision lies. The answer which is given to this plea by learned Counsel for the applicant is that this was a suit of a small cause Court nature and therefore a second appeal was barred under s. 102, Civil P. C. Learned Counsel for the opposite party meets this contention by pleading that this was not a suit of a Small Cause Court nature at all; it was a suit which is excepted from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court under Art. 19, of Sch. II, to the Prov. Small Cause Courts Act, which provides that a suit for a declaratory decree is not triable by a Small Cause Court.

It is perfectly true that the Small Cause Court was not competent to try this suit in view of the fact that there was a prayer for a declaration, and it was no doubt for that reason that the suit was instituted as a regular suit in the Munsif's Court. On the other hand, it seems to me that the applicant's claim was substantially a claim for refund of the tax which, according to him, had been wrongfully realized and for release of the property which had been wrongfully distrained; but it was not possible for him to obtain these reliefs without also adding an incidental prayer for a declaration. In respect to this relief he paid no separate court-fee. In Veera Raghava Iyengar v. Vellai Mooppai 17 Ind. Cas. 704 (1) a suit was instituted for recovery of rent along with a prayer for a declaration of right and a Bench of the Madras High Court held that this was a suit of a Small Cause Court nature and therefore no second appeal lay. The judgment is very short and may be usefully reproduced. It reads as follows:

"The preliminary objection is taken that no second appeal lies in this case. We are of opinion that this contention should be upheld. The suit was one merely for recovery of rent. It is contended that the first prayer in the plaint is that the plaintiffs right to the melwaram of the land should be declared; but this can be treated as only incidental to the prayer for the recovery of rent The cause of action, as stated in para. 10 of the plaint, is merely the non-payment of rent. No separate court-fee was paid for the declaration. There is absolutely nothing anywhere in the plaint to suggest that the prayer for declaration was treated as an independent one. The second appeal is dismissed with costs."

In Allah Bux v. Nurul Hasan (2) Small Cause Court under s. 23 Small Cause Courts Act, returned a plaint for presentation to the proper Court, the reason being that a question of title appeared to be involved. It was held by a Bench of this Court, Sulaiman, A. C. J. and Bajpai J. that the suit was nevertheless a suit of a Small Cause Court nature and a second appeal was therefore barred under s. 102, Civil P. C. Sulaiman, A. C. J., who delivered the judgment, said:

"The transfer of a Small Cause Court suit under s. 23 makes it a regular suit and a first appeal no doubt lies. But the nature of the suit continues to be a Small Cause Court one and a second appeal is barred under s. 102, Civil P. C. The mere fact that a question of title was considered to have been involved in the case or has been incidentally decided would not permit of a second appeal."

In my opinion the suit to which this application relates was a suit of a Small Cause Court nature and therefore no second appeal lay. This application in revision is therefore competent. For the reasons given, I allow this application with costs and set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court. Following the procedure which was adopted by a Bench of this Court in Nasir Khan v. Itwari (3). I hereby pass the order which the Appellate Court ought to have passed; that is to say, I dismiss the appeal to that Court for default. If the appellant desires to have his appeal restored, he must apply to the Court below under O. XLI, r. 19, Civil P. C.

Mr. K. Rajah Ayyar, for the Appellants.

Judgment.—The only question in this appeal is whether an award under r. 15 of the Rules under s. 51 of the Co-operative Societies Act made, after it has been filed in Civil Court for enforcement under r. 15 (7), (c) be executed on the application of an assignee from the person in whose favour the award was made. No authorities have been cited. The rule itself says that the "Court shall enforce the award as if it was a decree of the Court." If it were a decree, the assignee could under O. XXI, r. 16 of the Civil P. C. apply for execution. I see no reason why this provision should not apply to a co-operative award which is enforceable as if it were a decree. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss 17 (1) (d), 17 (2) (vi), 49 — Exemption under s. 17 (2) (vi) does not extend to decrees embodying lease —Compromise decree embodying fresh lease—Decree must be registered and if unregistered it cannot be relied upon to prove rent of tenancy—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Rent suit based on unregistered lease — Rate of rent cannot be proved aliunde—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 51—Scope—Written lease—Presumption of terms, if can be drawn under s. 51.

It is true that s. 17 (2) (vi), Regis. Act exempts a decree or order of Court from registration but the exemption does not extend to decrees embodying leases. This is perfectly clear from the wording of sub-s. (2) of s. 17 which expressly limits the operation of the exemption therein contained to documents dealt with in cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. (1). Sub-clause (d) of sub-s. (1) which deals with leases is excluded from the operation of sub-s. (2).

Where after annulling the tenancy by notice under s. 167, Ben. Ten. Act, the plaintiff sues the tenant as trespasser for rent arrears but the suit is compromised by the defendant taking a fresh lease, the compromise decree is not the recognition of an old lease but a new lease and hence is compulsorily registrable under s. 17 (1) (d). Where the compromise decree is not registered, it cannot be relied upon by the tenant for proving the rent of the tenancy. 118 Ind. Cas. 895 (1), referred to.

The terms of s. 91, Evi. Act, are quite explicit in their prohibition of the proof of the terms of the lease aliunde, and no other evidence can be given to prove the rate of rent in a suit which is based on an unregistered lease except the lease itself which is inadmissible in evidence under s. 49, Regis. Act. 71 Ind. Cas. 650 (2), relied on.

There cannot be scope for any presumption under s. 51, Ben. Ten. Act, of the terms of a lease in a case where there is a written lease setting forth the terms. In such a case therefore the tenant proving the rent paid in the previous years is not entitled to the presumption that it is the rent payable.

A. from the appellate decree of the District Judge, Khulna, dated April 29, 1938.

Messrs. Krishna Kamal Moitra, Hiralal Chakraborty and Rabindra Nath Bhattacharjee, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Kshitindra Nath Bose and Upendra K. Roy, (for Deputy Registrar), for the Respondents.

Judgment—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent, the plaintiffs being the appellants. Their case is that they purchased the superior interest at a rent sale and annulled all incumbrances by a notice under s. 167, Ben. Ten. Act. They then brought a suit being Title Suit No. 136 of 1923 for khas possession against the defendants. The suit was decreed on compromise. By the terms of the compromise, a lease was granted to the defendants at a rental of Rs. 16 per annum. The defendants have fallen into arrear and the plaintiffs accordingly sue for recovery of rent. The defence taken is that the original rent of the tenancy was Rs. 6-6-0 that the compromise decree was obtained by fraud and that the enhancement of rent from Rs. 6-6-0 to Rs. 16 was illegal by reason of the terms of s. 29, Ben. Ten. Act. The Munsif negatived this defence and gave the plaintiffs a decree. The defendants appealed. The learned District Judge has found that no fraud was practised but he held that the lease was inadmissible in evidence as it was not registered and that therefore the plaintiffs could not claim rent on the basis of the lease. He held also that if the present lease be treated as the continuation of the old one then the enhancement of the rent from Rs. 6-6-0 to Rs. 16 was illegal. He allowed the plaintiffs rent at the admitted rate of Rs. 6-6-0 per annum. The plaintiffs now appeal. It is accepted that the compromise decree was not obtained by fraud and that the rent originally paid by the defendants was Rs. 6-6-0. The decree is not registered. The first question for determination is whether it is a document which must be registered.

The contention of the appellant is that decree does not create a lease but that it is a document which merely recognises or declares the existence of the old tenancy and is therefore not compulsorily registrable under s. 19, Regis. Act. I have carefully considered the document and have no hesitation in holding that by the compromise decree a new lease is created. The old tenancy was extinguished by the notice under s. 17, Ben. Ten. Act, annulling encumbrance. The plaintiffs sued the defendant after annulling his tenancy on the footing that he was a trespasser. The suit was compromised by the defendant's taking a fresh lease. The words used are "jama bandobasta Korealoyeelam" (I hereby take a lease). The compromise decree is not the recognition of an old lease but it is a new lease. Now, s. 17 (1) (d), Regis. Act, says that a lease from year to year or for any time exceeding one year or reserving a yearly rental must be registered. The compromise decree is a document of this description and it is compulsorily registrable. It is true that s. 17 (2) (vi) exempts a decree or order of Court from registration but the exemption does not extend to decrees embodying leases. This is perfectly clear from the wording of sub-s. (2) which expressly limits the operation of the exemption therein contained to documents dealt with in cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. (1). Sub-cl. (d) of sub-s. (1) which deals with leases is excluded from the operation of sub-s. (2). In this connection I would refer to the case in Nazar Ali v. Indra Kumar Sutar (1). Now this decree being compulsorily registrable under s. 17, Regis. Act, and not having been registered, it cannot affect the immovable property comprised therein or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property. This is the effect of s. 49, Regis. Act. The plaintiffs cannot therefore rely upon this compromise decree for proving the rent of the tenancy.

The next question for decision is whether the rate of rent can be proved aliunde. It was argued by learned Advocate for the appellant that rent at the rate claimed has been paid and that there are counterfoil receipts to prove this. He wished to prove the rate of rent by these receipts. In my opinion, s. 91, Evi. Act, stands in the way of any other evidence being given of the rate of rent. The rate of rent is one of the terms of the lease. Section 91 says that when the terms of a contract or any grant or other disposition of property are reduced to the form of a document no evidence shall be given of the proof of such terms grant or other disposition except the document itself. The terms of s. 91 are quite explicit in their prohibition of the proof of the terms of the lease aliunde, and I hold that no other evidence could have been given to prove the rate of rent in this suit which is based on an unregistered lease except the lease itself and that s. 49, Regis Act, prevents the document being put in evidence. The result is that the plaintiffs cannot prove the rate of rent. To hold otherwise would be to render nugatory the provisions of the Regis. Act and of s. 91, Evi. Act. A similar question arose and was considered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Subramanian v. Lutchman (2).

The case related to a mortgage by deposit of title deeds. There was a writing accompanying the deposit. Their Lordships held that the writing should have been registered as it constituted the bargain between the parties and was not merely a memorandum of a contract already completed. The writing was not registered and was held to be inadmissible in evidence. It was contended that oral evidence my be given of the terms of the mortgage. The contention was repelled by their Lordships who laid down that as the writing could not be proved on oral evidence of the terms of the contract could be given. In doing so they quoted the words of Couch, C. J. in Kedarnath Dutt v. Sham Lal Khettry (3) which were as follows;

"The rule with regard to writings is that oral proof cannot be substituted for the written evidence of any contract which the parties have put into writing. And the reason is that the writing is tacitly considered by the parties themselves as the only repository and the appropriate evidence of their agreement."

They also referred with approval to the words of Lord Cairns in Shaw v. Foster (4) and said:

"In the words of Lord Cairns in the leading case of Shaw v. Foster (4) although it is a well established rule of equity that a deposit of a document of title without more, without writing or without word of mouth, will create in equity a charge upon the property referred to, I apprehend that, that general rule will not apply when you have a deposit accompanied by an actual written charge. In that case you must refer to the terms of written document, and any implication that might be raised, supposing there was no document, is put out of the case and reduced to silence by the documents by which alone you must be governed."

I must hold therefore that the plaintiffs cannot give oral testimony of the rate of rent fixed by the unregistered lease. Learned Advocate for the appellants next relied upon the terms of s. 51, Ben. Ten. Act, which are as follows :

"If a question arises as to the amount of a tenant's rent or the conditions under which he holds in any agricultural year, he shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, to hold at the same rent and under the same conditions as in the last preceding agricultural year."

He argued that he was able to prove the rent paid in the previous years and that he was therefore entitled to the presumption that this was the rent payable All I need say about this argument is that there cannot be scope for any presumption of the terms of a lease in a case where there is a written lease setting forth the terms. The decree of the lower Appellate Court giving the plaintiffs rent at the rate admitted by the defendants must therefore be upheld. It was contended by the respondents that even if the lease could be given in evidence it would be inoperative so far as the increase of the rent is concerned inasmuch as it offends against the provisions of s. 29, Ben. Ten. Act. In view of my decision that the lease cannot be proved and that no oral or other evidence can be given of the rate of rent, it is unnecessary to decide this question. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent is refused.

A obtained a decree against B in a suit for the recovery of property. During the pendency of the suit A's son S acquired A's interest in suit property by a final partition decree. On an appeal by B against decree passed against him, S applied under O. XXII, r. 10 to be impleaded as supplemental respondent to the appeal:

Held, that s. 146, Civil P. C., did not apply as S could not be regarded as claiming under A as he got the suit property by virtue of the partition decree and not by reason of any assignment or devolution from his father;

Held, further that O. XXII, r. 10, also did not apply as S acquired the property before the appeal and not during its pendency. S was therefore not entitled to be impleaded as respondent. 149 Ind. Cas. 970 (1), and Kantichander v. Pirbhu Dayal (2), relied on.

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge Mayavaram, in A. S. No. 7 of 1935.

Mr. K. S. Sankara Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts giving rise to this civil miscellaneous appeal and the connected second appeal No. 508 of 1936 are briefly these : One Sambasivan Pillai, respondent No. 3 herein, brought the suit O. S. No. 265 of 1932 for recovery of the plaint-mentioned property from respondent No. 1 herein on the ground that it had been leased by him to one Vyasachariar who let respondent No. 1 into possession as a sub-tenant and that the latter was bound to surrender possession as the lease to Vyasachariar has been terminated.

The trial Court decreed the suit on September 26, 1933 and respondent No. 1 preferred an appeal A. S. No. 7 of 1935, on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Mayavaram. By this time, respondent No. 1 had discovered that there had been a partition suit between respondent No. 3 and his two sons and that a final decree had been passed therein on August 25, 1927 under which the suit property had been allotted to the sons of respondent No. 3. That partition suit culminated in a second appeal (S. A. No. 630 of 1933) to this Court which was dismissed on September 15, 1933. On these facts respondent No. 1 contended in his appeal to the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram that respondent No. 3 had no right to sue for recovery of the property as he had lost the right to such property by reason of the final decree passed in August 1927 under which the suit property as already stated had been allotted to respondent No. 3's sons. In view of this contention the appellant herein who is one of the sons of respondent No. 3 who got the property under the partition decree filed I. A. No. 13 of 1935 in A S. No. 7 of 1935 in the lower Appellate Court under O. XXII, r. 10, Civil P. C., to implead himself as a supplemental respondent in the appeal so as to enable him to resist respondent No. 1's appeal as the rightful owner of the property and thus safeguard his interests therein. The Court below dismissed this application and allowed the appeal and this civil miscellaneous appeal and the connected second appeal have been preferred against the said order and decree respectively.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has urged three contentions before me in the civil miscellaneous appeal. First he argued that the appellant was entitled to come on record under s. 146, Civil P. C., and that the lower Court was wrong in dismissing the petition without considering the applicability of that section. I do not however see how that provision is applicable to the appellant in the circumstances of the case. That section would apply only if the appellant could be properly regarded as claiming under respondent No. 3 who originally brought the action and was the sole respondent in the appeal in the Court, below. But it is clear that the appellant cannot be so regarded as he got the suit property by virtue of the partition decree referred to already and not by reason of any assignment or devolution from his father, respondent No. 3. I must therefore reject this contention.

The appellant's Counsel next urged that O. XXII, r. 10 applied to the case and the appellant is entitled to be impleaded in the appeal under that provision. But, as pointed out by the Court below, reading that provision in the light of r. 11 of the same Order, it is clear that unless the assignment creation or devolution referred to in the provision occurred during the pendency of the appeal, that provision would not entitle the appellant to be impleaded in the appeal, and from the material dates already given, it will be seen that the appellant acquired the suit property as his separate and absolute property by virtue of the partition decree passed during the pendency of the suit and before the appeal was filed even taking the date of the dismissal of the second appeal as the date when the partition became final between the parties. It cannot therefore be said that the appellant acquired any title during the pendency of the appeal as contemplated in O. XXII, r. 10, read with r. 11 see Phul Chand v. Tahir Hussain (1) and Kantichander v. Pirbhu Dayal (2).

Lastly, it is urged that if neither s. 146 nor O. XXII, r. 10 was applicable to the facts of this case, the Court had inherent powers under s. 151, Civil P. C. to implead the respondent, as otherwise the appellant would be deprived of all opportunity of resisting the appeal and might run the risk of even losing the property to which respondent No. 1 was found to have no manner of right or title. I should be disposed to consider this argument with more favour if I could see may way to hold that the appellant's case was altogether outside the purview of O. XXII, r. 10. But I am of opinion that the accrual of exclusive title to the appellant in meaning of respect of the suit property under the partition decree could properly be regarded as the 'creation' of an interest within the meaning of O. XXII r. 10, so that if the appellant had only applied under that provision to be impleaded during the pendency of the suit, his application would have been in order and the present difficulty would have been avoided. He, however, failed to do so and made this application only during the pendency of the appeal when it was no longer maintainable under that provision for the reasons already indicated. The appellant had thus an appropriate remedy under a specific provision of the Code of which, however, he failed to avail himself and he cannot therefore be allowed to invoke the inherent powers of the Court. It has often been held that there is no room for the exercise of such powers in a case comming within any specific provision of the Code; see Shib Prakash v. Jinguria (3) Ghuznavi v. Allahabad Bank Ltd. (4) and Vallabhai Naranji v. Chotalal Purshothamdas & Co. (5). This contention also must therefore be rejected. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed wih costs. It is conceded that if the civil miscellaneous appeal is dismissed, the second appeal cannot be sustained. It is accordingly dismissed but I make no order as to costs therein.

Privy Council Appeal No. 16 of 1939

March 3, 1941

BENNETT. AND GHULAM HASAN, JJ.

Lala SUDAMAN PRASAD—APPLICANT

MOHAMED ABDUL ALIM—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 110, Para. 2 —Test laid down by, for granting leave — Decretal amount with interest amounting to less than Rs. 10,000 —Property attached in execution value at Rs. 15,000 held to be waqf property not liable to attachment and sale— Leave to appeal, held could not be granted.

Paragraph 2 of s. 110, Civil P. C., is intended to extend the privilege given by the first paragraph only to cases where a claim regarding rights of Rs. 10,000 or upwards in value is involved indirectly, though not directly. The second paragraph means that the suit must, to satisfy its conditions, involve rights and claims to property which rights and claims are worth Rs. 10,000 and uparwds, not that the rights affect properties whose value is Rs 10,000 and upwards.

Where therefore in execution of his decree a decree-holder attached certain property of the judgment-debtor valued at Rs. 15,000, for recovery of the decretal amount with interest amounting to Rs 9,957-5-3, and an objection under s. 47, Civil P. C., that the property being waqf property was not liable to attachment and sale being successful applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council :

Held, that leave could not be granted as the test laid down by para. 2 of s. 110, Civil P. C., had not been satisfied. 167 Ind. Cas. 670 (7), dissented from.

[Case law relied on.]

Messrs. L. S. Misra and S. N. Srivastava, for the Applicant.

Mr. Mohammad Ayub, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decree dated September 1, 1939, passed by a Bench of this Court in an execution of decree appeal.

On April 3, 1933, the petitioner obtained a simple money decree against one Merajuddin for a sum of Rs. 9 250. On May 23, 1935, Merajuddin died leaving a widow, Mst. Matin-un-nissa. In execution of the decree the petitioner attached mahal Amat-uz Zahra in village Bhanpur on October 21, 1935 for recovery of the decretal amount with interest, namely Rs. 9,957-5-3. The mahal in question is stated by Counsel for the petitioner to have been valued at Rs. 15,000. On February 5, 1936, Mst. Matin-un-nissa filed objections under s. 47 of the Civil P. C. objecting that the property being waqf was not liable to attachment and sale. The Civil Judges rejected the objections, holding that the property was not waqf. This decision was reversed on appeal by a Bench of this Court and it was held that the property, which was the subject-matter of attachment, was waqf property.

By the present petition the petitioner decree-holder desires permission to appeal to His Majesty in Council. Paragraphs 6 and 7 of the petition show that the petitioner prays for leave under one or other of the grounds stated in s. 110 of the Civil P. C.

Learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioner, however, has confined his case only to the second paragraph of s. 110 of the Civil P. C. It is argued that the second paragraph of s. 110 applied to the case, namely, that the decree or final order involves, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value. The contention urged on behalf of the petitioner is that although the value of the subject-matter in appeal to the Chief Court was stated as less than Rs. 10,000 the decree passed by this Court involves, directly or indirectly, the question that the petitioner is entitled to sell the attached property of the value of more than Rs. 10,000 for the satisfaction of the decretal amount. We are unable to accede to this argument.

It was held by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. in John Joseph De Silva v. John Joseph De Silva (VI Bombay Law Reporter, 403) (1) that to determine the value prescribed by s. 596, now corresponding to s. 110, of the Civil P. C, the decree is to be looked at as it affects the interests of the party prejudiced by it. Where the detriment to the party seeking relief is estimated at less than Rs. 10,000, the value of the matter in dispute in appeal is not of the prescribed value, the decree itself does not involve any claim or question to or respecting property of the prescribed value; and the case does not fulfil the requirements of s. 596 of the Code. That was a suit for a declaration and partition in which it was held that the property belonged to the estate of the deceased and the plaintiff's interest therein was a one-third. At p. 406* it was observed :—

"The argument has been that inasmuch as the whole property is valued at Rs. 12,000 there is a compliance with the terms of s. 596, though the loss to the defendant by reason of the decree is limited to 1/3 of that property and profits. If we were to give effect to the contentions urged before us it would follow that if the sole subject-matter in dispute were an easement of trifling value, but affecting property worth Rs. 10,000 or upwards then a right to appeal to His Majesty in Council under the Civil P. C. would exist."

This decision was followad in a Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Appala Raja v. Rangappa Naicker 40 I. C. 680-A. I. R. 1918 Madras, 632) (2) where it was held that para. 2 of s. 110, Civil P. C. is intended to extend the privilege given by the first paragraph only to cases where a claim regarding rights of Rs. 10,000 or upwards in value is involved indirectly, though not directly. The second paragraph means that the suit must, to satisfy its conditions, involve rights and claims to property which rights and claims are worth Rs. 10,000 and upwards, not that the rights affect properties whose value is Rs 10,000 and upwards.

This view was further confirmed in Sukkira Goundan v. Palani Goundan (A. I. R. 1938 Mad. 666) (3).

To the same effect is the decision of a Bench of the Lahore High Court in Dhanna Mal v Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar (A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 286 (2) 4). The matter was discussed at some lenght in N. C. Gatliara v. A. M. M. Murungappa (A. I. R. 1934 Rang. 292) (5), where it was held that under s. 110 it is the extent to which the decree or order has operated to the prejudice of the applicant that determines whether the decree or order is subject to appeal or not, and whatever may be the value of the property in respect of which a claim or question is involved in the appeal no appeal lies under s. 110 unless the value of the loss or detriment which the applicant has suffered by the passing of the decree or order, and from which he seeks to be relieved by His Majesty in Council, is Rs. 10,000 or upwards.

Reliance has been placed on behalf of the petitioner on A. V. Subramania Ayyar v. Sellamal (I. L. R 39 Mad. 843) (6). We are quite unable to see how this decision supports the contention of the petitioner. Sir John Wallis, C. J. observed :

"The words "involve directly", contained in the second paragraph of s. 110 of the Code, cannot be read as including cases which involve nothing but the actual subject-matter in dispute in the appeal".

while Srinivasa Ayyangar, J. observed :

"If the operation of the decision is confined only to the particular object matter, cl. (2) of s. 110 does not apply, and unless the case satisfies the conditions in cl. (1), there is no right of appeal.

If the decision, beyond awarding relief in respect of the particular object matter of the suit, affects rights in other properties, cl. (2) would apply : also if the matter in dispute is one which is incapable of valuation as in the case of easements cl. (2) may apply."

Reference has also been made to a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Nadir Hussain v. Municipal Board, Agra (I. L R. 1937 Allahabad 405) (7). There it was held that the condition laid down in the second paragraph of s. 110 of the Civil P. C. is independent and self-sufficient, and is not in any way dependent on the fulfilment of both or either of the conditions in the first paragraph. Even if none of the conditions mentioned in the first paragraph is fulfilled, but the sole condition mentioned in the second paragraph is fulfilled, namely, that the decree sought to be appealed against to the Privy Council involves directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of the amount or value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards, the requirements of s. 110 regarding valuation are complied with. In that case the plaintiff sued to enforce a charge and obtain a decree for sale, with option to sell any part or the whole of the mortgaged property the amount claimed by the plaintiff which was decreed to him was less than Rs. 10,000. The total value of the mortgaged property which he was entitled to sell being over Rs. 10,000, it was held that the decree involved, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards, and the valuation test laid down by s. 110 was satisfied. The plaintiff had prayed in the plaint for a decree for sale of the entire mortgaged property on the ground that the sum due to him was a charge on the same and that he was entitled to put up the whole property for sale. The learned Judges held :

"We find it very difficult to hold that the High Court's decree does not directly or indirectly involve some claim or question to or respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000."

No reference was made to the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., or to any of the Madras decisions. We regret we are unable to follow the view taken by the Allahabad High Court and hold in the circumstances of the present case that the test laid down by para. 2 of s. 110 of the Civil P. C. has not been satisfied.

The result, therefore, is that this application is dismissed with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi), (iii), Sch. I, Art. 1, s. 7 (iv) (c)—Suit under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) falls under Art. 17 (vi), Sch. II—Declaratory suit in Court Fees Act, whether covered by s. 42, Specific Relief Act (I of 1877)—Criterion for determination of question of court-fees in declaratory suits—Deed or decree sought to be declared void — Considerations — Consequential relief in s. 7 (vi) (c)—Suit for declaration that property is waqf and alienations thereof are ineffectual against waqf property—Nature of—Relief—Court-fee payable—Declaration held could not be granted as suit did not fall under s. 42, Specific Relief Act—Result is dismissal of suit and not assessment of higher court-fee—Declaratory relief found to involve consequential relief within meaning of s. 7 (iv) (c)—Plaintiff can state his valuation of relief—Ss. 8 and 9, Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), interpretation of — No consequential relief open or asked for — Declaration asked for is only under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, 1877.

Suits under s. 92, Civil P. C., fall under cl. (vi) of Art. 17, Sch. II, Court Fees Act, which prescribes a court-fee of Rs. 10. [p. 645, col. 1.]

The Court Fees Act was passed in 1870, while the Specific Relief Act, was passed in 1877. Section 42, Specific Relief Act, was therefore, not in force when the Court Fees Act, was enacted. The declaratory suits referred to in the Court Fees Act cannot therefore be taken to be necessarily those covered by s. 42 only. [p. 647, col. 1.]

In a suit for a declaration that a deed or a decree is null and void, neither the answer to the question whether the plaintiff is or is not a party to the decree or the deed sought to be declared as null and void, nor to the question whether the declaration sought does or does not fall within the purview of s. 42, Specific Relief Act, furnishes a satisfactory or conclusive test for determining the court-fee payable. The true criterion for determining the question of court-fee in cases of this description is the substance of the relief claimed as disclosed by the plaint, taken as a whole. If the relief so disclosed is a declaration pure and simple, and involves no other relief, the suit would fall under cl. (iii) of Art. 17 of Sch. II, Court Fees Act, and the court-fee payable would be Rs. 10 only. At the initial stage of determining the court-fee on a plaint, the question whether the declaratory suit is liable to be dismissed, either because it does not fall within the purview of s. 42, Specific Relief Act, or because the plaintiff has failed to sue for a further relief which was open to him or for some other reason does not arise. That question will arise only after the necessary court-fee on the true relief as disclosed by the plaint is paid and the plaint is properly before the Court. [p. 649, cols 1 & 2.]

The expression 'consequential relief' in Art 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, means some relief, which would follow directly from the declaration given, the valuation of which is not capable of being definitely ascertained and which is not specifically provided for anywhere in the Act and cannot be claimed independently of the declaration as a 'substantial relief'. It follows therefore that if the relief claimed in any case is found in reality to be tantamount to a substantial relief and not a mere 'consequential relief' in the above sense, the plaintiff must pay court-fee on the substantial relief. [p. 650, col. 1.]

Where the plaintiff sued for a twofold declaration that the property described in the plaint was waqf and that certain alienations thereof by the mutwalli and his brother were null and void and were ineffectual against the waqf property:

Held, that the first part of the relief viz., that it be declared that the property in dispute was waqf was purely declaratory and it involved no consequential relief. Had it stood by itself a court-fee of Rs. 10 would undoubtedly have been sufficient. The second part of the declaration however stood on a different footing. The plaintiff wished to have the alienations of the waqf property to be declared null and void and ineffectual as against the waqf property. In substance, the second part of the relief as claimed was tantamount to the setting aside or cancellation of the alienations referred to in the plaint. In the circumstances the relief claimed by the plaintiffs could not be treated as a purely declaratory one and inasmuch as it could not be said to follow directly from the declaration sought for in the first part of the relief. The relief claimed in this case could not be treated as a declaration with a 'consequential relief' falling within s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act. The relief claimed fell neither under s. 7 (iv) (c) nor under Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii) but under the residuary article, Sch. I, Art. 17 and a court-fee of Rs. 10 was sufficient for the first relief as to declaration that the property was waqf, but the second relief which was a substantive one in the shape of setting aside of alienations required ad valorem court-fee on the value of the subject-matter of the sales. 155 Ind Cas. 13 (11), 19 Ind. Cas. 219 (2) (13, 73 Ind. Cas. 767 (14) and 129 Ind. Cas. 753 (15), Overruled. [p. 650, col. 2]

[Case-law discussed.]

Held, also that even if the suit were held to fall under s. 7 (iv) (c), it was doubtful whether that would help the plaintiffs in this case. The plaintiffs had themselves valued the relief in the plaint at rupees ten lacs They did so, for purposes of jurisdiction but they were bound to fix the same for the purposes of court-fee in view of ss, 8 and 9, Suits Valuation Act. 135 Ind. Cas. 499 (10) and 165 Ind. Cas. 670 (20), approved. [p. 653, col. 1.]

Held, further that the suit did not fall within the purview of s 42, Specific Relief Act.

If it is held that the declaration asked for cannot be granted because it does not fall under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, the result, should be dismissal of the suit on that ground, and not assessment of a higher court-fee. If, on the other hand, it is found that the declaratory relief claimed involves a consequential relief within the meaning of s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, it will be for the plaintiff to state the amount at which he values the relief as provided in that section. [p. 649, col. 2.]

All that s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, requires is that the plaintiff should state the value of the relief in the plaint. It could scarcely have been intended that the plaintiff should value the relief at one figure for jurisdiction and at another for court-fee. Sections 8 and 9, Suits Valuation Act, show that except when specific rules to the contrary have been framed under s. 9, the value for purposes of court-fee and jurisdiction must be the same. [p. 653, col. 1.]

Section 15, Civil P C, 1859, was repealed by the Specific Relief Act in 1877 and s. 42 of that Act has widened the scope of the declaratory relief. Under s. 42 a person may sue for a declaration as to his legal character or his right to any property even when no further specific relief is open to him; while before the enactment of that section it was not the practice to grant declaratory decrees unless such further relief was open to the plaintiff This provision in s. 42 is introduced to enable a person to remove a cloud on his status or title in certain circumstances even when no further relief is open to him at the time. Thus, it is only under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, that Courts in India can grant declaratory relief even when no other specific relief can be claimed by the plaintiff. It is not open to a plaintiff to ask for a purely declaratory decree apart from the provisions of s. 42, when no consequential relief is open to the plaintiff and none is prayed for. In deciding whether a suit is purely declaratory, the substance and not merely the language or the form of the relief claimed should be considered. [p. 651, col. 2; p. 652, col. 1]

[Case-law referred to.]

F. A. referred to the Full Bench by Tek Chand and Abdul Rashid, JJ., dated March 27, 1940.

Messrs. Barkat Ali and Kh. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din, for the Appellants.

M. C. Mahajan, Amar Nath Monga and Jaindra Lal, for Respondents Nos. 5 to 7.

Bhide, J.—The material facts of the case which have given rise to this reference may be shortly stated as follows: On October 31, 1917, one Ghulam Rasul executed a trust, in the nature of what is known as waqf-al-aulad under Muhammadan Law in respect of his property for the benefit of himself and his descendants and also for certain charitable objects. According to this deed he was to be the first mutwalli and on his death his eldest son, Din Mohammad was to succeed him. After the death of Ghulam Rasul, however, Din Mohammad repudiated the trust and he and his brother (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) effected several alienations of the dedicated property. Thereupon the present plaintiffs who are some of his descendants and relations and as such interested in the proper administration of the waqf instituted the present suit praying for the following relief, viz. that a declaration to the effect that the property in dispute mentioned in para. 1 of the petition of plaint is waqf and the alienations thereof mentioned in para. 4 of the petition of plaint which defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have effected in favour of defendants Nos. 3 to 10 are null and void and ineffectual as against the waqf property may be passed with costs in their plaintiffs' favour against the defendants or any other relief deemed equitable may be granted.

The relief was valued by the plaintiffs at rupees ten lacs for the purposes of jurisdiction, but a court-fee of Rs. 10 only was paid treating the suit as one for a declaration without any consequential relief falling under cl. (iii), Art 17, Sch. II, Court Fees Act. A preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the defendants that the suit was not properly valued for the purpose of court-fee It was contended that the suit was not really for a mere declaration, but involved also a consequential relief in the shape of cancellation of certain alienations and therefore, court-fee should have been paid ad valorem on the value of the properties involved, i. e., on rupees ten lacs as stated by the plaintiffs themselves for the purpose of jurisdiction. The learned Judge of the trial Court upheld this contention and the plaintiffs having failed to pay the necessary court-fees within the time fixed by him, rejected the plaint under O. VII, r. 11, Civil P. C. From this decision an appeal was preferred to this Court which came up for hearing before a Division Bench. The learned Judges who constituted the Bench were of opinion that there was a considerable conflict of authorities on the questions of law which arose in connection with the valuation of the suit for purpose of court-fee and hence referred the case for decision to a Full Bench.

Two main points arise for decision in this appeal, viz.: (1) What is the nature of the relief claimed in the present suit and under what category of suits does it fall for the purposes of the Court Fees Act? (2) How is that value to be computed? As regards the first point it was conceded by the learned Counsel for the appellants that in order to determine the real nature of the relief claimed the plaint must be considered as a whole and not merely the form in which the relief claimed is expressed. The contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants, however, was that according to the proper construction of the plaint, the relief claimed was in the nature of the declaration pure and simple and therefore a court fee of Rs. 10 was sufficient. As regards the question whether the plaintiffs were entitled to sue for a mere declaration without praying for consequential relief the learned Counsel urged, that no consequential relief was open to the plaintiffs and that, in any case, that question was immaterial for the purpose of determining the nature of the relief claimed. For, if it be found that the plaintiffs have failed to sue for a consequential relief which was open to them (e. g., injunction restraining the mutwallis from treating the property as their own and requiring them to administer the trust: see F. A. Shihan v. Abdul Alim Abed (1), at p. 795) the suit might be liable to be dismissed on that ground; but that would not affect the question of court-fee. He however maintained that no further relief was open to the plaintiffs and the suit for declaration was therefore competent.

The learned Counsel for the defendant-respondents on the other hand contended that the plaintiffs are in effect suing for cancellation of the various alienations effected by Din Mohammad and the mere fact that the plaintiffs have chosen to disguise the relief in a declaratory form cannot alter its real nature. It was also urged that a further relief in the shape of restitution of possession to the mutwalli was open to the plaintiffs and hence a suit for a mere declaration was incompetent. In my opinion the first contention of the learned Counsel for the respondents should prevail. As stated above, it was not disputed before us that in order to ascertain the real nature of the relief claimed by the plaintiffs, the substance of the plaint must be considered and the mere fact that the relief as stated in the prayer clause is expressed in a declaratory form would not necessarily show that the suit is for a mere declaration and no more. This proposition is well-established and is supported by ample authority: see Shankaran Nair v. Gopala Menon (2), Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangasamy Pillai (3), Kamla Prasad v. Jagarnath Prasad (4), Parvatibai v. Vishvanath Ganesh (5), Maung Shein v. Ma Lon Ton (6), Kalu Ram v. Babu Lal (7) at p. 822 Roop Rani v. Bithal Das (8) Hakim Rai v. Ishar Das Gorakh Rai (9) and Sri Kishan Das v. Sat Narain (10). The question whether the relief claimed in the present case is purely a declaratory one or involves or is tantamount to other substantial relief has therefore to be decided in the light of this proposition.

The reliefs claimed in the present case are: (i) a declaration to the effect that the property mentioned in para. 1 of the plaint is waqf; (ii) secondly, that the alienations of the property mentioned in para. 4 of the plaint, are null and void and ineffectual as against the waqf property. As regards the first part of the declaration, viz., that the property mentioned in para. 1 of the plaint is waqf, it is not disputed that the relief claimed is purely a declaratory one. Defendants were denying that the property was waqf and hence this declaration was properly asked for. As to the second part of the relief claimed, however, it is contended on behalf of the defendants that this relief, though expressed as a declaration, amounts to a prayer for cancellation of the alienations and therefore the relief is in reality a substantive relief. In Sultan Khan v. Zia-uddin (11), which was a case of a similar type a contrary view appears to have been taken but it is contended that that ruling does not lay down the law correctly. The plaintiffs in that case, in addition to a declaration that the suit property was waqf wanted it to be declared that the sale of a portion of the said property by defendants Nos. 4 to 7 in favour of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 was invalid. It was held that this prayer could not be looked upon as one for a 'consequential relief.' The only reason given in support of this view was that the plaintiffs were not parties to the sale transactions which were impugned. This view was stated to be based upon a series of decisions of the Punjab Chief Court and this Court and the following authorities were referred to: Ganeshi Lal Beni Prashad (12), Amin Chand v. Sant Murli

Dhar (13) Nihal Debi v. Rai Chuni Lal, 73 Ind. Cas. 753 (14), Karam Chand v. Uma Datt Hans Raj, 129 Ind. Cas. 753 (15) and Beli Ram v. Isher Dass (16). In support of his contention that the law was not correctly laid down in Sultan Khan v. Zia-ud-din (11) or the rulings which it purported to follow, the learned Counsel for the defendants relied chiefly on a Full Bench ruling of the Chief Court of Lucknow, reported in Bepin Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (17).

Before proceeding further, it is necessary to examine the cases relied on in Sultan Khan v. Zia ud-din (11) because that ruling does not discuss the law on the point, but merely takes it, as well-settled, that when a person who is not a party to a decree or a deed sues to have it declared void, Art. 17, Court Fees Act, applies, and the court-fee payable is Rs. 10. The first case relied on in Sultan Khan v. Zia-ud-din (11), viz., Ganeshi Lal v. Beni Prasad (12) does not appear to be of much assistance. There was no question of setting aside any deed or decree in that case. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was the real holder of a certain decree which had been obtained by defendants against a third party and also prayed that the decree be transferred to him. The learned Judge treated the latter prayer to be redundant and held the suit to be merely declaratory and as such properly stamped with a ten rupee stamp. The question whether any other further relief was open to the plaintiff's and the plaintiffs should have asked for it was however left open.

The next ruling relied on was Amin Chand v. Sant Murli Dhar (13). In that case the plaintiffs claimed to be in possession of a certain dharamsala, alleged to be waqf property, and sued for a declaration that the sale of it made by a former manager to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was illegal and the decree for possession passed in favour of the latter on the basis of the sale deed was null and void and should have no effect on the property. The trial Court had dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiffs had failed to sue for a further relief which was open to them, viz., cancellation of the sale deed. On appeal, the Chief Court held that the plaintiffs were not bound to sue for cancellation of the sale deed which was merely an 'auxiliary equitable' relief and not such 'further relief' as is contemplated by s. 42, Specific Relief Act. It was therefore held that the plaintiffs were competent to maintain a suit for a mere declaration. It may be observed that as the plaintiffs were in possession of the suit property, there was no question of their suing for possession in that case.

The decision in Amin Chand v. Sant Murli Dhar (13) seems to be based chiefly on the analogy between the position of a mahant and that of a widow under Hindu Law. It was pointed out in the judgment that a reversioner of a Hindu widow is competent to obtain a declaratory decree with respect to a sale made by the widow without suing for concellation of the sale and the same principle was held to be applicable to the case of the sale of the waqf property which was before the learned Judges. With due respect, it must be said that the two cases differ in one material respect. In the case of a Hindu reversioner, no question of cancellation of the sale deed arises, as the sale deed remains operative during the lifetime of the widow who makes an alienation. The case is different where the property is waqf and consequently inalienable except for the purposes of the waqf. If not so made, the sale is null and void. This aspect of the question does not appear to have been considered at all in Amin Chand v. Sant Murli Dhar (13). The next case relied on in Sultan Khan v. Zia ud-din (11) was Nihal Devi v. Rai Chuni Lal (14). This case was apparently similar to Amin Chand v. Sant Murli Dhar (13). It was held that where a person who is not a party to a decree sues to have it declared void he need not sue for any consequential relief and the court-fee payable is that for a declaratory suit. In this ruling also, the distinction referred to above between a suit where a reversioner seeks a declaration with respect to an alienation made by a widow and that in which an alienation of waqf property is challenged was not noticed. The ruling purports to follow Bua Ditta v. Laaha Mal, 54 Ind. Cas. 833 (18) in which the principles laid down in Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangasamy Pillia (3) were approved and followed.

The next ruling referred to in Sultan Khan v. Zia-ud-din (11) was Karam Chand v. Uma Datt Hans Raj, 129 Ind. Cas. 753 (15). The question of court-fees was not discussed at any length in this ruling. It merely purports to follow Ganeshi Lal v. Beni Prasad (12) and Nihal Devi v. Rai Chuni Lal (14) in holding that when a person who is not a party to a decree challenges it, the suit should be treated as one for a declaration only. The last case relied on in Sultan Khan v. Zia-ud-din (11) was Beli Ram v. Isher Dass (16). This case seems to be clearly distinguishable as it was one under s. 92, Civil P. C. There is ample authority for the proposition that such suits fall under cl. (vi) of Art. 17, Sch. II, Court-Fees Act, which also prescribes a court-fee of Rs. 10. The decision is, therefore, not relevant for the purpose of a suit of the present type. It will thus appear that only two of the rulings relied on in Sultan Khan v. Zia-ud-din (11) are in point for the purposes of the present reference, viz., Amin Chand v. Sant Murli Dhar (13) and Nihal Devi v. Rai Chuni Lal (14). The facts of these two cases were similar to those of the present case. In the former case, the decision was based on the analogy of a suit by a reversioner to challenge an alienation by a Hindu widow but there is a distinction between the two classes of cases as pointed out above. The latter case purports to follow Bua Ditta v. Ladha Mal, 54 Ind. Cas. 833 (18) in which the principles laid down in Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangasamy Pillai (3) were approved. This Full Bench ruling has been relied on or referred to in several rulings bearing on the question of court-fees in cases of this type and it will be threfore useful to examine it in some detial at this stage.

In Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangasamy Pillai (3) a decree had been passed against the father of the plaintiffs on the basis of a hypotheaction bond. The plaintiffs had been made parties to that suit; but they alleged that they were minors at the time and had been wrongly represented as majors. They therefore sued for a declaration that the debt for which the decree had been obtained was not binding on the family and the decree itself was a nullity. They further prayed for an injunction restraining the decree holder from executing the decree. The Courts below had held that ad volerm court-fee was payable. On second appeal, it was contended, firstly, that the suit was really a declaratory one and secondly that even if the prayer for injunction was considered to be a consequential relief, the plaintiffs were entitled to value the relief as they liked under s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act and therefore ad valorem court-fee was in any case not payable on the amount of the decree. The case came before a Division Bench which referred three questions to a Full Bench for opinion The first of these, which is the only one relevant to the point now under discussion, was as follows:

"Whether a suit for a declaration that an instrument of mortgage or sale executed by the plaintiff or a decree that has been passed against the plaintiff for a debt, is not binding, is a declaratory suit only."

The Full Bench held that as the plaintiffs had in terms claimed not only a declaration but also an injunction which was a consequential relief, the case clearly fell under s. (iv) (c). In this aspect, the above question did not really arise. They, however, went on to answer the above question which had been referred to the Full Bench viz., whether (even apart from the injunction) the suit for a declaration that a certain decree or instrument to which the plaintiff was a party was not binding on him could be considered to be a purely declaratory suit. They referred to Tacoordeen Tewarry v. Ali Hossain Khan (19) a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, in which the plaintiffs asked for confirmation of thier possession of certain villages after setting aside a sale as fraudulent. It was held by their Lordships in that case that the prayer for setting aside the sale which was contained in the plaint was itself a substantive relief. Relying on this and certain other authorities, the Full Bench came to the conclusion that a suit of the kind referred to in the question as stated above involved a consequential relief in the shape of the setting aside the decree or the instrument to which the plaintiff was a party and hence it must be looked upon as a declaratory decree with a consequential relief within the meaning of s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act. It will appear from the above that the only case which the Full Bench had to consider was that of a plaintiff who sued for a declaration that an instrument of sale or mortgage executed by him or a decree passed against him was not binding on him. The converse case, viz., one in which the plaintiff is not a party to a mortgage or sale, which he seeks to get rid of, was not before the Full Bench and was not considered by them at all. There are a few remarks about the converse case in the referring order of the Division Bench but even these can hardly be considered to be tantamount to expression of any definite opinion. All that the Division Bench said on the point was as follows :

"Where a party executes a document or a decree is passed against him, prima facie such deed or decree is binding on him Until it is set aside it cannot be treated as void. The decree therefore, declaring that the deed or decree is not binding on the plaintiff has the effect of the cancellation of the deed or decree. It does not appear to us to be a mere declaratory decree. The case might be different where a declaration is sought by a person who is not a party to the bond or the decree. In a case like that the suit may properly be regarded as one for declaration but in the other case, it is more properly a suit to get rid of an already existing obligation."

The Full Bench did not refer to the latter class of cases at all and expressed no opinion about them. It will thus appear that in the Full Bench decision there is no warrant for the proposition that where a person who is not a party to a decree or instrument sues to have it declared null and void, the suit must be looked upon as one for a declaration without any consequential relief and as such chargeable with a court-fee of Rs. 10 only. In Bua Ditta v. Ladha Mal 54 Ind. Cas. 833 (18), Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangasamy Pillai (3) was apparently considered to be as an authority in support of the proposition that in cases where the plaintiff, who is not a party to a decree or instrument, seeks to set it aside the suit may be regarded as one for a declaration only. But as pointed out above, there is nothing in the report of this case beyond the remarks in the referring order quoted above to support the view. The remarks on this point in Bua Ditta v. Ladha Mal, 54 Ind. Cas. 833 (18) were moreover really obiter, as the plaintiff in that case was a party to the decree sought to be set aside. The decision in Nihal Devi v. Rai Chuni Lal (14) was apparently based chiefly on Amin Chand v. Sant Murli Dhar (13) and Bua Ditta v. Ladha Mal, 54 Ind. Cas. 833 (18) and most of the subsequent rulings of this Court seem to have merely followed that case without further examination of the point.

In three recent rulings, however a different view has been expressed viz. in Mahomed Hayat Khan v. Firm Jagpat Rai Babu Ram (20) Sohindar Singh v. Shanker Das (21) and Narain Das v. Firm Har Sukh Das Chhog Mal, 152 Ind. Cas. 847 (1) (22) I shall therefore now proceed to consider these cases. In Mahomed Hayat Khan v. Firm Jagpat Rai Babu Ram (20) the plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was the owner of a certain house and that the mortgage deed in respect of it executed by the defendants was ineffective against him being null and void. The plaintiff had paid a court-fee of Rs. 10 only treating the suit as a purely declaratory one, but it was held by the Division Bench that the suit fell under s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act as in the circumstances it was necessary not only that he should get a declaration that he is the owner, but that he should pray for the cancellation of the mortgage. The facts of this case have not been given fully and the point is not discussed at length. The plaintiff was apparently not a party to the mortgage deed and it is not explained why it was necessary for him to get the mortgage deed cancelled. The case-law on the point has also not been considered. In Sohindar Singh v. Shankar Das (21) the facts were as follows : The grandfather of the plaintiff Ramdass mortgaged certain property alleged to be ancestral. The mortgagee brought a suit on the mortgage impleading the sons of Ramdass as his legal representatives. The suit was decreed and the property was sold in execution. The plaintiff, who was a minor, sued for a declaration that the decree and the sale were invalid as the original mortgage debt was either fictitious or raised for immoral purposes. He treated the suit as one for a declaration without consequential relief, and paid a court-fee of Rs. 10; but it was held by the Division Bench, that the suit fell under s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act. In this case also, the question of court-fees is not discussed at any length. But so far as I can see, the reason why the Division Bench held the case to be not purely declaratory was that the plaintiff was represented by his father in the previous suit by the mortgagee and it was therefore not sufficient for him merely to ask for a declaration that the decree or the sale was not binding on him, but it was necessary also to ask for a consequential relief invalidating the decree and the sale.

(22) 152 Ind. Cas. 847 (1); 7 R L 334.

The case was thus treated on the same footing as one in which a person who is a party to a decree or a sale seeks to set it aside.

In Narain Das v. Firm Har Sukh Das Chhoq Mal, 152 Ind. Cas. 847 (1)(22) another Division Bench of this Court held that a plaint in a suit for a declaration that a decree could not be executed against the plaintiffs on the ground that they were not parties to it must pay ad valorem court-fee under s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act. The facts of this case are not however very clear. The ruling purports to follow Bindraban v. Punjab National Bank Ltd (23) but in that case, the plaintiff was seeking to set aside a decree which was passed against him. So far as the other High Courts or Chief Courts in India are concerned, it will be sufficient to refer to two recent Full Bench decisions of the Chief Court of Lucknow in which the case law on the subject has been reviewed, viz Roop Rani v. Bithal Das (8) and Bepin Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (17). In the former case the questions referred to the Full Bench were:

"1. Whether the question of proper court-fee payable in a suit is to be determined mainly on the language of the relief claimed in the plaint or on the substance of the claim to be gathered from the whole plaint; and 2. Whether a consequential relief should be deemed to be implied in the prayer for declaration claimed in the present suit and the plaint should therefore bear an ad valorem court-fee or whether it should be treated merely as a declaratory suit governed by Art. 17 (iii) of Sch. II, Court Fees Act"

As regards the first question, the principle that the substance of the plaint taken as a whole must be considered and not merely the language in which the relief asked for is expressed, was affirmed. As to the second question, it may be stated that in the case referred to the Full Bench the plaintiff, who was the minor son of one Mannu Lal, sued for a declaration that a partition decree obtained by his father as his guardian was 'collusive, illegal and void.' The Full Bench held after a review of the case law that although consequential relief was not expressly asked for it was implicit in the declaration asked as the plaintiff was a party to the partition decree which was impugned, and hence the suit should be treated as one for a declaration with consequential relief. It was held that when a person who is a party to a decree asks for a declaration about the decree being illegal and void, the grant of such a declaration in his favour necessarily has the effect of setting aside the decree and relieving him of his objections under it, and hence the relief is not of a purely declaratory character. In Bepin Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (17) the case referred to the Full Bench was the converse of that dealt with in Roop Rani v. Bithal Das (8). The question referred to the Full Bench in that case was a follows:

"When a plaintiff not party to a decree seeks a declaration that he is not bound by that decree or that a decree-holder cannot proceed against certain property, is he seeking to obtain a declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed within the meaning of s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, and is he therefore bound to pay court-fees accordingly."

It was pointed out that it did not follow logically from the decision in Roop Rani v. Bithal Das (8) that when a person who is not a party to a decree sues for a declaration that it is null and void, the suit must be treated as a purely declaratory one without any consequential relief. It was further pointed out that the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangasamy Pillai (3), also did not support any such proposition. The Bench eventually held that the true criterion for deciding whether a suit was a purely declaratory one or not was not whether the plaintiff was or was not a party to the decree which is impugned but whether the suit is or is not a declaratory one of the type as covered by s. 42, Specific Relief Act. Reliance was placed in support of this conclusion chiefly on the remarks of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court, in Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (24). The main relief asked for in Deokli Koer v. Kedar Nath (24) was as follows:

"That it may be declared that the registered deed, dated June 1, 1896, for Rs. 14,000, executed by defendant No. 9 in favour of the father and ancestors of defendants Nos. 1 to 8, is collusive, nominal, invalid, fraudulent and without consideration; that the decree passed on the basis thereof which is pending execution in No. 83 of 1909 in the first Court of Subordinate Judge at Arrah has been collusively and fraudulently obtained and it is ineffectual inoperative and invalid; and that for the satisfaction of the said decree, the mortgaged property in question mentioned in said decree cannot be sold."

With reference to this relief, the learned Chief Justice remarked as follows:

"It is in this section (s. 42, Specific Relief Act that the law as to merely declaratory decrees applicable in the circumstances of this case is now to be found ..... We have to be guided by it provisions as they are expressed. The sectio does not sanction every form of declaration but only a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property; it is the disregard of this that accounts for the multiform and, at times, eccentric declarations which find a place in Indian plaints... Now what are the declarations that are sought in this case. None relate to the plaintiff's legal character; so only those are permissible which relate to 'any right as to any property.' Of the declaration in the first prayer of the plaint none as expressed, is a declaration of this character it may be that the proposition at which the plaintiff aims is in some measure involved in those declarations but that is not what is sanctioned by s. 42."

Applying this test, the learned Judges of the Lucknow Chief Court held that the suit before them did not fall under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, and therefore was not a suit for merely a declaratory relief. The Full Bench accordingly answered the question referred to them as follows :

"The question whether a decree sought by a plaintiff is a mere declaratory decree without any consequential relief coming under Art. 17 (iii) of Sch. II, Court Fees Act, or whether it is a decree with consequential relief governed by s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, depends not gon whether or not the plaintiff was a party to the decree which he is seeking to avoid but on whether or not the relief claimed comes under s. 42, Specific Relief Act."

With the greatest respect, I must say that I find it difficult to understand the above conclusion. There seems to be divergence of judicial opinion on the question whether a declaratory suit is maintainable in India apart from the provisions of s. 42, Specific Relief Act, but assuming for the sake of argument that the section is exhaustive of the cases in which a declaratory decree may be asked for, it is difficult to see, how it follows that when a plaintiff prays for a declaration, which does not fall under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, the suit ceases to be a declaratory one. If a plaintiff asks for a declaration that does not fall under s. 42, the result may be that his suit may be liable to be dismissed if according to law he is not entitled to ask for such a declaration. But I do not see how that can affect the question of court-fees. The question of court-fees has to be decided on the suit as framed. If the plaintiff is asking for a mere declaration without any consequential relief, prima facie, he is entitled to sue on a court-fee of Rs. 10 only. The case may be different if it is found that although the plaintiff has asked for what is, in form, a declaratory relief that relief includes in reality some other relief of a consequential character. In such a case, the suit may rightly be held to be in substance a suit for a declaration with consequential relief as held by the Full Bench of the Lucknow Chief Court in Roop Rani v. Bithal Das (8). But if no such consequential relief is necessarily included in the declaration asked for, I do not see why the suit should not be treated as purely declaratory. In Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (24), on which reliance was placed by the Full Bench in Bepin Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (17), it was no doubt held that the declaratory reliefs claimed did not fall under s. 42; but the declarations asked for in that case included substantive reliefs. The plaintiff was suing for a declaration (i) that a certain sale was collusive, nominal and invalid, (ii) that decree passed on the basis thereof had been fraudulently and collusively obtained and was ineffectual, inoperative and invalid and (iii) that for the satisfaction of the said decree, the mortgaged property was not liable to be sold.

As pointed out already, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tacoordeen Tewarry v. Ali Hossain Khan (19), that a prayer for the setting aside of a sale is in itself a 'substantive relief.' It is therefore clear that in Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (24), the plaintiff was really asking not merely for a declaration but also for substantive reliefs. The learned Chief Justice further drew attention to the fact that the plaintiffs had obtained an interim injunction in the course of the suit restraining the defendants from enforcing their rights under the decree. This also indicated that the plaintiffs' real object was to get rid of the effect of the sale and the decree. According to the test laid down by the Full Bench in Roop Rani v. Bithal Das (8), the substance of the plaint and not merely, the language of the relief claimed is to be considered in determining the question of court-fee and according to this test, the declarations claimed in Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (24) were rightly held to involve substantive reliefs. It seems to me, that in drawing attention to the fact that a plaintiff is not ordinarily entitled to sue for a declaration unless the case falls within the purview of s. 42, Specific Relief Act, Sir Lawrance Jenkins, the learned Chief Justice who delivered the judgment in Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (24), was probably merely pointing out that the section may be used as one of the tests for deciding whether the plaintiff is suing for a mere declaration or something more. If it is found that the plaintiff is suing for a declaration which does not fall under s. 42 it will probably be disclosed in most cases on examination of the substance of the relief claimed that he is really suing for some other relief and has merely expressed it in the form of a declaration to evade payment of higher court-fees. But it may also happen that the plaintiff being ill-advised sues for a declaration which does not fall under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, but which at the same time does not, in fact, involve any other relief excepting a declaration. In such a case, I see no reason why he should pay a court-fee of more than Rs. 10. If it is held that the declaration asked for cannot be granted because it does not fall under s. 42, the result, I think, should be dismissal of the suit on that ground, and not assessment of a higher court-fee. It may be observed here that the Court Fees Act was passed in 1870, while the Specific Relief Act, was passed in 1887. Section 42, Specific Relief Act, was therefore not in force when the Court Fees Act was enacted. The declaratory suits referred to in the Court Fees Act cannot therefore be taken to be necessarily those covered by s. 42 only.

It seems to me that neither the answer to the question whether ths plaintiff is or is not a party to the decree or the deed sought to be declared as null and void, nor to the question whether the declaration sought does or does not fall within the purview of s. 42, Specific Relief Act furnishes a satisfactory or conclusive test for determining the court-fee payable in suit of this description. When the plaintiff is a party to the decree or deed, the declaratory relief, if granted, necessarily relieves the plaintiff of his obligations under the decree or the deed and, hence it seems to have been held in such cases, that the declaration involves a consequential relief. In cases, where the plaintiff is not a party to the decree or the deed, the declaratory relief does not ordinarily include any such consequential relief. But there are exceptional cases in which the plaintiff though not a party to the deed or the decree is nevertheless bound thereby. For instance, when a sale or mortgage of joint family property is effected by a manager of joint Hindu family, the alienation is binding on the other members of the family (even if they are not parties to it) until and unless it is set aside. Similarly a, decree passed against the manager will be binding on the other members of the family. If therefore a co-parcener sues for a declaration that such an alienation or decree is null and void the declaration must I think, be held to include consequential relief in the same way as in those cases in which the plaintiff is himself a party to the alienation or the decree, which is sought to be declared null and void. The case dealt with in Sohindar Singh v. Shankar Das (21) seems to have been of this decription. The case of an alienation by a mutwalli of waqf property would also appear to stand on a similar footing. In the case of waqf property, it is only the trustee or the mutwalli who can alienate the property. If he makes an alienation it is binding on all concerned, until and unless it is set aside. If therefore a person sues to get such an alienation declared null and void, he can only do so by getting the deed invalidated. The relief claimed in such cases also may therefore be found to include a consequential relief.

After carefully considering the matter, it seems to me that the true criterion for determining the question of court-fee in cases of this description is the substance of the relief claimed as disclosed by the plaint, taken as a whole. If the relief so disclosed is a declaration pure and simple and involves no other relief the suit would fall under cl. (iii) of Art. 17 of Sch. II, Court Fees Act and the court-fee payable would be Rs. 10 only. At the initial stage of determining the court-fee on a plaint, the question whether the declaratory suit is liable to be dismissed either because it does not fall within the purview of s. 42, Specific Relief Act, or, because the plaintiff has failed to sue for a further relief which was open to him or for some other reason does not seem to me to arise. That question will arise only after the necessary court fee on the true relief as disclosed by the plaint is paid and the plaint is properly before the Court. In such a case therefore if after the payment of the court-fee, it is found that the declaration prayed for cannot be granted according to law for any such reasons as are mentioned above, the suit may be liable to be dismissed on that ground. If on the other hand, it is found that the declaratory relief claimed involves a consequential relief within the meaning of s. (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, it will be for the plaintiff to state the amount at which he values the relief as provided in that section. For instance, if a plaintiff sues for a declaration that a certain decree passed against him is null and void and is incapable of being executed against him, the latter part of the declaration may be looked upon as a consequential relief resulting from the former.

Lastly, there may be cases, where the declaration asked for is merely a surplusage and the so-called consequential relief is in reality an independent substantial relief. For instance, if a person sues for a declaration that the defendant is liable to pay him money due on a certain bond and also asks for recovery of the amount, or asks for a declaration that he is the owner of certain property and entitled to its possession and asks for recovery of the property, the reliefs for the recovery of the amount or for possession cannot properly be treated as consequential reliefs which can be valued arbitrarily by the plaintiff under s. 7 (iv) (c).

It seems obvious that the consequential relief referred to in s. 7 (iv) (c) could not mean a substantive relief the valuation of which is separately provided for in the Court Fees Act. If it were so held, plaintiff could easily evade payment of the necessary court-fee on the substantive relief by prefacing it with a declaration as to his rights. Every suit involves the establishment of certain rights of the plaintiff as a necessary preliminary to the grant of the relief claimed by him. But the addition of a prayer for a declaration as to such rights cannot convert a suit for a substantive relief into one for a 'declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed for' within the meaning of s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act. It is significant that the valuation of the relief in cases falling within the scope of s. 7 (iv (c) is left to the plaintiff. This is presumably because the 'consequential relief' contemplated by the section is some ancillary relief to which the plaintiff becomes entitled as a necessary result of the declaration, but for which no separate provision is made in the Act. The essence of the relief in such cases lies in the declaratory part and the consequential relief being merely an auxiliary equitable relief, its valuation seems to have been left to the plaintiff.

The meaning of the expression consequential relief as used in s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, was recently considered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court (consisting of five Judges) in Kalu Ram v. Babu Lal (7), and it was held that the expression 'consequential relief' means some relief, which would follow directly from the declaration given the valuation of which is not capable of being definitely ascertained and which is not specifically provided for anywhere in the Act and cannot be claimed independently of the declaration as a 'substantial relief.' It follows therefore that if the relief claimed in any case is found in reality to be tantamount to a substantial relief and not a mere 'consequential relief' in the above sense the plaintiff must pay court fee on the substantial relief. The above appears to me the appropriate answer to the main question of law which requires decision in this case. Applying the above test, we have now to see what would be the proper court-fee payable in the present case. As stated above, the plaintiff sued in this case for a twofold declaration viz. (i) that the property described in the plaint is waqf and (ii) that the alienations which defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have effected in favour of defendants Nos. 3 to 10 are null and void and are ineffectual against the waqf property.

The first part of the relief viz., that it be declared that the property in dispute is waqf is purely declaratory and there is no suggestion that it involves any consequential relief. Had it stood by itself a court-fee of Rs. 10 would undoubtedly have been sufficient. The second part of the declaration however stands on a different footing. The plaintiffs wish to have the alienations of the waqf property to be declared null and void and ineffectual as against the waqf property. In other words they want to relieve the property entirely from the effects of the sales. The alienors as well as alienees are parties to this suit and if the declaration prayed for is granted, it will be binding on them. After the declaration, neither of the parties to the alienations will be able to treat the alienations as subsisting and valid. The effect of the declaration in the circumstances will therefore be nothing short of cancellation or the setting aside of the alienations. The averments in the plaint also show that this is the real object of the suit. The position is different when the plaintiffs merely sue for a declaration that a certain alienation has no effect on their rights. I am of opinion that in substance, the second part of the relief as claimed in this case is tantamount to the setting aside or cancellation of the alienations referred to in the plaint. In the circumstances the relief claimed by the plaintiffs cannot be treated as a purely declaratory one.

The learned Counsel for the appellants conceded in the course of his arguments that the present suit did not fall within the purview of s. 42, Specific Relief Act. But he contended that even apart from that section declaratory suits are maintainable in this country and the present suit is of that category. In support of this contention, he relied chiefly on two rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State (25), and Pratap Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (26). Neither of these rulings, however, appears to me to bear out the contention of the learned Counsel. It may be pointed out at the outset, that neither of these two cases deals with the questions of court fees and they are therefore, strictly speaking, hardly relevant for deciding as to what suits may be considered to be 'declaratory' for the purposes of s. 7 (iv) (c) and Sch. II, Art. 17, Court Fees Act. However, even otherwise they do not seem to me to support the position taken up by the learned Counsel. In the Madras case the plaintiff prayed that a certain order passed by the Govt. was 'ultra vires and illegal and of no binding effect on the plaintiff.' It asked for no further relief. It was therefore contended before their Lordships that the plaint sinned against the Specific Relief Act, which forbids the Court to entertain a suit for a declaratory decree, which may be followed by a consequential relief unless that relief was specifically asked for. With reference to this contention their Lordships observed as follows:

"Now in the first place it is at least open to doubt whether the present suit is within the purview of s. 42, Specific Relief Act. There can be no doubt as to the origin and purpose of that section. It was intended to introduce the provisions of s. 50, Chancery Procedure Act of 1852, 15 & 16 Vict, cap. 86, as interprated by Judicial decision. Before the Act of 1852, it was not the practice of the Court in ordinary suits to make a declaration of right except as introductory to relief which it proceeded to administer. But the present suit is one to which no objection could have been taken before the Act of 1852. It is, in substance, a suit to have the true construction of a statute declared and to have an act done in contravention of the statute, rightly understood, pronounced void and of no effect. That is not the sort of declaratory decree which the framers of the Act had in their mind"

Their Lordships added that even if the Specific Relief Act applied, the suit would not be open to any objection, as no further relief was open to the plaintiff in the circumstances of the case. It will appear from the above that their Lordships considered that the suit before them was not really a suit for a mere declaration as the suit was in substance to have the true construction of a statute declared and to have an act done in contravention of the statute pronounced void and of no effect. The latter part of the relief cannot be considered to be declaratory, as the plaintiff sought thereby to relieve himself of the effects of the illegal act done by the Govt. It was apparently for this reason that their Lordships considered that this was not the kind of declaratory decrees contempleted by s. 42, Specific Relief Act. The position as regards declaratory decrees in India before the enactment of s. 42, Specific Relief, Act, was considered at length by their Lordships of tha Privy Council in Strimathoo Moothoo Vijia Rangoonadah Ranee v. Dorasinga Tever (27). At that time s. 15, Civil P. C. of 1859, which was then in force provided that "no suit shall be open to objection on the ground that a mere declaratory decree or order is sough thereby and it shall be lawful for the Civil Courts to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief."

Their Lordships had to consider whether this section implied that Courts in India had unrestricted power to grant declaratory decrees when no consequential relief was claimed. The conclusion arrived at by their Lordships seems to be that the position in India was the same as that in England under s. 50, Chancery Procedure Act of 1852 (15 and 16 Vict., cap. 86) and that a declaratory decree ought not to be made unless there is a right to some consequential relief, which, if asked for, might have been given by the Court or where, in certain circumstances a declaration of right was required as a step to relief in some other Court: see Strimathoo Moothoo Vijia Ragoonadah Ranee v. Dorasihga Tever (27) at p. 187*; also Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho (28), at p. 111; Sadut Ali Khan v. Khaje Abdool Gunnee (29) Section 15, Civil P. C., 1859, was repealed by the Specific Relief Act in 1877 and s. 42 of that Act seems to have widened the scope of the declaratory relief. Under s. 42 a person may sue for a declaration as to his legal character or his right to any property even when no further specific relief is open to him; while before the enactment of that section it was not the practice to grant delaratory decrees unless such further relief was open to the plaintiff. This provision in s. 42 seems to have been introduced to enable a person to remove a cloud on his status or title in certain circumstances even when no further relief is open to him at the time. It will thus appear that it is only under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, that Courts in India can grant declaratory relief even when no other specific relief can be claimed by the plaintiff. This seems to be the view accepted by their Lordships of the Privy Council also in Sheoperson Singh v. Ramnandan Prasad Singh (30) at p. 704. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Sir Lawrence Jenkins and he had elaborated the same view previously as Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court in Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (24).

The second ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council, which was relied on by the learned Counsel for the appellants, viz., Pratap Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (26), seems to be clearly distinguishable. In that case, the plaintiffs had claimed not only that certain decrees were not binding on them, but that "they might be restored to the position held by them prior to December 15, 1899—the date on which the decrees were passed," see p. 488 of the report. Their Lordships held that s. 42, Specific Relief Act, was not applicable and actually passed a decree, setting aside the previous decrees and restoring the plaintiffs to their original position: see p. 499 of the report. It will thus appear that their Lordships considered the relief prayed for to be in substance one for setting aside the decrees which had been passed against the plaintiffs and was therefore not purely declaratory. Both the cases relied on by the learned Counsel, viz., Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State (25) and Pratap Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (26), were thus in substance suits for a declaration coupled with a consequential relief and they do not support the learned Counsel's contention that it is open to a plaintiff to ask for a purely declaratory decree apart from the provisions of s. 42, when no consequential relief is open to the plaintiff and none is prayed for. On the other hand, they go rather to support the conclusion arrived at above, viz., that in deciding whether a suit is purely declaratory, the substance and not merely the language or the form of the relief claimed should be considered.

The next question for determination is the category under which the present suit falls for the purposes of the Court Fees Act. It has been urged on behalf of the appellants and if it is held that the suit is not purely declaratory, then it must be treated as a declaratory suit with "consequential relief" within the scope of s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, and under that section the plaintiffs would have the option to place any value on the relief they like for the purposes of court fee. I would hold that the relief as to the setting aside of the alienations, cannot be properly treated as a "consequential relief" in the circumstances of this case. The expression "consequential relief" is not defined in the Court Fees Act, but the meaning of this expression has been considered and explained by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court (consisting of five Judges) in Kalu Ram v. Babu Lal (7), as stated above. According to the definition of the expression as given in that ruling, the relief claimed in this case cannot, in this case cannot, in my opinion, be called "consequential relief." In the present case the only part of the relief claimed that can be said to be purely declaratory is that in which the plaintiffs ask for a declaration that the property in dispute is waqf. But the other part of the relief—which as shown above amounts to the setting aside or cancellation of the alienations—cannot be said to follow directly from that declaration. For, it is not disputed that the alienors had the power in this case to alienate the property for certain purposes. The declaration that the property is waqf would not therefore by itself entitle the plaintiffs to to ask for the cancellation of alienations. Nor can it be said that the relief as to cancellation of alienations cannot be claimed independently as a 'substantive relief' or that it is incapable of valuation. It has been already stated above that it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tacoordeen Tewarry v. Ali Hossain Khan (19), that the setting aside of a sale is a 'substantive' relief.

As regards the valuation of the relief as to cancellation of the alienations, it was held by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case referred to above, viz., Kalu Ram v. Babu Lal (7), that such a relief falls neither under s. 7 (iv) (c) nor under Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii), Court Fees Act, but under the residuary article Sch. I, Art. 1 of that Act. I am therefore of opinion that the relief claimed in this case cannot be treated as a declaration with a 'consequential relief', falling within s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act. In view of the meaning of the expression 'consequential relief' as explained in Kalu Ram v. Babu Lal (7), the reliefs claimed in the present case appear to me to be (i) a declaration that the property is waqf and (ii) a substantive relief in the shape of the setting aside of certain alienations. The court-fee of Rs. 10 would be sufficient for the former relief, but the latter relief would require ad valorem court-fee on the value of the subject-matter of the sales. It was not disputed before that the value of the property sold was about ten lacs and the plaintiffs themselves had valued the relief at this figure in the plaint for the purposes of jurisdiction. The present case is one of a so-called family trust and the object of the plaintiffs as disclosed by the plaint seems to be to get rid of the effect of certain alienations made by their relations (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) and to make the property once more available for the benefit of the family. In the circumstances, the order of the trial Court demanding court-fee on the value of the property seems to be justifiable.

The above conclusion is based on the view that the relief claimed in this case does not fall under s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act. I may add, however, that even if the suit were held to fall under s. 7 (iv) (c), it seems to me doubtful whether that would help the plaintiffs in this case. Section 7 (iv) (c), no doubt, lays down that the plaintiffs shall state the value of the relief in the plaint in such cases, in the present case however the plaintiffs have themselves valued the relief in the plaint at rupees ten lacs. They did so, no doubt, for purposes of jurisdiction. All that s. 7 (iv) (c) requires however is that the plaintiff should state the value of the relief in the plaint. It could scarcely have been intended that the plaintiff should value the relief at one figure for jurisdiction and at another for court-fee. Sections 8 and 9, Suits Valuation Act, show that except when specific rules to the contrary have been framed under s. 9, the value for purposes of court-fee and jurisdiction must be the same. The present case, even if it falls under s. 7 (iv) (c), would not fall under the existing rules under s. 9. In the present case, therefore, the plaintiffs were bound to fix the same value on the relief claimed for purposes of court-fee and jurisdiction. Plaintiffs have already fixed the value of the relief in the plaint for purposes of jurisdiction at ten lacs. They had the advantage of having the suit heard by a Court having jurisdiction to try a suit of that value and also of a direct appeal to this Court. The value of the relief was apparently fixed on the basis of the value of the subject-matter of the alienations in dispute, and no reasonable ground has been suggested for allowing the plaintiffs to amend the plaint and put a different valuation on the relief at this stage. The only object of the proposed amendment obviously is to evade payment of court-fee on the value of the relief as stated in the plaint. In Muhamed Hayat Khan v. Firm Jagpat Rai Babu Ram (20) it was held in a similar case that the value stated by the plaintiff for the purpose of jurisdiction should also be taken as the value for purpose of court-fee. In Sri Kishan Das v. Sat Narain (10) a Division Bench of this Court refused to allow the plaintiff to alter the valuation in similar circumstances.

The question whether the plaintiff can put an arbitrary value on the relief claimed in a case falling under s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, is not free from difficulty and there is a conflict of a judicial opinion on it. The Full Bench decision of the Punjab Chief Court in Barru v. Lachman (31), is in favour of the plaintiffs. But that case is distinguishable in so far that a specific value had been fixed on the relief for the purpose of court-fee in that case. That value was held to be proper and it was also decided that the value for jurisdiction should be deemed to be the same as that fixed for the purpose of court-fee. The question as to what is the proper course to adopt when a plaintiff has fixed a reasonable value on the relief for the purpose of jurisdiction with reference to the value of the subject-matter in dispute, but has omitted to fix any value for the purpose of court-fee, was not before the Bench which decided Barru v. Lachman (31). This question, was, however, considered in Muhamed Hayat Khan v. Firm Jagpat Rai Babu Ram (20) and in Sri Kishan Das v. Sat Narain (10) and the decisions in those cases support the view taken by the trial Judge.

There is no doubt that the construction placed on the language of s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, in Barru v. Lachman (31), leads to anomalous results. If it is open to plaintiff to place any arbitrary valuation on the relief in a case falling under s. 7 (iv) (c) and the Court has no power to revise it, it would be apparently open to the plaintiffs to value a suit of the present type which involves rights to property worth ten lacs at one rupee if they choose to do so. Another anomalous result is that while a plaintiff has to pay a court-fee of Rs. 10 in a purely declaratory suit in which no consequential relief is prayed, he could value a suit which includes a consequential relief so low that he may not have to pay a court-fee of more than a few annas. This could scarcely have been the intention of the Legislature. At the same time there seems to be a considerable body of authority in support of the view taken in Barru v. Lachman (31) : see Jhanda Singh v. Gulab Mal Bhagwan Das (32). Probably the remedy lies in an amendment of the language of s. 7 (iv) (c) or in framing suitable rules under s. 9, Suits Valuation Act, for certain classes of cases : cf. Pannalal v. Abdul Gani (33). Be that as it may, it seems to me that the present case can be distinguished from Barru v. Lachman (31) in view of its special features discussed above. I would dismiss the appeal, but in view of all the circumstances leave the parties to bear their costs.

OUDH CHIEF COURT

Second Civil Appeal No 19 of 1938
March 3, 1941
AGARWAL, J.

Rai Sahib Babu PRITHI NATH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

Seth M. H. NOWROJI, PLAINTIFF AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Art. 35 (j)—Suit for compensation for illegal attachment — Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court to try— Suit held exempted from jurisdiction of Small Cause Court —Property wrongfully attached, damaged while in custody of supurdar—Decree-holder held liable for compensation.

A decree-holder in execution of his decree attached a machine belonging not to the judgment-debtor but to the plaintiff. The plaintiff's objection under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. C, was allowed and the machine was ordered to be released and the supurdar in whose possession it was, was ordered to hand it over to the plaintiff. When the plaintiff went to see the machine he learnt that many parts were missing, and some were broken, and the machine had become quite useless. The plaintiff brought a suit against the decree-holder stating in the plaint that he suffered a great loss owing to the improper acts of the decree-holder and the supurdar, that the machine had become useless, and so he was entitled to recover its price; the plaint further stated that the cause of action arose on the day when his machine was attached, on the day it was ordered to be released and on the day he learnt of the damage caused to it :

Held, that the wrongful act of the decree-holder alleged by the plaintiff could be no other but that he caused his machine to be attached in execution of his decree, and although the plaintiff claimed the price of the machine, yet he had assessed the damages on that amount. The suit was therefore for compensation for illegal attachment and exempted from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court.

[Case-law reviewed and relied on.]

Held, further that the decree-holder was liable for compensation. His liability arose because he got the plaintiff's property attached, and he was bound to restore it in the condition it was at the time of the attachment. 137 Ind. Cas. 900 (7), distinguished

S. C. A. against the decree of the Civil Judge, Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, dated September 27, 1937.

Mr. Sri Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ramapat Ram, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree of the Civil Judge, Mohanlalganj, Lucknow.

The appellant Rai Bahadur Babu Pirthi Nath obtained a simple money decree against the respondents Hashim Brothers. He got a lathe attached in execution of his decree. The plaintiff-respondent Seth M. H. Nowrojee preferred an objection under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. C. and claimed the lathe to be his. That objection was allowed and within a year of that order, Seth Nowrojee brought a suit which has given rise to this second appeal.

He stated that his machine was complete and in working condition when it was attached. That after it was ordered to be released in his favour on May 8, 1935 he learnt that some of the parts had broken, and so he applied on May 27, 1935 that the respondent Hardeo Bakhsh Singh who had been appointed supurdar be ordered to hand over the machine to him. That he was ordered by the Court to see the machine in the Golaganj orphanage where the supurdar had taken it, and then he learnt that many parts were missing, and some were broken, and the machine had become quite useless. He stated that he suffered a great loss owing to the improper acts of the decree-holder and the supurdar, that the machine had become useless, and so he was entitled to recover its price Rs. 450. The learned Munsif held that the parts missing were worth Rs. 105-12-0, and that the repairs of the parts broken would cost Rs. 2-8-0. He decreed the suit for Rs 108-8-0. His decree was confirmed in appeal by the Civil Judge.

Three points have been urged before me by the learned Counsel for the appellant. (1) That the suit ought to have been instituted in the Small Cause Court, (2) that the plaintiff's title to the lathe in question was not proved and (3) that he was not liable for the amount claimed.

I take the point of jurisdiction first. Under Art. 35, cl. (j) of the Prov. Small Cause Courts Act a suit for compensation for illegal improper or excessive distress, attachment or search or trespass committed in, or damage caused by, the illegal or improper execution of any distress, search or legal process is exempted from the cognisance of the Small Cause Courts Act. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the suit was not for compensation for illegal improper excessive distress or attachment but was for the recovery of the price of the machine. It is said that the allegations in the plaint disclose a cause of action against the supurdar only, and so it cannot be called a suit for compensation for illegal attachment. It was stated in para. 7 of the plaint that the plaintiff suffered a great loss owing to the improper acts of the decree-holder and the supurdar. It is, therefore, clear that the suit was also for compensation for illegal attachment. The wrongful act of the decree-holder alleged by the plaintiff could be no other but that he caused his machine to be attached in execution of his decree. He stated in para. 9 of the plaint that his cause of action arose on the day when his machine was attached, on the day it was ordered to be released and on the day he learnt of the damage caused to it. The plaintiff, no doubt, claimed the price of the machine, but he had assessed the damages on that amount. I think the suit was for compensation for illegal attachment and therefore exempted from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. The learned Counsel for the appellant has relied on Chakrapharudu v. Venkataramayya, (I. L. R. 22 Mad. p. 457), (1), The facts of that case were that certain movable property was distrained under s. 15 of Act VIII of 1865 (Madras). The owners thereof sued to set aside the distriant, and obtained orders directing the property to be restored, but those orders were not carried out. The owners sued for the value of the property. It was held that the suit was to recover the value of the property illegaly retained. It was on the particular frame of the suit in that case that it was held not to be recognisable by the Small Cause Court. It was held in Bodh Raj v. Secretary of State. (A. I. R. 1926 Lah., p. 150) (2), that "a suit to recover the price of goods wrongfully attached and sold in execution of a decree falls within the purview of Art. 35 (j) and is excluded from the cognizance of Small Cause Court:"

The Madras case was referred to and was distingished. The present case is similar to that reported at p. 306 of I. L. R. 33 All. (Bishambhar Nath v. Gaddar) (3). In that case certain crop was attached and was stolen by the Shahna. It was held that a suit by the owner against the decree-holder to recover the value of the crops and damages was not a suit cognisable by a Court of Small Causes. There is another case of the Allahabad High Court, Rup Kishan v. Sobhi (8 A. L. J., p. 187) (4). In that case the crop attached was sold, and the owner brought a suit for the recovery of its price. It was held that the suit could not be entertained by a Court of Small Causes inasmuch as the Court could not give a decree without deciding whether the attachment was legal or not. The Allahabad case of Bishambhar Nath v. Gaddar (3) has been followed in this Court in Ramphal v. Mathura (19 Oudh Cases, p. 236) (5). In that case the Shahna refused to give the crop attached, and it was held that a suit brought by the owner of the crop against the decree-holder and the Shahna for the price of the crop was not cognisable by the Court of Small Causes. It is argued that it was stated in that case that the decree-holder and the Shahna had colluded, but that would not make any difference in my opinion so far as the point of jurisdiction is concerned. The learned Counsel for the appellant has also relied on Jodha Bijal v. Maganlal Chhaganlal Desai (A. I. R. 1930 Bom. p. 80) (6). That was a case in which the plaintiff had sued to recover the excess amount of rent recovered from him by his landlord together with certain sums for penalty and damages by way of interest.

It was held that the interest was claimed by way of damages for detention of money and not as compensation under cl. (j) of Art. 35 of Prov. Small Cause Courts Act. After considering these authorities I am of opinion that the suit was excluded from the cognisance of Small Cause Court.

The second point argued is that the plaintiff failed to prove his title to the machine in question. Both the Courts have, on a consideration of the oral and documentary evidence on the record, come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's title is proved. This finding of fact is binding on me. It is argued that the sale deed in favour of the plaintiff does not mention the machine in question. This argument is based on the fact that the list of attached property shows that the machine attached was 6 ft. long but lathes of only 6 inches were sold under the sale deed. The learned Civil Judge has explained the discrepancy. He thinks that a lathe 6 ft. long can be one technically called 6 inches. There was further evidence besides the sale deed to prove the plaintiff's title. There was a letter to show that the judgment-debtor, from whose possession it was attached, had taken it on hire from the plaintiff. I see no reason to disturb the finding of the two Courts.

The third point is about the liability of the defendant. The case of Bishambhar Nath v. Gaddar (3) above referred to is an authority against the plaintiff. In that case the Shahna had stolen the property attached but the decree-holder was held liable. In this case the parts of the machine were also removed and broken, while the machine was in the custody of the supurdar, I find no distinguishing features between the two cases, and think that the decree-holder has been rightly held liable. It has been argued that the supurdar was an officer of the Court, and the judgment-debtor ought to have been liable for his actions and not the decree-holder. Reliance is placed for this proposition on 9 O. W. N., p. 571 (Brij Indar Kuar Mst. v. Jai Indar Bahadur Singh Thakur (7). In that case a Receiver was appointed by the Court and certain payments were made by the judgment-debtor to him. The Receiver embezzled the money and disappeared. A question arose whether the judgment-debtor was absolved of his liability by reason of the payment. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that it was not shown to them that the judgment debtor was authorised by any order of the Court to pay the money to the Receiver and the Receiver was not an agent of the judgment-creditor. That case is quite distinguishable. Here there is no question of any payment being made to the supurdar. The decree-holder's liability arises because he got the plaintiff's property attached, and he was bound to restore it in the condition it was at the time of the attachment. I hold that the decree-holder has been rightly held liable. All the points are decided against the appellant.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1—Puisne mortgagee not impleaded in previous suit by prior mortgage, if can disregard decree made in previous suit.

A puisne mortgagee, who is not impleaded in a previous suit by the prior mortgagee, is entitled to disregard the decree made in the previous suit and to fall back upon the original mortgage only. 126 Ind. Mr. J. L. Kapur and S. L. Puri, for the Respondents.

Judgment—The only question that falls to be judged in this case is whether a puisne mortgagee, who is not impleaded in a previous suit by the prior mortgagee is entitled to disregard the decree made in the previous suit and to fall back upon the original mortgage only. Both the trial Judge and the District Judge on appeal have dealt with the matter at length and answered this question in the affirmative and I entirely agree with them. The principle enunciated above is supported by a Division Bench judgment of the Allahabad High Court reported in Nannu Mal v. Ram Charan Lal (1). Mulla in his commentary on the Civil Procedure Code at p. 983 also holds the same view, and so does Chitaley in Vol. III at p. 2/18 (third edition). In fact, these commentators have drawn upon the various authorities of their Lordships of the Privy Council and the other High Courts in India. Even otherwise, I consider that that is the only possible way of dealing with the matter. A person who is not a party to a previous suit cannot be bound by the decree obtained by the plaintiff in that case and when the plaintiff in the original suit is impleaded as a defendant in a subsequent suit, he cannot be allowed to insist upon his previous decree. Sarda Prasad v. Kanhai Lal (2), Balwant Maroti Shingore M. G Gopal Balkrishna v. Kesheorao (3), and Mathra Das v. Amin Chand (4), also lend support to this contention. I, accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs. The cross objections, too, are devoid of force and are hereby dismissed.

RAMANATHAN CHETTIAR—APPELLANT

M. AR. RM. VISWANATHAN CHETTIAR—RESPONDENT

Mortgage—Hindu Law—Joint family—Manager—Mortgage by, on behalf of himself and as karta and guardian of his younger undivided brother—What mortgagee must show in order to bind minor's interest in mortgaged property—Mortgage by karta held was not binding on minor's interest in property mortgaged.

Where mortgage of property of Hindu joint family consisting of two brothers one of whom is minor is executed by the elder brother who is karta for himself and as manager and guardian of his undivided younger brother, stating as consideration the payment of debts of joint family business, the mortgagee, in order to bind the minor's share in the mortgaged property has to show in his suit that there was necessity for the loan, or that he made reasonable enquiry as to the necessity for the loan and that the facts represented to him were such as, if true, would have justified the loan.

The mortgage in suit was executed in 1916, in favour of B by A "for himself and as family manager and guardian of his undivided younger brother R", on the security of certain properties belonging to the joint undivided family. The consideration was stated to have been received "by your obtaining the same and paying the same towards the debts due by our common firm at Colombo." The mortgagee sued A and R on the mortgage. R denied both the continuance of the Colombo business and of the existence of debts of such business in 1916. There was no evidence sufficient to establish—even prima facie—the continued existence of the family business in Colombo in 1916, and the indebtedness of such business and no evidence of any enquiry made by the mortgagee, as to the truth of the representations made to him by A. In answer to the order for discovery, R filed an affidavit to the effect that the account-books called for were not, and never had been, in his possession, or under his control. The mortgagee took no further steps in the matter:

Held, that the mortgage was not binding on the interest of R in the property mortgaged in the absence of evidence as to the position in 1916. The statements of A in his written statement, which were not supported in evidence were of no value against R.

Held, further that the evidence, acquiesced in by the mortgagee negatived any deliberate withholding of account-books and no adverse inference could be drawn.

Messrs. J. P. Eddy, K. C. and J. M. Parikh, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. V. Subba Row, for the Respondent.

Lord Thankerton.—The appellant, who is defendant No 2 in a suit brought by the respondent to enforce a mortgage, appeals from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras dated April 20, 1937, which modified a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Devakottai, dated July 31, 1930.

The mortgage in suit was executed on December 22, 1916, in favour of Ekappa Chettiar by Annamalai Chettiar, who is defendant No. 1 in the present suit, "for himself and as family manager and guardian of his undivided younger brother Ramanathan," the present appellant, for the sum of Rs. 5,000, on the security of certain properties belonging to the joint undivided family. The consideration was stated to have been received "by your obtaining the same and paying the same towards the debts due by our common firm at Colombo."

Chokalingham Chettiar, who had three daughters by his first wife, but no son, adopted defendant No. 1 as his son. After the death of his first wife, he married a second wife, by whom he had a son, the appellant. Chokalingham, who died in the early part of 1910 or sooner, carried on a business in Colombo. The appellant and defendant No. 1 are members of an undivided Hindu family, governed by the Mitakshara Law. In 1916 defendant No. 1 was karta of the family, the appellant being then a minor.

On January 3, 1924, the respondent acquired for Rs. 5,000 the interest of Ekappa Chettiar in the mortgage, and he brought the present suit to enforce the mortgage on March 14, 1927.

The only question in the appeal is whether the mortgage of 1916 is binding on the interest of the appellant in the property mortgaged. There can be no doubt that, in accordance with the principles established by this Board, the respondent, as plaintiff in the suit, is required either to show that there was necessity for the loan, or that the mortgagee made reasonable enquiry as to the necessity for the loan and that the facts represented to him were such as, if true, would have justified the loan. The reason for the loan, as alleged in the mortgage in suit, was the discharge pro tanto of debts due by the family business in Colombo. This involves two questions of fact, namely, the continued existence of the family business in Colombo in 1916, and the indebtedness of such business.

In the opinion of their Lordships there is no evidence sufficient to establish—even prima facie—these facts, and there is no evidence of any enquiry made by the mortgagee, Ekappa Chettiar, as to the truth of the representations made to him by the mortgagor, defendant No. 1. The statements of the latter in his written statement, which were not supported in evidence, are of no value as against the appellant. The respondent relied on three documents, Exs. G. H and J, all dated July 30, 1910, but these are of little or no relevance; they are, if anything, more suggestive of the Colombo business having been wound up in 1910, than of its continuation as a going business after Chokalingham's death. There is literally no evidence as to the position in 1916, and their Lordships find themselves unable to agree with the construction that the High Court have placed on the written statement of the appellant. Their Lordships are unable to read the appellant's pleading as otherwise than a complete, denial of both the continuance of the Colombo business and of the existence of debts of such business in 1916. Nor are their Lordships able to agree with the criticism of the learned Judges as to the non-production of the business books. In answer to the order for discovery, the appellant filed an affidavit on November 16, 1927, to the effect that these documents were not, and never had been, in his possession, or under his control. On November 23, 1927, defendant No. 1 filed an affidavit to the effect that the accounts had been given to the two panchayatdars, both of whom were dead, and that he did not know in whose possession the documents were. On December 5, 1927, the following entry appears on the order sheet,

"petition by plaintiff to direct defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to discover on oath. Statements filed may be taken to be sufficient. Petition closed."

The respondent appears to have taken no further steps in the matter. The learned Judges of the High Court held that the defendants had deliberately withheld this evidence from the Court which was peculiarly within their knowledge, and that the inference was irresistible that had it been produced, it would have been fatal to their case. Their Lordships agree with the view of the Subordinate Judge. The evidence, acquiesced in by the respondent, negatives any deliberate withholding on the part of either defendant; there is no reason why the appellant should have ever had the documents, or have known what they contained, and there is no ground for any adverse inference. There seems little doubt that, if they had not been affected by this point and the construction that they placed upon the written statement of the appellant, the learned Judges would have agreed, as their Lordships do, with the Subordinate Judge's dismissal of the suit as against the appellant.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, that the decree of the High Court so far as it relates to the appellant, should be set aside, and that the respondent should pay the appellant's costs of this appeal and in the High Court.

DISTRICT COUNCIL, AMRAOTI—DEFENDANT—APPLICANT

VITHAL VINAYAK BAPAT—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY

Master and servant—Refusal to pay wages during period of suspension of servant when justified—

Misconduct on part of servant justifying his dismissal condoned by master—Master cannot subsequently claim right to dismiss him or impose any other punishment in respect of that misconduct.

A local body has no more authority and power over its servants and employees than any other person or body unless such powers are expressly conferred by statute. The matter, therefore, must be governed along the ordinary lines of master and servant. An ordinary master not given special powers by statute or by some rule or law flowing from a statute has no power to suspend a servant. He can either dismiss him or continue him in service on fresh terms. In either case the servant is entitled to be paid up to the date of dismissal in the one case or of continuance in service in the other. The master can only justify a refusal to pay the wages during the period of suspension on the ground that he had a right to dismiss the servant because of some wrongful action justifying dismissal or that instead of exercising the right he came to a fresh agreement with the servant under which the servant rather than be dismissed agreed to forego his salary during a certain period and agreed to continue to serve on fresh terms under a fresh contract. But it would be necessary for the master to prove in such a case first, that there is this fresh agreement, and secondly that he was justified in dismissing the servant and thus forcing him into a fresh engagement. [p. 660, col. 2.]

[Case-law referred to]

Once a master has condoned any misconduct which would have justified dismissal or a fine, he cannot after such condonation go back upon his election to condone and claim a right to dismiss him (servant) or impose a fine or any other punishment in respect of the offence which has been condoned. 86 Ind. Cas. 310 (7), relied on. [p. 661, col 2.]

C. R. App. for revision of the decree of the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Amraoti, dated June 22, 1939.

Mr. N. B. Chandurkar, for the Applicant.

Mr. J. R. Mudholkar, for the Opposite Party.

Order. — The defendant is a District Council. The plaintiff is one of its teachers on a salary of Rs. 44 a month. On April 28, 1937, the plaintiff was suspended and was subsequently reinstated on June 12, 1937. The claim is in respect of the plaintiff's salary during the period of suspension which salary the defendant refuses to pay.

The facts are as follows. A report was made against the plaintiff by a member of the District Council. It is not clear when the report was made nor is it clear when the offence to which that report relates was committed. All that we can gather is that the report and the offence were made and occurred sometime before April 24, 1937. The offence complained of in that report was that the plaintiff had abused the office bearers of the Local Board and the District Council. The nature of the abuse was not set forth. The Vice Chairman of District Council acting on this report passed orders suspending the plaintiff on April 28, 1937. The plaintiff was thereupon asked to submit an explanation. He did so and an enquiry appears to have been made because the next thing that we know is that on June 10, 1937, the School Board of the District Council confirmed the action of the Vice-Chairman suspending the plaintiff and at the same time ordered the plaintiff to rejoin his duty on June 12, 1937.

The plaintiff rejoined. He had originally been attached to the Takarkhed School but on reappointment he was posted to Khartalegaon. While there another complaint was made against him in respect of another matter and the District Council thereupon passed a resolution on August 5, 1938, to the effect that the plaintiff should be degraded down to a salary of Rs. 15 a month and that if he did not accept the same his services should be dispensed with. On August 16, 1938, the School Board of the District Council passed a resolution which sets out the resolution of the District Council itself and resolved that the plaintiff be degraded in accordance with the resolution of the District Council and also added that "the period of suspension be treated as a suspension period without allowance."

It is not clear what period this refers to but it appears to have been assumed throughout that the period referred to is the period of suspension which I have mentioned above.

This matter then went to the Deputy Commissioner and he passed an order on April 3, 1939, setting aside the orders of the District Council.

It is contended on behalf of the District Council that it does not know anything about this order of the Deputy Commissioner as it was not referred to in the lower Court. I find however that it is a portion of Ex. D-1 which has been placed on record wholesale. No trouble has been taken to separate out any portion of this voluminous document and it is clear that the whole of it has been tendered in evidence. In any case reference has been made indiscriminately to portions of this document. In the circumstances seeing that it is the defendant's own evidence and seeing that it is a copy of an official document sent by the Deputy Commissioner himself to the Chairman of the District Council, I see no reason why I should not take judicial notice of it.

It is agreed by both sides that there is no written agreement of service in this case. The learned Counsel for the applicant has not been able to refer me to any laws or rules relating to the engagement of teachers and the conditions of their service by the District Council. He asks for an adjournment but in my opinion the case has no merits and I see no reason why the matter should be kept pending any longer.

It is argued in the first place on behalf of the District Council that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction because a servant of the District Council is on the same footing as a servant of His Majesty and holds office at pleasure, consequently the District Council being on a par with His Majesty in this respect the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is barred. For these wide and sweeping claims reliance is placed on Malik Narain Das v. District Board, Jhang (1). Prabhulal Upadhya v. District Board, Agra (2) and R Venkatrao v. Secretary of State for India (3).

It is not necessary for me to decide in this case whether the wide and sweeping propositions which are contained in the argument addressed apply in all cases where there are rules or regulations framed by Govt. That was the position in the Allahabad case, and so far as the Privy Council case is concerned, it is a case in which a servant of the Crown was concerned. It may be that if there is a special statute, or if rules are framed under an Act by Govt. which set out that a servant of a local body shall hold office at pleasure, then the rule enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of servants of the Crown will apply. But in the present case no such rules have been brought to my notice, no such rules were pleaded and no such rules were produced in the lower Court. So far as the Lahore case is concerned, I am not clear whether there are such rules in the Punjab or not If there are, then as I say the matter is distinguishable. If however the learned Judge who decided the Lahore case quoted above meant to state that every employee of a local body was on the same footing as a servant of His Majesty, I am with respect unable to agree. A local body has no more authority and power over its servants and employees than any other person or body unless such powers are expressly conferred by statute. The matter therefore must be governed along the ordinary lines of master and servant.

It is to my mind clear that an ordinary master not given special powers by statute or by some rule or law flowing from a statute has no power to suspend a servant. He can either dismiss him or continue him in service on fresh terms. In either case the servant is entitled to be paid up to the date of dismissal in the one case or of continuance in service in the other. This rule is enunciated in Secretary of State v. Surendra Nath Goswami (4) and Kamini Kumar v. Rebati Raman Das (5) Reliance was also placed on Tikaram v. Gandalal (6). The Nagpur case is not quite in point, but it is of assistance in this way. It decides that a servant is entitled to be paid his wages up to the date of dismissal even if he has not worked in the interval. A servant who is suspended is clearly not working in the interval If therefore a servant who is dismissed is entitled to be paid his wages up to the date of dismissal, it is clear that a servant who has not been dismissed but continued in service has a right to similar treatment.

In an ordinary case of master and servant a master who dismisses his servant has to justify his action in a Court of law if the servant brings an action for wrongful dismissal. If the servant succeeds in showing that the dismissial was without justification, he is entitled either to his wages or to damages If a master has no power of suspension, then he can only justify a refusal to pay the wages during the period of suspension on the ground that he had a right to dismiss the servant because of some wrongful action justifying dismissal or that, inslead of exercising the right he came to a fresh agreement with the servant under which the servant rather than he dismissed agreed to forego his salary during a certain period and agreed to continue to serve on fresh terms under a fresh contract. But it would be necessary for the master to prove in such a case first, that there is this fresh agreement, and secondly that he was justified in dismissing the servant and thus forcing him into a fresh engagement. Not only have these matters not been proved but the order of the Deputy Commissioner shows that there was never at any time any justification for the order of suspension because no proper enquiry was made. That in turn means that there is no proof of any misconduct on the servant's part and as I have said there is no vestige of proof of such misconduct in this case.

Apart from that it is clear from the order of June 10, 1937, that the plaintiff was reinstated in service on June 12, 1937. No conditions were imposed and the plaintiff rejoined service on the strength of that order. There was, therefore, no fresh contract when the plaintiff rejoined. There was no undertaking by him or agreement that he would forego his salary during the period of suspension. There was no agreement that he would continue to serve on a lower salary. The orders in respect of these were not passed till much later, namely on August 5, 1938, but then it was too late, quite apart from the fact that they were passed in respect of another matter. Once a master has condoned any misconduct which would have justified dismissal or a fine, he cannot after such condonation go back upon his election to condone and claim a right to dismiss him (servant) or impose a fine or any other punishment in respect of the offence which has been condoned. This rule is to be found in Middleton v. Playfair (7), and in many other cases.

The reason is obvious. A servant even though he misconducts himself has a right to seek other employment, and it is proper and just that he should be given the earliest opportunity of seeking such fresh employment. As time goes by and he grows older, his chances of obtaining employment grow less and less. Therefore, the rule is that a servant must be dismissed at once or given the chance of serving upon a fresh contract. If no such terms are imposed, then clearly new terms cannot be imposed at some later date after the election to condone has been made, for the simple reason that had these conditions been put forward at the time, the servant might have preferred dismissal and the opportunity of obtaining other service. That is the reason underlying the rule which, in my opinion, is a fair, just and proper one.

For all these reasons it is clear that the order of the lower Court is right. The application is, therefore, dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 15.

The concluding portion of s. 7, Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1939, makes it quite clear that two classes of cases are contemplated, (1) loan advanced and (2) loan based on a document. If the section was meant to limit the amount of interest in all cases to "the amount of loan advanced", the subsequent words "or, if the loan is based on a document the amount of loan mentioned in, or evidenced by such document" would be superfluous. The words "the loan" in the passage "if the loan is based on a document" mean with reference to the previous context, the loan in respect of which the suit is brought; and the word "loan" here must be understood as defined in s. 2, cl. (f). Clearly, therefore, a bond executed for past liability constitutes a loan within the meaning of the Act. In the case of such a bond the amount for which it is executed is "the amount of loan" within the meaning of s. 7 of the Act No doubt the expression "the amount of loan mentioned in, or evidenced by such document" may suggest that to determine the amount of loan one must not go behind the document. But it could never have been the intention of the Legislature, while enacting s. 7, to override the provisions of the Contract Act or the Evi. Act. 187 Ind. Cas. 339 (1), relied on. 187 Ind Cas. 612 (2), explained. [p. 664, col. 1.]

The Bihar Money-lender's Act which was intended to afford relief to the debtors prohibits compound interest only on loan advanced after the commencement of the Act (s. 6). There is no such prohibition with regard to loans advanced before the commencement of the Act. Section 8 of the Act, however, gives a discretion to the Court, in case of loan advanced before the commencement of the Act Section 8 does not lay down any conditions under which the Court may exercise its powers but gives a wide discretion. This discretion, however, cannot be exercised arbitrarily. [p. 664, col. 2.]

Rule 11 of O. XXXIV, Civil P. C., must be read with rr. 2 and 4. O. XXXIV, r. 11 gives a discretion to the Court to allow interest up to the date fixed for redemption under the preliminary decree, and this interest is payable "on the principal amount found or declared due on the mortgage". This latter amount is obviously the amount found or declared due by the preliminary decree. Where the mortgage bond carries compound interest, the preliminary decree, according to the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 2 and r. 4, shall allow compound interest from the date of the bond up to the date of that decree. The Court has no option to disallow interest at the contract rate up to the date of the preliminary decree, unless, of course, the rate of interest is found penal or excessive. For the period subsequent to the date of the preliminary decree, however, the Court has under O. XXXIV, r. 11, the option either to allow or refuse interest. 99 Ind. Cas. 686 (3), referred to. [p. 665, col. 2; p. 666, col. 1.]

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge at Arrah, dated February 10, 1938.

Messrs. N. Khan, T. Nath and Muhammad Hasan Jan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Nirsu Narain Sinha, B. P. Sinha and B. Narain, for the Respondents.

Chatterji, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant No. 1 in a suit which was brought on August 7, 1936, to enforce three simple mortgage bonds dated August 18, 1925, March 10, 1929 and December 14, 1931, which were executed by defendant No. 1 for self and as guardian of his minor son defendant No. 2 for Rs. 8,000, Rs. 5,446 and Rs. 8,351 respectively, carrying compound interest with yearly rests at 11 annas 3 pies per cent. per mensem on the second bond and 11 annas 6 pies per cent. per mensem on the other two bonds. The claim on the first mortgage was Rs. 20,376-6-9, on the second Rs. 10,110-11-9 and on the third Rs. 12,417-3-9. The defendant No. 2 attained majority before the institution of the suit.

The defendant No 3 was impleaded as a subsequent purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property.

The suit was contested by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who filed separate written statements. The defence so far as it is material to this appeal, was that the entire consideration of the mortgage bonds was not received and that the interest was excessive.

The learned Subordinate Judge decreed the claim on the first mortgage in full, on the second for Rs. 9,941-4-9 and on the third for Rs. 12,224-13-6. He also allowed pendente lite interest from the date of the suit till the expiry of the period of grace at the bond rates with yearly rests.

The first point taken on behalf of the appellant is that the entire consideration was not received, and this is confined to the second bond only. The consideration of this bond Ex. 3 (B) is made up as follows :—

	Rs.	A.	P.
(1) Previous dues on a handnote Ex. 4 (A), dated January 5, 1926, for Rs. 1 511-8-0 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum simple ...	2,148	0	0
(2) Previous dues on a handnote Ex. 4 (B) dated May 30, 1927, for Rs 1,500 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum simple ...	1,844	0	0
(3) Previous dues on bahi khata with interest at 12 per cent. per annum ...	1,329	0	0
(4) Paid in cash. ...	125	0	0

The first handnote Ex. 4 (A) and the second handnote Ex. 4 (B) both carried simple interest at 12 per cent. per annum, but at the time of execution of the mortgage bond Ex. 3 (B) the dues on these two handnotes were set off, calculating compound interest at 12 per cent. with yearly rests. The Subordinate Judge disallowed the compound interest and reduced the amount of the dues on the handnotes accordingly. The handnotes were duly proved and were also supported by corresponding entries in the plaintiff's bahi khatas. Out of Rs. 1,329, due on bahi khatas Rs. 1,246-2-9 was principal on which simple interest at 12 per cent. amounted to Rs. 82-13-3. The entries Exs. 6 (I) to 6 (Z) 18 on the debit side of the plaintiffs' bahi khatas show that the total advances made to defendant No. 1 amounted to Rs. 2,592-2-9. The entries Exs. 7 (C) to 7 (G) on the credit side show that the total payments made by defendant No. 1 amounted to Rs. 1,346. There was thus a balance of Rs. 1246-2-9 due from the defendant No. 1. The defendant relies on the entries Exs. 7 (Z) 1 to 7 (Z) 8 on the credit side of the plaintiffs' bahi khatas which show that the defendant No. 1 made payments amounting to Rs. 3,736-8-0 during the period from Pous 1, 1333, (December 1925), to Pous 10, 1336, (December 1928). It is contended that the total sum of Rs. 3,736-8-0 covered by these entries should have been taken into account at the time of execution of the mortgage bond Ex. 3 (B) on March 10, 1929. But on the debit side of the plaintiffs' bahi khatas there are various other entries Exs. B to B (54) showing advances to defendant No. 1 amounting to more than Rs. 4,000 which were quite separate from those that formed the consideration of the mortgage bond Ex. 3 (B). The plaintiffs' evidence is that the accounts were adjusted before the defendant executed the mortgage bond Ex. 3 (B). The defendant is an educated man of some position. He was a Municipal Commissioner nor three years and a member of the District Board, Arrah, for eight or nine years. He was also the Vice-Chairman of the District Board for six or seven months and an Honorary Magistrate with Second Class powers for three years. It is extremely difficult to believe that a man of his position would blindly execute the mortgage bond Ex. 3 (B) without previous adjustment of accounts. Admittedly he has got his own accounts but he did not produce them on the plea that they could not be found. In his written statement he did not specifically allege how much he actually received out of the consideration. He made the vague allegation with regard to all the bonds.

"They advanced small amounts by instalments and after adding up interest and compound interest thereto and rendering incorrect accounts, got the bonds executed for larger amounts."

In the circumstances I have no hesitation in holding, in concurrence with the learned Subordinate Judge, that the bond Ex. 3 (B) was for consideration.

The next point taken is that in determining the actual amount of consideration of the second and third mortgage bonds no interest should have been allowed on the previous dues on bahi khatas. So far as the second mortgage bond Ex. 3 (B) is concerned, I have already shown that the interest charged on the previous dues on bahi khatas amounted to Rs. 82-13-3 only. The consideration of the third mortgage bond Ex. 3 (C) partly consisted of previous dues on bahi khatas amounting to Rs. 913-4-6 including interest. The learned Subordinate Judge reduced this amount to Rs. 888-9-6, calculating simple interest at 12 per cent. per annum on the actual advances. The defendant admits that he agreed to pay interest on the sums borrowed though he says that the rate of interest was 8 annas per cent. per annum on small sums below Rs. 100 and 4 annas per cent. per mensem on sums above Rs. 100. The learned Subordinate Judge did not accept this evidence and allowed simple interest at 12 per cent. per annum. It is quite reasonable. The defendant had borrowed money from time to time and executed the mortgage bonds after adjustment of accounts and there is no reason why no interest should be charged on the previous dues on bahi khatas.

The next contention raised is that under the provisions of s. 7 of the Bihar Moneylenders Act (VII of 1939) the plaintiffs are not entitled to an amount of interest exceeding the principal sum advanced. This objection is confined to the first two bonds only.

Section 7 runs as follows:—

"Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law or in anything having the force of law or in any agreement, no Court shall, in any suit brought by a money-lender before or after the commencement of this act in respect of a loan advanced before or after the commencement of this Act or in any appeal or proceedings in revision arising out of such suit, pass a decree for an amount of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit, which, together with any amount already realised as interest through the Court or otherwise, is greater than the amount of loan advanced, or, if the loan is based on a document, the amount of loan mentioned in, or evidenced by such document."

It will be noticed that this section is expressly limited to interest payable up to the date of the institution of the suit. Interest payable after that date is left untouched.

The principal sum secured by the first mortgage bond Ex. 3 is Rs. 8,000, but the Court below has passed a decree for Rs. 20,376-6-9, being the principal and interest due up to the date of the institution of the suit. Obviously under s. 7 the plaintiffs cannot get a decree for more than Rs. 16,000 as principal and interest due up to the date of the institution of the suit. The principal sum of Rs. 8,000 includes Rs. 11-7-0 as interest charged on previous dues amounting to Rs. 480-9-0. Leaving aside this insignificant sum of Rs. 11-7-0, the principal sum secured by the first bond represents actual advances.

The second mortgage bond Ex. 3 (B) is for Rs. 5,556-0-0 out of which Rs. 125 was paid in cash and the rest was set off against previous dues, as already stated. Disallowing compound interest for the previous dues, the Court below reduced the principal sum to Rs. 5,354-13-0 in respect of which it passed a decree for Rs. 9,941-4-9 including interest up to the date of the institution of the suit. This decree, therefore, is within the limit imposed by s. 7 of the Money-lenders Act.

But it is contended on behalf of the appellant that according to s. 7 the amount of interest must be limited to the amount of loan actually advanced and not to the amount for which the mortgage bond was executed. The total amount of actual advances which formed the consideration of the second bond Ext. 3 (B) was Rs. 4,382-10-9, and it is, therefore, argued that the decree for Rs. 9,941-4-9 exceeds the limit prescribed by s. 7. This contention is based upon the expression 'the amount of loan advanced" used in the concluding portion of the section. But this portion of the section makes it quite clear that two classes of cases are contemplated, (1) loan advanced and (2) loan based on a document. If the section was meant to limit the amount of interest in all cases to "the amount of loan advanced", the subsequent words "or, if the loan is based on a document the amount of loan mentioned in, or evidenced by such document" would be superfluous. The words "the loan" in the passage "if the loan is based on a document" mean with reference to the previous context the loan in respect of which the suit is brought and the word "loan" here must be understood as defined in s. 2 cl. (f). According to this definition, "loan means an advance whether of money or in kind on interest made by a money-lender, and shall include a transaction on a bond bearing interest executed in respect of past liability and any transaction which, in substance, is a loan".

Clearly, therefore, a bond executed for past liability constitutes a loan within the meaning of the Act. In the case of such a bond the amount for which it is executed is "the amount of loan" within the meaning of s. 7 of the Act. No doubt the expression "the amount of loan mentioned in, or evidenced by such document" may suggest that to determine the amount of loan one must not go behind the document. But it could never have been the intention of the Legislature, while enacting s. 7, to override the provisions of the contract Act or the Evi. Act. Upon a proper construction of s. 7, it seems to me that the amount of loan in the second bond Ex. 3 (B) must be taken to be Rs. 5,354-13-0, as found by the Court below. Accordingly the decree passed by that Court does not offend against the provisions of s. 7.

The view I take is in accord with the decision of this Court in Singheshwar Singh v. Medni Prasad Singh, 187 Ind. Cas. 339 (1). It is in no way in conflict with the decision of the Federal Court in Surendra Prasad Narain v. Sri Gajadhar Prasad Sahu 2, in which their Lordships had to deal with transactions on chithas. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff before their Lordships that the amount entered in the last chitha should be taken to be the amount of loan within the meaning of s 7 of the Money-lenders Act. But their Lordships held that the chitha could not be treated as a bond within the definition of loan in s. 2 cl. (f) of the Money lenders Act. Accordingly their Lordships passed a decree only for the total amount of the loan advanced, because the amount repaid by way of interest exceeded the amount of the loan advanced.

The next contention is that compound interest is excessive and should not have been allowed. It may be mentioned that the Bihar Money-lenders Act which was intended to afford relief to the debtors prohibits compound interest only on loans advanced after the commencement of the Act (s. 6). There is no such prohibition with regard to loans advanced before the commencement of the Act. Section 8 of the Act, however, gives a discretion to the Court, in case of loan advanced before the commencement of the Act, to "re-open the transaction, take an account between the parties, and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any interest in excess of nine per centum simple per annum in the case of a secured loan and twelve per centum simple per annum in the case of an unsecured loan".

Section 8 does not lay down any conditions under which the Court may exercise its powers but gives a wide discretion. This discretion, however, cannot be exercised arbitrarily.

As regards the first mortgage bond Ex. 3, the principal sum of Rs. 8,000 represents actual advances except Rs. 11-7-0 only. The rate of interest is 11 annas 6 pies per cent. per mensem compoundable every year. This rate cannot be said to be excessive. There does not seem to be any reason for interfering with this rate under s. 8 of the Money-lenders Act.

With regard to the second mortgage bond Ex. 3 (B), the principal sum as determined by the Court below is Rs. 5,354-13-0 out of which Rs. 4,382-10-9 is the total amount of actual advances, the remaining Rs. 972-2-3 being interest. Thus a little less than one-fifth of the principal amount of the bond represents interest. This interest was calculated at 12 per cent. per annum simple. To allow compound interest on this bond will be rather harsh. It is, therefore, a fit case in which s. 8 of the Money-lenders Act may be applied. I would accordingly allow simple interest at 9 per cent. per annum on the principal sum of Rs. 5,354-13-0 from the date of the bond.

The principal amount of the third bond Ex. 3 (C) is Rs. 8,221-11-0, as found by the Court below. This amount is made up as follows:—

	Rs.	A.	P.
(1) Previous dues on a handnote Ex. 4 (C) 1, dated March 11, 1929, for Rs. 1 300 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum	1,731	2	6
(2) Previous dues on a handnote Ex. 4 (D) 1, dated July 26, 1930, for Rs. 2,545 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum	2,956	7	0
(3) Previous dues on a handnote Ex. 4 (E) 1, dated January 26, 1931, for Rs. 2,000 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum ...	2,219	5	0
(4) Previous dues on bahi khata, Rs. 7,83-8-0 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum	888	9	6
(5) Paid in cash Rs. 426-3-0 ...	426	3	0
Total ...	8,221	11	0

The second handnote Ex. 4 (D) 1 referred to in this account was not for cash consideration but was executed for previous dues on bahi khatas. The previous advances on bahi khatas amounted to Rs. 2,324-5-3 which together with interest Rs. 220-10-9 came up to Rs. 2,545 for which the handnote Ex. 4 (D) 1 was executed. Thus out of the principal sum of Rs. 8,221 11-0 on the third mortgage bond Ex. 3 (C) Rs. 1,387-10-9 represents interest charged at 12 per cent. per annum on the previous advances. The bond carries compound interest at 11 annas 6 pies per cent. per mensem with yearly rests. This is also a fit case in which s. 8 of the Money-lenders Act may be applied. I would accordingly allow simple interest at 9 per cent. per annum on the principal sum of Rs. 8,221-11-0 from the date of the bond.

The last contention on behalf of the appellant relates to interest pendente lite. The Court below allowed pendente lite interest at the contract rate on the total amount of principal and interest which was found due at the date of the institution of the suit. It is contended that this interest should have been calculated on the principal sums secured by the mortgage bonds and not on the total amount that was found due at the date of the institution of the suit. Reliance is placed on O. XXXIV, r. 11 of the Civil P. C, which provides:—

"In any decree passed in a suit for foreclosure, sale or redemption, where interest is legally recoverable the Court may order payment of interest to the mortgagee as follows, namely:—

(a) interest up to the date on or before which payment of the amount found or declared due is under the preliminary decree to be made by the mortgagor or other person redeeming the mortgage (i) on the principal amount found or declared due on the mortgage, at the rate payable on the principal, or, where no such rate is fixed, at such rate as the Court deems reasonable,... ...."

This rule must be read with O. XXXIV, r. 2 and r. 4. Order XXXIV, r. 2 provides—

"(1) In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a preliminary decree—(a) Ordering that an account be taken of what was due to the plaintiff at the date of such decree for—(i) principal and interest on the mortgage,....."

This provision also applies to a preliminary decree for sale which is dealt with in O. XXXIV, r. 4. It is, therefore, clear that the Court shall pass a preliminary decree for principal and interest due up to the date of that decree. The interest must be calculated at the contract rate unless the Court finds that such rate is penal or excessive This was view taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jagannath Prasad Singh Choudhary v. Suraj Mall Dalal (3). Their Lordships held that

"On a preliminary decree for foreclosure of sale under O. XXXIV, rr. 2, 4 of the Civil P. C 1908, a mortgagee is entitled to interest at the rate, and with the rests, stipulated in the mortgage down to the date fixed for redemption by the decree."

Order XXXIV, r. 11 gives a discretion to the Court to allow interest up to the date fixed for redemption under the preliminary decree and this interest is payable "on the principal amount found or declared due on the mortgage". This latter amount is obviously the amount found or declared due by the preliminary decree. Where the mortgage bond carries compound interest, the preliminary decree, according to the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 2 and r. 4, shall allow compound interest from the date of the bond up to the date of that decree. The Court has no option to disallow interest at the contract rate up to the date of the preliminary decree, unless, of course, the rate of interest is found penal or excessive. For the period subsequent to the date of the preliminary decree, however, the Court has, under O. XXXIV, r. 11, the option either to allow or refuse interest.

Now as I am allowing simple interest on the last two bonds, the appellants' objection with regard to pendente lite interest will prevail, so far as these two bonds are concerned. Simple interest at 9 per cent. will be calculated from the date of each of these two bonds up to the date of this decree.

The position, however, with regard to the first bond is different. On this bond compound interest is being allowed. According to s. 7 of the Money-lenders Act the total amount due for principal and interest up to the date of institution of the suit will be Rs. 16,000. Interest will be calculated on Rs. 16,000 from the date of the suit up to this date at the contract rate, that is to say, at 11 annas 6 pies per cent. per mensem compoundable at the end of every year. On the authority of the decision of the Federal Court in Subhanand Chowdhury v. Apurba Krishna (4), already cited, it is contended that pendente lite interest should be allowed on the principal sum only. In that case the contract rate was 12 per cent. compound interest with yearly rests. Their Lordships, in the circumstances of the case, applied s. 8 of the Money-lenders Act and allowed simple interest at 12 per cent. per annum on the principal sum. But in this case, as I have already held, there is no reason for applying s. 8, so far as the first mortgage is concerned.

In the circumstances, I would not allow any interest for the period of grace which I fix as three months from this day.

The result is that the appeal succeeds in part. The plaintiffs will get a mortgage decree (1) on the first mortgage bond Ex. 3 for Rs 16,000 including principal and interest up to the date of institution of the suit together with further interest on that sum at 11 annas 6 pies per cent. per mensem compoundable at the end of every year from the date of the suit up to this date; (2) on the second mortgage bond Ex. 3 (b) for Rs. 5,354-13-0 principal with simple interest thereon at 9 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond up to this date; and (3) on the third mortgage bond Ex 3 (C) for Rs. 8,221-11-0 principal with simple interest thereon at 9 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond up to this date. The plaintiffs will get proportionate costs in the lower Court on the total amount found due on the three bonds at the date of the institution of the suit. Pleader's fee will be calculated according to the direction given by the Court below. So far as this Court is concerned, parties should bear their own costs. No interest will be payable from this date till the expiry of the period of grace. There after the total amount of the decree including costs will carry future interest at 6 per cent. per annum till the date of realisation. Let a fresh preliminary decree be prepared accordingly.

Meredith, J.—I agree.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 1124 of 1938
July 12, 1939
YOUNG, C. J. AND SALE, J.
EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR
versus
RAMJI LAL BUDHA AND OTHERS—CONVICTS—RESPONDENTS

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 302, 149—Number of persons participating in beating man with intention to kill him—Man dying—Man responsible for fatal blow unknown—All, if guilty of murder—Body of six persons with common object to abduct and murder going to house of deceased and separating into two bodies, one for abducting and another for murdering—Murder committed by latter body—Each body held guilty of murder.

Where persons have been found guilty of deliberate intention to murder, there is no justification for refraining from passing the death sentence on all concerned merely because it cannot be said which of the accused struck the fatal blow. 156 Ind. Cas. 786 (1) and 166 Ind. Cas. 1005 (2), relied on.

A body of six persons went to the house of the deceased with the common object of abducting a woman and murdering the deceased. On their arrival they separated into two bodies, one entrusted to abduct and another to murder. The murder was committed by the latter body :

Held, that each gang was guilty of murder under s. 302, I. P. C, as the murder was committed in pursuance of the common object of the unlawful assembly.

Cr. A. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Hissar at Gurgon, dated August 18, 1938.

Mr. M. Sleem, The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Mr. Shabir Ahmad, for the Respondents.

Young, C. J.—Seven persons were placed on trial before the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Hissar, charged under s. 302, I. P. C., read with ss. 149, 366, 365, 147 and 323, I. P. C., with being members of an unlawful assembly on March 6, 1938, at village Kherki-Daula, in the prosecution of the common object of which they murdered Kishen Lal and abducted his wife, Mst. Manbhari. These seven persons are Ramji Lal, his two sons Kishori, aged 18 and Tota, aged 16, and his four cousins, (who are brothers inter se) Umrao, Amin Chand, Udmi and Ghamandi. The learned Additional Sessions Judge found the case as presented by the prosecution proved, but since it was alleged that only Kishori, Umrao and Amin Chand were directly concerned with the murder of Kishen Lal and since it could not, in the opinion of the learned Additional Sessions Judge, be established which of these three accused dealt the fatal blow he convicted these three accused under s. 326 only and sentenced them to six years' rigorous imprisonment. The other four accused were held to have abducted Mst. Manbhari and the learned Additional Sessions Judge considered that it was not established that this abduction was committed in the prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly. He therefcre convicted them under ss. 323 and 342, I P. C., and sentenced them to rigorous imprisonment for six months.

From these convictions and sentences all the accused (except Tota) have appealed. On behalf of the Crown the learned Advocate-General has filed a petition against the acquittal of the accused under s 302, I. P. C., urging that all the accused were members of an unlawful assembly and that as the murder was committed in prosecution of the common object of this assembly all should be convicted of murder. The case for the prosecution is that Mst. Manbhari, P. W. No. 2, was first married to Mannu, brother of Ramji Lal: this Mannu died some 15 years ago : subsequently Mst. Manbhari contracted an intimacy with Kishen Lal deceased and eventually married him by karewa. About a month and a half before the murder, Kishan Lal brought Mst. Manbhari to the village of Kherki-Daula where the accused lived. It is common ground between Ramji Lal accused and the prosecution that Mst. Manbhari was originally married to Ramji Lal's late brother, but Ramji Lal denies that she later contracted karewa with Kishen Lal deceased and alleges that in fact she contracted a karewa marriage with him (Ramji Lal).

In any case, on March 6, 1938, Mst. Manbhari was living with Kishen Lal at Kherki-Daula, where accused also live ; and Ramji Lal appears to have organized this attack on the house of Kishen Lal and Manbhari with the object of abducting Mst. Manbhari, an object in which he certainly succeeded since immediately after this crime Mst. Manbhari was recovered from Ramji Lal's house by the Police. According to the prosecution witnesses the seven accused came in the early afternoon of March 6, 1938 to the residence of Kishen Lal, which consists of a chhappar and a compound. Umrao and Kishori are alleged to have been armed with pharsas (which are in fact chhavis) while the remaining five were armed with lathis. The seven accused divided themselves into two gangs. Three of them, namely Kishori, Umrao and Amin Chand attacked Kishen Lal who was cutting fodder in the chhappar; Umrao opened the attack by striking Kishen Lal on the head with his chhavi, and when Kishen Lal tried to escape Kishori overtook him and gave him another chhavi blow at the back of his neck, while Amin Chand hit him with a lathi. In this way Kishen Lal was beaten to death by these three accused. The medical evidence shows that he sustained nó less than twenty injuries, many on the head, some of which were incised and some of which were contused. According to the doctor, the actual cause of death was a contused wound caused by some blunt weapon on the middle line of the head which fractured the skull.

While these three accused were dealing with Kishen Lal, the other four accused, namely Ramji Lal, Udmi, Ghamandi and Tota, forcibly removed Mst. Manbhari, who received some injuries in the process. She was taken to Ramji Lal's house from where she was recovered by the Police. The first information report was made to the Police station on the same day, by the local safed-posh, Sulaiman Khan. It is a brief statement to the effect that Kishen Lal had been murdered in his compound, but does not give the names of the accused, nor does it mention the abduction of Mst. Manbhari. Since however the first information report was given on hearsay information, the point is of no importance. It is clear from the evidence of Amar Singh, lambardar, P. W. No 20, who arrived at the scene of the occurrence almost immediately after the accused had left, that the names of all the seven accused were mentioned to him at the time by those present and also that Mst. Manbhari had been abducted. This evidence is relevant as being part of the res gestæ. The case for the prosecution depends upon the evidence of four eye witnesses—Mst. Manbhari, P. W. No. 2 (wife of Kishen Lal and the woman who was abducted), Dalu, a boy about 14 and a nephew of Kishen Lal who lived in the same house, Nanda, P. W. No. 4, a near neighbour, who was attracted by the noise of the occurrence and Not Ram, P. W. No. 5, who was at his well about 50 yards from Kishen Lal's courtyard and who also was attracted by the noise from Kishen Lal's house. Of these witnesses Nanda P. W. No. 4 (who seems to have arrived after Not Ram) says that he did not see Kishan Lal being murdered; he only saw the woman Mt. Manbhari being abducted by Ramji Mal, Udmi, Ghamandi and Tota. He says that he then went into Kishen Lal's court-yard and saw Kishen Lal lying dead there. The boy Dalu, P. W. No. 3, and Not Ram, P. W. No. 5, gave evidence which agrees in all essential particulars regarding the whole occurrence including the murder of Kishen Lal. Their evidence corroborates the statement of Mst. Manbhari, P. W. No. 2.

The record does not disclose, and Counsel for the appellants has not been able to draw our attention, to any reason why these depositions should not be accepted. It is true that Dalu, P. W. No. 3, is a boy of about 14 only; but the learned Additional Sessions Judge recorded a note on the record at the time of his examination, that this witness was an intelligent lad and had given his evidence in a convincing and straightforward way. In his judgment the learned Additional Sessions Judge describes Dalu as the "best prosecution witness." Nor is there any reason to doubt the statement of Mst. Manbhari. There can be no doubt that at the time of this occurrence she was living with Kishen Lal as his wife and the fact that she was abducted is proved by her recovery from the house of Ramji Lal by the Police at the beginning of the investigation. The medical evidence shows that she had four contusions and abrasions which support her evidence that she was violently and forcibly removed.

Nanda, P. W. No. 4, appears to be a disinterested witness whose statement there is no reason whatsoever to doubt. As regards Not Ram, P. W. No. 5, he admits that four or five years ago Umrao and Kishori, accused, supported a civil case against his brother. It is suggested that for this reason he might be interested now in taking his revenge on Umrao and Kishori by assisting in their conviction in the present case. From this point of view, it may be that Not Ram's evidence is not disinterested so far as Umrao and Kishori are concerned, but at the same time there appears to be no reason why he should give false evidence against Ramji Lal and his gang as a whole. Even however excluding the evidence of Not Ram there is ample evidence to indicate that the case for the prosecution is proved. In the course of the investigation Kishori accused produced a pharsa or chhavi which, on examination by the Imperial Serologist, was found to be stained with human blood. Also in the course of the investigation three lathis were recovered from various accused, but as they are not proved to be stained with human blood, their recovery is not of any consequence. The only serious point which the Counsel has been able to bring out on behalf of the defence is that Nanda, P. W. No. 4, does not mention, Tota, while Mst. Manbhari, though mentioning Tota in her evidence in Court, stated before the Police during the investigation in her statement recorded on the day of the occurrence, that she did not see Tota. Tota is a lad whose age is given on the record as sixteen; and in the circumstances we are inclined to give him the benefit of the doubt as to his participation in this affair. We therefore acquit Tota and dismiss the Crown appeal so far as he is concerned.

As regards the remaining accused we are satisfied that they participated in this occurrence in the manner stated by the prosecution. The defence evidence which they brought is obviously valueless and has not been relied by Counsel in appeal. It was rightly rejected by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. We are satisfied that, with the exception of Tota, the six accused were members of an unlawful assembly the common object of which was to abduct Mst. Manbhari and murder Kishen Lal; and that in prosecution of that object they did in fact murder Kishen Lal and abduct Mst. Manbhari. We do not agree with the view of the learned Additional Sessions Judge that merely because the accused on arrival at Kishen Lal's house separated into two gangs, each gang can therefore only be held guilty for the acts committed by it. The fact that the accused went together as a body to Kishen Lal's house, and then separated into two bodies, shows that they were participating in an organized attack in which each member had his particular function to perform. The function of Kishori, Umrao and Amin Chand was to deal with Kishen Lal and they in fact dealt with him inasmuch as they beat him to death. The remainder of the gang concentrated on to abducting Mst. Manbhari; but they are nontheless guilty under s. 302 because the murder of Kishen Lal was committed in pursuance of the common object of the unlawful assembly. Nor is the learned Additional Sessions Judge right in applying s. 326, I. P. C, to the participants in the murder of Kishen Lal merely because he thought it was not clear which of the three actual assailants gave him the fatal blow. It is established beyond doubt that Kishori, Umrao and Amin Chand jointly beat Kishen Lal to death. There were no less than twenty injuries on his person, some incised, some contused, indicating that at least two kinds of weapons were used. The doctor says that at least three of the injuries must have been caused by some sharp edged weapon like pharsa (chhavi), and considers that the fatal injury which resulted in the fracture of the skull was caused by a severe blow with a blunt weapon. If the prosecution evidence is correct this blow was probably given by Amin Chand as he was the only one of the three assailants who was armed with a blunt weapon. The point however is immaterial. In the circumstances all the assailants are equally guilty of murder under s. 302, I. P. C. The learned Additional Sessions Judge purports to follow the principle enunciated in "A I R 24 Lah. 653" [A I R 1924 Lah. 654 ?] in convicting under s. 326, I. P. C. This particular ruling is not traceable and it seems that the learned Additional Sessions Judge has misquoted the reference. We desire however to invite the attention of the learned Additional Sessions Judge to Mewa v. Emperor (1) and Chanan v. Emperor (2) in which it was held that where persons have been found guilty of deliberate intention to murder, there is no justification for refraining from passing the death sentence on all concerned merely because it cannot be said which of the accused struck the fatal blow. There are other authorities of this Court which have more than once overruled the view that where a number of accused participate in beating a man to death under circumstances which amount to murder under s. 302 149, I. P. C., the conviction should be under some lesser section than s. 302, I. P. C., merely because it cannot be said which accused is responsible for the fatal blow.

We are satisfied in this case that all the accused except Tota, (to whom we give the benefit of doubt) must be convicted under s. 302, 149, I. P. C. We accept the Crown appeal against the acquittal of all the accused except Tota, and convict them accordingly under s. 302 149, I. P. C. As regards the sentence, we are satisfied that the murder of Kishen Lal was directly committed by Kishori, Umrao and Amin Chand. The murder was deliberate and brutal and we see no extenuating circumstances except for the one fact that Kishori is stated to be a lad of eighteen years of age. For this reason alone we give the lessor sentence of transportation for life to Kishori; but as Umrao and Amin Chand are both grown men we direct that they be hanged by the neck until they are dead. On the ground that Ramji Lal, Udmi and Ghamandi did not directly participate in the murder of Kishen Lal but are constructively guilty, we impose upon them the lesser sentence of transportation for life.

RAMRATAN SINGH AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Bihar Money-lenders Act (III of 1938), s. 11—Order determining instalments, whether appealable.

A decision under s. 47, Civil P. C., is not a decree within the meaning of s. 2 (2) unless it in some way finally determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy. An order determining instalments under s. 11, Bihar Money-lender's Act is not an order which conclusively determines the rights of the parties and consequently no appeal lies from such an order. 56 Ind. Cas. 452 (4) and 10 Ind Cas. 371 (5), relied on. 193 Ind. Cas. 224 (6), explained. [p. 671, col. 1.]

A. from the original order of the Sub-Judge, Gaya, dated July 19, 1939.

Mr. G. P. Sahai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Harinandan Singh, for the Respondents.

Agarwala, J.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtors. The opposite party obtained a decree against the appellants for Rs. 5,470-2-0. On the application of the appellants under s. 11, Bihar Money-lender's Act, the Court fixed instalments for the payment of this decretal debt. The judgment-debtors were to pay Rs. 200 within a week, and Rs. 1,000 on January 1, 1940, and on January 1, of each succeeding year until the debt with interest had been repaid. The judgment-debtors failed to pay the initial sum of Rs. 200 within the week allowed. The Court then extended that time and gave them three weeks within which to make the payment. The payment however was not made within the extended time, although we are told Rs. 150 was deposited later as a part of the initial sum of Rs. 200. No part of the instalment which fell due on January 1, 1940, has been paid. The judgment-debtors attempted to persuade the Court that they were capable of paying only Rs. 300 per annum, and they now appeal against the decision of the Court below on the ground that the instalments fixed are too high.

A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondents that no appeal lies in this case. The respondents referred us to orders which have been passed in two similar cases. In Civil Revision No. 366 of 1939 decided by Wort, J., on December 9, 1939 it was held that no appeal lay against an order under s. 11, Bihar Money-lenders Act. The learned Judge relied on the fact that whereas an appeal against an order under s. 13 of the Act is expressly provided, there is no such provision with regard to an order under s. 11. The other case mentioned was the miscellaneous appeal of Sia Ram v. Sanjib, which was disposed of on March 4, 1940, by a Division Bench of this Court. The matter was before that Bench for the purpose of considering an application for extending the time for filing an appeal under s. 5, Lim. Act. The Bench held that, as no appeal lay from an order under s. 11, the question of extending the time did not arise. Wort, J., in the first of these case, pointed out that the right of appeal from a decree is not a constitutional right but is the creature of statute, and as the Money-lenders Act did not confer a right of appeal from an order under s. 11, no right of appeal existed. No reference was made to the provisions of s. 96, Civil P. C., which confers a right of appeal against a decree, and s. 2 (2), Civil P. C., which defines "decree" and includes within the definition an order passed by an executing Court under s. 47.

It has been contended before us on behalf of the appellants that an order under s. 11, Money-lenders Act, is an order within s. 47, Civil P. C., and that it therefore falls within the definition of "decree" and is appealable. During the course of the argument reference has been made to O. XX, r. 11, Civil P. C. Under sub-r. (1) of r. 11 of O. XX, the Court which passes a decree may, at time of passing a decree for money, make an order that payment of the decree shall be postponed, or shall be made by instalments, with or without interest, and sub r. (2) of the same rule provides that, after the passing of a decree for payment of money, the Court may, on the application of the judgment-debtor and with the consent of the decree-holder order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments. The order under sub-r. (1) is a part of the decree in the suit, and may be challenged in an appeal from the decree. The order under sub-r. (2) for payment by instalments, can be made only with the consent of the decree-holder. No appeal, therefore, can lie against an order passed with his consent. Nor, on the other hand, can an order refusing instalments under sub-r. (2) be appealed against, as the right to pay by instalments does not exist unless the decree-holder has consented to it. Three Rangoon cases with regard to sub-r. (2) have been brought to our notice.

It appears from the first of these, Saya Hattie v. Ma Pwa Sa (1) that in Burma, or at least in that part of Burma from which the appeal arose, the consent of the decree-holder is not necessary for an order under sub-r. (2) of r. 11, Carr, J., sitting singly in that case held that an order under sub-r. (2) is appealable. That decision was followed by Maung Ba, J., sitting singly in U Tha Me v. Paungde Co-operative Town Bank (2) and by a Division Bench in Abdul Karim v. Maung San Kyaw (3). In the first of the Rangoon cases, Carr, J., observed that when a question arises whether an order under sub-r. (2) should be passed or not the question appeared to be one clearly between the parties to the suit and one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, and that consequently it came within s. 47 of the Code and was appealable. The two other Rangoon cases followed the decision of Carr, J., without further investigation into the matter. It has been conceded before us that it is not every order passed between the parties to a suit, in the course of execution proceedings, that falls within the definition of 'decree' so as to be appealable. In Surendra Nath v. Mritunjay Banarji (4) it was held that a decision under s. 47 is not a decree within the meaning of s. 2 (2) unless it in some way finally determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy.

The same view was taken in Deokinandan Singh v. Bansi Singh (5) in which it was held that the order, to be appealable as a decree, must conclusively determine the rights of the parties, and that consequently no appeal lay against an order by which the value of the property directed to be sold under a decree has been assessed at a certain figure according to the statement of the decree-holder. The question therefore is whether an order determining instalments under s. 11, Money-lenders Act, is an order which conclusively determines the rights of the parties. The right of the decree-holder to be paid the decretal amount and the liability of the judgment-debtor are determined by the decree in the suit. The power conferred on the executing Court by s. 11, Money lenders Act, is a discretion which the Court may exercise in derogation of the rights of the decree-holder to execute the whole of his decree immediately against the judgment-debtor. In deciding whether it shall or shall not exercise the discretion conferred upon it by this section the Court is not determining any question of the parties' rights, but merely whether an indulgence shall be shown to the judgment-debtor for the purpose of enabling him to meet the just demands of the decree-holder and at the same time avoid the forced sale of his own properties.

In deciding whether the circumstances justify the exercise of the discretion in favour of the judgment-debtor the Court is required by s. 12 to take into consideration the circumstances of the judgment-debtor, the amount of the decree and the capacity of the judgment-debtor to pay the instalments on due dates. From the discussions on this question, which are heard from time to time in this Court, it would appear as if the impression is that the only person whose difficulties are to be considered in the application of s. 11, Money-lenders Act, is the judgment-debtor, and that the difficulties of the judgment creditor are not to be considered at all. It is true that the Court is required to take into consideration the capacity of the judgment-debtor to pay the instalments, but the Court is also required to take into consideration the amount of the decree and the circumstances of the judgment-debtor. To my mind, it appears that what the Legislature had in view that if, taking into consideration the various circumstances mentioned, it appears to the Court that a judgment-debtor will be able to discharge his obligations to his creditor provided he is given a reasonable time, the Court is empowered to give that time by ordering instalments, but the Court is bound to consider whether the resources of the judgment-debtor are such as to justify an expectation that the decree-holder's claim to his dues will not be defeated by allowing instalments. Where it is clear that the resources of the judgment-debtor are so meagre in relation to his liability that he is not likely to be able to discharge the decretal debt within a reasonable time the Court would not be exercising a wise discretion in prolonging the execution proceedings by fixing instalments which would make but little impression on the possibility of the judgment-debtor discharging his indebtedness.

There is one other case of this Court to which reference was made, namely, Jugeswari Prasad v. Kamala Prasad (6). In this case the Court below had held that it had no power to pass an instalment decree under the Money-lenders Act. The Bench before which the appeal came did not consider the question whether an appeal from an order refusing to fix instalments lay or not, but holding that the Court had jurisdiction to pass an order for instalments, set aside the order of the Court below and directed it to dispose of the matter according to law. As the question of the maintainability of an appeal was not raised, and was not considered, this case cannot be looked upon as an authority on the question which we have to decide particularly in view of the fact that whether an appeal lay or not it was competent to the Bench in the exercise of its revisional powers to direct the Court to exercise the jurisdiction which the Court had mistakenly refused to exercise.

One other aspect of the matter must also be considered and that is the ground on which Wort, J., decided Civil Revision No. 366 of 1939 as that ground has been again urged before us. It has been pointed out that in the case of a mortgage suit by s. 10 of the Act the Court which passes a decree is empowered to fix instalments by which the decretal debt is to be paid and that an order passed by the Court which passed the decree and forming part of the decree may be challenged in an appeal from the decree. By s. 13 of the Act, the Court is directed to value the property of the judgment-debtor which is sought to be sold and to determine how much of it is necessary to sell in order to satisfy the decree. From the Court's decision in that matter there is an appeal expressly provided. It has been contended that the only reason why an appeal has not been expressly provided in s. 11 is because the Legislature contemplated that an order under s. 11 would be viewed as an appealable order under s. 47 Civil P. C. As I have already shown, under the decisions of this and of the Calcutta High Court, it is clear that the only orders under s. 47 which are appealable are orders which finally determine the rights of the parties and that an order under s. 11 is not of that nature. I would therefore uphold the preliminary objection and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Rowland, J.—I entirely agree. There was one line of authority in the Calcutta High Court favouring the view that as argued before us any order deciding a matter between the parties to the suit in the course of execution proceedings was to be regarded as a decree under s. 47 read with the definition of "decree" in s. 2, cl. (2), Civil P. C. but the considered decision of that Court in Deokinandan Singh v. Bansi Singh (5), has since been regularly followed and if I may say so, treated as having settled the law. The order, which it was contended in that case was appealable was an order fixing the valuation for the purpose of settling a sale proclamation. The Judges pointed out that if the contention of the appellant were to prevail whereas there would be only one appeal under the Code from a decision upon the question of valuation in the course of proceedings for reversal of the sale under r. 90 of O. XXI, there would be a first and a second appeal against an order for assessment of valuation antecedent to the sale. This, they say, could hardly have been the intention of the Legislature. In this Court that decision was followed in Surendra Nath v. Mritunjay Banerji (4), in which after considering a number of authorities Dawson-Miller, C. J. accepted the view of the Calcutta High Court as explained in the decision of the Madras High Court in Sivagami Achi v. Subramania Ayyar (7) and observed that an order to be a decree must conclusively determine the rights of the parties and that if any other view were adopted the result would be that an appeal might be preferred against every order in the course of execution proceedings and this could hardly have been contemplated by the framers of the Code of 1882. Dawson Miller, C. J, thought that no wider interpretation was to be given to s. 2, sub s. 2 which defines "decree" and states that it shall be deemed to include the determination of any question within s. 47. "These words," he said,

> "must be limited by the words which immediately precede and unless the decision appealed from is one which in some way determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit it cannot be included under the definition of decree," otherwise it would be merely an interlocutory order and although it may be true to say that the Judge acts judicially in coming to the conclusion, that does not in itself make his determination a decree within the meaning of the section. As my learned brother has pointed out, there was nothing for the Court to decide as to the rights of the parties in the suit those rights having been conclusively determined by the judgment and decree in the suit itself. The point before the Subordinate Judge was a matter of procedure whether the judgment-debtor, should be given time to pay and the decree holder restrained from exercising the right which he had under the law to execute his decree at once. An order regulating the procedure in this matter was an interlocutory order, and so not appealable.

Motor Vehicles Act (VIII of 1914), s. 16, rules under, Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules, rr. 24 (1), 48 and 49—Offence under—Summons not specifying nature of—Accused not given opportunity to produce defence—Conviction held could not be sustained.

Where in a case in which the accused was charged with offences under rr. 34 (1), 48 and 49, Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules the nature of the offence was not specified in the summons which was issued to the accused, and the case was somehow taken up before the date fixed and no adjournment was granted to him to enable him to produce his evidence in support of his defence:

Held, that the accused was prejudiced in his defence and consequently his conviction could not be sustained. 165 Ind. Cas. 716 (1), relied on.

Cr. R. P. reported by the Additional Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated August 22, 1939.

Order of Reference by Additional Sessions Judge.

The facts of this case are as follows: Both these revision petitions, No. 29 and 30 of 1939, shall be disposed of by this single order, as both relate to the same lorry and the petitioner is the same in both the cases. Lala Sant Ram Maini, Magistrate, first class, Gurgaon, on March 31, 1939, convicted the petitioner in two different proceedings, that is (a) for permitting his lorry to be driven without Punjab Driving License, without Punjab Motor Vehicle License and without inspection on due date, that is October 7, 1938, and thus breaking rr. 24 (1), 48 and 49, Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules, made under s. 16 of Act VIII of 1914; and (b) permitting his lorry to be driven without Punjab Motor Vehicle License in contravention of r. 48, Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules, made under s. 16 of Act VIII of 1914. Both the trials took place summarily on the same date. Regarding (a), it was noted that the accused pleaded guilty but said that he transferred the ownership of the vehicle to a company and had no proof regarding transfer. In proceedings (b), the Magistrate recorded that the accused pleaded guilty. The result was that, on conviction in proceedings (a), the petitioner was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 10 (ten), while, on conviction regarding proceedings (b), he was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 15 (fifteen). The Sessions Judge, Hissar, after issuing a notice to the Crown in either case, has transferred the case to me for disposal.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds.

Petitioner's Counsel in either case has contended that in the summons issued to the petitioner, the nature of the offence which he was called upon to explain and defend was not notified and that the omission caused a serious handicap to the petitioner in both the cases. It appears that on March 4, 1939, summons were issued to the petitioner to be present on March 27, 1939 and answer a charge under s. 16 of Act VIII of 1914. A copy of the printed summons purporting to bear the signatures of the Magistrate is on the file (p. 13), and in this summons a considerable space is to be found left blank, over which it is written in print that the space was meant for specifying briefly the nature of the offence. But the nature of the offence was not specified in either case. It was merely mentioned that he had committed an offence under s 16, Punjab Moter Vehicles Act. Again, the file shows that on March 27, 1939, the Magistrate was not present and the attendence of the accused was not noted. The only note was that the summons had been served and the case should be put up before the Magistrate on April 15, 1939. The case was not taken on that day but was taken much earlier, that is on March 31, 1939. The petitioner has filed an affidavit in either case to the effect that he had not been given any date on March 27, but that on March 31, he had come to Court on some other business when some Court official took him before the Magistrate where proceedings were taken in both the cases and that he showed a document of transfer of the lorry to the Magistrate, and that the Magistrate did not give him any opportunity for producing his defence. In the affidavit he has contended that the lorry had been registered at Delhi Province and had been tranferred to Crossways Company at Delhi and that he did not know to whom the company made over the lorry for driving and that the lorry had been duly entered in the name of the purchaser in the Delhi Province. In my opinion, the trial was conducted in rather a hurried manner. The accused no doubt admitted the allegations of the prosecution but he denied the ownership of the lorry, for which he should have been given a date to prove his allegations of transfer, especially as March 31, was not the date fixed for trial of the case. In Gajraj Singh v. Emperor (1) the practice of issuing summons under the Motor Vehicles Act, without defining the exact offence with which the accused was being charged, was severely condemned, and it was pointed out that it was the duty of the clerk issuing such summons to define therein the exact nature of the charge which was being preferred against the person against whom the summons was being issued. The time, the place and the exact nature of the offence charged must be clearly set forth. It was laid down in this ruling "that the conviction which followed upon a summons in which the accused was not given notice of the charge, which was brought against him, was an illegal conviction."

Counsel of the petitioner has urged that the cases are of some importance as it is general practice not to specify the nature of the offence in issuing summons under the Motor Vehicles Act. In my opinion, in the present two cases the petitioner was prejudiced in his defence: firstly because the nature of the offence was not specified in the summons issued to him, and secondly because the case was taken up before the date fixed and the petitioner was not granted adjournment to produce his evidence in support of his allegation that he had transferred the lorry, before the commission of either offence, to a third person. Therefore, I forward the proceedings under s. 438, cl. (1), Criminal P. C., to the High Court, with the recommendation that the convictions and sentences be set aside and the petitioner be acquitted of either charge.

Mr. Qabul Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. H. L. Soni, for The Advocate General, for the Crown.

Order.—This order will dispose of Criminal Revisions Nos. 1273 and 1274 of 1939. The facts are that the petitioner was convicted by a Magistrate with summary powers under s. 16, Motor Vehicles Act, for breaches of certain rules and sentenced in one case to pay Rs 10, in the other case Rs. 15, fine. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has sent up the case for revision on the grounds (1) that the case was taken up on a date for which the petitioner had no notice and he was not allowed to produce his defence; and (b) that the summons did not indicate to him the offence with which he was charged. Both these grounds appear to be well founded. The record shows that on March 27, the case was adjourned to April 15, but it was taken up on March 31. It appears that the petitioner had gone to Court on some other business, was seen by the Naib Court Inspector or somebody else and taken before the Traffic Magistrate. He is recorded as pleading guilty to both charges; but on one the register shows that he pleads that he had transferred the ownership of the vehicle. He was fined because there was no proof.

The driver had been caught driving with a defective license and without a license for the Punjab. The petitioner was prosecuted in accordance with the rules as the owner of the vehicle His defence was that some time previously he had transferred the vehicle to the Crossways Company, Delhi, who had in turn transferred it to a third person. The summons not giving him notice of the offence and the case not being taken up on the date fixed, he had no opportunity to produce his defence. I have seen the summons. It simply states that he is charged under "s. 16/-/14, Motor Act," and "16/-/14" is not very legibly written, It appears that this means that he was charged under s 16, Act VIII, of 1914, namely the Motor Vehicles Act. This is quite insufficient notice. In a similar case reported in Gajraj Singh v.

Emperor (1), Thom, J. remarked :

It appears that a summons was issued against the applicant in which he was charged merely with an offence under s 16, Motor Vehicles Act The offence was not defined and in the summons the applicant was given no notice of the nature of the charge which was to be preferred against him. In other words, he was hauled before the Court, tried and convicted without the ordinary notice, to which every accused is entitled before put upon trial. It appears that there is a practice in this province to issue summons under the Motor Vehicles Act without defining the exact offence with which the accused is being charged. This is a most reprehensible practice."

With these remarks I agree. Motor trials are frequently too summary and in this case I am far from satisfied that justice has been done. I accept the recommendation of the learned Additional Sessions Judge for both the reasons which he has given, set aside the conviction and order that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

[Case-law relied on]

A party claiming benefit of s. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C., is bound to show that the person whose property was attached and sold was an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 60 (1) (c). The term "agriculturists" is used in cl. (c) in the sense of a person who is an agriculturist by profession, that is, a person whose main source of livelihood is cultivation. 106 Ind. Cas. 49 (8), 138 Ind. Cas. 67 (9), 157 Ind. Cas. 986 (10) and 177 Ind. Cas. 60 (11) relied on. [p. 678, col. 1.]

Where a judgment-debtor does not object to the sale of the house on the ground of his being an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 60 (1) (c) and allows the house to be sold, it would be no longer open to him, much less to a stranger to raise the same objection in answer to a suit by the auction-purchaser for possession of the property purchased by him. [p. 678 col. 2.]

Where the ownership of the house or the materials thereof has passed to the auction-purchasers by virtue of the auction sale and the vendor has lost all interest therein from that date, the subsequent acquisition of exproprietary rights by the vendor cannot have the effect of reviving the ownership in favour of the vendor. Mr. Haider Husain, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal by the plaintiffs arises out of a suit for possession which was decreed by the trial Court whose decree has been set aside by the lower Appellate Court.

The plaintiffs-appellants filed a suit for possession of a house No. 64/3 and a sahan and rasta No. 66/3 on the allegation that one Chandrapal Singh owned 13 biswansis and 13 kachwansis share, which corresponds to 3 bighas 13 biswas and 15 biswansis, in mahal Ganesh, village Makoor, and patti, Chandrapal was constituted as a result of perfect partition of the village. On April 20, 1927, the plaintiffs purchased this patti in an auction sale and were put in possession of the same. This patti included a house and a rasta which also came into possession of the plaintiffs at the same time. The defendant is alleged to have wrongfully dispossessed the plaintiffs from the house and sahan sometime in April 1936.

The defence to the suit was that the entire share of Chandrapal Singh in the patti was not sold and that the plaintiffs were never put in possession of the entire share. It was pleaded that even if the entire share of Chandrapal Singh is proved to have been sold in the auction sale it did not include the house and the sahan. The defendant set up a village custom under which the house and sahan do not pass along with the zamindari upon a sale to the auction-purchasers. Issues were framed on October 6, 1936, and after the evidence of the plaintiffs had been recorded on October 27, 1936, Counsel for the defendant stated that he did not press the plea of custom. He also stated that his only contention in the case was that the house in the suit did not pass to the plaintiffs along with the zamindari share transferred to them under the sale certificate. He admitted that in case the Court held otherwise then the plaintiffs could get a decree for possession over the house in suit as claimed.

The trial Court held that the entire zamindari share of Chandrapal was sold and that the house and the sahan were included in that share and had passed to the auction-purchasers. Upon this finding the plaintiffs' suit was decreed. It appears from the judgment of the trial Court that the defendant's Counsel contended in course of the argument for the first time before it that the defendant was an agriculturist and under s. 60 of the Civil P. C. his house could not be attached and sold with the zamindari share nor did it pass to the plaintiffs. The trial Court repelled the contention and observed that there was nothing to show that Chandrapal Singh was an agriculturist as required by s. 60 of the Civil P. C.

The lower Appellate Court distinguished certain decisions relied upon by the trial Court in support of its findings and held that the auction-purchasers did not get the house along with the zamindari share sold to them. It also found that Chandrapal Singh being a petty zamindar was entitled to the benefit of the provisions of s. 60 of the Civil P. C. In the result the lower Appellate Court allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

Two points have been urged before me in support of the appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs. The first contention raised is that the house in question actually passed to the plaintiffs by virtue of the auction sale. The second point is that s. 60 (1) (c) of the Civil P. C. does not apply to the case and the defendant-respondent is not entitled to the benefit of that section. I am of opinion that both the contentions are sound and must be accepted.

As regards the first point, it appears that the sale certificate (Ex. 1) clearly mentions the sale of 13 biswansis and 13 kachwansis share with an area of 3 bighas 13 biswas and 15 biswansis though it does not expressly mention the house in dispute. Possession over this area was duly given to the auction-purchasers (Vide Ex. 4, warrant of possession, Ex. 3, the report of the qurq amin, and Ex. 5, the final order of the Court regarding the delivery of possession). Exhibit 6 is the copy of the mutation register which duly records the entire area in dispute in favour of the plaintiffs. A reference to Ex. 7, which is a copy of the khasra of paimaish of abadi of village Makoor, mahal Ganesh, will show that the house No. 64/3 and sahan and rasta No. 66/3 are situated in mahal Ganesh and patti Chandrapal, and Chandrapal is recorded as the owner in respect of both the numbers. This khasra appertains to the partition proceedings. It is regrettable that this important evidence is not referred to in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court at all. Learned Counsel on behalf of the appellants referred to Ex. 2, which is a copy of the chitti of abadi Chandrapal, Nos. 64/3 and 66/3. The document was filed by the plaintiffs and was admitted by the defendant. It appears from a reference to the list of documents that Counsel appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs in a statement of the case on October 27, 1936, stated that he did not rely upon Ex. 2 and prayed that it be returned to him. The trial Court ordered that Ex. 2 be returned and the fact of its return is noted on the list of documents. This procedure was doubtless irregular. The document having been filed and duly admitted should not have been returned to the plaintiffs' Counsel before the conclusion of the case. Paragraphs 53, 54 and 55 of the Oudh Civil Rules Volume I, deal with the return of the documents and it seems to me that the action of the Court in returning the document, which was neither inadmissible nor unproved, was not warranted by the aforesaid rules. Since Ex. 2 is not on the record, the plaintiffs-appellants must thank themselves for their failure to refer to it in support of their case inasmuch as the document was returned at the special request of their Counsel. An examination of the aforesaid documentary evidence establishes beyond doubt that the entire patti of Chandrapal Singh without any exception or reservation had been put to sale and was purchased by the plaintiffs-appellants in auction. It is also clear that patti Chandrapal Singh constitutes a distinct unit like the village itself and that the abadi members whose area was included in the area of the zamindari patti were a part and parcel of the latter. Under these circumstances it would be idle to argue that the auction sale did not transfer the interest of Chandrapal Singh in the abadi numbers along with his zamindari share sold. Section 8 of the T. P. Act, lays down that unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, a transfer of property passes forthwith to the transferee all the interest which the transfer is then capable of passing in the property, and in the legal incidents thereof. Among these incidents are included, in the case where the property is land, all things attached to the earth. In Abu Hasan v. Ramzan Ali, (I. L. R. 4 All. 381) (1), the "rights and interests" of a zamindar in a certain village were sold in execution of a decree. At the time of the sale a certain building was his property qua zamindar. It was held that, in the absence of proof that such building was excluded from sale, the sale of his "Rights and interest" in the village passed such building to the auction-purchaser.

This case was followed in Abhanaindan Prasad v. Pashpat Nath Pande, (I. L. R. 47 All. 470) (2) where it was held that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the houses or buildings situate within the zamindari are included in and pass with the zamindari, and a pre-emptor is entitled to get possession of such houses or buildings along with the zamindari.

In a case relating to the construction of certain deeds of conveyance by way of mortgage and sale of shares in a zamindari their Lordships of the Privy Council held that where the documents contained no words of exception or reservation, they conveyed all the interest of the vendor in the zadindari. It was also held that their interests in the houses on the land and in the profit rents derived from them passed in the absence of any words showing an intention to retain or exclude them (vide Asghar Reza Khan v. Mahomed Mehdi Hossein Khan, (I. L. R. 30 Calcutta 556 P. C.) (3).

There are two cases decided by this Court, which are reported in Balram Singh v. Ganga Singh (13 O. L. J. 432) (4) and Srimati Krishna Kumari Devi v. Bhaiya Rajendra Bahadur Sinha Deo, (13 O. L. J. 846) (5). In the former case it was held that if a zamindar sells his zamidari share in a village, it may be presumed that he sells the property including his share in the abadi unless there are words in the sale deed showing a contrary intention. This decision also proceeded on the view taken in Abu Hasin v. Ramzan Ali, (I. L. R. 4 All. 381) (1) and Asghar Reza Khan v. Mahomed Mehdi Hossein Khan (I. L. R. 30 Cal. 556 P. C.) (3). A similar view was taken in the latter case relying upon the same decisions and a few others.

The lower Appellate Court has tried to distinguish the latter cases on the ground that in both of them the entire village was transferred and not a portion therein. This distinction appears to me to be without a difference. A specific zamindari share of a patti in a village constitutes a separate entity and may well be regarded as a distinct unit like the village itself. If the sale of an entire village is presumed to convey all the interests of the owner including his interest in the abadi, there is neither reason nor principle in contending that the sale of a specific zamindari patti will not lead to the same result.

Reliance has been placed on behalf of the defendant-respondent on two cases, namely Sheo Narain Singh v. Jwala Prasad, (1935 O. W. N 365) (6) and Bechan Lal v. Gobardhan, (1940 O. W. N. 13) (7). Neither of the cases can afford any assistance to the respondent's case. The facts of the former cases are entirely distinguishable. The question in that case was whether the grove plots did or did not pass at the auction sale of the entire village consisting of 20 biswas. At p. 367* it is stated that the miscellaneous property consisting of grove land was not included in the 20 biswas share and that there was a separate patti consisting of 12 bighas 15 biswas of grove land. This statement was based upon the evidence afforded by the khewats produced in that case. Consequently it was held that the auction sale did not convey the interest in the grove. The latter case is also inapplicable to the facts of the present case. There a part of the share, and not the whole, was sold. The learned Judge observed that the presumption that a house standing on a share is sold holds good in a case where a complete share has been sold, but it does not apply to a case where only a part of the share is sold. The present is not the case where only a part of the share has been sold and the balance of the share remains unsold. As I have already stated above, the zamindari share was sold in its entirely without any exception or reservation whatsoever and the decisions relied upon will therefore have no application to the present case.

As regards the plea on the basis of s. 60 (1) (c) of the Civil P. C. which found favour with the lower Appellate Court, it is enough to state that the plea was not raised by the defendant in the written statement but was urged only at the time of the arguments before the trial Court. In my opinion such a plea ought not to have been allowed to be entertained. Under s. 60 (1) (c) houses and other buildings belonging to an agriculturist and occupied by him shall not be liable to attachment or sale in execution of a decree. Before the defendant is entitled to succeed on this plea he is bound to show that Chandrapal Singh was an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 60 (1) (c) of the Civil P. C.

In Bachan Singh v. Bhika Singh, (A. I. R. 1927 All. 601) (8) it was held that an agriculturist whose house is protected from attachment and sale by s. 60 (c) of the Civil P. C., must be an agriculturist belonging to the class of persons who are ordinarily designated as agriculturists, that is, whose principal source of livelihood is by cultivation. Cultivation, to a certain extent, is carried on by most if not all, of the zamindars in U. P., but their houses cannot be designated as agriculturists' houses.

A similar view was taken in Sampat v. Ram Prasad, (A. I. R. 1932 All. 499) (9). This again was followed in a Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Tirloki Prasad v. Kunj Behari Lal, (A. I. R. 1935 Allahabad 448) (10). It was held in this case that the test applied in deciding whether a person is an agriculturist is whether his main source of income is derived from cultivation or not. The term "agriculturists" used in cl. (c) of s. 60 of the Civil P. C. is used in the sense of a person who is an agriculturist by profession, that is, a person whose main source of livelihood is cultivation.

It was held in Sant Ram v. Buta Khan, (A. I. R. 1938 Lahore 72) (11) that the term "agriculturist" as used in s. 60 must be strictly construed. It denotes a husbandman and a person who carries on and makes his living by tillage and not a mere owner of land.

In the present case there is no evidence whatsoever to show that Chandrapal Singh was an agriculturist by profession and that his main source of livelihood was cultivation. I hold, therefore, that the plea under s. 60 (1) (c) of the Civil P. C. has not been substantiated. I am further of opinion that since Chandrapal Singh did not object to the sale of the house in question on the ground of his being an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 60 (1) (c) and allowed the house to be sold it would be no longer open to him, much less to a stranger like the defendant-respondent, to raise the same objection in answer to a suit by the auction-purchasers for possession of the property purchased by them. See Lala Ram v. Thakur Prasad (I. L. R. 40 All. 680) (12).

Lastly it has been urged on behalf of the defendant-respondent that Chandrapal Singh became an ex-proprietary tenant after the auction sale and as such he is entitled to retain the possession of the house as a tenant. To my mind there is no force in this contention. The ownership of the house or the materials thereof has passed to the auction-purchasers by virtue of the auction sale and the vendor has lost all interest therein from that date. The subsequent acquisition of ex-proprietary rights by the vendor cannot have the effect of reviving the ownership in favour of the vendor.

For the foregoing reasons I allow the appeal with costs, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance.

ATHIVARAPU VENKATRAMI REDDI—
RESPONDENT

Mortgage—Movable property, mortgage of—Validity—Produce of land realised every year mortgaged with land—Mortgage of produce operates as mortgage of movable property — Mortgage of produce of land—Subsequent lease of land—Standing crop on land claimed by mortgagee—Mortgagee's title, if prevails over that of lessee with notice of mortgage—Mortgage of movable property—How to be enforced.

Under the Indian law there can be a valid mortgage of movable property. Under s. 3, T. P. Act, immovable property does not include growing crops. Where the deeds of mortgage not only give security to the mortgagee over the immovable property comprised therein but also over the produce realised therefrom every year, the deeds of mortgage will operate in respect of the produce on the land as a mortgage of movable property. The moment the crop comes into existence the mortgagee gets title to the crop. Misri Lal v. Morzhar Hossain (1) and Colyer v. Issacs (2), relied on.

Where the produce of the land realised therefrom every year is also mortgaged with the land, so long as the mortgagee allows the mortgagor to remove the crops and does not secure them during the year the crops were raised, he loses his right to them. His rights will not also prevail against a bona fide assignee from the mortgagor without notice of the mortgage in his favour. Where however the lessee of the land takes the assignment with notice of the mortgage of the produce of that land realised every year and standing crop on the land is claimed by the mortgagee, the title of the mortgagee to the crops must prevail over that of the lessee. Colyer v. Issacs (2), Baldeo Prasad Sahu v. A. B Miller (3) and Wilson v. Wilson (5), relied on. Ex parte National Mercantile Bank, In re Phillips (4), explained and distinguished.

A mortgagee of movable property is not entitled to claim possession. His right is only to enforce the mortgage by suing for a sale of the property or by the appointment of a Receiver to secure possession of it in order that his security may be realised.

Mr. V. Govindarajachari, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. S. Ramachandra Rao and D. R. Krishna Rao, for the Respondent.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit to enforce two deeds of mortgage dated June 24, 1924 and April 24, 1930 executed by the deceased father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 to the plaintiff. Both the deeds of mortgage not only gave security to the plaintiff over the immovable property comprised therein but also over the produce realised therefrom every year. The operative portions in the deeds of mortgage run thus: "The produce realised therefrom every year have been hypothecated to you." The question for decision in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is not entitled to enforce his mortgage security over a sum of Rs. 364 which was deposited into Court during the pendency of the suit being the net sale proceeds of the crops of Fasli 1345 on lands which are Items Nos. 1, 2, 8, 9, 10 and 11 of Sch. A to the plaint comprised in the deeds of mortgage. The question arises in this way. On May 14, 1933 the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 executed a registered lease deed of the said lands in favour of defendants Nos 7 and 8 for a period of five years commencing from Fasli 1343. The rent reserved thereunder was ten putties of paddy and eighty bundles of hay worth Rs. 10. Defendant No. 6 in execution of a money decree obtained by him against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 as representatives of their father in O.S. No. 149 of 1934 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Nellore attached the immovable properties which were comprised in the deeds of mortgage. Objections were raised as regards the sale of the properties in pursuance of that attachment and the matter was compromised by the mother of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 executing a deed of transfer of the said lease in favour of defendant No. 6 for the unexpired period of three years in satisfaction of his decree and the sale and other proceedings were stayed. The deed of transfer is dated September 24, 1935. Defendant No 6 full well knew that the property comprised in the lease deed was subject to the two mortgages in favour of the plaintiff because it was distinctly recited in the counter-affidavit filed by the guardian of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 objecting to the sale that the property was subject to two mortgages in favour of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff also obtained a money decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in S. C. S. No. 117 of 1934 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Nellore in respect of an unsecured debt due by their father and in execution of that decree attached the standing crops on the lands which were the subject matter of the lease. Two claim petitions were put in, one by the tenants defendants Nos. 7 and 8 and other by defendant No. 6. Both the claims were allowed on the ground that the possession of crops was not with the plaintiff. The crops were thereafter harvested and before they could be removed they were again attached by defendant No. 11 in execution of a money decree. The plaintiff filed the present action and applied for the appointment of a Receiver to take possession of the said crops. By an order dated July 7, 1936 the crops were directed to be sold and after meeting certain outgoings the balance was directed to be deposited into Court and from and out of the amount so deposited defendants Nos. 7 and 8 were asked to take their lessees' share. It is with respect to the remaining amount that a controversy has arisen between the plaintiff and defendant No. 6. Under both the deeds of mortgage the plaintiff is given security over the produce. Under s. 3, T. P. Act, immovable property does not include growing crops. Therefore the deeds of mortgage will operate in respect of the produce on the land as a mortgage of movable property. Under the Indian law there can be a valid mortgage of movable property: vide Misri Lal v. Morzhar Hossain (1). The moment the crop comes into existence the mortgagee gets title to the crop. The principle of law that is usually applied is that enunciated by Jessell, M. R. in Colyer v. Issacs (2) namely:

"A man can contract to assign property which is to come into existence in the future, and when it has come into existence, equity treating as done that which ought to be done fastens upon that property, and the contract to assign them becomes a complete arrangement."

This principle was applied in a case reported in Baldeo Prasad Sahu v. A. B. Miller (3), where the validity of a mortgage of the produce of a factory, namely indigo cakes that were manufactured, came into question. The learned Judges Brett and Mitra, JJ., referring to Colyer v. Issacs (2) observed thus:

"The property hypothecated was the indigo cakes, manufactured every season by the Pupri Indigo Factory from the crops grown on the lands of the factory from the date of the mortgage deeds, until such time as the total mortgage money with interests and costs of Court shall be paid by the mortgagor."

They held in that case that the title secured under such mortgage would prevail over the title of a purchaser under a later mortgage of the said cakes. The facts of that case were as follows: On September 22, 1891 there were two mortgages executed of the factory and its produce by the proprietor Mr. Wilson in favour of one Chowdhry Mahadeo Pershad who obtained decrees thereon and thereafter assigned his interest in those decrees to Messrs. Moran & Co. Messrs. Moran & Co., subsequently became bankrupt and the interest of the firm was represented by the Official Assignee. In 1896 Mr. Wilson mortgaged only the indigo cakes to be manufactured in 1895 and 1896 and in 1896 and 1897 to the plaintiffs who were aware of the prior mortgage in favour of Chowdhry Mahadeo Pershad. Subsequent to the date of mortgage in 1896 Mr. Wilson made over to the plaintiffs in that case a quantity of indigo cakes manufactured in 1896 and 1897. The Official Assignee intervened and claimed them and the question of title was made the subject-matter of legal proceeding. Pending the adjudication the cakes were sold and the money was brought into Court. It was held that the Official Assignee was entitled to the money in preference to the plaintiffs. The ground on which the learned Judges decided is thus put:

"We think that it is clear that where, as in this case, there were mortgages to the creditor of property which was to come into existence in futrue, and when the creditor had already paid the consideration, the property, that is to say, the indigo cakes, were bound from the moment that Mr. Wilson acquired them and from that moment he became the trustee of the property for the creditor, who as cestui que trust acquired an equitable estate or interest in the property. The delivery after acquisition of the cakes to the plaintiffs' servant, if there was in fact such a delivery, could not have destroyed the equitable interest of Messrs. Moran and Co., already existing in them, unless indeed the plaintiffs were bona fide transferees for value without notice."

It seems to us that the principle of this decision would apply to the present case. Defendant No. 6 took the assignment with notice of the mortgages in favour of the plaintiff. The standing crop on the land before it was removed was claimed by the plaintiff. Therefore, the plaintiff's title to the moneys in Court must prevail over that of defendant No. 6. But it is contended by Mr. Ramachandra Rao that so long as the plaintiff as mortgagee did not take possession of the crop, the mortgagor would be entitled to deal and dispose of it and in this case as the mortgagee never interfered with the possession of the mortgagors defendant No. 6 was entitled to receive the rent and the crop and in lieu thereof its value in preference to the plaintiff and he relied on a case in Ex parte National Mercantile Bank, In re Phillips (4), where Jessell, M. R. stated that under the ordinary law prevailing in England rents and profits of land in mortgage belong to the mortgagor so long as he is allowed to remain in possession and therefore the mortgagor is entitled to sever the crops, which when severed became chattels under the deed and vested in his trustee in bankruptcy. It seems to us that before applying the principle of the English decision we must make note of the fact that in England the growing crop is treated as an interest in land and therefore immovable property. Jessell, M. R. recognizes this in the decision relied on. A mortgage of land operates as an absolute conveyance of the property. But in India mortgages such as these in question in the suit do not operate as an absolute conveyance of the property mortgaged. Further, the mortgagee is not entitled to possession of the property unless possession is stipulated for as in the case of a usufructuary mortgage. Having regard to these differences, let us see how far the contention of Mr. Ramchandra Rao is well founded. Even in English Law, in the case of a mortgage of a growing crop on the land, a mortgagee is not entitled to claim the crop when it has been removed by the mortgagor but before removal if the mortgagor intervenes and claims it and takes appropriate proceedings, the mortgagee will become entitled to it: vide Fisher on Mortgage, Edn. 8, p. 716. In Wilson v. Wilson (5) at p. 40, Vice-Chancellor Malins defines the right of a mortgagee thus :

"We know perfectly well that the mortgagee of rent has a right from the very day of his mortgage to receive the rents. We also know that if he does not choose to enter into possession or give notice to the tenants, but regards his security as sufficient and allows the mortgagor to receive the rents, those rents can never be recovered back again as rents. The mortgagor has a continuing right to receive the rents until the right is intercepted by some action on the part of the mortgagee."

Here the mortgagee has really intercepted defendant No. 6 from removing the crops. Again, the argument based on the question of possession is not sound. Even in English Law a distinction is drawn between a case of mortgage of chattels and a case of mortgage of lands. In Ex parte Official Receiver In re Moorit (6), Cotton, L. J. in considering the exact rights of sale which a mortgagee of personal chattels possesses remarked thus:

"A pledge of personal chattels as a rule is and must be accompanied by delivery of possession. It is out of the possession given him under the contract that the pledgee's rights spring..... A mortgage of personal chattels involves in its essence, not the delivery of possession, but a conveyance of title as a security for the debt."

Much more so in India where, as pointed out, above, the plaintiff mortgagee will not be entitled to claim possession. His right is only to enforce the mortgage by suing for a sale of the property or by the appointment of a Receiver to secure possession of it in order that his security may be realised. He applied for the appointment of a Receiver before the crops were removed from the land and it was on this application for the appointment of a Receiver that a consent order was made by which the crops were sold and the sale proceeds deposited into Court. It may be that so long as he allows the mortgagor to remove the crops and does not secure them during the year the crops were raised, he loses his right to them. His rights will not also prevail against a bona fide assignee from the mortgagor without notice of the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. Therefore the case in Ex parte National Mercantile Bank, In re Phillips (4) is not of much assistance to defendant No. 6. In the result we set aside the judgment of the lower Court in this behalf and allow the appeal with costs, Rs. 100 to be paid by the respondent in the appeal. He will pay back whatever costs were paid by the appellant to the respondent in the lower Court.

Criminal Revision No. 161 of 1940

March 6, 1941

BENNETT, J.

Mst. KHEMANA—COMPLAINANT—APPLICANT

DULAREY—ACCUSED—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 528 (2)—District Magistrate, power of, to set aside order of transfer of case by Sub-Divisional Magistrate and transfer it to other Court—Notice to opposite party, if obligatory before transfer of case.

A District Magistrate has the power to set aside an order of a Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferring a case and transfer that case to some other Court. There is nothing in the sub-s. (2) of s. 528, Criminal P. C., which suggests that the discretion of the District Magistrate is fettered in any way. 38 Ind. Cas. 447 (4), followed, 116 Ind. Cas 751 (1), Raghunatha Pandaram v. Emperor (2) and 17 Ind. Cas. 414 (3), distinguished, 166 Ind. Cas. 83 (2) (5), referred to. [p. 683, col. 2.]

There is nothing in s. 528, Criminal P. C., itself which makes it obligatory on the District Magistrate to issue notice to the opposite party, before transferring a case under s. 528 (2) and it is undesirable to fetter his discretion. [p. 684, col. 1.]

(Case-law referred to.)

Cr. R. for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Lucknow, dated November 11, 1940.

Mr. G. G. Chatterji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Nasirullah Beg, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in revision under ss. 435 and 439 of the Criminal P. C. against the order of the District Magistrate of Lucknow dated November 11, 1940, setting aside the order of the City Magistrate, Lucknow, dated August 15, 1940, whereby he had transferred a case from the Honorary Bench Magistrates to a Special Magistrate of the first class named Mr. Badshah Husain Rizvi.

It appears that a complaint was made on September 11, 1939, by one Mst. Kemana, who is the applicant in the present application, against her son-in-law Dularey, who is the opposite party in this application, under s. 380, of the I. P. C. She alleged that she had discovered on August 24, 1939, that certain ornaments and a coin were missing from her house and that she suspected Dularey who, as her son-in-law, had access to her house. She had previously on August 31, made a report to the Police giving the same date, namely, August 24, as the date on which she had discovered the loss.

A preliminary enquiry was made by the City Magistrate before whom the complaint had been made, under s. 202 of the Criminal P. C. and the case was then transferred by him to the Bench of Honorary Magistrates. This Bench recorded all the prosecution evidence and framed a charge on May 31, 1940. This charge was that on or about August 24, 1939, about 2 or 3 P. M. the accused Dularey had dishonestly removed certain gold ornaments and a gold coin from Mst. Khemana's house, these articles having been buried by her in a corner of the house.

Thereafter defence evidence was produced and only two more defence witnesses remained to be examined.

At this stage the complainant, Mst. Khemana applied to the City Magistrate for transfer of the case from the Bench of Honorary Magistrates on the ground that they had refused to amend the charge. One of the prosecution witnesses gave evidence indicating that the offence had taken place on the 20th and not on August 24, and in view of this evidence Mst. Khemana had applied to the Bench Magistrates for alteration of the charge. They had rejected this application. Other prosecution witnesses, it may be noted, did not give the actual date of the offence, and Mst. Khemana herself does not appear to have had any definite knowledge on the point, though she may have thought that the offence had taken place on the 24th during her absence from the house. It is said that her evidence on the point is not consistent, but in any case she was not apparently in a position to know with certainty.

In the order of July 27, passed on Mst. Khemana's application the Bench Magistrates in dismissing her application for amendment of the charge observed that the case had reached the stage of defence and two defence witnesses had already been examined. Only one witness referred to August 20 as the date of the offence, and the complainant herself said that it was committed on the 24th. In support of this last statement they referred to the first information report in which August 24, was given as the date of the offence. The accused had produced alibi evidence to show that he was at work elsewhere on the day and time of the alleged occurrence and it was in view of this evidence that the Bench Magistrates thought that the application had been made to amend the charge.

The City Magistrate remarked that this order "shows beyond any doubt that the Court holds that the occurrence took place on August 24, 1939," and "that the grounds for entertaining this view are also not satisfactory." Consequently "the complainant rightly feels that her case has been prejudiced" and "it is desirable that the case should be tried by another Court."

The District Magistrate after examination of the record said that he was satisfied that the City Magistrate's order was not correct. First of all he did not consider that the order of the Bench Magistrates was a prejudiced order. The complainant had herself to blame for asking for an amendment of the charge framed at such a late stage, and the Bench Magistrates were clearly justified in refusing to amend the charge because of the statement made by one witness. The case had dragged on for an unduly long time and it would be unfair to harass the accused, who is the complainant's son-in-law, by a transfer which would enable the complainant to claim a de novo trial. Only two defence witnesses remained to be heard and the accused would be prejudiced if the case was transferred to another Court at this late stage. Consequently the District Magistrate accepted the transfer application made to him and re-transferred the case from the Court of

Mr. Badshah Husain Rizvi to the Bench of Honorary Magistrates

With regard to this order of the District Magistrate it may be said that the transfer by the City Magistrate would not have enabled the complaint to claim a de novo trial as of right. There was, however, this objection to the transfer that if there was no de novo trial the case would have to be decided by a Magistrate who had not seen most of the witnesses.

It is contended by the learned Counsel for the applicant that the District Magistrate was not justified in passing what was virtually an appellate order reversing the order of the City Magistrate, and further that he was not justified in any event in transferring the case without notice to the opposite-party.

In support of this contention learned Counsel referred to several rulings. In Kishori Lal v. King-Emperor, (A. I. R. 1928 All. 546) (1), it was said by a Single Judge that under s. 528 (2) the District Magistrate and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate have equal authority in withdrawing cause from a Subordinate Magistrate and the District Magistrate should not exercise powers of an Appellate Court as regards orders passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. If he considers the Court to which the case is transferred by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate not the proper Court for the trial of the case, for reasons to be stated by him, he should transfer the case to any Court which he thinks proper after notice to the accused. It is implied, therefore, in this ruling that the District Magistrate has the power to reverse the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, though he should not do this as if he were acting as an Appellate Court but only under the provisions of s. 528 (2).

It was said in this Allahabad case that the view was supported by a ruling of a single Judge of the Madras Court in Raghunatha Pandaram v. Emperor (I. L. R. 26 Mad. 130) (2).

In another case of the Allahabad High Court Iltaf Husain v. Emperor, (13 Cr. L. J. 782) (3), it was also held by a single Judge that the District Magistrate cannot set aside an order of transfer passed by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Reference was made again to this Madras case.

For the opposite party I have been referred to a later case of the Madras High Court, Santhappa Sethuram v. Govindaswamy Kandiyar, (A. I. R. 1918 Mad. 1122 (1)) (4), in which it was held that the fact that a Sub-Divisional Magistrate has refused to transfer a case at the request of a party does not preclude a District Magistrate from making an order of transfer on his own intitiative. In this case the decision in Raghhunatha Pandaram v. Emperor (2), was expressly dissented from.

In Sugnomal Tahilram v. Phatandas Relumal, (A. I. R. 1936 Sind, 237) (5) it was said that although the District Magistrate has no appellate jurisdiction under s. 528 (2) he has a concurrent jurisdiction and that jurisdiction is not barred merely because it has been exercised by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in the first instance. Where a Sub-Divisional Magistrate transfers a case from one Court to another, it is open to the party aggrieved to go to the District Magistrate not by an appeal against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, but by moving the District Magistrate, to exercise the jurisdiction conferred upon him by sub-s. (2) and the District Magistrate after having considered the application on its merits and for good reasons can transfer the case.

It is, I think, not irrelevant in considering this question to refer to the provisions of s. 17 of the Criminal P. C. although those provisions do not appear to have been invoked in the cases referred to. Under s. 17 all Magistrates appointed under ss. 12, 13 and 14 are made subordinate to the District Magistrates, and he may, from time to time, make rules or give special orders consistent with this Code as to the distribution of business among such Magistrates and Benches. It is, therefore, clear in my opinion that [a District Magistrate has the power to set aside an order of a Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferring a case and transfer that case to some other Court.] In the present case both the application to the City Magistrate and the application to the District Magistrate were made under the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 528, and [there is nothing in the sub-section which suggests that the discretion of the District Magistrate is fettered in any way.] I think, therefore, that the later ruling of the Madras High Court on the point should be followed.

(1) A I R 1928 All. 546; 116 Ind. Cas. 751; 26 A L J 818; 10 A I Cr. R 1; L R 9 A 85 Cr.; 30 Cr. L J 654.

As regards the failure of the District Magistrate to issue notice to the opposite party it was said in Kamatchi Ammal v. Emperor, (A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 511) (6), by a single Judge that although s. 528 (2) does not say that notice of an application for the transfer of a case from one Court to another shall be given to the accused, still according to the practice of the Madras High Court it is desirable to give such notice. And so a transfer made without such notice must be set aside for want of notice.

Similarly in the case of Ahmad Ghibhir v. Chellaram Tekchand, (A. I. R. 1936 Sind 42) (7), it was said that it is incumbent on a Magistrate transferring a case from one Court to another on the application of the Crown to hear the other party and give his reasons for passing the order of transfer.

For the opposite party I was referred on this point to two cases Chhotey Lal v. Tinke Lal, (A. I. R. 1935 All. 815) (8) and Bagh Ali v. Muhammad Din, (A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 156) (9). In the former case it was said that though s. 528 does not provide for any notice to the opposite party yet it is desirable that notice should be given to the opposite party before an order of transfer is passed. But a mere omission to give notice will not make the order illegal and would be no ground to set aside the order. The omission to give notice is a mere irregularity. In the Lahore case it was said that the transfer under s. 528 is not illegal for want of notice to the opposite party.

As there is nothing in the section itself which makes it obligatory on the District Magistrate to issue notice to the opposite party, on this point too, I think, it undesirable to fetter his discretion. It might be advisable in some cases that notice should issue, and it might be quite unnecessary in other cases. The issue of notice would generally delay further a trial which had probably already been somewhat delayed by the transfer application.

It is not necessary to go into the merits of the present case. It is possible that the complainant had little idea of the actual date and time of the occurrence, and it is also possible that she entertained different ideas on the subject at different times. It is certainly questionable whether the Bench Magistrates would have been justified in altering the charge merely because one prosecution witness had indicated that the date entered in the charge was not correct. An error in stating the particulars in the charge is not necessarily fatal to the prosecution case. If such an error is committed the Court has to consider the effect of the provisions of s. 225 of the Criminal P. C.

On the whole I do not think that there was sufficient reason for transferring the case at the late stage which it had reached. If it was not to be tried de novo it would have to be tried on the order of the City Magistrate by a Magistrate who had not seen any of the prosecution witnesses or some of the defence witnesses. This would not have been satisfactory.

Finding that the order of the District Magistrate was not illegal, I see no reason to disturb it and I dismiss this application.

Custom (Punjab)—Village proprietary body—Reclaimation of waste lands by proprietors—Agreement between proprietors and Government to surrender rights in waste land to Government after passing of Sind Sagar Doab Colonisation Act, 1902 —Such agreements recorded in wajib-ul-arz prepared at subsequent settlements—Act revealed—Waste lands reclaimed during interim period—Effect of repeal of Act—Plaintiffs held bound by agreements.

The plaintiffs were some of the proprietors in various villages According to the respective village wajib-ul-arz prepared at the time of the first settlement in 1878 a proprietor had the right under certain conditions to reclaim the shamilat (waste land) of the village and become Adna Maliks of the land. But this position was altered in consequence of a scheme of the Govt of the Punjab to make a canal in the Sind-Sagar Doab for the purpose of irrigating tracts in that district. In furtherance of the scheme the Sind-Sagar Doab Colonisation Act was passed in 1902. Amongst other provisions it empowered the Govt. to make agreements between proprietors in the district for the surrender of their lands to Govt. on condition that they would receive back an area equal to one-fourth in the improved land. Such surrenders, however, were only to take effect on and from the date on which the excavation of the proposed canal should be begun. Agreements were entered into by the proprietors of all the lands in the villages in question for the surrender of the lands on the statutory terms. The agreement contained the term that from the date of the agreement up to the date of the surrender no one should notwithstanding any law or custom to the contrary acquire or be considered entitled to either proprietary or occupancy tenancy rights in the said lands. At the second regular settlement in 1902 the wajib-ul-arz in each case recorded the agreement between the villagers in this form, "We the proprietors of the village have signed the agreement under the Sind-Sagar Doab Act of 1902..... No one can acquire proprietary rights in the village shamilat till then" The same agreement was recorded in the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the third regular settlement in 1926. The project of the canal, however, was never carried into effect. The excavation was never begun: and in 1929 when the scheme had been finally abandoned the Sind-Sagar Act of 1902 was repealed (Act VI of 1929). The plaintiffs claimed that by reason of the repeal the rights as in 1878 revived and must be taken never to have been affected. They had during the interim period been engaged in reclaiming waste lands, and sought to enjoy the rignts to become proprietors of the lands so reclaimed as though the various agreements had not been made:

Held, that the effect of the repeal of the Act was determined by the Punjab General Clauses Act, 1898, s. 4, and it could not be said that the Act once repealed was to be taken never to have been passed But apart altogether from the effect of repeal the agreements recorded in the second and third wajib-ul-arz operated independently of the Act They expressly determined the rights of the parties during a known period of transition. The plaintiffs must be held to their agreement: a result which was the more clearly just because the other proprietors acting on their agreement had lost rights of preventing the plaintiffs from acquiring the rights over the land they claimed. 163 Ind. Cas. 864 (1), approved.

Mr. R. Ritson, for the Appellants.

Lord Atkin.—These are consolidated appeals from the High Court of Judicature at Lahore who affirmed a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge at Mianwali dismissing the suit of the plainttff so far as the present dispute is concerned. The plaintiffs are some of the proprietors in various villages in the Mianwali District. According to the respective village wajib-ul-arz prepared at the time of the first settlement in 1878 a proprietor had the right under certain conditions to reclaim the shamilat (waste land) of the village and become Adna Maliks of the land. The plaintiffs claim that in the last 30 years they have reclaimed such land in their respective villages and are entitled to the rights stated in the relevant wajib-ul-arz. But the original position as defined in 1878 was altered in consequence of a scheme of the Govt. of the Punjab to make a canal in the Sind-Sagar Doab for the purpose of irrigating tracts in that district. In furtherance of the scheme the Sind-Sagar Doab Colonisation Act was passed in 1902. Amongst other provisions it empowered the Govt. to make agreements between proprietors in the district for the surrender of their lands to Govt. on condition that they would receive back an area equal to one-fourth in the improved land. Such surrenders, however, were only to take effect on and from the date on which the excavation of the proposed canal should be begun.

In 1901, after the Act had received the assent of the Lieutenant-Governor, agreements were entered into by the proprietors of all the lands in the villages in question for the surrender of the lands on the statutory terms. The agreement contained the term that from the date of the agreement up to the date of the surrender no one should notwithstanding any law or custom to the contrary acquire or be considered entitled to either proprietary or occupancy tenancy rights in the said lands. So far the agreement was with the Govt. but at the second regular settlement in 1902 the wajib-ul-arz in each case records the agreement between the villagers in this form,

"We the proprietors of the village have signed the agreement under the Sind-Sagar Doab Act of 1902 .....No one can acquire proprietary rights in the village shamilat till then."

The same agreement is recorded in the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the third regular settlement in 1926. No one disputes that all the parties were bound at the time by the agreements so recorded in the respective wajib-ul arz, whose function in the Punjab at least is amongst other things to record village agreements of the kind. The project of the canal, however, was never carried into effect. The excavation was never begun; and in 1929 when the scheme had been finally abandoned the Sind-Sagar Act of 1902 was repealed (Act VI of 1929). The plaintiffs claim that by reason of the repeal the rights as in 1878 revived and must be taken never to have been affected. They had in fact during the interim period been engaged in reclaiming waste lands, and they now seek to enjoy the rights to become proprietors of the lands so reclaimed as though the various agreements had not been made. The Act it is said, once repealed, is to be taken never to have been passed. One sufficient answer to this contention is that the effect of repeal is now determined in the Punjab by the Punjab General Clauses

Act, 1898, s. 4, which provides that unless a different intention appears repeal shall not (b) affect the previous operation of any enactment so repealed or anything duly done or suffered thereunder or (c) affect any right privilege obligation or liability acquired accrued or incurred under any enactment so repealed. But apart altogether from the effect of repeal the agreements recorded in the second and third wajib-ul-arz operate independently of the Act. They expressly determine the rights of the parties during a known period of transition. Until the surrender under the Govt. agreement the parties agree that the ordinary rights are not to operate. The plaintiffs must, be held to their agreement, a result which is the more clearly just because as pointed out by the Courts in India the other proprietors acting on their agreement have lost rights of preventing the plaintiffs from acquiring the rights over the land they now claim. Their Lordships find themselves in agreement with the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge in these cases, and by the High Court in their judgment in a previous case of Ahmad Khan v. Jiwand Ram (1), dated January 15, 1935, which was pronounced on a similar claim and which they followed in the present case. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals be dismissed. The respondents entered an appearance, but did not lodge a printed case, nor were they represented at the hearing. The appellants must pay such costs as the respondents have properly incurred.

LAKSHMI NARAIN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 142 — Suit for possession based on title—Plaintiff alleging dispossession—Art. 142 applies—Burden to prove possession within 12 years is on plaintiff—Plaintiff applying for mutation—Defendant co-sharer in possession denying title of plaintiff — Plaintiff's suit for possession—Limitation, when begins to run.

Article 142, Lim. Act, applies to a suit for possession based on title, where the plaintiff alleges his dispossession and the plaintiff has to prove his possession within 12 years of the suit. 152 Ind Cas. 1 (2) and 185 Ind. Cas. 736 (3), relied on. 168 Ind. Cas. 309 (1), held no good law.

The plaintiff applied for mutation of his name on April 29, 1924. The defendant objected and denied the plaintiff's title on May 19, 1924. The plaintiff learnt of this denial 15 days later. The Revenue Court dismissed the plaintiff's application on March 30, 1925 holding that the defendant was in possession. The plaintiff brought a suit for possession on March 30, 1937:

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation. Even assuming that the parties were co-sharers the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiff from the date the plaintiff came to know of the denial of his title, and not from the date on which the plaintiff's mutation application was dismissed. The suit having been brought after 12 years from such date was time-barred. 152 Ind. Cas. 1 (2), relied on. 9 Ind. Cas. 391 (4), 149 Ind. Cas. 1172 (5) and Bansgopal v. Shahzada Basdeo Singh (6), distinguished.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondent Lachhmi Narain for possession of 2 annas 7 pies 4 kirants share in village Gaura Buzurg.

Ram Charan, Rasiawan and Bindhyachal made a gift of 2 annas share in Gaura Buzurg to Ram Saran by means of a deed, dated October 20, 1880. Ram Saran brought a suit for possession against Ram Charan and others in 1885 for that 2 annas share. That suit was dismissed by the first Court, but on appeal Manik Ram, the nephew and heir of Ram Charan, admitted Ram Saran's claim, and the suit was decreed. Mutation was effected in favour of Ram Saran. Ram Saran died in 1900 or 1901, but his name continued in the papers over the share gifted to him. Lachhmi Narain put in an application on April 29, 1924, before the Revenue Court that his father died on March 1, 1924, and his name be mutated in his place. The original 2 annas share had been changed to 2 annas 7 pies 4 kirants by reason of the partition in the village. Manik Ram preferred an objection on May 19, 1924, that the applicant was not in possession and had no title. The Revenue Court decided on March 30, 1925, that Manik Ram was in possession, and the application of Lachhmi Narain was dismissed. Manik Ram subsequently died leaving Jwala Prasad and Hira Lal, his sons, who are the appellants before me.

Lachhmi Narain brought a suit which has given rise to this appeal on March 30, 1937, for the possession of the 2 annas 7 pies 4 kirants share on the allegation that the defendants were in unlawful possession of it. The learned Munsif framed several issues on the pleas of the appellants and two of them were—

(1) Was the plaintiff in possession within twelve years?

(2) Have the defendants acquired title by adverse possession?

He held that the plaintiff's suit being based both on title and possession and dispossession, the burden of proving adverse possession was on the defendants. He, however, held that the defendants have established their adverse possession and dismissed the suit. The learned Civil Judge in appeal held that the adverse possession of the defendants was not proved and decreed the suit.

It is contended before me in appeal that the plaintiff ought to have proved his possession within twelve years, and that the appellants have succeeded in proving their adverse possession for more than 12 years. The first point which is for consideration before me is whether the plaintiff ought to have proved his possession within 12 years and if so whether he has succeeded in proving it. The first thing is to see the nature of the suit. It was stated in the plaint that the defendants were in possession without any right. It was stated by the plaintiff before the learned Munsif that he was in possession of the share in dispute and lost possession when his father's name was struck off the mutation register, and that he based his claim on title and not on possession and dispossession. It is, therefore, clear that it is a case in which the plaintiff alleges his dispossession, and the learned Munsif relied on Sheo Moorat v. Chhangoo, (1937 O. W. N. p. 585) (1), for the proposition that when the plaintiff's suit is based on title and possession and dispossession, the burden of proving adverse possession is on the defendants. This is no longer the view of law.

It was held by the Allahabad High Court in a case reported in Bindhyachal Chand v. Ram Gharib Chand, (A. I. R. 1934 All. p. 993), (2), that "Article 142 is not restricted to suits based on possessory title only, and where a plaintiff who was a co-sharer with some of the defendants who transferred a part of the property to third parties admits in the plaint that he was dispossessed by the transferee some time prior to the institution of the suit, Art. 142 and not Art. 144 of the Lim. Act applies."

This Court also held in Jaimangal Tewari v. Bindeshuri Singh, (1939 O. W. N. p. 1005) (3), that—

"Article 142 is very general in its scope and application. There is no reason to confine the word 'plaintiff' in this Article to plaintiff's bringing their suits on possessory title only, and that it will apply to all cases of alleged or proved dispossession whether the plaintiff's suit is based on his proprietary or his possessory title"

It is, therefore, clear that this is a case to which Art. 142 is applicable.

The next point to consider is whether the plaintiff has succeeded in proving his possession within twelve years of the suit which was instituted on March 30, 1937. The learned Civil Judge appears to be of the view that the parties and their predecessors were co-sharers, and so no question of adverse possession could arise, till there was a denial by the defendants of the plaintiff's title. He was further of opinion that the limitation began to run not from the date of the denial by the defendants' predecessor in the mutation case, but from the date the mutation case was decided against the plaintiff. It may be assumed that the parties' predecessors were co-sharers, though this case was not specifically taken in the pleadings. It was observed by Sulaiman, C. J., in the Allahabad case above noted that—

"If, therefore, the plaintiff, a co-owner admits that he has been dispossessed and that, at any rate, for a short period prior to the suit, the possession of his co-owner was adverse to him, then he cannot fall back on a mere presumption of joint possession in his favour and succeed without showing any other circumstances whatsoever. But if the co-owner, who has been dispossessed were to satisfy the Court that he was actually dispossessed on some date within twelve years, he discharges his burden; or even if he proved that prior to that period the parties were on good terms with each other without any denial of title and without any quarrel, the Court may record a finding that the possession of the plaintiff prior to the period of actual possession was constructive."

It cannot be denied in this case that the possession of the defendants appellants after mutation in favour of the father has been adverse. The mutation case was decided on March 30, 1925, and the suit was brought on March 30, 1937. It is to be seen whether the plaintiff had proved his possession, actual or constructive, within twelve years of the institution of the suit. The plaintiff stated that Ram Saran, his father, died 36 years ago, and after his death his elder brother Jainath looked after the property, that Jainath died 21 or 22 years go, and after him his widow Mst. Brijraji was in possession for a year or two, that after the death of Jainath Manik Ram, father of the appellants, was in possession, and used to pay profits to his guardian, Mst. Brijraji, and that he himself began to collect rent in 1924. He stated that he realised rent in April and October 1924. The mutation application was presented on April 29, 1924, Even if the plaintiff be believed, the last act of his possession was in October 1924, and the suit was instituted twelve years after it. It is said that he must be considered to be in constructive possession before it. Manik Ram clearly denied the title of the plaintiff on May 19, 1924. The plaintiff admits that he learnt of the denial of his title after 15 days, that is, in the end of May 1924. The suit was instituted even twelve years after that date. The learned Civil Judge has held that the title of the appellants became adverse not from the date the plaintiff came to know of the denial of his title by Manik Ram, but from March 30, 1925, when the mutation order was made. I think that it cannot be said that the defendants' father was in possession on behalf of the plaintiff, after he had denied his title. The learned Civil Judge has relied on Muhammad Bakar v. Nawab Mirza Muhammad Bakar Ali Khan, (38 Indian Appeals, p. 23) (4). In that case the plaintiff had applied in 1867 for regular settlement of certain villages, and then adverse title was distinctly set up. Her application was dismissed in 1868, and the suit was instituted in 1905 . The point, whether the adverse possession began to run from the date her title was denied or from the date of the dismissal of her application, did not arise in the case, because the suit was instituted some 37 years after the dismissal of the application The other case relied by the learned Civil Judge is Brahma Singh v. Raghuraj Singh, (10 O. W. N. p. 1926) (5). That was a suit for profits by one co-sharer against another. The defendant claimed some property as exclusively his. In a previous partition case he had claimed the property as his, but his application was disallowed. It was held that as his claim was unsuccessful, so the limitation did not run in his favour. This case is quite distinguishable from the present one. In this case it was found by the mutation Court that Manik Ram had been in possession. I see no reason to hold why the possession of Manik Ram did not become adverse to the plaintiff from the date the plaintiff came to know of the denial of his title. The learned Counsel for the respondent has relied on Bansgopal v. Shahzada Basdeo Singh, (20 Oudh Cases, p. 127) (6). That was a suit for a declaration that the defendants had no proprietary or under-proprietary rights in the land. Before the institution of the suit the Assistant Collector had cancelled a notice of ejectment on the ground that the defendants had made out a prima facie claim to under-proprietary rights. It was held that the limitation began to run from the date the order became final. That was a suit to which Art. 120 of the Lim. Act was applicable and not Art. 142 or Art. 144, and it was virtually a suit for the setting side of the order, and so the cause of action did not arise till the order became final. So in my opinion the possession of the defendants' predecessor ceased to be on behalf of the plaintiff when he denied the latter's title within his knowledge. As the suit was instituted beyond twelve years from that date it was barred by time.

I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the first Court. The appellants will have their costs throughout.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), ss. 109, 111, 112, 106—Application for perfect partition—Rejection of, on ground that such partition was excluded by certain agreement—Order falls under s. 111 (1) (c) and is appealable—Agreement providing that on partition revenue shall be paid through taluqdar lambardar—Validity of condition.

An application was made for perfect partition of a taluqdari village. An objection having been raised the Deputy Commissioner heard the parties, considered the report of the Sub-Divisional Officer and came to the conclusion that the right to perfect partition was excluded by a certain agreement and that the previous decision of the Commissioner was res judicata and hence he rejected the application:

Held, that the objection raised the question of proprietary title and the Deputy Commissioner acted under cl. c) of sub-s. (1) s. 111 of the Land Revenue Act and under the first portion of sub-s. (1) of s. 111. An appeal, therefore, was competent from his order rejecting the application. 179 Ind. Cas. 801 (1), Mohammad Sahamat Khan v. Aziz-un-nissa (2) and 77 Ind. Cas. 358 (3), distinguished Abu Muhammad Khan v. Kaniz Fizza (4), relied on.

The condition in the deed of agreement to the effect that on perfect partition the Govt. revenue shall be paid through the taluqdar lambardar, imposes a restraint upon partition and consequently cannot be enforced; at any rate it is not binding upon the successors to the contracting parties. Rajendra Dutt v. Sham Chund Mitter (5), Jafri Begum v. Syed Ali Raza (6), 52 Ind. F. C. A. against the order of the Deputy Commissioner of Unao, dated April 30, 1937.

Messrs. M. Wasim and Ali Hasan, for the Appellants.

Mr. Akhlaque Husain, for the Respondent.

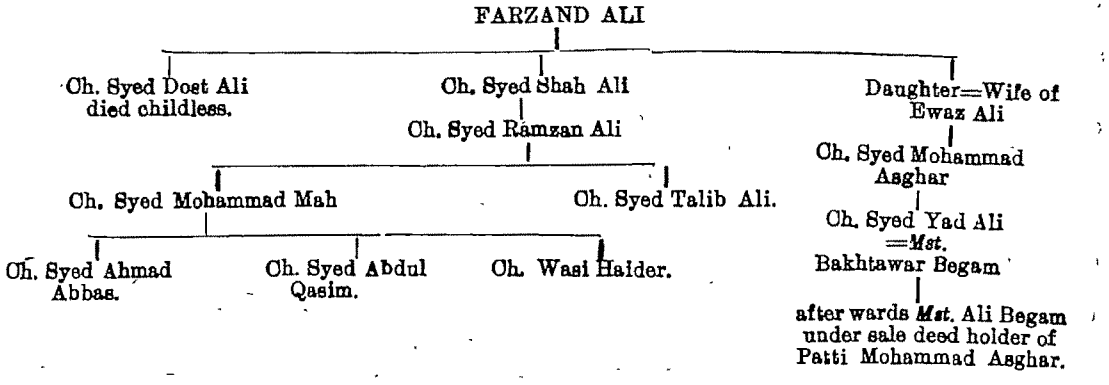
Judgment.—This is a first civil appeal by the plaintiffs against the order passed by the Deputy Commissioner of Unao dated April 30, 1937, rejecting the plaintiffs' application for a perfect partition.

A short pedigree (Ex. A-6), which is not disputed by the parties, may be given to illustrate the material facts :—



FARZAND ALI
Ch. Syed Dost Ali died childless.
Ch. Syed Shah Ali
Ch. Syed Ramzan Ali
Daughter=Wife of Ewaz Ali

after wards Mst. Ali Begam under sale deed holder of Patti Mohammad Asghar.

Chaudhri Dost Ali was the original taluqdar and his name was entered in list III prepared under s. 8 of Act I of 1869. Chaudhri Dost Ali died childless and upon his death a dispute arose between his nephew Chaudhri Ramzan Ali and his sister's son Chaudhri Mohammad Asghar. A partition deed by way of compromise was effected on March 5, 1877, between Chaudhri Ramzan Ali and Chaudhri Mohammad Asghar (Ex. A-3). Under this deed it was agreed that Chaudhri Ramzan Ali shall own ten annas and Chaudhri Mohammad Asghar six annas of the properties left by Chaudhri Dost Ali. Chaudhri Ramzan Ali was to become the lambardar and was to make collection of rents. It was stipulated that in case of dispute between them the ilaqa was to be divided and each person was to remain in possession of the property according to the shares mentioned above and shall pay Govt. revenue of his share to the taluqdar lambardar, who shall deposit the same with the Govt. As long as they were to remain joint there was to be a rendition of accounts. It appears that Chaudhri Mohammad Asghar filed an application on April 14, 1885, for a perfect partition before the Deputy Commissioner of Unao. The Deputy Commissioner thought that as the estate was in list III and as in view of the agreement dated March 5, 1877, Chaudhri Ramzan Ali was to remain the taluqdar and the head of the family and Chaudhri Mohammad Asghar was to pay the Govt.

revenue through him, the application for the perfect partition could not be allowed (Ex. A-1). The Commissioner on appeal upheld this decision on July 30, 1885, (Ex. A-2).

Mst. Ali Begam acquired the interest of Mohammad Asghar in the six annas share held by his descendants. She applied on August 15, 1936, for a perfect partition in respect of village Unao proper before the Deputy Commissioner of Unao. She died during the pendency of the partition proceedings and was succeeded upon her death by her husband and her sons and daughters, who are the present appellants. The application was made against Chaudhri Ahmad Abbas, who is the grandson of Chaudhri Ramzan Ali. The application stated that the nature of the mahal sought to be partitioned is an imperfect pattidari but there had been in existence one patti of six annas relating to the applicant's share and the other patti of ten annas relating to the share of the opposite party on the basis of mutual partition. The object of the application was to equilise the area and valuation of the two pattis and also to get partition of a patti which was still held joint.

An objection was raised by the respondent to the perfect partition on the ground that the order of the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner in 1885 had decided the matter between the parties and held that no partition could be effected in view of the deed of agreement dated March 5, 1877. Objection was also raised that town Unao was a taluqdari mahal and could not be partitioned without the sanction of the Local Govt. under s. 138 of the Land Revenue Act.

The Assistant Collector, First Class, made a report to the Deputy Commissioner in which he stated the controversy arising between the parties. He rejected the objection of the respondent that no partition could take place without the sanction of the Local Govt. He, however, recorded the opinion that the history of the estate pointed out that the estate was impartible and the agreement of 1877 maintained the impartible nature of the estate. He summed up his conclusion in these words :—

"I therefore hold that the Deputy Commissioner's decision of 1885 upheld by the Commissioner is at least a piece of evidence showing that the applicant cannot apply for a perfect partition of the Unao taluqa. I am therefore of opinion, that this application for perfect partition should be thrown out.

To Deputy Commissioner for ordera."

The learned Deputy Commissioner recorded a somewhat laconic order, which is as follows :—

"I have heard the parties and considered the report of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Unao, in which he has clearly set out the facts of this case. I agree with the Sub-Divisional Officer that the Commissioner's judgment of 1885, Mst. Asghari Begam v. Ramzan Ali refusing a perfect partition of the mahal in question operates as res judicata. I, therefore, order that the proceeding be quashed under s. 109 (1) of the Land Revenue Acts. The application for perfect partition is rejected."

The appellants have preferred a first appeal under s. 112 of the Land Revenue Act against the aforesaid order of the Deputy Commissioner.

Our attention has been drawn by both parties to the fact that an appeal originally filed by the appellants before the Commissioner of Lucknow was dismissed on September 13, 1937, on the ground that the appeal lay to this Court.

On behalf of the respondent it has been argued that no appeal lies against the order of the Deputy Commissioner. It is urged in the first place that no question of proprietary title was raised before the Deputy Commissioner inasmuch as the objection made by the respondent merely related to the mode of partition, and in the second place even such a question had been raised it was necessary under cl. (1) of s. 111 of the Land Revenue Act to show that the question had not been already determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction. It was also suggested that the Deputy Commissioner had not taken action under s. 111 (1) (c) of the Land Revenue Act. Reliance has been placed in support of these contentions on Bhagwan Prasad Singh v. Mst. Abhairaji (A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 108) (1) and Mohammad Shahamat Khan v. Mst. Aziz-un-nissa (7 O. C., 161) (2). Lastly it was argued that the order of the Deputy Commissioner fell within the purview of s. 109 of the Land Revenue Act and as such it was appealable only to Revenue Courts and not to Civil Courts. Learned Counsel has referred to Md. Ahsan Ali v. Masud Ali (A. I. R. 1924 Oudh, 149) (3) in this connection. We are satisfied that these contentions have no substance.

It appears from a perusal of the order of the Deputy Commissioner read with the report of the Assistant Collector, which appears to have been accepted, that the order of the Deputy Commissioner is based upon the fact that the name of the original taluqdar was entered in list III of Act I of 1869, that the agreement dated March 5, 1877 by reason of its conditions, excluded the right of perfect partition and that the previous decision of 1885 passed by the Deputy Commissioner of Unao and confirmed by the Commissioner was res judicata. We are, therefore, of opinion that the learned Deputy Commissioner acted under cl. (c) of sub-s. (1), s. 111 of the Land Revenue Act and under the first portion of sub-s. (1) of s. 111. He enquired into the merits of the objection raised in the case as to the question of the proprietary title and came to the conclusion that the right to perfect partition was negatived by the terms and conditions of the agreement dated March 5, 1877. Having pronounced his opinion upon the merits of the matter, he went on to express the opinion recorded by the Assistant Collector that the matter having been determined in 1885 was res judicata. The case of Bhagwan Prasad Singh v. Mst. Abhairaji (A. I R. 1939 Oudh 108 (1)) is clearly inapplicable to the facts and circumstances of the present case. There the Partition Officer overruled the objection to the partition without deciding the question on the merits In the case reported in 7 O. C., 161 (Mohammad Shahamat Khan v. Mst. Aziz-un-nissa) (2) the objection raised to the partition was that the property was not partible. It was held that this objection certainly involved a question of proprietary title within the meaning of s. 111 of the Land Revenue Act. The Assistant Collector without going into the merits of the objection decided that s. 111 did not apply as the question had already been determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction. An appeal was preferred against the order of the Assistant Collector to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. It was held that the order of the Assistant Collector dismissing the partition was not a decree within the meaning of s. 112 of the Land Revenue Act, 1901, and consequently no appeal lay. It was further held that it is only when the revenue Court goes into the merits of the objection that the order dealing with the objection is appealable as a decree. The latter observation is applicable to the circumstances of this case. We are further of opinion that the order of the Deputy Commissioner does not fall under s. 109 (1) of the Land Revenue Act. The Deputy Commissioner decided the objection under cl. (c) sub-s. (1) of s. 111 and as a necessary corollary to his finding upon that objection quased the proceedings under s. 109 of the Act. We are not prepared to hold that the Deputy Commissioner disavowed his intention to proceed under s. 111 of the Land Revenue Act and instead proceeded under s. 109 of the Land Revenue Act.

The case in Md. Ahsan Ali v. Masud Ali (A. I. R. 1924 Oudh 149) (3) has no application whatever to the facts of the present case.

Learned Counsel on behalf of the appellants has cited Abu Muhammad Khan v. Kaniz Fizza (I. L. R. 28 All., 185) (4) where it was held that an agreement amongst the members of a family holding property jointly that the family property should not be partitioned, could not bind the property in the hands of the descendants of the parties to the agreement; also that the question whether such an agreement could be binding on the property in the hands of the descendants of the parties thereto was a question of proprietary right within the meaning of s. 113 of Act XIX of 1873, and an appeal would, therefore, lie from the finding therein. Our decision upon the preliminary objection is that the present appeal is competent.

It has been argued on behalf of the appellants before us that the agreement dated March 5, 1877 expressly provides for partition and the fact that the revenue was to be paid by Chaudhri Mohammad Asghar through Chaudhri Ramzan Ali the lambardar, is no bar to a perfect partition after the death of the two contracting parties. It is argued that the agreement in question may be valid and binding between the contracting parties thereto but it is of no legal effect as against their heirs or transferees. Reliance has been placed in support of this contention on Rajendra Dutt v. Sham Chund Mitter (I. L. R 6 Calcutta, 108), (5), Jafri Begam v. Syed Ali Raza (I. L. R. 23 All. 383) (6) and Sakhawat Ali v. Abu Said (22 O. C., 100) (7).

In the first case it was provided by the agreement between five brothers of the joint Hindu family that none of the parties, nor their representatives, nor any person, shall be able to divide the real and personal property belonging to the family into shares. A son of one of the brothers sold his share in the family property. In a suit by the purchaser for partition it was held that the general scheme of the arrangement between the brothers could only be binding on the actual parties to it and not upon a purchaser from one of the parties. It was observed that the clause in the agreement against partition must be regarded as a mere restraint on partition and that a man cannot by gift inter vivos or by will give property absolutely to another and yet control the mode of enjoyment in respect of partition or otherwise.

The case of Jafri Begam v. Syed Ali Raza (I. L. R. 23 All. 383) (6) was a case of an award in which the arbitrator had directed that the property awarded to the heirs should not be partitioned as it was calculated to lead to ruin and destruction. It was held that the arbitrator had no power to make property, which was divisible by law, indivisible for ever and the direction in restraint of partition was inoperative against the heirs of the contracting parties.

These two decisions were followed in Sakhawat Ali v. Abu Said (22 O. C., 100) (7) here it was held that owners of property which is in its nature partible cannot, by an agreement among themselves, impress upon it permanently the character of impartibility.

The position taken up on behalf of the appellants is not seriously contested by learned Counsel on behalf of the respondent. His argument, however, is that the condition in the deed of agreement dated March 5, 1877 to the effect that the Govt. revenue shall be paid through the taluqdar lambardar, does not impose any restraint upon partition and consequently neither of the cases cited above has any application to the present case. Learned Counsel on behalf of the respondent concedes that he has no objection to the perfect partition being made if the condition as regards the payment of the Govt. revenue by the appellants through the respondent is complied with. We are of opinion, that this position is not legally maintainable. Section 106 of the Land Revenue Act provides that in "perfect partition" the whole mahal is divided and the several portions become separate mahals, each severally responsible for the revenue distributed thereon. Once the right of the appellants to a perfect partition is either admitted or established there can be no doubt that the responsibility for payment of the Govt. revenue shall fasten under the provisions of the Land Revenue Act upon each separate mahal, which is formed as a result of the perfect partition and it is not open to the parties to enter into an arrangement whereby the statutory liability to pay the Govt. revenue imposed by the Act is contravened. We are also of opinion that such a condition cannot be imposed and is at any rate not binding upon the successors to the contracting parties. To allow such a condition to operate is, in other words, to bar the right of a party to a perfect partition to which he is otherwise entitled. It has been suggested in course of the arguments on behalf of the respondent that although such a condition may be invalid in an ordinary deed, it must be regarded as legal and binding in the agreement dated March 5, 1877, as it was of the nature of a family settlement. We are, however, of opinion that the condition about the payment of Govt. revenue through the taluqdar is a condition which imposes a restraint upon partition and cannot be enforced against the plaintiffs. None of the cases in Ahmad Azim v. Safi Jan (A. I. R. 1926 Oudh, 561) (8) and Honuman Sahu v. Abbas Bandi Bibi (A. I. R. 1929 Oudh, 193), (9) which were relied upon by the learned Counsel for the respondent has any bearing upon the present case.

The result is that we allow the appeal with costs set aside the order passed by the Deputy Commissioner of Unao and direct that the application for partition filed by the appellants shall be proceeded with according to law.

Suit No. 51 of 1938

PULIN KRISHNA MUKHERJEE —PLAINTIFF,

ADYA NATH MUKHERJEE AND OTHERS— DEFENDANTS

Hindu Law—Religious endowment—Shebaitship—

Suit about—Parties—Deity, if necessary party—Turn of worship (joint pala*)—Partition of—Extent of—Partition—Consent decree not to partition, if acts as estoppel.*

Where in a suit merely questions of deb-sheba arise, the idol is not a necessary party to be brought on the record, for the transferability of shebaitship does not depend upon the will of the idol. 102 Ind. Cas. 409 (2), relied on, 87 Ind. Cas. 305 (1), distinguished.

The joint pala cannot be put up for sale as it would be wrong to compel the holder of a religious office to part with it against his wishes for a pecuniary consideration but the joint palas can be partitioned by giving each shebait a turn of worship in rotation when, the shebaits have a material and proprietary interest in the offerings and it has become impossible owing to disputes and differences to carry on the sheba jointly. Sri Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Gopal Lalji Maharaj (3), distinguished:

Held, that the custom existed whereby the palas of the deity were trasferable.

A subsisting consent decree providing inter alia that the land in suit should not be partitioned, so long it stands operates as an estoppel between the parties and their representatives. 11 Ind. Cas. 984 (4), followed.

Messrs. M. N. Dutt and J. C Sett, for the Defendants.

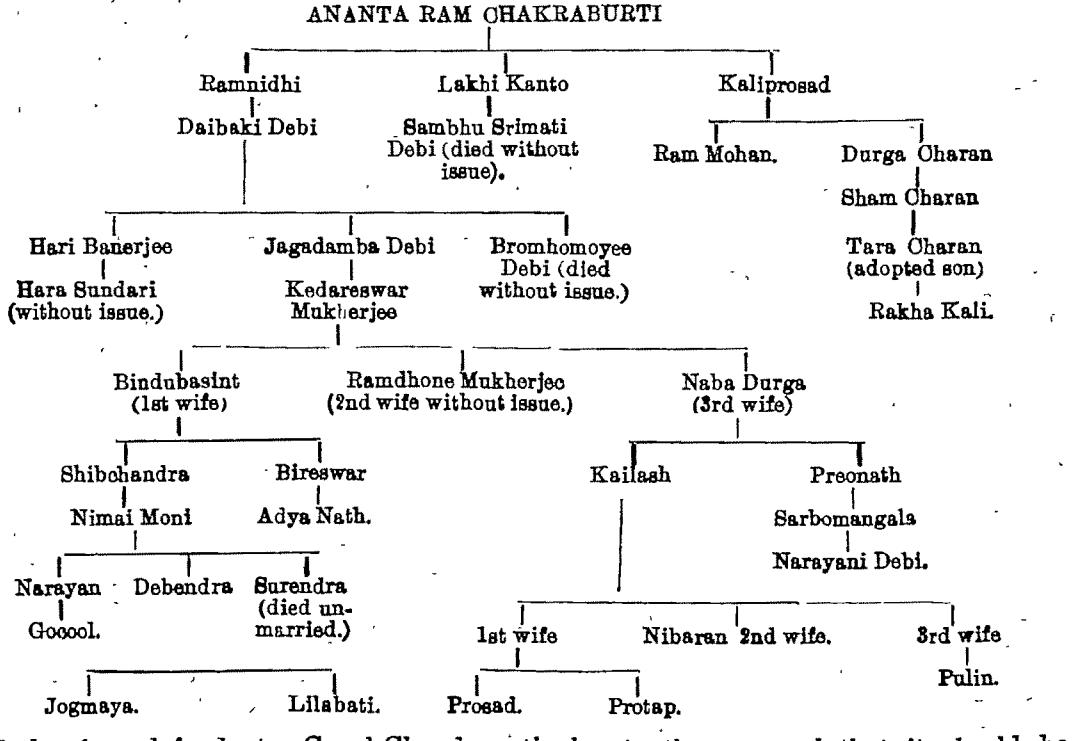
Judgment.—In this suit the plaintiff seeks to obtain a declaration that he is entitled to the shebaitship and pala or turn of worship, particulars of which are given in para. 10 of the plaint. His claim is based on a registered deed of gift of August 14, 1929, whereby the plaintiff's father, Nibaran Chandra Mukherjee, purported in consideration of natural love and affection to transfer to the plaintiff his (the donor's) right, title and interest to and in the worship of the deity Sree Sree Sidherwari Thakurani and in his several palas or turns of worship. The plaintiff also asks for the partition of a certain joint pala among the parties entitled thereto, or in the alternative a direction for the sale of the said joint pala to the highest bidder among the parties to the suit. The most complete pedigree of the family with which we are concerned is to be found in the written statement of the defendant Adya Nath Mukherjee.



Of the four defendants, Gocul Chandra Mukherjee and Panchcowrie Banerjee do not appear. The defendant Adya Nath Mukherjee does not contest the plaintiff's claim to a declaration, and his opposition has been limited to the plaintiff's demand to have the joint pala partitioned, and in particular to the proposal that it should be sold to the highest bidder among the parties. The substantial contest is that between the plaintiff and the defendant Narayani Debi. In para. 14 of the plaint the plaintiff alleges that by custom the pala is transferable. This allegation is traversed in para. 4 of Narayan's written statement, which goes on to state that the shebaitship was all along vested in the heirs of the founder and there was no custom to the contrary. All parties agree that the Hindu Law as regards the transferability of the office of shebait by way of gift is accurately summarized at p. 487 of the late Sir Dinshaw Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, Edn. 8. It will be convenient to set out the relevant passage:

"Gift.—Though a sale of a religious office is void, there is no absolute prohibition against a gift of such an office. Cases of this kind generally arise where the founder of an endowment has reserved the right of management to his own family, or has conferred it upon some other family. In such a case, it is competent to the shebait to renounce his right of management and transfer it to a person standing in the line of succession, provided the transferee is not disqualified by personal unfitness. Similarly, where there are several joint shebaits, they may renounce their right in favour of any one of them, provided the arrangement is for the benefit of the endowment. But a gift of the right of management made to a stranger is not valid, unless it is sanctioned by custom."

The first document relied on by the plaintiff is the will of Shamboo Chandra Chakravarti, a grandson of the founder of the endowment, Ananta Ram Chakravarti. That document is dated November 24, 1923 and a copy is annexed to a bill of complaint filed on the equity side of the Supreme Court in 1842. The testator specifically mentions his interest in the shebaitship in the words,

"and as to, for, and concerning my interest in and to the idol Sree Sree Sideswari Thakurani and her temple and all her estate and effects and also to the profit arising from the offering to the said Thakurani and to perform her ceremonies," and he bequeathed this interest along with the rest of his estate to Ramdhone Mukherjee. Another testamentary document which has been put in evidence is the will of Shib Chandra Mukherjee, dated July 17, 1880. This document in itself does not seem to me to carry matters any further, because the shebaitship is not specifically referred to, for the will is a simple document, bequeathing a life interest in the testor's entire estate to his wife with remainder to his sons and grandson in equal shares. It must however be mentioned here that in Suit No. 244 of 1891, which was a partition suit in which Nibaran was the plaintiff, Shib Chandra's will was considered by Sale, J., who held that the terms of the will were sufficiently wide to pass the whole estate including the right to worship to the testator's widow for life. In this suit a compromise was effected by a deed of settlement, to which Nibaran, Bireswar, Sarbomangala (widow of Preonath) and Nemaimoni were parties, dated December 6, 1892. Clause 3 deals with those days of the sheba when the worship is "cyclical" and not joint, and contains a provision whereby Sarbomangala leases her pala for consideration to Bireswar for a period of five years. With regard to the joint pala the position is as follows: Since the days of Ramdhone, the grandfather of Nibaran and Adya Nath, the sheba has been performed jointly on certain festival days when the offerings are unusually valuable, these offerings being subsequently divided among the shebaits according to their shares. These days are six in number, being four days of the Durga Puja, one day of the Kali Puja, and one day of the Ratami Puja. With regard to this joint sheba, cl. 4 of the deed provides as follows:

"It is further declared that keeping the joint pala joint, that is, in common, we have divided and take our ancestral separate seventeen days pala in the above manner, and we four persons declare that none of us four persons and our heirs and representatives shall ever be at liberty to urge objection or plea with regard to the holding of the said palas in the above manner. Should we or they raise any objection or plea it would be void and rejected by the Court."

Some time after the termination of the leasehold interest granted by Sarabomangala to Bireswar under the deed of December 6, 1892, she again leased out her pala of four and a quarter days by way of mortgage to Adya Nath for a period of seven years. Narayani was a party to this document in which she acknowledged that its terms were binding on her. With regard to the interest of defendant No. 4 Panchcowrie Banerji the position is this. The line of Kali Prosad, the founder's third son, came to an end with the death of Tara Charan Chakravarti, the adopted son of Shama Charan, Kali's grandson. Tara Charan died childless his sole heir being his widow Rakha Kali. This lady on May 17, 1905, executed a conveyance wherein she recited that she was absolutely entitled to a pala of thirteen days in every month and to a two-fifths share in the joint sheba. She then proceeded to convey her pala and her share in the joint sheba to her brother Kalipada Banerjee, for the consideration therein named, such consideration being the payment of the balance of the profits of the sheba to herself for her natural life. Kalipada is now dead, and his interest has devolved upon his son, the defendant Panchcowrie. On September 8, 1913, shortly after the death of Rakha Kali Nibaran instituted a suit against Kalipada (No. 942 of 1913), asking for a declaration that the defendant Kalipada had no interest in the deity, or its sheba, or its properties. This suit was compromised in terms of a deed of settlement executed on April 2, 1914. To this deed the defendant, Adya Nath was a party, though Narayani, in spite of the fact that she was impleaded in the suit, was not. The deed recites that there is a long standing custom of alienation of shebaitship by deed and will or either of them. In the face of this recital, Adya Nath's Counsel has felt it impossible to question the existence of the custom. The operative part of the deed conveys certain days of the thirteen days of Kalipada's pala to Nibaran and Adya Nath and also fractional shares in the joint pala. Kalipada died in 1926. Prior to this Jogmaya and Lilabati daughters and heiress of Debendra, the second son of Shib Chandra, had sold one-third of their pala to Gocool. These are all the relevant facts. A technical issue as to non-joinder was raised. First it was said that the deity should have been made a party. Since the decision of the Judicial Committee in Promotha Nah v. Pradhyumna Kumar (1), this is a contention which is advanced almost as a matter of course.

However, as was pointed by C. C. Ghose, J. delivering the judgment of the Court in an appeal from the original side, Brojendra Nath v. Lalit Mohan (2), that case Promotha Nath v. Pradhyumna Kumar (1), is no authority for the broad proposition that in every case where questions of debsheba arise, the idol is a necessary party to be brought on the record. In the present case the main question, i. e., the transferability of the shebaitship, cannot depend upon the will of the idol. As to the secondary issue which is concerned with the claim for partition of the joint pala, inasmuch as I do not propose to disturb the status quo, I see no reason to have the idol separately represented. It was further suggested, though the contention was not very vigorously urged, that Nibaran's other two sons, the plaintiff's half-brothers Protap and Prosad, as also Jogmaya and Lilabati should have been impleaded. I confess that I do not see on what principle these parties should be joined, although of course any decree made in the suit in no way binds them. On the main question I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has succeeded in proving that a custom exists whereby the palas of the deity are transferable. The language of the will of Shamboo Chandra, which was executed as long ago as 1823, is to all intents and purposes a specific bequest of the pala. The only instance in which a transfer has been called in question is Nibaran's suit of 1913 which was eventually compromised in terms of a document which expressly recognizes the transferability of the pala.

There is force in the contention that some of the transfers on which the plaintiff relies, as for example the leases by Sarbomangala and Narayani and the sale by Jogmaya and Lilabati, are open to attack on the ground that they are for consideration, but the fact remains that, although they might possibly have been set aside at the instance of the other shebaits, they have in fact been accepted. In these circumstances I hold that the plaintiff is entitled to the declaration for which he asks in para. (a) of the prayer to the plaint. On the other hand I reject his claim for partition of the joint palas. In so far as he seeks to have the joint pala put up for sale, I consider that it will be contrary to principle to make such an order as in my view, it would obviously be wrong to compel the holder of a religious office to part with it against his wishes for a pecuniary consideration. As to partitioning the joint palas by giving each shebait a turn of worship in rotation there is in my opinion, no general legal objection to such a course, since cases like Sri Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Gopal Lalji Maharaj (3), do not apply when, as here, the shebaits have a material and proprietary interest in the offerings. I find however the plaintiff has failed to show that, as he alleges in para. 13 of the plaint, it has become impossible owing to disputes and differences to carry on the sheba jointly.

But, apart from this, I consider that the deed of settlement of September 6, 1912, to which Nibaran was a party is a bar to any claim on the part of a shebait to partition. In an earlier part of this judgment I have set out the terms of cl. 4 of that document in extenso and there is no no need to repeat them. They have become part of a decree of the Court, and I think that in the circumstances Cowasji v. Kisandas (4), is of assistance. In that case certain predecessors-in-title of the parties had consented to a decree which provided inter alia that the land in suit should not be partitioned. In dealing with the plaintiff's claim for a partition decree the Court observed :

"Apart from that clause in the consent decrees which affects to prohibit partition, we think it clear that, as tenants-in-common, the plaintiffs would be entitled to partition.

But the question is whether in this suit the plaintiffs are entitled to give the go-by to a particular clause in an existing decree on the ground that that clause, if resting on no higher authority than the agreement between the parties, would be bad in law. We think that this question must be answered in the negative. It may be though we express no opinion as to this that in a suit properly framed for that purpose the plaintiffs might have been able to get the decree set aside. But no such such has been brought and the decree is a subsisting decree nor does it, we think, make any difference that it was taken by consent of the parties who were all sui juris. The decree stands, and, while it stands, it operates as an estoppel between the then parties and their present representatives."

In the result the plaintiff has partly succeeded and partly failed. I see no reason why the debutter estate should be burdened with the entire costs of the litigation. I therefore make no order as to the costs of the plaintiff and of the defendant Narayani. The defendant Adya Nath has not resisted the declaratory decree for which the plaintiff asked, but he has successfully opposed the prayer for partition or sale of the joint sheba. In these circumstances he may have his taxed costs out of the debutter estate.

D. Order accordingly.

Civil Revision Petition No. 218 of 1940

February 26, 1940

HORWILL, J.

In re MUNIRATNA GURUKKAL —PETITIONER

Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act (II of 1927), s. 84 (1)—Villagers actively managing temple since 1904—Presumption that they had right to manage even prior to 1904—Archakas allowed to manage small portion—Effect.

Where the villagers were managing a temple since 1904 though prior to that date they had allowed the archakas to manage the small property of the temple for some years:

Held, that the presumption was that even before that year the villagers had the right of management and the villagers by allowing the archakas for some years before 1904 to manage the small property of the temple, did not lose their right of management of the institution, or even of its property.

C. R. P. to revise the order of the District Court, North Arcot dated August 28, 1939.

Facts.—Petition under s 84 (2), Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, to set aside the order of the Board declaring that the Selva Vinayakar Temple at Shevpakkam is a non-excepted temple on the ground that the petitioners have been in the management of the temple and its properties, including a piece of land, endowed for specific purposes not connected with the temple, that some of the leading members of the village were enlisted by the petitioner's father along with him some time back only for the conduct of Brahma Utsavam. On evidence it was found by the District Judge that there was a dharmakartha in 1904, and in the subsequent period also and that petitioner and his ancestors were only styled as archakas and that therefore they were not hereditary trustees and the temple was, therefore not an excepted temple within the meaning of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act.

Mr. K. Umamaheswaran, for the Petitioner.

Order—There can be no doubt that after 1904, the villagers have been actively managing the suit institution. The presumption is, therefore, that even before that year they had the right of management—or the petitioners would not have acquiesced in the loss of their authority. Moreover, the petitioners have on more than one occasion described themselves only as archakas, and have allowed others to be called dharmakarthas. The villagers, by allowing the archakas for some years before 1904 to manage the small property of the temple, did not lose their right of management of the institution, or even of its property. The petition is dismissed.

N.-D. Petition dismissed.

First Appeal No. 323 of 1938
August 30, 1940
COLLISTER AND BAJPAI, JJ.
Maharaj DHARAM NARAIN—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
Maharaj SURAJ NARAIN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 124, 120, s. 10—Art. 124, applicability to appointment to office by nomination—Distinction between claim to religious office and to property of endowment as also between movable and immovable property of endowment, if can be made—Suit against trustee de son tort, for accounts—S. 10, if applies—Article applicable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Suit by person calling himself trustee against defendant alleged to be trespasser for possession of waqf property and office of mutwalli by dispossession of defendant—Competency—S 92, if bar—Hindu Law—Religious endowment—Shebaitship—Devolution of—Principles as to, stated.

Article 124, Lim. Act is not applicable where the appointment to the office is made by nomination and applies only when the appointment is by succession through inheritance. [p. 702, col. 1.]

There is no distinction as regards limitation between a claim to an office and a claim to the property of endowment. Nor is there any distinction between movables and immovables in a matter of endowment. Gnanasambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (5), relied on. [p. 702, col. 2.]

In a suit for accounts against the trustee de son tort s. 10, Lim. Act, will not apply, for, it applies to cases of express trust alone. Such a point is governed by Art. 120. [p. 705, col. 1.]

Where an ordinary suit for ejectment is filed by a plaintiff who calls himself a trustee against a defendant who is alleged to be a trespasser, the plaintiff can ignore s. 92, Civil P. C., and can sue for possession of waqf property and of the office of mutwalli and amin of the waqf by dispossession of the defendant 24 Ind. Cas. 501 (7), relied on. 69 Ind. Cas. 990 (9) 84 Ind. Cas. 631 (10), explained. 106 Ind. Cas 389 (8), not approved. [p. 703, col. 1.]

The principles applicable to a case where the shebait is dead are as follows: (a) If there is a provision in the deed of endowment about the mode in which the office is to be filled up, the next shebait is to be appointed in pursuance of the provision, that is, the devolution of the trust depends upon the terms on which it was created; (b) If there are no such provisions, then it depends on the usage of a particular institution; (c) In the absence of all these, the office of shebait reverts to the heirs of the founder. [p. 699, col. 2; p. 700, col. 1.]

The founder of the endowment did not nominate anybody as the next shebait, although she had reserved that right in herself, nor did the managing committee to whom she had given such right nominate anybody as the shebait. Indeed the managing committee never took the slightest interest in this endowment and they did not care to fill the vacancies as they occurred by the death of the members and so their number was reduced to two:

Held, that the title to the property and its management and control followed the line of inheritance from the founder, and the next heir-at-law of the founder became the shebait. Such a vesting could not be prevented by the likelihood of any power if there was any such power left outstanding in the committee of two being exercised. The office became hereditary in the hands of the heir-at-law and after his death it was not necessary again to go back to the original founder and see as to who would be her heirs as it would be in contravention of the Hindu Law of inheritance to say that the endowment should be held in a series of successive life estates by the heritors. Gossami Sri Gridhariji v. Romanlalji Gossami (1), and Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (2), relied on. [p. 700, col. 2; p. 702, col. 1.]

Held, further that after the death of one of the two members of the managing committee the sole surviving member of the committee could not constitute the committee and, the son of the heir-at-law who succeeded him after his death obtained an indefeasible title from the very start and in any event after the death of the sole surviving member of the committee his title became absolutely indefeasible. 32 Ind. Cas. 823 (3) and Ganendro Mohan Tagore v. Juttendro Mohan Tagore (4), relied on. [p. 700, col. 2]

Messrs. P. L. Banerji, G. S. Pathak and B. L. Gupta, for the Respondent.

Bajpai, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant Dharam Narain. The plaintiff Suraj Narain brought a suit for "possession of the entire waqf property, movable and immovable, and all the funds of the waqf created under a document dated May 14, 1900 executed by Mst. Bibi Sabitri and of the office of mutwalli and amin of the aforesaid waqf by dispossession of the defendant." It was also prayed that the defendant may be ordered to render all accounts of the funds and income of the property appertaining to the waqf from 1926 up to the institution of the suit and that a decree for the amount found payable by the defendant for the period of his possession with reasonable interest may be passed in favour of the plaintiff against the person and property of the defendant. The Court below decreed the plaintiff's suit "for possession over the office of trustee and over the property, movable and immovable, belonging to the trust." A preliminary decree for account was also passed in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant directing the latter to render accounts relating to the trust from 1926 onwards upto the date of the judgment (September 17, 1938) and the plaintiff was allowed full costs against the defendant. The allegations on which the plaintiff brought the suit may be stated, but in order to appreciate them it would be better to give the following pedigree:

The common ancestor of the parties was Mool Chand and one of his sons, Salig Ram was possessed of considerable property. His two sons, Jagannath and Chotey Lal, died in his lifetime and Salig Ram on January 7, 1895 gifted his property absolutely to his widowed daughter-in-law Bibi Savitri and the latter on May 14, 1900 created an endowment of some of her properties in favour of three idols, Sri Savitri Swami Ram Chandra Ji, Sri Savitri Swami Janki Ji and Sri Savitri Lachhman Ji by means of a formal deed of gift and constituted herself as the first muwalli of the waqf property during her own lifetime. She died on April 17, 1917 and then, according to the plaintiff, Lachhmi Narain as the heir of the founder became the mutwalli and remained in possession of the waqf property during his lifetime, although the endowed estate was managed by one Puttu Lal, the Mukhtar-i-am of Bibi Savitri and an employee of Lachhmi Narain. Lachhmi Narain died on September 30, 1921 and then the plaintiff succeeded to the mutwalliship, but he was a minor and his estate was under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. Puttu Lal however continued to manage the endowed property up till 1926 on behalf of the plaintiff and then mutation was effected in favour of Dharam Narain in August 1926, but he had absolutely no title and his possession was the possession of a trespasser. During his time he was guilty of gross mismanagement and waste. The defendant was therefore liable to be dispossessed and was liable to render accounts. The plaintiff was entitled to obtain actual possession of the endowed property.

In defence it was pleaded that the plaintiff was not entitled to the mutwalliship and therefore he had no cause of action. The plaintiff's suit was said to be barred under s. 92, Civil P. C., and by the twelve years' rule of limitation. The defendant alleged that Lachhmi Narain never obtained possession over the waqf property, but, on the death of Bibi Savitri, the defendant and his brother Shiv Narain under an oral will became the mutwallis of the waqf property and, according to the same oral will Puttu Lal was authorized to carry on the management during the minority of Shiv Narain and Dharam Narain. The defendant took up the management in his own hands on attaining majority and his management throughout has been satisfactory and honest. The plaintiff was said to have attained his majority more than three years prior to the institution of the suit. The Court below decided every issue in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the suit in its entirety. It is not perhaps quite accurate to say that all the issues were decided in favour of the plaintiff because, although there is no definite finding of the Court below on the point, the learning of the Court is undoubtedly in favour of the defendant's contention on the question of the plaintiff's age, but that did not in any way have any effect, in the judgment of the Court below, on the ultimate decision of the case.

The defendant in this appeal has raised several contentions and we shall notice them as we proceed with our judgment. The first question that we have got to decide is whether the title to shebaitship vested in Lachhmi Narain or not on the death of Bibi Savitri. At this stage, it will be convenient to discuss the scheme of the endowment created by Bibi Savitri on May 14, 1900. This document, which is styled as a deed of gift, is printed at p. 107 of our record. The lady says that the property given at the foot of the document was owned and possessed by her and she was making a gift of the same in favour of Sri Thakur Savitri Swami Ram Chandra Ji, Sri Savitri Jati Lachhman Ji and Sri Savitreshwari Janki Ji Maharani installed in the temple. The property made a gift of, was to remain in her possession as amin and the income of the property was to be spent according to the directions in the deed for the benefit of Sri Thakurji, donee aforesaid, Sanskrit, Pathshala and daily Sadabart. She reserved to herself and to the succeeding amins the right of appointing karindas and servants for realising the income of the property and spending it according to the instructions contained in the deed. She appointed the following residents of Farrukhabad as managing amins: (1) Maharaj Prag Narain, son of Mangala Charan, caste Brahman Bajpai, resident of Mohalla Lohai, (2) Maharaj Behari Lal, cashier, adopted son of Chhote Lal, caste Brahman, resident of Mohalla Bazar Kirana, (3) Maharaj Chandra Sen, son of (torn) of Mohalla Lohai, (4) Jhangiri Lal, son of Govind Prasad, caste (torn) of Mohalla Nazir Chhakka Lal, (5) Pandit Prag Datt son of Pandit Lachman, caste Brahman, resident of Mohalla Bolraj, (6) Sita Ram, son of (torn) caste Mahajan, resident of Mohalla Manihari, (7) Jawala Prasad, son of (torn), caste Restogi rsident of Mohalla Chaudhri Khiali Ram.

The document, due to the oversight of the scribe, does not contain para. 5. There is a little mistake in the printed document before us for paras. 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 therein should be read as paras. 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10. In para. 7 she said that after her or in her lifetime when she wanted to give up the work of amin, Maharaj Prag Narain son of Mangala Charan, her son-in-law, was to be appointed amin by means of a document, and in para. 8 she reserved to herself the power to renew, cancel or amend the terms relating to the appointment of an amin by means of a registered deed of Amanat, but after her death her heirs and representatives were not to have the said power. In para. 9 it was said that if the amin acted contrary to the terms and directions (which were to be given out under a separate document which would be executed) this is clear from para. 3 it would be the duty of the managing amins to force the amin to carry out the said terms and directions, and if the amin adopted any fresh course of action contrary to Dharamshastra, the managing amins shall have power to remove him from the office and to appoint another amin in his place and to execute a deed of Amanat and have it registered. It was also provided that if any one out of the managing amins died or wanted to give up the work, another person was to be appointed as managing amin in his place under a document with reference to a majority of opinion of the remaining amins. But it was to be kept in mind that the managing amin appointed was to be a Brahman or Vaish by caste who was a believer in idol worship. In para. 11 it was provided that if the amin acted contrary to the terms or misbehaved or acted dishonestly or did not discharge the duties of an amin properly or wanted to resign the office of amin or died, then it would be the duty of Bibi Savitri herself so long as she lived and after her of the managing amins to appoint, in place of the deceased or unfit amin or the amin who might refuse to work, another person who might be a Hindu, a Kanujiya Brahman, a follower of Hindu Dharamshastra, a firm believer in idol worship and an honest and God-fearing man as amin. It is clear that this provision contemplated the retirement of Bibi Savitri while she was alive. We have quoted the relevant paragraphs of the endowment. A number of properties were mentioned at the foot of the document as being dedicated to the deities, but by virtue of another deed of waqf by way of Tamliknama dated March 10, 1916 several properties were transferred to a Pathshala about which also a scheme of management was laid down, and it is of some importance to note that one Puttu Lal son of Raghubir Dayal, caste Khattri, her general attorney was appointed as one of the members of the managing committee. After this diversion of some of the properties to the Pathshala the endowment of 1900 was confined to certain shops, houses and malikana allowance of Rs. 1,100 in the 10 biswas muafi share situate in Mouza Aseha.

On July 30, 1900 she cancelled the appointment of Maharaj Prag Narain as the trustee in succession to herself and as also a member of the managing committee and she further directed that Prag Narain should never be appointed a trustee and manager. It would thus appear that the managing amins now became six instead of seven and Bibi Savitri remained the amin or mutwalli or shebait during her lifetime. It is admitted by Dharam Narain defendant that Behari Lal, Chandra Sen, Pragdat and Jhinguri Lal, four out of the six amins, died in the lifetime of Mst. Savitri and nobody was appointed in their place as they died one after the other. In fact, the managing committee of the six persons did not function at all—these are the very words of Dharam Narain. When, therefore, Bibi Savitri died on April 17, 1917 only two members, namely Sita Ram and Jwala Prasad, of the managing committee were in existence and nobody seems to have taken any trouble whatsoever to fill the vacancies caused by the death of the other four. The principles applicable to a case where the shebait is dead are as follows: (a) If there is a provision in the deed of endowment about the mode in which the office is to be filled up, the next shebait is to be appointed in pursuance of the provision, that is, the devolution of the trust depends upon the terms on which it was created; (b) If there are no such provisions, then it depends on the usage of a particular institution; (c) In the absence of all these, the office of shebait reverts to the heirs of the founder. In Gossami Sri Gridhariji v. Romanlalji Gossami (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that:

"according to Hindu Law, when the worship of a Thakur has been founded, the office of a shebait is held to be vested in the heir or heirs of the founder, in default of evidence that he has disposed of it otherwise, provided that there has not been some usage, course of dealing, or circumstance showing a different mode of devolution."

Again in Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (2), they observed that there being no reliable evidence as to the terms or conditions of a religious endowment the legal inference was that the title to the property or to its management or control followed the line of inheritance from the founder. Now in the present case Bibi Savitri did not nominate anybody as the next shebait, although she had reserved that right in herself, nor did the managing committee to whom she had given such right nominate anybody as the shebait. Indeed the managing committee never took the slightest interest in this endowment and they did not care to fill the vacancies as they occurred and so it is argued that when their number was reduced to two it could not be said that they retained any such power because it was not the intention of the author of the trust that a committee of two should have the right to nominate a shebait. The appellant argues that either these two could have appointed four more members to act on the managing committee and then could have appointed a shebait by a majority of vote or that these two alone could have appointed a shebait. The respondent, on the other hand, argues that the committee of two had lapsed almost into nothingness and they lost all power in the matter inasmuch as the directions of the author could not be reasonably carried out. The fact, however, remains that even these two did not exert in this direction, and we are of the opinion that the title to the property and its management and control followed the line of inheritance from the founder, and Lachhmi Narain, who was the next heir-at-law of Bibi Savitri became the shebait. Such a vesting could not be prevented by the likelihood of any power if there was any such power left outstanding in the committee of two being exercised. At best, it may be said that the vesting could be defeated when the power was exercised supposing the power was outstanding. It is not necessary for the purposes of this case to say whether the reasonable exercise of any power was left outstanding in view of the next circumstance, namely the death of Sita Ram on May 10, 1921.

There is a death register (p. 153) which shows that Sita Ram died on May 10, 1921. Dharam Narain has also admitted the same. Lachmi Narain died on September 30, 1921 and as long as he was alive Sita Ram and Jwala Prasad did nothing in matter and after the death of Sita Ram on May 10, 1921 the matter was not capable of being argued that Jwala Prasad, the solitary member of the managing committee, could have exercised any power reasonably according to the wishes of Bibi Savitri. In any event no such power was ever exercised by any member of the committee. The learned Judge of the Court below has discussed this matter with great thoroughness. The position, therefore, is that Lachhmi Narain did succeed to the shebaitship on the death of Bibi Savitri and remained a shebait till his death on September 30, 1921. This is what took place as a matter of law and we shall have to revert to this aspect later when we shall discuss whether he did succeed as a matter of fact also or whether somebody else usurped that position. We further hold the view that as a matter of law Suraj Narain, his son, succeeded to the shebaitship on the death of Lachhmi Narain. The only remaining member of the managing committee, Jwala Prasad, died on November 15, 1925, as is clear from the copy of the extract of a death register produced in this case (p. 173), and thus all the members of the committee died. Jwala Prasad as the sole surviving member of the committee could not constitute the committee and, Suraj Narain obtained an indefeasible title from the very start and in any event after the death of Jwala Prasad his title became absolutely indefeasible. In Kunjamani Dassi v. Nikunja Bihari Das (3) a Bench of the Calcutta High Court held

Council observed at p. 252 as follows:

"By adversely taking and appropriating to his own use a share of the surplus daily income from the offerings Jharula Das acquired no title and no right to a share of that income. On each occasion upon which Jharula Das received and wrongfully appropriated to his own use a share of the income to which the shebait was entitled, Jharula Das committed a fresh actionable wrong in respect of which a suit could be brought against him by the shebait But it did not constitute him the shebait for the time being or affect in any way the title to the office."

The position of Dharam Narain before us is virtually the same as the position of Jharula Das in the case before their Lordships of the Privy Council In Ganga Charan v Ram Chandra (8) it was held that

"s 92, Civil P. C, has no application to suits where a plaintiff claims possession of the endowed property on the allegation that he is duly appointed trustee and that the defendant is a trespasser. Section 92 has reference to those cases and to those cases alone where there is an allegation of breach of any express on constructive trust created for public purposes of charitable or of religious nature, or where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust."

It is true that in Ram Bilas v. Nityanand (9) a Bench of this Court held that a suit under s. 92. Civil P. C., was competent against a trustee de son tort, that is, against a person who without any title chooses to take upon himself the character of a trustee and in Bihari Lal v. Shiv Narain (10). Dalal, J., one of the members constituting the Bench which decided the case also held the same view. But it has not been held in either of the above two cases that if an ordinary suit for ejectment is filed by a plaintiff who calls himself a trustee: against a defendant who is alleged to be a trespasser, s 92, Civil P. C., would be a bar. Indeed it was conceded by learned Counsel for the appellant that if the defendant was a trespasser the present suit was not incompetent. We do not wish to go as far as the learned Judges, who decided Ganga Charan v. Ram Chandra (8) seems to go, but we think that the plaintiff could ignore s. 92, Civil P. C., and bring his suit in the present form. Coming to s. 10, Lim. Act, before we discuss its applicability, it is necessary to decide another issue, namely the question of the plaintiff's age. He alleged that he was born on July 3, 1913 and as his estate was taken under the Court of Wards he attained his majority on July 3, 1934 and the present suit instituted on January 5, 1937 within three years of his attaining majority is in time for all purposes. His suit therefore does not in any way offend s. 8, Lim. Act, which provides that:

"nothing in s. 6 or in s. 7 (sections dealing with disabilities).....shall be deemed to extend, for more than three years from the cessation of the disability.....the period within which any suit must be instituted....."

The defendant's contention however is that the plaintiff was born on June 30, 1912 and thus he attained his majority on June 30, 1933 and by reason of s. 8, Lim. Act, the suit having been instituted more than three years after the cessation of the disability of minority, is barred. It would not be necessary for the plaintiff to invoke the aid of s. 10, Lim. Act, if his contention on the question of age is accepted. The learned Judge of the Court below "refrained from expressing anything definitely on this point" although he was 'inclined to be more partial towards the defendant on the subject." We however consider that it is necessary for us to give a definite finding on the point. (Their Lordships discussed the plaintiff's evidence relating to his age and proceeded.) On the whole, after a careful comparison of the evidence tendered by the parties, we have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to establish that he was born on July 3, 1930. Section 8, Lim. Act, therefore adversely affects the plaintiff's case. The result therefore is that unless s. 10, Lim Act, helps the plaintiff, his suit for rendition of accounts could not be decreed for all the period during which the defendant was in possession, that is, from 1926, but for only six years prior to the institution of the suit, as is conceded by learned Counsel for the defendant, the article applicable being the omnibus Art. 120.

We now come to a consideration of s. 10, Lim. Act. That section prior to its amendment by the Lim. Act, (Amendment) Act I of 1929, which came into force on January 1, 1929, read as follows:

Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration) for the purposes of following in his or their hands such property, or the proceeds thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds, shall be barred by any length of time."

There was some divergence of opinion in the Courts in India as to whether a shebait of a Hindu endowment could be said to be a person in whom property was vested in trust, but in the year 1921, their Lordships of the Privy Council in Vidya Varuthi Thirthaswamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (11), made the following observations :

"The language of s. 10 gives the clue to the meaning and applicability of Art. 134. It clearly shows that the article refers to cases of specific trust ; and relates to property 'conveyed in trust.' Neither under the Hindu Law nor in the Muhammadan system is any property 'conveyed' to a shebait or a mutawalli in the case of a dedication. Nor is any property vested in him ; whatever property he holds for the idol or the institution he holds as manager with certain beneficial interest regulated by custom and usage. Under the Muhammadan Law, the moment a waqf is created, all rights of property pass out of the waqf and vest in God Almighty. The curator whether called mutawalli or sajjadanashin or by any other name, is merely a manager. He is certainly not a 'trustee' as understood in the English system."

After this Privy Council decision it became clear that the shebait could not be said to be a person in whom property was "vested in trust." In 1929 the following paragraph was added to s. 10 :

"For the purposes of this section any property comprised in a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist religious or charitable endowment shall be deemed to be property vested in trust for a specific purpose, and the manager of any such property shall be deemed to be the trustee thereof."

The Statements of Objects and Reasons are as follows :

"The (Civil Justice) Committee's recommendation refers, it is understood, to the decisions of the Privy Council in Vidya Varuthi Thirthasawamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (11) and Abdur Rahim v. Narayan Das (12) which lay down that a dharmakarta, mohant or manager of a Hindu religious property or the mutawalli or sajjadanashin in whom the management of Muhammadan religious endowments is vested are not trustees within the meaning of the word as used in s. 10, Lim. Act, for the reason that the property does not vest in them. The result is that when a suit is brought against a person, not being an assign for valuable consideration, endowments of this nature are not protected. The committee's recommendation is that s. 10 of the Act should be amended so as to put Hindu and Muhammadan religious endowments on the same footing as other trust funds which definitly vest in a trustee. After consulting the Local Govt. the Govt. of India have come to the conclusion that Hindu, Muhammadan and Buddhist religious as well as charitable endowments should be included within the scope of s. 10 of the Act. The bill gives effect to this conclusion."

Learned Counsel for the plaintiff says that by reason of s. 10 and more particularly by reason of the amendment the plaintiff's suit for an account of the trust property is not barred "by any length of time" as against the defendant. In our judgment, the plaintiff's contention is not sound. All that the amendment has done is to do away with the effect of the Privy Council decision in Vidya Varuthi Thirthaswamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (11), and to make a Hindu shebait or a Muhammadan mutawalli a trustee in whom property may be said to have vested. But the plaintiff has to prove, according to the section as amended and unamended, that the property had vested in trust for any specific purpose so far as the defendant was concerned. The question is whether the defendant is an express trustee or only a trustee de son tort. It is the plaintiff's own case that the defendant is a rank trespasser and his position at best can, therefore, be only of a trustee de son tort. Whatever may be the view of the other High Courts as to the applicability of s. 10 so far as trustees de son tort are concerned, this Court has definitely held in Bibari Lal v. Shiv Narain (10), that in a suit for accounts against the trustee de son tort s. 10, Lim. Act, will not apply, for it applies to cases of express trust alone. The Oudh Chief Court has followed this decision in Chandrika Bakhsh Singh v. Bhola Singh (13). Their Lordships of this Court then applied Art. 120, Lim. Act and directed that the defendants in that case must render accounts of the profits for the period of six years prior to the suit, and, as we said before, the defendant in the present case would be liable to render accounts only for six years. In this view of the matter, it is not necessary for us to consider whether the defendant has been guilty of mismanagement or waste because under the law the defendant is accountable to the plaintiff whether he is guilty of malpractice or not. Certain actions of the defendant appeared to the Court below to amount to breaches of trust and if we felt constrained to give any finding on the point we would have said that they were justified by the exigencies of circumstances and did not amount to misfeasance. Learned Counsel for the defendant placed all the facts in this connection and argued that the defendant throughout acted bona fide in the interest of the trust.

Learned Counsel for the plaintiff contended himself with the submission that the defendant was an accountable party and did not attempt to meet the arguments advanced by the defendant's Counsel. We feel inclined to agree with the case of the defendant and hold that it has not been established that the defendant has been guilty of any grave dereliction of duty. For the reasons given above, we confirm the decree of the Court below so far as it relates to possession over the office of the trustee and over the property movable and immovable belonging to the trust. We however, modify it so far as the decree for rendition of accounts is concerned and hold that the defendant is liable to render accounts relating to the trust from January 5, 1931. As the plaintiff has succeeded in both Courts in almost all the points and has failed only so far as rendition of accounts for about five years is concerned, we direct that the plaintiff will get four-fifths of his costs from the defendant in both Courts, and the defendant will bear his own costs throughout.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Civil Revision Petition No. 49 of 1937
April 5, 1940

KRISHNSWAMI AYYANGAR, J.

SAIT SOGMULL LACHIRAM FIRM, TENALI—PETITIONER

VALLABHANENI PARANDHAMAYYA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 78 (2)—Proof of debt—Meaning and nature of—S. 78 (2) incorporates principle of s. 14, Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

Before a party can claim the benefit of the exclusion enacted by s. 78, Prov. Insol Act, two conditions have to be satisfied The suit or application in which limitation is pleaded must be in respect of a debt provable under the Act, and it must also have been proved under the Act. Proof of debt in insolvency means that kind of proof only which entitles a creditor to have his name entered in the Schedule and none other. Evidence given to make out that a petitioning creditor is qualified to apply to have the debtor adjudicated insolvent, is not proof in insolvency, and unless he tenders proof of his debt in the manner indicated by s. 49, his name cannot be entered in the Schedule; and, however, true his debt may be, he cannot be allowed to come in for a dividend. Nor can he be permitted to claim in a suit for the recovery of the debt after annulment of the insolvency, an exclusion of the time during which the insolvency remained pending if he had not proved the debt in the sense explained above.

Section 78 (2), Prov. Insol. Act was intended to incorporate the principle of s. 14, Lim. Act, so as to meet the situation which is likely to arise frequently in insolvencies. That principle operates to enable a person who was prosecuting with due diligence another proceeding founded upon the same cause of action, in another Court, to exclude the time during which he was so prosecuting that proceeding. Want of diligence, and failure to do what could be done to recover the debt in spite of the insolvency, that is to say a failure to prove for the debt, would deprive a party of the benefit of the section.

C. R. P. to revise the decree of the Sub-Judge, Tenali, in S. C. S. No. 600 of 1934

Mr. V. Subramaniam, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. K. Kameswara Rao and B. S. Ramachandra Rao, for the Respondents.

Order.—A somewhat interesting question relating to the construction of the proviso to s. 78 (2), Prov. Insol. Act, 1920, arises for consideration in this revision petition. The petitioner was the plaintiff in a small cause suit in which he sued to recover a sum of Rs. 1,000 on foot of a promissory note executed on April 10, 1930 by respondent No. 1. The other respondents are the undivided sons of respondent No. 1. The suit was filed on November 12, 1934, that is to say one year seven months and two days after the period of limitation and is therefore prima facie time-barred unless the plaintiff could claim the benefit of an exemption. To this end he relies on s. 78 (2), Prov. Insol. Act, which runs as follows:

"Where an order of adjudication has been annulled under this Act, in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit or application for the execution of a decree (other than a suit or application in respect of which the leave of the Court was obtained under sub-s. (2) of s. 28) which might have been brought or made but for the making of an order of adjudication under this Act the period from the date of the order of adjudication to the date of the order of annulment shall be excluded;

Provided that nothing in this section shall apply to a suit or application in respect of a debt provable but not proved under this Act."

, Respondent No. 1 had been adjudicated an insolvent on January 14, 1935, by an order which fixed January 14, 1934 as the last day for applying for discharge. The insolvent defaulted to make the application within time, with the result, that the adjudication was annulled under s. 43 on August 16, 1934. It will be seen that if the period which elapsed from the date of the order of adjudication to the date of the order of annulment, namely one year seven months and two days, is excluded the suit would just be in time. The question is whether the petitioner is entitled to have this period excluded. It may be mentioned that he would be entitled to have one more day excluded as November 11, 1934 the day previous to the institution of the suit happened to be a Sunday. If the section is applicable, there can be no doubt that the suit is in time. The District Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that s. 78 is not applicable and that the suit is barred by limitation, as the petitioner's debt though one provable under the Act had not been proved in the manner directed by the Act. It is clear on a consideration of the provisions of ss. 28 and 78 of the Act that two conditions have to be satisfied, before a party can claim the benefit of the exclusion enacted by the latter section. The suit or application in which limitation is pleaded must be in respect of a debt provable under the Act, and it must also have been proved under the Act. There can be no doubt that the debt in suit is one provable under the Act. The question is whether the second requisite has been satisfied in this case; in other words whether the debt had been proved under the Act.

The petitioner here was the petitioning creditor on whose petition respondent No. 1 had been adjudicated insolvent. It is common ground that the promissory note in suit was the debt on which the petitioner successfully founded his right to present the insolvency petition. It may therefore be presumed that proof of the debt was given under s. 24 of the Act, before the adjudication order came to be made. It is also common ground that no proof as required by s. 49 had been made. Mr. Subramaniam appearing for the petitioner has urged that the word "proved" in s. 78 should receive a liberal interpretation, that s. 49 merely indicates one method of proof, which should not be regarded as the only method of proof recognized by the Act. He has relied on a ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Krishnachandra Das v. Jotindra Nath (1), where Ghose and Bose, JJ. have expressed the opinion that s. 49 only specifices a simple mode of proof but does not exclude any other mode of proof, and that a debt should be held proved under s. 78, if it had been proved in the course of the proceedings leading to the adjudication of an insolvent. With respect, I find myself wholly unable to accept this interpretation as correct, whether we look at the meaning of the word itself, or the object behind the proviso to s. 78.

Proof of a debt in insolvency is an expression well known to Courts and lawyers, and there can be little doubt that it is the kind of proof that a creditor is called upon to give in order to enable him to obtain a dividend in the rateable distribution of the assets of the insolvent. "Proof" in this connection has almost become a word of technical import, and is not to be understood as meaning any kind of proof at any stage of a proceeding without reference to the purpose for the manner in which it is given. Proof given and accepted in a Civil Court, and not open to challenge there is still open to question when its validity is impugned in an insolvency Court. Proof of a debt for the purpose of ss. 11and 24 is merely proof that a person is insolvent and is in the nature of a preliminary step which leads to the Court taking up the administration of an insolvent's estate but proof in insolvency is proof adduced after the Court has taken up the administration and in order to enable it to make a proper distribution. Proof under s. 11 is ordinarily in a proceeding between the petitioning creditor and the insolvent, but proof under s. 49, which is proof proper in insolvency, is one to which objection can be taken by the Official Receiver or any of the creditors.

Section 34 defines debts provable under the Act, and includes all debts and demands except demands in the nature of unliquidated damages arising otherwise than by a contract or a breach of trust. Section 33 calls upon all persons alleging themselves to be creditors in respect of debts provable under the Act to tender proof of their respective debts by producing evidence of the amount and particulars thereof, and then the Court is directed by order to determine the persons who have proved themselves to be creditors, and the amount of their debts, so that it may be enabled to frame the all important Schedule which is to form the basis of the distribution of the realized assets in dividends, subject, of course, to the provisions of ss. 56, 63 and 64. To no person whose name is not included in the Schedule can a dividend be paid. Section 61 (5) provides that subject to the provisions of the Act, all debts entered in the Schedule shall be paid rateably, and s. 64 relating to the final dividend makes it clear that the property of the insolvent is to be divided among the creditors entered in the Schedule only and without regard to the claims of any other persons.

I feel no doubt whatever that proof of debt in insolvency means that kind of proof only which entitles a creditor to have his name entered in the Schedule and none other. The opposite construction is in my judgment entirely opposed to the fundamental scheme of the Act. It follows that evidence given to make out that a petitioning creditor is qualified to apply to have the debtor adjudicated insolvent, is not proof in insolvency, and unless he tenders proof of his debt in the manner indicated by s. 49, his name cannot be entered in the Schedule; and however true his debt may be, he cannot be allowed to come in for a dividend. Nor can he be permitted to claim in a suit for the recovery of the debt after annulment of the insolvency, an exclusion of the time during which the insolvency remained pending if he had not proved the debt in the sense explained above. The decision of this Court in Ramalinga Iyer v. Rajalu Ayer (2) proceeded on the special circumstances that a decree for the debt had been obtained, after adjudication against the insolvent and the Official Receiver, and the learned Judges while holding that the debt must be taken to have been proved within s. 78 by the decree being obtained, expressly guarded themselves against being understood as laying down a general rule as regards the meaning of the word 'proved.

It is to be observed that s. 78 was newly introduced into the present Act, in view of the Full Bench decision of this Court in Lingayya v. Chinna Narayana (3) that the general provisions of the Lim. Act could not be held applicable to proceedings under the old Act, viz., III of 1907. In Ramaswami Pillai v. Govindasami Naicker (4) a Division Bench of this Court held that the provisions of s. 15, Lim. Act, could not be invoked so as to secure an exclusion of the time during which an insolvency might be pending, inasmuch as an order of adjudication did not amount to an absolute injunction or stay, but only made it necessary that leave of Court should be obtained before a suit could be filed. The position would be different if leave had been asked for and refused as in that case the creditor would be precluded from pursuing his remedy by suit against the debtor until the adjudication is annulled. It was to meet this situation, that s. 78 was inserted in the new Act. This section and the amended s. 29, Lim. Act, have tended to remedy the hardship arising out of the Full Bench decision to which reference has been made.

The question which arises for consideration here is somewhat different from the question of the applicability of the general provisions of the Lim. Act to a special Act such as the Insol. Act is, though it does appear to me that the intention behind s. 78 was not to extend the Lim Act but rather to exclude it. In my judgment, s. 78 (2) was intended to incorporate the principle of s. 14, Lim. Act, so as to meet the situation which is likely to arise frequently in insolvencies. That principle operates to enable a person who was prosecuting with due diligence another proceeding founded upon the same cause of action, in another Court, to exclude the time during which he was so prosecuting that proceeding. The section withholds help to a person who not shown due diligence, as where he obtains leave of Court under s. 28 (2) but omits to take action. Similarly, it insists that the creditor should so far as the Act permits, prosecute his claim to recover the whole or portion of the debt, by tendering a proof under s. 49, by which he will be deemed to have proved the debt as held in Lakshmi Rai v. Rukmáji Rao (5). Want of diligence, and failure to do what could be done to recover the debt in spite of the insolvency, that is to say a failure to prove for the debt, would deprive a party of the benefit of the section. From what has been said, the petition fails as neither s. 78 (2), Prov. Insol. Act, nor s. 14, Lim. Act, can avail a party in respect of a debt provable but not proved under the Act The civil revision petition is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Civil Revision No. 61 of 1939

K. C. MAJUMDAR—DEFENDANT—APPLICANT

Thakur SURAJSINGH—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. III, r. 1,

O. XI, r. 1, Appendix Form No 3, s. 115 (c)— Interrogatories—Defendant not entitled to answer personally — Defendant, if can answer it through recognized agent — Adjournment costs — Court, if can order, against party, on non-compliance — Court wrongly rejecting interrogatories — Interference in revision.

On the whole, O. III, r. 1, governs O. XI, r. 1, The former order is a general one and has general application. Therefore unless there is something specific to show that its provisions are not intended to apply to some act or appearance in some particular case, it ought to be applied.

In O. III, r. 1, the expression "except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force" refers to laws other than the Code.

When a party to a suit is ordered to answer interrogatories, he is not bound in the absence of a special direction to that effect to answer personally, and he can answer through some recognised agent who knows the facts; that is to say, an affidavit need not be sworn to by the party himself but this can be done by a recognised agent. As a general rule it is salutory and wholesome that the defendant himself should be made to swear to what he says. But there will always be exceptions, and in any case as the Code allows an alternative a party cannot be penalised for following it, unless he has been expressly ordered to do the contrary.

Where by an order of the Court the interrogatories ought to have been answered in person within the ten days but they were not answered, it is within the competence of the Court to order adjournment cost against the person (defendant) though he had given a reasonable explanation as to why this was not done.

When the Code expressly gives a party a right to perform a certain act through a recognised agent and the Court has not directed him to perform it in person, the Court cannot arbitrarily reject that act and mulct the party in costs because he has chosen to do that which the Code expressly allows him to do If the Court rejects the act, it is a material irregularity on a question of procedure and justifies interference in revision under s. 115 (c).

C. R. App. for revision of the order of the Court of the A. S. J. II Sihora, dated August 31, 1939.

Mr. J. Sen for the Applicant.

Mr. T. B. Pendharkar, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The question here is whether, when a party to a suit is ordered to answer interrogatories, he is bond in the absence of a special direction to that effect to answer personally, or whether he can answer through some recognised agent who knows the facts; that is to say, must an affidavit be sworn to by the party himself or can this be done by a recognised agent?

The plaintiff administered a set of interrogatories and the defendant was required to file a reply to them by August 31, 1939. The reply was filed but the affidavit was made by an agent of the defendant and not by the defendant. The lower Court thereupon stated that the defendant was at fault and saddled him Rs. 20 adjournment costs and the defendant was told to file his reply to the interrogatories in proper form within ten days. On the next hearing September 12, 1939, the defendant's Pleader put in an application for stay because the defendant desired to contest the correctness of the previous order in the High Court. This application was not signed by the defendant either and it was rejected on that ground. On the following day September 13, 1939, the defendant's Pleader asked for further time to enable his client to comply with the Court's order about swearing the affidavit personally. Time was granted, but on condition that Rs. 25 was paid as adjournment costs. The revision is against these two orders, that is to say, against the first order of August 31, 1939, in which the reply to the interrogatories was rejected because the affidavit was not sworn to by the defendant personally and in which the defendant was required to pay Rs. 20 as adjournment costs, and against the order of September 13, 1939, where the defendant was required to pay further adjournment costs of Rs. 25.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-non-applicant relies on O. XI. r. 1, of the Civil P. C. read with Form No. 3 to Appendix C. Order XI, r. 1, states that in any suit the plaintiff or defendant may by leave of the Court deliver interrogatories in writing for the examination "of the opposite parties or any one or more of such parties." The Form in Appendix C indicates that the answer contemplated by the Form should be given by the party himself.

As against this, however, there is a more general rule, O. III, r. 1, which states that "any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorised by law to be made or done by a party in such Court may except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognised agent, or by a pleader appearing, applying or acting on his behalf."

Then there is a proviso which states that the Court can, if it so desires, direct that such appearance or act shall be made by the party in person. The question is whether this rule, which is a general one, governs O XI, r. 1, or not.

I have not been referred to any authority on the point and it does not seem as if there are any Indian cases bearing on the subject. Mulla in his Code of Civil Procedure 10th edition, at p. 615, refers to some English cases under O. XI, r. 8, which state that a party to a suit is not excused from answering interrogatories on the ground that they relate to matters which are not within his own knowledge but are within the knowledge of his agents or servants if such knowledge has been acquired by him in the ordinary course of their employment. But this does not touch the matter in question here because the question here is not whether the defendant can refuse to answer the interrogatories at all (because they have been answered) but whether he must answer personally instead of through a recognised agent. On the whole, it seems to me that O. III, r. 1, governs O. XI, r. 1. The former order is a general one and has general application. Therefore, unless there is something specific to show that its provisions are not intended to apply to some act or appearance in some particular case, it ought in my opinion to be applied.

It is contended, however, that O. III, r. 1, expressly states that it is to apply "except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force" and it is argued that O. XI, r. 1, read with Form No. 3 to Appendix C is such other law. A similar expression was considered by a Full Bench of this Court in Ram Dayal v. Sheo Dayal (1). The words under consideration there are to be found in s. 89 of the Civil P. C. and are almost identical with the words in O. III, r. 1. It was held by the Full Bench that the words "any other law" in s. 89 do not mean other parts of the Code but refer to laws other than the Code, and it is pointed out that when the intention is to exclude other parts of the Code the language used is "except as hereinafter provided" or something of that kind. As those or similar words are not used in O. III, r. 1, I am of opinion that the words used refer to laws other than the Code. In the circumstances the lower Court was, in my opinion, wrong in rejecting the answers to the interrogatories forthwith on August 31, 1939, and in requiring the defendant to pay Rs. 20 adjournment costs. The Court had power to order the defendant to answer the interrogatories in person. Had the learned Judge done so in the first instance, then of course this order would have been perfectly correct; but it appears that no such order was passed when the interrogatories were ordered to be answered. Therefore, the defendant was at liberty to act either through himself or through a recognised agent as provided by O. III, r. 1. He chose to act through a recognised agent. He, therefore, did what the law allowed him to do and if he did that, the learned Judge could not saddle him with costs. All he could do was to state that in the circumstances he required the defendant to answer the interrogatories personally, and if thereafter the defendant disobeyed them he could either strike out the defence or give him another chance on terms that he pay costs.

I must not, however, be interpreted as in any way encouraging the practice of answering through agents. As a general rule it is salutory and wholesome that the defendant himself should be made to swear to what he says. But there will always be exceptions, and in any case as the Code allows an alternative a party cannot be penalised for following it, unless he has been expressly ordered to do the contrary.

Turning next to the order of September 12, 1939, the application there was rejected because it was not signed by the applicant. But there again the defendant, who was the applicant, had every right to apply through his Pleader unless the Court directed otherwise. It had not directed otherwise up to that point and, therefore, all that the Court ought to have done was to require the defendant to make the application in person. This matter has been expressly decided in Boro Bai v. Ram Sundar (2).

As regards the adjournment costs of Rs. 25 ordered on September 13, 1939, the lower Court had jurisdiction to pass such an order. The interrogatories ought to have been answered in person within the ten days allowed but they were not answered. Of course the defendant has given a reasonable explanation as to why this was not done and it appears that it was not due to any contumaciousness on his part, but at the same time the order, whether right or wrong, was within the competence of the Court to make. The only question is whether, if the learned Judge had realised that the Code allows a defendant to answer through a recognised agent unless otherwise ordered, he would have required the answers to the interrogatories to be made in person. If he had not required that, then these adjournment costs would have been unnecessary. As I am interfering with the first order I think that in the interests of justice I ought to interfere with this order also.

The question then remains whether I have jurisdiction to interfere in revision with orders of this kind. In my opinion the matter falls within s. 115 (c) of the Civil P. C. When the Code expressly gives a party a right to perform a certain act through a recognised agent and the Court has not directed him to perform it in person, the Court cannot arbitrarily reject that act and mulct the defendant in costs because he has chosen to do that which the Code expressly allows him to do. That, in my opinion, is a material irregularity on a question of procedure and justifies interference in revision.

It appears that the defendant has now complied with the Court's order and has answered the interrogatories in person. Therefore, all that it is necessary for me to do is to set aside the two orders of August 31, 1939, and September 13, 1939, in so far as they relate to the payment of adjournment costs of Rs. 20 and Rs. 25 respectively.

The application is allowed. Costs will be paid by the non-applicant. Counsel's fee Rs. 15.

PARMANAND—APPELLANT

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 124 — Scope—Defamation of Government — Duty of Court—Speech held seditious—Sedition.

The provisions of s. 124-A, I. P. C., are very wide and in strict law they would cover everything that amounts to defamation of the Govt. excluding any criticism in good faith of any particular measures or acts of administration. If the Govt. comes into Court and asks for a decision from a Judge or a Magistrate whether particular conduct is or is not within the terms of s. 124-A, the Court must express a perfectly fair opinion as between the parties apart from its own ideas of political expediency and the terms of s. 124-A are so wide that much that may generally be regarded as justifiable speech would come within its terms.

A speech suggesting generally that the Govt. established by law in British India was thoroughly dishonest and unfair and that steps should be taken either by violence or by threat of violence to abolish it comes within the provisions of s 124-A.

Cr. A. from an order of the District Magistrate, Benares, dated March 1,1940.

Mr. Gopalji Mehrotra, for the Appellant.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by one Pandit Parmanand, who has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a period of eighteen months under s. 124-A, I. P. C. for bringing or attempting to bring into hatred or contempt or exciting or attempting to excite disaffection towards the government established by law in British India. The appellant is alleged to have made a speech in Benares which was reported by a Sub-Inspector of Police. Learned Counsel argues that the speech as repored does not substantially represent what the appellant said, but I cannot accept this argument In the first place, it was the duty of the Sub-Inspector to write down what the speaker was saying at the meeting and the natural assumption is that he would have written down what he heard rather than invent some passages which had never been spoken. There is no suggestion that the Sub-Inspector had any particular grudge against Pandit Parmanand or any desire to get him into trouble by representing that he had said something which he never had said. On the other hand, the appellant produced two witnesses in defence who did not pretend to remember everything that the appellant said but whose evidence seems to me to imply a certain measure of corroboration for the evidence of the prosecution. I do not propose to discuss the speech at any length. If it was delivered as reported, I do not think that anybody could reasonably say that it was not intended to bring the Govt. established by law in British India into hatred and contempt. Both the witnesses for the defence admit that the appellant spoke against imperialism. I have no doubt that imperialism, though it means very little, was supposed by the appellant to mean the Govt. at present established in British India.

Learned Counsel has urged that the appellant was not preaching violence, although passages in the reported speech suggest that he was. The witnesses for the defence say that the appellant's object was not to preach violence, but, on the other hand, they have admitted that certain remarks were made which seem to suggest the contrary. The Police report of one sentence in the appellant's speech was that freedom could not be obtained by sitting in the Anand Bhawan behaving like sanyasis. The first witness for the defence admits that that sentence was spoken by the appellant. I imagine that can mean nothing except that a policy of non-violence is of no value in attaining freedom for India. Another passage in the Police report is that the British Govt. that is, the Govt. established by law in British India, is practically a gang of dacoits and that the people of the country are entitled to defend themselves by violence against dacoits. Both the witnesses for the defence admit that there was some mention of dacoits and they do not say that it was in some other connexion that this word was used. On the whole I have not the slightest doubt that the report of the Sub-Inspector represents substantially what the appellant said. It appears that the appellant had no notes and I doubt very much whether he himself could remember what he did say in the excitement of making a public speech extempore.

I do not think I need say very much about the provisions of s. 124-A, I. P. C. These provisions are very wide and in strict law they would cover everything that amounts to defamation of the Govt. if one excludes from the meaning of that term any criticism in good faith of any particular measures or acts of administration. It may often be that the executive Govt. is willing to ignore allegations and charges made against it in pursuance of a policy of admitting a certain measure of criticism or certain suggestions for constitutional reform or something of that kind, but if the Govt. comes into Court and asks for a decision from a Judge or a Magistrate whether particular conduct is or is not within the terms of s. 124-A, the Court must express a perfectly fair opinion as between the parties apart from its own ideas of political expediency and the terms of s. 124-A are so wide that much that may generally be regarded as justifiable speech would come within its terms. In the present case there is no doubt that the appellant was suggesting generally that the Govt. at present established by law in British India was thoroughly dishonest and unfair and that steps should be taken either by violence or by threat of violence to abolish it. A speech of that kind certainly comes within the provisions of s. 124-A, I. P. C. There is no force in this appeal and I dismiss it.

Suit No. 52 of 1940

KOORMIAH AND ANOTHER— DEFENDANTS

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 17—Section, if controlled by s. 67-A, Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882)—Suit embracing two or more mortgages—Court-fees should be paid on each mortgage and not on aggregate amount of claim.

What s. 17, Court Fees Act, means is that in a suit which embraces two or more distinct causes of action court-fee shall be paid on each cause of action. Each mortgage constitutes a distinct cause of action. Consequently, in a suit which embraces two or more mortgages court-fee shall be paid on each mortgage and not on the aggregate amount of the claim. Section 67-A, T P. Act, does not control, s 17, Court Fees Act. 156 Ind. Cas. 435 (6) and Radha Ranee Dassya v. Kshettra Mohan (7), relied on.

Mr V. S. Venkatram, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. U Tun Byu, Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—In this suit the plaintiff sues for recovery of two sums of money, Rs. 1,310-2-6 and Rs. 1,139-3-6, secured by two separate mortgages but he has paid court-fees on the aggregate amount of Rs. 2,449-6-0. The question that therefore arises now is how court-fee is to be assessed in suit which embraces two or more mortgages. In his order of reference, the Taxing Master says that, having regard to the provisions of s. 17, Court Fees Act, court-fee should in his opinion be assessed on each mortgage. Section 17, Court Fees Act, provides that:

"Where a suit embraces two or more distinct subjects, the plaint or memorandum of appeal shall be chargeable with the aggregate amount of the fees to which the plaints or memoranda of appeal in suits embracing separately each of such subjects would be liable under this Act."

The words "distinct subject," as used in this section, have been interpreted as meaning distinct causes of action, Mul Chand v. Shib Charan Lal (1), Kishore Lal Roy v. Sharut Chunder (2), Perchiappa Chetty v. Po Kin (3) and Nauratan Lal v. Stephenson, (4). What s. 17, therefore means is that in a suit which embraces two or more distinct causes of action court-fees shall be paid on each cause of action. There is no dispute that such mortgage constitutes a distinct cause of action. Consequently, in a suit which embraces two or more mortgages court-fees shall be paid on each mortgage. Learned Counsel for the plaintiff submits that this would be the logical view to take if s. 67A, T. P. Act. were not to come into play. According to him, what s. 17, Court Fees Act, contemplates is a suit which embraces two or more causes of action in respect of which a plaintiff can file separate suits, if he chooses to, but if he does not choose to he can unite them in one suit. He contends that it does not contemplate a suit which embraces two or more causes of action in respect of which a plaintiff cannot file separate suits. He says that under s. 67-A, T. P. Act, a mortgagee who holds two or more mortgages executed by the same mortgagor must enforce all of them in the same suit and so s. 17, Court Fees Act, does not apply to a mortgage suit which embraces two or more mortgages: in other words, his contention is that s. 17, Court Fees Act, must be read subjct to s. 67A, T. P. Act. I cannot accept this contention. In Barker v. Edger (5) p. 754, their Lordships of the Privy Council observed :

"The general maxim is 'generalia specialibus non derogant.' When the Legislature has given its attention to a separate subject, and made provision for it, the presumption is that a subsequent general enactment is not intended to interfere with the special provision unless it manifests that intention very clearly. Each enachment must be construed in that respect according to its own subject-matter and its own terms."

When a subsequent general enactment cannot override or interfere with a special Act, I do not know how one special Act can override, or interfere with, the provisions of another special Act if there is no special provision made to that effect. The Court Fees Act is an Act which deals with the method of collecting a tax; while the T. P. Act deals with the transmission of property between living persons. They are thus two distinct Codes. Therefore, in my opinion, s. 67A, T. P. Act, does not control s. 17, Court Fees Act. This is also the view held by Venkatansubba Rao, J. in Pollachi Town Bank Ltd. v. Krishna Ayyar (6) where the learned Judge says :

"Nor is the view contended for by the petitioner correct. What is argued is is that as under s. 67A, T. P. Act, a person is bound to include in the same suit different mortgages held by him, it follows from this, that the suit relates to one subject only and does not comprise as many subjects as there are mortgages. I am not prepared to accept this contention. The principle of consolidation applied by s. 67A, T. P. Act, has no bearing upon the interpretation of s. 17, Court Fees Act. The very basis of s. 67A is that there is more than one subject. The mortgages sued on may be different from one another in their terms and incidents; even the causes of action may have accrued on different dates. All that s. 67A enacts is, that the mortgagee is bound to sue on all the mortgages in respect of which the mortgage money has by the time of the suit become due."

This was quoted with approval by Mitter and Patterson, JJ. of the Calcutta High Court in Radha Ranee Dassya v. Kshettra Mohan (7), the headnote of which is in the following terms :

"The proper court-fee to be paid on a plaint in a suit to enforce several mortgage bonds, by which different properties are hypothecated, is not on the aggregate amount of the claim but the total of the fees payable separately on the sums claimed in respect of each of the bonds. Section 67A, T. P. Act, is not intended to affect in any way the provisions of s 17, Court Fees Act."

For these reasons the order of the Taxing Master is correct and the plaintiff must pay court-fees on each of the mortgages sued upon in this suit.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 35—New Small Cause Court Judge having no pecuniary jurisdiction to execute decree of predecessor can transfer it to himself on regular side and deal with it as Sub-Judge—He can order attachment in latter capacity—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 64, Explanation, 73—Explanation to s 64, scope of—Court ordering execution application to be filed but mentioning that attachment should continue—No such order made on application for rateable distribution which was also filed — Decree-holder for rateable distribution, if can take advantage of order on execution application.*

Where a new Small Cause Court Judge has no pecuniary jurisdiction to execute the decree passed by his predecessor he can transfer it to himself on the ordinary side and deal with it as a Sub-Judge. Hence an attachment order by him in his latter capacity would be perfectly valid. 29 Ind. Cas 996 (2), relied on. 178 Ind. Cas. 127 (1), distinguished.

The Explanation to s 64, Civil P. C., clearly indicates that applications for rateable distribution go hand in hand with the application for execution. Hence where the Judge orders execution petition to be filed but mentions in the order that the attachment shall continue but no separate order for the attachment to subsist is made on the application for rateable distribution which is also ordered to be filed as infructuous, the decree-holder can take advantage of the order regarding subsistence of attachment on the execution application.

C A. from an order and decree of the Additional Judge, Peshawar, dated September 18, 1939.

Sardar Raja Singh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Abdul Latif Khan and Manohar Lal Oberoi, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 4, and 3, respectively.

Mir Ahmad, J.—On January 12, 1932 Firm Muhammad Din Muhammad Yunis of Nowshera Cantonment obtained a decree against Chaudhari Abdur Rahim of the same cantonment for Rs. 496-13 0 from the Judge of the Court of Small Causes. It so happened that the Judge who passed the decree was transferred and his successor had powers of trying small cause cases of the value of Rs. 100 only. He, however, exercised the powers of a Sub-Judge on the ordinary side which gave him jurisdiction to execute decrees for Rs. 500. The decree-holders took out execution in 1934 and asked for the attachment of house No. 503 situated in Nowshera Cantonment. The Sub-Judge dealt with the case on the ordinary side. Attachment was ordered which was effected on February 16, 1934. A suit had been instituted about the house by a third party in the meanwhile. The proceedings were therefore filed on February 17, 1934 and the attachment was ordered to subsist. This latter order was obviously made under O. XXI, r. 57, Civil P. C., as amended by this Court.

In 1935 the Executive Officer, Nowshera Cantonment, took out the execution of a decree which had been passed in his favour against Chaudhri Abdur Lahim and asked for the sale of house No. 503. Muhammad Din Muhammad Yunis applied to the executing Court for rateable distribution. The house was not sold, however, because the application of the Executive Officer was filed on July 28, 1936. He stated that he did not wish to proceed with it further. It was mentioned in the order that the attachment shall continue. The application of Muhammad Din Muhammad Yunis was also filed infructuous on the same day at their own request. No separate order for the attachment to subsist was made on this application. In 1937 another application was presented by Muhammad Din Muhammad Yunis for the execution of their decree. It was requested that house No. 503 should be sold. On June 22, 1937 the Court ordered that notice of sale should be issued. The Judge took it for granted that the old attachment subsisted. On June 23, 1937 Chaudhri Abdur Rahim executed a mortgage deed in favour of one Sohan Lal. He mortgaged house No. 503 to him for Rs. 2,000 and agreed to pay Rs. 17 8-0 per month as rent. The consideration for the mortgage consisted of old debts. On August 25, 1937, one Abdul Qayum purchased house No. 503 for Rs. 1,505 in the auction ordered by Court. On December 31, 1937 Chaudhri Abdur Rahim executed another tacking mortgage in favour of Sohan Lal for Rs. 99 and agreed to pay Rs. 1-8-9 per month more to him. On January 5, 1938 Sohan Lal objected to the sale. His objection was dismissed.

Sohan Lal brought the present suit for a declaration that the sale was subject to his mortgagee rights. He failed in the Court of the trial Judge and also in the Court of first appeal. He has come up on further appeal to this Court. The learned Counsel for the appellant argued that the original decree being that of a Court of Small Causes the Judge who took up execution on the ordinary side had no jurisdiction to proceed with it. He therefore urged that the order of the Judge dated February 17, 1934 to the effect that the attachment shall continue was ultra vires. We do not find ourselves in agreement with this proposition of law. Section 35, Small Cause Courts Act, runs thus:

"35 (1). Where a Court of Small Causes, or a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, has from any cause ceased to have jurisdiction with respect to any case, any proceeding in relation the case, whether before or after decree, which, if the Court had not ceased to have jurisdiction, might have been had therein, may be had in the Court, which, if the suit out of which the proceeding has arisen were about to be instituted, would have jurisdiction to try the suit.

(2) Nothing in this section applies to cases for which special provision is made in the Civil P. C., as extended to Courts of Small Causes, or in any other enactment for the time being in force."

It is admitted that at the time when the application for execution was presented in 1934 there was no Judge of the Court of Small Causes available having power to execute a decree of the Court of Small Causes of the value of Rs. 500. It may therefore safely be presumed that the Judge meant to act under s. 35, Small Cause Courts Act, when he took over the case on the ordinary side. Learned Counsel for the appellant has referred to a ruling reported in Sital Ram Kali Charan v. Thakur Das (1). In that ruling a Bench of this Court has laid down that a Judge of the Court of Samll Causes cannot attach immovable property in execution of a decree passed by him and for the purpose of avoiding this result the Judge cannot transfer the decree to the ordinary side and then proceed to do so. Learned Counsel argued that the act of the Sub-Judge in executing the Small Cause Court decree as a Sub-Judge amounted to a transfer of the execution from the small cause side to the ordinary side. The facts of the case dealt with by the ruling referred to above were different from those which are before us in this appeal. There the Judge had power as a Judge of the Court of Small Causes to execute the decree. He found that he could not attach immovable property when executing it as such Judge and therefore transferred the case to the ordinary side of the Court to be able to do it. It was held that the Judge could not arrogate to himself the power of attaching the immovable property by merely transferring the case to the ordinary side. In the present case the Judge had no jurisdiction to execute the decree and under s. 35, Small Cause Courts Act, had the only alternative to deal with it on the ordinary side. The ruling which really bears on the facts of this case is Sarju Parshad v. Mahadev Pande (2). Their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court have held that where a new Judge has no small cause powers he can transfer the Small Cause Court work to the ordinary side under s. 35 of the Act and deal with it as a Sub-Judge.

The result is that we hold that the attachment made on February 16, 1934 and ordered on February 17, 1934 to continue was validly effected. The next point taken by the learned Counsel for the appellant is that although the original attachment was ordered to continue on February 17, 1934 it ceased to subsist after July 28, 1936 when the application for rateable distribution of Muhammad Din Muhammad Yunis was filed infructuous. He pointed out that although there was an order dated July 28, 1936 on the application of the Executive Officer that attachment should subsist there was no such order on the application of Muhammad Din Muhammad Yunis for rateable distribution and he concluded that the attachment in their case therefore ceased to operate from the date on which their application was filed, that is to say on July 28, 1936. We do not see any force in this contention also. The application for rateable distribution went with the application for execution presented by the Executive Officer. They were both filed on the same day. Section 64, Civil P. C., runs thus:

"Where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein and any payment to the judgment-debtor of any debt, dividend or other monies contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, claims enforceable under and attachment include claims for the rateable distribution of assets."

The proviso to s. 64, Civil P. C. clearly indicates that applications for rateable distribution go hand in hand with the application for execution. Muhammad Din Muhammad Yunis can therefore take advantage of the order made by the execution Judge on the application of the Executive Officer to the effect that the attachment shall subsist. The attachment having been held by us to be valid from the very beginning and to have subsisted throughout till the sale was made, s. 64, Civil P. C., would come into play and the first mortgage for Rs. 2,000 in favour of Sohan Lal plaintiff is consequently void as against the claim of the auction-purchaser. The tacking mortgage had been executed after the property had been sold. It is absolutely clear that this mortgage is invalid because at the time when it was made Chaudhri Abdur Rahim had no subsisting interest in the house to encumber. The two Courts below have arrived at a correct conclusion. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

DAVIS, C. J. AND WESTON, J.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY PRESIDENCY, SIND AND BALUCHISTAN—APPLICANT

INDIAN LIFE ASSURANCE CO., LTD., KARACHI—ASSESSEES—OPPONENTS

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 8, Proviso 2—Life Assurance Company holding tax free securities, if entitled to ask that whole interest of tax free securities should be deducted from the total income before tax is assessed even if that total income is calculated according to statutory rules—In obedience to directions of Income-tax Authorities, assessee company inserting certain figure as interest on tax-free securities in their return—Whether can challenge in appeal.

The mere fact that the accounts of a Life Assurance Company have to be kept under the provisions of the Life Assurance Companies Act and the rules made thereunder in a particular manner or that the income, profits and gains are to be calculated in the manner prescribed in r. 25, Income-tax Rules, does not affect in any way the statutory exemption from income-tax on the interest of certain securities, given by the proviso to s. 8, Income Tax Act. However the income or actuarial surplus be called, however arbitrary be the manner of its calculation, it is an income on which the company is assessed: it is sufficiently real to them, and if the assessee-company hold income-tax free securities, they are entitled to a real and not an illusory benefit from such holding, and they are entitled to ask that the interest of their tax-free securities should be deducted from their total income before the tax is assessed, even if that total income be calculated according to statutory rules. Views of Derbyshire, C. J., in In re North British and Mercantile Insurance Co., Ltd. (1), approved. [p. 715, col. 2; p. 716, col. 1.]

Even if the assessee-company in obedience to the direction of the Income-tax Department and under protest accepted a certain figure as interest on tax-free securities and inserted it in their return, they are free to challenge it in appeal within the time allowed. [p. 717, col. 2.]

Ref. made by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan, dated May 20, 1938.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Applicant.

Mr. D. N. O'Sullivan, for the Opponents Assessees.

Davis, C. J.—This is a reference by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan, relating to the income-tax assessment of the Indian Life Assurance Co. Ltd., for the year 1937-38 and the question for our decision put briefly is, whether the assessee company is entitled to deduct from the total income the whole or only part of the interest on tax free securities. The assessee company claims that it is entitled to deduct the whole of the interest of tax-free securities relying on the proviso to s. 8, Income Tax Act, and the Calcutta case in In re North British and Mercantile Insurance Co. Ltd. (1), while the learned Income-tax Commissioner claims that the assessee company is entitled to deduct from the income or actuarial surplus only such part of the interest on tax-free securities as, to use the words of the Advocate-General, "finds its way" according to the calculation of the actuary into this actuarial surplus.

The question for our decision as stated by the learned Commissioner is as follows:

"In view of the expert evidence of the actuary of the assessees certifying that the total actuarial surplus for the quinquennium dated May 31, 1932 included Rs. 4,21,468, only on account of receipts from interest on tax-free securities and in view of the declaration by the assessees in the return of income put in by them saying that the annual average of such interest was only Rs. 84,294, were they entitled to a deduction from the aforesaid surplus of a greater amount viz., Rs. 7,63,945, than the one thus proved to have been included therein and that too when there was no evidence whatever to show that anything beyond the aforesaid amount of Rs. 4,21,468 was included in the said surplus on account of such interest?"

It was agreed, however, that this question could more conveniently be divided into two, with the arguments omitted, see Khemchand Ramdas v. Commissioner of Income tax, Bombay Presidency (2) and the questions arising out of the stated case were agreed as follows:

(1) whether the whole or part of the income earned from tax-free securities by the assessee-company is to be deducted from total income, and

(2) whether the assessee-company can challenge the figure of Rs. 84,294 shown as interest on tax-free securities in the return for 1937-1938.

Our answer to the first question is that the whole income from tax-free securities is to be deducted, and our answer to the second question is that the assessee-company can challenge the figure given. The decision of the first question appears to us to depend upon the question whether the provisions of s. 8, Income Tax Act, apply to the calculation of the assessable income of a Life Assurance Company and we think the mere fact that the accounts of a Life Assurance Company have to be kept under the provisions of the Life Assurance Companies Act and the rules made thereunder in a particular manner or that the income, profits and gains are to be calculated in the manner prescribed in r. 25, Income-tax Rules, does not affect in any way the statutory exemption from income-tax on the interest of certain securities, given by the proviso to s. 8, Income Tax Act.

It is argued that a Life Assurance Company has no real income in the ordinary sense of the words; it has a mere notional income, a mere actuarial profit which is a fictitious figure, and that this must be so in view of the fact that the actuarial account is not a profit and loss account, in it are taken contingent liabilities and no actual profit is ascertained. For instance, it cannot be said what part of this actuarial surplus is derived from the interest on tax-free securities; it cannot be analysed or split into its component parts so that it can be said that so much derives from tax-free securities; and so much from securities which are not tax-free. But the different sources of the income of the company are to be shown. Schedules III and IV of the Life Assurance Companies Act require this. As Derbyshire, C. J. said in In re North British and Mercantile Insurance Co. Ltd. (1):

"It is clear, therefore, that the actuarial valuation prescribed for by the Life Assurance Companies Act is not simply concerned with a final figure like the answer to an arithmetical sum but sets out the various assets of the company and the interest derived from them. In fact, it informs and is intended to inform all concerned, what the assets and the income and liabilities of the company are in a way which goes much beyond the ordinary company balance-sheet. It may be that the forms in Sch. III and Sch. IV, of the Act do not provide for each individual investment and item of interest to be set out. Nevertheless, they do show the different classes of investment, the interest as a whole derived therefrom and the income-tax paid thereon. If the assessee making a full and proper return chooses to show that he has has certain tax-free investments and the income derived therefrom, it is, in my view, impossible to say that he had not made a proper return in accordance with the Life Assurance Companies Act of 1912. Where the return shows that some of the interest has been derived from securities of the Govt. of India declared to be tax-free, it is impossible, in my view, for the income tax authorities to ignore the plain provisions of the proviso to s. 8, Income Tax Act, which says that no income-tax shall be payable on the interest receivable on any security of the Govt. of India issued or declared to be income-tax free."

We do not think the fact that the income or balance or actuarial surplus, however it be called, be calculated in a particular manner excludes the operation of the proviso to s. 8 of the Act. However the income or actuarial surplus be called, however arbitrary be the manner of its calculation, it is an income on which the company is assessed; it is sufficiently real to them, and if the assessee-company hold income-tax free securities, they are entitled to a real and not an illusory benefit from such holding, and they are entitled to ask that the interest of their tax-free securities should be deducted from their total income before the tax is assessed, even if that total income be calculated according to statutory rules.

We do not think that there is any real conflict between r. 25 and s. 8 of the Act. Rule 25 merely provides for the manner in which the income shall be calculated; it does not deal with the manner of assessment of the tax. We see no reason why credit should not be given to the assessee for the tax upon tax-free securities as it is admittedly given in the case of taxes deducted at source: see, for instance, the form in r. 18 and deductions on account of tax at source in the assessment of the Income-tax Department for 1937-1938, Ex. C. In Institute of Patent Agents v. Joseph Lockwood (3), at p. 360, dealing with this question of the conflict between a statutory provision and a rule with the force of law, Herschell, L. C. said:

"No doubt there might be some conflict between a rule and a provision of the Act. Well, there is a conflict sometimes between two section to be found in the same Act. You have to try and reconcile them as best you may. If you cannot, you have to determine which is the leading provision and which the subordinate provision, and which must give way to the other. That would be so with regard to the enactment, and with regard to rules which are to be treated as if within the enactment. In that case probably the enactment itself would be treated as the governing consideration and the rule as subordinate to it."

And in Hughes (Inspector of Taxes) v. Bank of New Zealand (4), at p. 268, Green, L. J. said:

"Section 46, Income Tax Act, 1918, provides that the interest of certain securities shall be exempt from tax and super-tax. The securities in question are securities which have been issued with a particular condition annexed to them, that condition being: 'that the interest thereon shall not be liable to tax or super tax, so long as it is shown, in manner directed by the treasury that the securities are in the beneficial ownership of persons who are not ordinaryily resident in the United Kingdom.' Speaking for myself, I find in that language a perfectly clear legislative provision that, so long as the securities are in the beneficial ownership indicated in the section, no tax is to be levied in respect of the interest on them. To say, as has been said on behalf of the Crown, that the true effect of the section is merely that the interest is not to be taxed as interest but can be taxed as part of an aggregate of profits of trade appears to me to override the perfectly plain language of the section."

But the Advocate-General distinguishes this case before us from the Calcutta case in In re North British and Mercantile Insurance Co. Ltd. (1), because in this case the income-tax authorities asked and obtained an analysis of the actuarial surplus into its component parts and the actuary states as his opinion that for the quinquennium ended May 31, 1932 the actuarial surplus consisted as to Rs. 4,21 468 of interest from tax-free securities, and this divided by 5 would give the figure of Rs. 84,294, which it is stated, the assessee-company accepted and which was shown as a deduction in the assessment by a (3) (1894) A C 347 (360).

the Income-tax Officer. It is admitted that this is not one-fifth of the total of the interest on tax-free securities held by the assessee-company for the quinquennium. This it is admitted, is Rs. 1,52,789, for which sum, indeed, until the Income-tax Department revised its views, allowance had been made, for instance, in the assessment for 1934-1935, a copy of which is now on the record. It is, of course, only right and proper that the officers of the Income-tax Department should revise their views on such a matter if they think they have good reason for so doing, but when we asked the Advocate-General if he could refer us to any statutory authority or any case in which the actuarial surplus had been split up into its component parts and the income from interest on tax-free securities proportioned to the income from other sources, all together constituting the actuarial surplus, he could not do so, but he referred to the following passage in the judgment of Derbyshire, C. J. at p 555*:

"In the conflict here between the income-tax authorities' contention under r. 25 and the assessees' contention under the proviso to s. 8 of the Act, it seems to me that the true position is that in this particular case the actuarial valuation as prescribed by law discloses the existence of an item of interest Rs. 48,08,196. That item of interest was (at the request of the Income-tax Officer) shown to contain an item of Rs 8,32,858 as interest derived from tax-free securities of the Govt. of India. That item of interest does not affect the liabilities of the company and clearly contributes pro tanto to the total profit concerned. In my view, therefore, it is not open to the income-tax authorities to disregard that item or to say that it cannot be differentiated from the total. In my view, that tax free interest or its annual one-fifth part must be deducted from the income, profits and gains and is not assessable to income-tax."

The learned Commissioner also refers to this passage but relies upon it to justify the splitting up of the actuarial surplus into its component parts, but when the Chief Justice uses the phrase pro tanto he is referring to the whole of the items of income on tax-free securities as contributing to the total profit; as to its whole extent it contributed to the total profits; and it did not affect the liabilities of the company; but the phrase 'pro tanto" was not intended to be used to reduce the item of interest on tax-free securities from the whole to a part, as the learned Commissioner argues. We think ourselves that it was not the intention of Legislature, provided s. 8 of the Act applies to the income of life assurance companies, that the income-tax prayer should receive only part of the statutory benefit of his holding of tax-free securities and not the whole. We see no reason to suppose that the Legislature did not intend the proviso to s. 8 to apply to all appropriate cases, and, indeed, we observe that in the Act as recently amended under s. 10 (vii), s. 8 is excluded in the case of an insurance business, and the profits and gains are to be determined in accordance with the schedule to the Act. In r. 3 in that schedule occurs the following:

3. (c) the whole amount of interest received in respect of any securities of the Central Govt. which have been issued or declared to be income-tax free shall be deducted."

It is true that interest on tax-free securities issued or declared to be so by a Provincial Govt. is no longer to be deducted, but we do not think this affects the principle. We appreciate the fact that this new rule may have been made not to remove doubts but to give a relief not hitherto granted, and we mention this only by the way. We prefer on the merits, with all respect, the judgment of Derbyshire, C. J. in the Calcutta case in In re North British and Mercantile Insurance Co. Ltd. (1), to the dissenting judgment of Panckridge, J. and we think it makes no difference that an actuary had in response to a request of the Income-tax Department divided or purported to divide the actuarial surplus into parts proportioned to the income of the company from different sources. Nor do we think that because the assessee-company in obedience to the direction of the Income-tax Department and under protest accepted this figure of Rs. 84,294 and inserted it in their return, they were not, free to challenge it in appeal within the time allowed, as they did. It was suggested to us that some form of estoppel operated against the company by reason of their obedience to the direction of the Income-tax Department, but this argument was not elaborated or pressed before us, and we see no room for an estoppel in this matter at all. We, therefore, answer the two questions accordingly. The assessee-company is entitled to the costs and the refund of the fee of Rs. 100. Order accordingly.

D. Answer accordingly.

KRISHNADAS GOVARDHANDAS MADIVALE—INSOLVENT—APPELLANT

RATANBAI GOKULDAS LAXMANDAS—CREDITOR—RESPONDENT

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 28 (5)—Transaction and deeds held created trust entitling beneficiary to priority — Trustee — Person accepting trust in relation to specific sum and agreeing to invest it in his firm and undertaking duties of trustee —Whether can plead that transaction was not trust—Insolvency of such person—Beneficiary and co-trustees, if entitled to preferential charge over outstanding debts—Trusts Act (II of 1882), ss. 63, 66—Mixing of trust amount with other assets of trustee—Insolvency of trustee—Assets in hands of Official Assignee, whether can be followed for amount of trust

Under an oral will of his brother, one K an insolvent held a sum of Rs. 11,000 which his brother had instructed him to pay to his wife R. K formally handed over the amount of Rs. 11,000 to her for which she passed a receipt, and then she formally handed back Rs. 10,000 out of that amount to K to be kept by him as a deposit, and she created the trust deed in respect of the same. It was to bear interest at eight annas per cent per month. Certain beneficiaries were mentioned in the trust deed, the principal one being R herself for the amount of Rs. 8,000 from the income of which she was to be maintained during her life-time. With regard to the balance of Rs. 2,000 she was to be given it in two instalments if she wanted to go on pilgrimage, and after her death the corpus was to be distributed to certain temples. It was further provided that the majority of the trustees, of whom K was one, was empowered to invest the trust moneys either in authorized securities or with several reputed merchants. That the trust deed was written on October 14, but its actual execution was on October 20. On the latter date K stated in the receipt of the amount passed by him to R that he had received the amount of Rs. 10,000 by way of deposit for which he was to pay interest at eight annas per cent. per month, and he further stated that according to her husband's directions R was to make a trust deed in respect of the said amount, that he was to be one of the trustees, that as stated in the trust deed the amount was to be dealt with according to the opinion of the majority of the trustees and that he was bound to pay the amount on demand by them :

Held, that the deposit and the trust were parts of one and the same transaction and that even though the receipt might have been passed in order of time before the execution of the trust deed, the intention of the parties was to enter into one transaction on that date. It could not be said that K was not a trustee when the amount was deposited with him. As a trust had been created, K must be deemed to be holding the amount as a trustee, even though it was agreed that he was entitled to invest the trust fund in any security that he liked and pay interest to the beneficiary. The widow R was therefore entitled to claim priority under s 28 (5), Pro. Insol Act. 143 Ind. Cas. 162 (2), relied on. 161 Ind. Cas. 891 (3) and 125 Ind. Cas. 533 (8), approved. 134 Ind, Cas. 161 (1), held Overruled by 143 Ind, Cas. 162 (2), 170 Ind Cas. 329 (10), 176 Ind. Cas. 906 (11) and 27 Ind. Cas. 343 (12), distinguished. [p 722, col. 2.]

Per Wassoodew, J —Where a person accepts a trust in relation to a specific sum of money and agrees to invest it in his firm and also undertakes the duties of a trustee in respect thereto and further agrees to conform to the terms of the instrument creating the trust, the defence that the transaction in relation to the amount is not a trust is not open to him. In those circumstances the beneficiary and the co-trustees will be entitled to a preferential charge over the outstanding debts in the event of his bankruptcy. It is not open to the trustee to claim that the character in which he holds the property is different from that of a trustee. 143 Ind. Cas. 162 (2) and 121 Ind. Cas. 603 (4), relied on. [p. 720, col 2.]

Where a trustee mixes up trust amount with his other assets which on his insolvency vest in the Official Assignee the assets can be followed in the hands of the Official Assignee for the trust amount and the right to do so does not depend upon whether the trust property had been properly or improperly disposed of. Messrs. A. G. Desai and G. S. Gupte, for the Appellant.

Messrs G. N. Thakor, Y. V. Dixit and A. B. Acharya, for the Respondent.

Wassoodew, J.—This is a second appeal from the order of the District Judge of Poona in proceedings arising out of the insolvency of the respondent Krishnadas Govardhandas Madiwale. The facts giving rise to those proceedings are not disputed. The appellant Ratanbai was the widow of one Gokuldas Lakshmandas, the brother of the said Krisnnadas. Gokuldas had directed by his oral will that his brother Krishnadas should pay Ratanbai Rs. 11,000 out of his estate on certain terms as to investment of the corpus. After payment of all expenses for charity and pilgrimage, the interest upon such investment was to be paid to Ratanbai for her maintenance, and other expenses. The will also provided that the widow Ratanbai should make a settlement in respect of the corpus. Accordingly on October 20, 1925, a formal trust deed was executed and registered. On the same day the said Krishnadas formally handed over the cash to Ratanbai and at the same time received the sum of Rs. 10,000 back from her on executing a formal receipt thereof, agreeing to repay the amount when the same was demanded by the trustees, and to pay interest to Ratanbai every month as long as the amount was in deposit with his firm. That receipt is in the following form :

"To Gan. (i. e. widow) Ratanbai, husband's name Gokuldas Laxmandas (of) Poona...That according to the oral will of your husband, you are to be paid Rs 11,000, eleven thousand rupees, from his estate. The same have been paid this day, by me to you, as per his instructions. In respect of that I have taken from you a separate receipt in writing. Out of those Rs. 11,000, eleven thousand rupees, you have kept with us, as deposit (i. e. thewa) Rs 10,000 ten thousand rupees, (in words) .. According to the command (or order) of your husband, you have to execute a trust deed in respect of this sum of Rs. 10,000 ten thousand rupees... And I am also to be one of the trustees, out of the trustees which you are to appoint therein (i e in the trust deed). According to the said trust deed, the management (i. e. vyawastha) of this amount is to be made according to the opinion of the majority of the trustees. For the said reason, this principal amount will be paid by us when the same will be demanded by the trustees."

By the trust deed executed by the said Ratanbai among the trustees appointed for this trust fund of Rs. 10,000 was the respondent Krishnadas Govardhandas. The latter applied in insolvency on August 19, 1933, and was adjudicated an insolvent. Thereupon all his property was taken charge of by the assignee in insolvency. When the schedule of creditors was prepared, Ratanbai who was described as a creditor of the said insolvent therein, applied to the Court in December 1933, claiming priority over all the other creditors of the insolvent in respect of the amount of Rs. 10,000 which she claimed, was held in trust by the insolvent. The Insolvency Court held that she was entitled to priority, the amount being in the hands of the insolvent as trust money. Accordingly the Court directed that the amount should be paid to Ratanbai for being utilized in accordance with the trust deed. The Receiver in insolvency, respondent No. 1, appealed, and the District Judge took the view that the amount of Rs. 10,000 was a mere debt due to Ratanbai by the insolvent, that the trust itself was constituted on the footing that the amount had been placed in deposit with one of the trustees, and that the said trustee was only a debtor liable to the co trustees to pay the amount. He therefore held that Ratanbai was entitled to rank as a creditor along with others and claim rateable distribution. Against that order Ratanbai has filed this second appeal, and the Official Receiver along with the insolvent were made parties-respondents.

I am told that after the appeal there has been a composition of the creditors' debts, that the order of adjudication has been annulled, and that the assignee in bankruptcy has ceased to act as such in this case. The only respondent interested in this appeal is therefore the insolvent. The important question that arises in this appeal is whether the relationship between the trust and the respondent Krishnadas was merely one of creditor and debtor in respect to the said amount of Rs. 10,000. The ground upon which the learned District Judge negatived fiduciary relationship of the respondent Krishnadas in relation to the amount was that upon reading the two documents, namely, the trust deed and the receipt, it appeared to him that the insolvent did not hold the amount in his capacity as trustee. Upon a supposed admission of Ratanbai, which is not supported by the record, he further held that the deposit was made before the creation of the trust. There is no such admission in the deposition of Ratanbai. It seems to me on reading the two documents that they were inseparable and contemporaneous. The trust deed was referred to in the receipt as follows:

"According to the said trust deed the management of this amount is to be made according to the opinion of the majority of the trustees."

The respondent makes references therein to the terms of the trust deed appointing him as trustee, and agrees to retain the amount subject to the terms of that deed. The learned District Judge's conclusion was based also on the following grounds that the respondent could use the money as his own, that he agreed to pay interest on the amount and that these two circumstances had the effect of engrafting a contract upon the trust, whereby the title to the money was transferred and the trust no longer could look to that particular sum of money, as its subject-matter. That reasoning was adopted from the ruling in Nagappa Chettiar v. Official Assignee, Madras (1) which was followed by him. In that case the uncle and nephew separated and upon partition both subscribed certain sums of money for being set apart for charities, and agreed that they were to act as co-trustees. The amount was drawn by two hundis and handed over to the uncle. The latter kept the amount in deposit with his firm and it was by consent used in his business. The question arose whether under the circumstances he was a trustee for the specific sum in question. There Curgenven, J. made the following observations (p. 254*):

"I find it very hard to see how when trust money is handed over to any person, he be or he be not a trustee, to use in his business, and subject to the payment of interest, no relationship of creditor or debtor is set up. The circumstances that he may use the money as his own, and that he has to pay interest, seem to me to point clearly to the engrafting of a contract upon the trust, whereby title to the money is transferred, and the trust no longer can look to that particular sum of money, as its rest or subject-matter, but to a promise to pay an equal sum."

Curgenven, J. was himself in doubt as to the correctness of that reasoning for he preferred to base his conclusion upon the doctrine of 'tracing' or 'following', and he ultimately held that in the absence of proof of continuing identity from one transformation to another there could not be a traceable continuity and therefore the trust money could not be recovered.

It seems the question is set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council in Official Assignee, Madras v. Krishnaji Bhat (2). In that case one T. Sivasankar Bhat, who was the father of the respondent, had instructed his uncle Sadasiva Tawker by letter to invest in his firm, which was known as T. R. Tawker & Sons, a sum of Rs. 10,000 lying with the firm, such investment to be made in the name of the respondent and the money to be handed over to him on attaining twenty-one, and the interest in the meanwhile to be paid to the father. The firm gave him a receipt for the amount. The firm was adjudicated insolvent and the respondent, who had already instituted a suit for recovery of the amount, made the Official Assignee a party and claimed preference over the other creditors of the insolvents. The argument before the Board was that the transaction did not constitute a trust, but a mere deposit in respect of which the respondent would only be entitled to rank with the other crediters. That contention was overruled by the Board.

It is argued by Mr. Abhyankar for the respondent that the Privy Council case is distinguishable on the facts for there the trust was admitted and their Lordships did not allow the question to be agitated before them. But in this case too the trust has been admitted and notwithstanding that fact the character in which the fund was held by the trustee through the settlor direct has been questioned. The question is whether the fact that the trustee had agreed to pay interest on the fund, assuming that the agreement and the trust deed were executed simultaneously, would affect the liability of the trustee to account for it as trust property. A trust implies an obligation annexed to the ownership of property and the subject-matter of the trust is called trust property: see s. 3, Trusts Act, II of 1882, Mr. Abhyankar has expressly admitted that the respondent was a trustee and also further that the trust property was the fund referred to in the trust deed. But he argued that the character in which the property was possessed by the respondent was merely that of a debtor. The argument is based upon the reasoning in Nagappa Chettiar v. Official Assignee of Madras (1). It seems to me difficult to accept the reasoning in Nagappa Chettiar v. Official Assignee of Madras (1). In a later case, Veerappa Chetty v. Official Assignee, Madras (3), the Madras High Court held that Nagappa Chettiar v. Official Assignee of Madras (1), was overruled by Official Assignee, Madras v. Krishnaji Bhat (2) With respect I agree with that view. I fail to see how it could be said that the subject-matter of the trust was the promise involved in the receipt to recover back the amount. Where a person accepts a trust in relation to a specific sum of money and agrees to invest it in his firm and also undertakes the duties of a trustee in respect thereto and further agrees to conform to the terms of the instrument creating the trust, the defence that the transaction in relation to the amount is not a trust is not open to him. In those circumstances the beneficiary and the co-trustees will be entitled to a preferential charge over the outstanding debts in the event of his bankruptcy: Official Assignee, Madras v. Minakshi Vidyasalai (4). It is not open to the trustee to claim that the character in which he holds the property is different from that of a trustee. In Official Assignee, Madras v. Krishnaji Bhat (2), where the nature of the transaction which was essentially a trust was conceded, it was held that the defence that the amount was held as a deposit by the trustee in his capacity as a debtor of the beneficiary was not open to him. In the view I take of this case the relationship created by the terms of the deposit and the trust deed is not that of a creditor and debtor merely but that of a trustee.

The next question is whether the amount can be followed if it is mixed up with the other assets of the trustee so long as the value of those assets has never fallen below the amount involved. That point also is covered by the authority of the Privy Council in Official Assignee, Madras v. Krishnaji Bhat (2). There the rulings in In re Hallet's Estate; Knatchbull v. Hallet (5) and Pannell v. Deffell (6), were referred to with approval, and it was held that the assets of the firm so vested in the Official Assignee could be followed and the right to do so did not depend upon whether the trust property had been properly or improperly disposed of. The learned District Judge seems to me to have fallen into error in holding that this case could be brought within the ruling in Nagappa Chettiar v. Official Assignee of Madras (1), or could be distinguished from that of the Privy Council. I think, therefore, the order passed by him must be set aside and that of the Insolvency Court restored with costs throughout, subject to this modification that the amount deposited in Court, which I understand is Rs. 10,000, should be paid to Ratanbai and such of her trustees as may be alive for investment in accordance with the trust deed. The interest as claimed on that amount shall be paid to Ratanbai.

Latters Patent Appeal

Divatia, J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent against the decision of Wassoodew, J. in Second Appeal No. 157 of 1937. The dispute arose in the insolvency proceedings of one Krishnadas Govardhandas Madiwale. He was adjudicated insolvent in 1933 and a Receiver was appointed of his property. Krishnadas was adopted in another family and his natural brother Gokuldas died in 1915 leaving a widow named Ratanbai. Ratanbai applied in the insolvency proceedings praying that she should be given a first charge over the property of the insolvent in respect of an amount of Rs. 10,000 which, according to her, was in possession of the insolvent as trust property on her behalf. The Receiver opposed that application on the ground that the applicant Ratanbai was only an ordinary creditor and not a beneficiary under any trust, and that she was not, therefore, entitled to priority over other creditors. The trust on which Ratanbai relied and of which she herself was the main beneficiary was created by her in 1925. It is admitted by Krishnadas that under an oral will of his brother, he held a sum of Rs. 11,000 which his brother had instructed him to pay to Ratanbai. Ratanbai's case is that under the trust deed made by her on October 20, 1925, a sum of Rs. 10,000 out of this amount was to be managed by several trustees of whom Krishnadas was one, that on that date there were three transactions under which Krishnadas formally handed over the amount of Rs. 11,000 to her for which she passed a receipt, and then she formally handed back Rs. 10,000 out of that amount to Krishnadas to be kept by him as a deposit, and she created the trust deed in respect of the same.

The trust deed is a long document but its material provisions are these: The amount of Rs. 10,000 had been handed by Krishnadas to her for which a receipt was passed. It was given back to Krishnadas to be kept as a deposit on taking a receipt from him, and it was to bear interest at eight annas per cent. per month. Certain beneficiaries are mentioned in the trust deed, the principal one being Ratanbai herself for the amount of Rs. 8,000 from the income of which she was to be maintained during her life-time. With regard to the balance of Rs. 2,000 she was to be given it in two instalments if she wanted to go on pilgrimage, and after her death the corpus was to be distributed to certain temples. It was further provided that the majority of the trustees, of whom Krishnadas was one, was empowered to invest the trust moneys either in authorized securities or with several reputed merchants. It may be stated here that the trust deed was written on October 14, but its actual execution was on October 20. On the latter date Krishnadas stated in the receipt of the amount passed by him to Ratanbai that he had received the amount of Rs. 10,000 by way of deposit for which he was to pay interest at eight annas per cent. per month, and he further stated that according to her husband's directions Ratanbai was to make a trust deed in respect of the said amount, that he was to be one of the trustees, that as stated in the trust deed the amount was to be dealt with according to the opinion of the majority of the trustees and that he was bound to pay the amount on demand by them. The case for Ratanbai was that even though the amount of Rs. 10,000 remained as a deposit with Krishnadas, he did not cease to be a trustee with respect to this fund, and, that, therefore, under s. 23 (5), (5) (1879) 13 Ch. D 696; 49 L J Ch. 415; 42 L T 421; 28 W R 732.

Prov. Insol. Act, she was entitled to first preference for this amount over all the other creditors of Krishnadas. The trial Court held in favour of the applicant Ratanbai that the money was in the hands of the insolvent as trust money as alleged by her, and that, therefore, she was entitled to the priority claimed by her.

On appeal by the Receiver, the learned District Judge was of the opinion that the deposit and the alleged trust were different transactions, and that the amount of Rs. 10 000, had been deposited by Ratanbai with Krishnadas before the creation of the trus . The learned Judge further held, relying upon the decision in Nagappa Chettiar v Official Assignee of Madras (1), that the agreement that Krishnadas was to pay interest on the amount deposited and that he was to invest it where he liked, engrafted a contract upon the trust and so far as the investment was concerned, he was only a debtor of the body of trustees for the amount. The learned Judge distinguished the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Official Assignee, Madras v. Krishnaji Bhat (2), relied upon by the respondent, on the ground that there the trust was admitted while here it was disputed and was alleged to be a transaction of deposit. He, therefore, set aside the order of the trial Court and directed that Ratanbai was not entitled to priority but should rank with the other creditors for rateable distribution of the assets of the insolvent.

On second appeal, Wassoodew, J., reversed that decree mainly on the ground that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the deposit and the trust were two different transactions. In his opinion the deposit did not precede the trust as a separate transaction. As these two documents were executed on the same day and there was a distinct reference in the receipt to the trust deed and as some of the provisions of the trust deed were also inserted in the receipt itself, the learned Judge was of the opinion that they were contemporaneous and parts of one and the same transaction. He further held that the decision in Nagappa Chettiar v. Official Assignee of Madras (1), on which the respondent before him relied, was overruled by the decision of the Privy Council in Official Assignee, Madras v. Krishnaji Bhat (2). The question according to him was whether the fact that the trustee had agreed to pay interest on the fund, assuming that the agreement and the trust deed were executed simultaneously, would affect the liability of the trustee to account for it as trust property. In his opinion, the point was concluded by the decision of the Privy Council and it cannot be said that a contract was engrafted on the trust. On these grounds he reversed the decree of the learned District Judge and allowed Ratanbai's appeal.

This appeal has been filed against the decision of Wassoodew, J. Two points have been urged before us by Mr. Desai for the appellant who is now the insolvent himself as the Receiver has ceased to act after a composition with the creditors. The first point is that no trust was in existence in respect of this amount at the time when it was deposited with him. He relies upon the contents of the receipt, Ex. 1250, passed by the appellant, in which it is stated that a trust deed was to be passed in which he was to be one of the trustees, and also upon a recital in the trust deed to the effect that Krishnadas was to pay Ratanbai Rs. 10,000 out of his estate for making the trust deed. He also relies on the deposition of Ratanbai in the trial Court, but there is no admission by Ratanbai therein that the deposit took place before the trust and that it was an independent transaction. We think Wassoodew, J., was right in concluding on the evidence, especially from the contents of the receipt in which some of the provisions of the trust deed are recited, that the deposit and the trust were parts of one and the same transaction and that even though the receipt might have been passed in order of time before the execution of the trust deed, the intention of the parties was to enter into one transation on that date. As I have observed before, the trust deed was written on the 14th though it was executed on the 20th when the receipt was also passed. In our opinion, therefore, the trust and the deposit formed one transaction, and it cannot be said that Krishnadas was not a trustee when the amount was deposited with him. On that finding itself, the appellant, in our opinion, would not be entitled to succeed in this appeal; because on the authority of Official Assignee, Madras v. Krishnaji Bhat (2), if it is either admitted or found on evidence that a trust had been created, the appellant must be deemed to be holding the amount as a trustee, even though it was agreed that he was entitled to invest the trust fund in any security that he liked and pay interest to the beneficiary.

Mr. Desai however very strongly relies upon the decision in Nagappa Chettiar v. Official Assignee of Madras (1). That decision is to the effect that when trust money is handed over to any person, whether he be trustee or not, to use in his business subject to the payment of interest, a relationship of creditor and debtor is set up, and that the circumstance that he could use the money as his own and that he had to pay interest had the effect of engrafting a contract upon the trust whereby title to the money was transferred and the trust could no longer look to that sum of money as its res or subject-matter but to a promise to pay an equal sum. It may be stated here that it was admitted by the parties in that case that a trust had been created from the beginning. The question was whether the provision that the amount was to be invested by the trustee himself in any way he liked and pay interest amounted to an agreement or contract which had the effect of changing the relationship between the parties from that of trustee and beneficiary to that of debtor and creditor. The learned Judges in their judgment discussed a previous judgment of the Madras High Court, which was referred to during the course of the arguments in Krishnajee v. Sadasiva (7), wherein Kumaraswami Sastri, J. obeserved as follows (page 252*):

"If the author of the trust deed agrees that the trustee can use the money for his own benefit there seems to me to be no reason for saying that the trust goes and that it cannot be trust property in any sense of the term because of this liberty given to the trustee"

The learned Judges distinguished that case on the ground that the question was not so much as to whether the trust goes in such a case, but that when the trustee was authorized to use and accordingly uses the trust money in his own business for interest, the object-matter of the trust is no longer the money but the personal obligation of the trustee which alone fetched the interest, and that the trust will subsist subject to that modification. This case, Krishnajee v. Sadasiva (7) ultimately went in appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council whose decision is reported in Official Assiganee, Madras v. Krishnaji Bhat (2), mentioned above. The facts shortly were that a sum of Rs. 10,000 was left by the father of a minor in the hands of a firm for investment in their business at a fixed rate of interest in the name of the minor, to whom the amount was to be paid on his attaining twenty-one years. Subsequently the members of that firm were adjudicated insolvents, and thereafter the minor, who had become major at that time, asked for priority with respect to the amount of Rs. 10,000 lying with the firm. It may be noted that the contention of the appellant in the lower Courts was that assuming that a trust was created, the relationship of trustee and beneficiary had been superseded by the relationship of debtor and creditor when the amount was invested on interest with the firm. That argument had been repelled by the Madras High Court in appeal and that decision is reported in Official Assignee, Madras v. Kishnaji (8). The learned Judges here held that even though there was an agreement between the minor's father and the members of the firm that interest was to be paid on the money invested in the firm, the agreement did not affect the fiduciary relation created between the parties, and they therefore held that as the firm continued to be a trustee for the amount, the respondent was entitled to priority over the other creditors of the firm.

On appeal to the Privy Council, their Lordships held that the assets of the firm vested in the Official Assignee subject to a charge for Rs. 10,000 in favour of the respondent, and that the right of the beneficiary to follow the trust fund did not depend upon whether the fund had been properly or improperly disposed of. It was sought to be contended before their Lordships on behalf of the Official Assignee, who was the appellant, that the transaction under which the money was given to the firm did not constitute a trust at all but was only a deposit. Their Lordships stated however that they were unable to accept that contention. No issue on that question was raised at the trial and it was clear that the trust was admitted in both the lower Courts. They held that on the basis that there was a trust and that there was an agreement that the firm had to pay interest on the amount kept with it, the person on whose behalf the money was deposited was entitled to priority on the ground that the fund still retained its characteristic of a trust fund in spite of the alleged deposit in the firm.

Mr. Desai has sought to distinguish this case from the present case on the ground that there the trust was assumed or admitted and here there is no such admission and that it is to be found whether a trust existed at the time of the deposit. But the question before their Lordships was not simply whether the fund invested was a trust fund, but what would be the result if the amount was to be regarded as a trust fund, and their Lordships' decision was that on the footing that it was a trust fund, it continued as such and that it could be followed in the assets of the insolvent firm. Wassoodew, J. was of the opinion that the decision in Nagappa Chettiar v. Official Assignee of Madras (1) had been, in effect, overruled by this decision of their Lordships, and indeed the Madras High Court itself took the view in Veerappa Chetty v. Official Assignee, Madras (9) that that decision had been overruled by the Privy Council in Official Assignee, Madras v. Krishnaji Bhat (2). Mr. Desai however contends that that is not so and the question which arose for decision in Nagappa Cheittar v. Official Assignee of Madras (1) had not been agitated in the argument before their Lordships of the Privy Council, and they did not say that a contract could not be engrafted upon a trust. But we think that the decision of their Lordships is entirely inconsistent with the decision in Nagappa Chettiar v. Official Assignee of Madras (1). It had been contended in appeal before the High Court that the relationship of debtor and creditor had been substituted in place of trustee and beneficiary. Their Lordships held that the trusteeship continued even after the deposit and they did not say that the agreement to pay interest on the amount deposited had the effect of engrafting a contract upon it. In our opinion therefore the view taken in Nagappa Chettiar v. Official Assignee of Madras (1) is no longer good law after the decision in Official Assignee, Madras v. Krishnaji Bhat(2) that even if a trustee be allowed to invest a trust fund as he liked and interest on it, he does not cease to be a trustee with respect to that fund.

Mr. Desai has relied upon two decisions of the Privy Council, viz., in Murugappa Chetti v. Official Assignee, Madras (10) and Sooniram Ramniranjandass v. Alagu Nachiyar Koil (11), but in our opinion they have no bearing on the facts of the present case. In the first of them the decision on the facts of the case was that the moneys were entrusted to a firm for investment and that it had no authority to employ any part in their own business ; it was further held that there could be no ratification of a trust fund being treated as a mere deposit. In the second decision it was held on the particular facts of the case that there was no intention on the part of the firm, which had become insolvent, to hold the property as trustee for a temple. We do not think, therefore, any of those two decisions supports the appellant's case.

Mr. Desai has lastly relied upon the decision in Malvankar v. Credit Bank of India Ltd. (12) where a person had paid a certain amount to a bank as security for the faithful discharge of his duties. The amount was invested with the company and bore interest at six per cent. When the company went into liquidation, the claimant urged that he was entitled to recover the amount in full in preference to the creditors of the bank as he had paid it to the bank as an employee and not as a creditor. It was held that the claimant ranked merely as an ordinary creditor and that the bank was only a debtor and not a trustee. This decision was based on the ground that the amount given to the bank had not been ear-marked for any specific purpose, and that therefore, the bank did not constitute itself as a trustee in respect of that amount. On the facts of the present case it is clear that this amount of Rs. 10,000 had been ear-marked in the trust deed and that Krishnadas was specifically made one of the trustees thereof. He further says in the receipt that he would pay the principal amount on demand by the trustees. It is clear, therefore, that on his own admission he held the ear-marked amount for the respondent.

We, therefore, argee with Wassoodew, J., in holding that tne capacity of the appellant with regard to the amount of Rs. 10,000 was that of a trustee and had not been changed into that a creditor, with the result that Ratanbai was entitled as a beneficiary to claim priority for this amount. For these reasons the decision of Wassoodew, J. is confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Miscellaneous Application No. 728 of 1938
September 18, 1940
COLLISTER AND BAJPAI, JJ.
KANHAIYA LAL GOENKA—ASSESSEE—APPLICANT
versus
COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, U. P.
OPPOSITE PARTY

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 64 (3), 66—Place of assessment decided under s. 64 (3)—Income-tax Officer accepting final order of Commissioner and proceeding to make assessment—Plea of jurisdiction, if can be raised in appeal before Assistant Commissioner—High Court whether can under s. 66 deal with that question — Proviso to s. 64 (3), construction.

It is not permissible to an assessee to create a question arising out of the appeal by putting it in the grounds of appeal when as a matter of fact the assessee is not competent to raise the plea and the Assistant Commissioner is not competent to decide the plea. Where the place of assessment has been decided under the provisions of s. 64 (3), Income Tax Act, and an Income-tax Officer accepting the final order of the Commissioner or Commissioners or the Central Board of Revenue proceeds to make an assessment, the plea of jurisdiction cannot be raised before the Assistant Commissioner on appeal and the High Court cannot deal with that question under s. 66 of the Act

The words occurring in the proviso to s. 64 (3), Income Tax Act, are that the assessee should have had an opportunity of representing his views and not that the assessee should have been formally heard on his objection.

Mr. S. B. L. Gour, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Opposite Party.

Bajpai, J.—This is an application by an assessee Seth Kanhaiya Lal under s. 66 (3), Income Tax Act, praying that this Court should require the Commissioner to state a case and refer the same to us after formulating certain question for our decision. The learned Commissioner refused to state a case on the ground that the questions on which reference was sought did not arise out of the appellate order of the Assistant Commissioner.

The facts may now be stated. The assessment year with which we are concerned is 1934-35, and on April 3, 1934 the Additional Income-tax Officer of Meerut issued a notice under s. 22 (2) to the assessee asking him to submit a return. The return was submitted in June 1934, but by an application in September 1935 the assessee objected to the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer of Meerut. A question about the place of assessment thus arose within the meaning of s. 64 (3) of the Act and the Income-tax Officer referred the matter to the Commissioner of the Central and United Provinces for determination. The Commissioner by an order dated October 21, 1935 asked the Income-tax Officer to obtain an affidavit from the assessee and an affidavit containing all the statements upon which the assessee objected to being assessed in the United Provinces was given. The contention of Seth Kanhaiya Lal was that his principal place of business and his residence was in Calcutta and he should, therefore, be assessed there. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces, then entered into correspondence with the Commissioner of Bengal and it was ultimately decided that so far as assessment of 1934-35 and 1935-36 were concerned, they should be completed in the United Provinces at Meerut and assessments thereafter beginning from 1936-37 should be made in Calcutta. There was some misunderstanding by the Income-tax Officer of Meerut and he seems to have transmitted the records for the years 1934-35 and 1935-36 to Calcutta, but the Income-tax Officer of Calcutta drew the attention of the Meerut Officer to the agreed orders passed by the Commissioners of the two Provinces and requested him to proceed with the assessments for the years 1934-35 and 1935-36.

The Income-tax Officer of Meerut then became apprised of the correct situation and proceeded with the assessment of 1934-35. The assessee continued to object to the jurisdiction of the Meerut Income-tax Officer, but the assessment for 1934-35 was completed on June 23, 1937. There was an appeal to the Assistant Commissioner and amongst other points which dealt with the amount of the tax a point was taken regarding the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer of Meerut. The Assistant Commissioner on this latter point after stating the entire proceedings by which the question of the place of assessment was ultimately determined observed:

"In fact no fresh proceedings under s. 64 were needed afterwards and if the appellant has any grievance in this respect, I cannot adjudicate upon it as no appeal is provided by s. 30, Income Tax Act, against any order under s. 64."

It is clear that the Assistant Commissioner was of the opinion that an appeal to him on a question of jurisdiction was incompetent. He then proceeded to dispose of the other questions raised in the appeal and dismissed the same. There was then, as is usual in cases of this kind, an application to the Commissioner under s. 33 of the Act and an application requesting the Commissioner to state a case under s. 66 (2) of the Act. The learned

Commissioner refused to give any relief under s. 33 of the Act and has referred one question of law for our decision arising out of the appellate order of the Assistant Commissioner as regards the amount of the assessment (Connected Miscellaneous Case No. 409 of 1938) but has refused to refer any questions as regards the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, being of the opinion that as no appeal is provided under s. 30 against an order passed under s. 64 the said questions did not arise out of the appellate order of the Assistant Commissioner and, as such, they could not form the subject of reference to the Hon'ble High Court under s. 66 (2). By this application it is contended before us that this decision of the Commissioner is not correct and that we should therefore ask him to state a case on the point of jurisdiction also. From the facts which we have given above it is clear that the assessee before assessment questioned the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer of Meerut and that officer rightly referred the question to his Commissioner, and then the Commissioner, obtained from the assessee an affidavit in support of the objections of the assessee and ultimataly in consultation and in agreement with the Commissioner of Bengal decided the question of the place of assessment. The question therefore was decided in strict conformity with s. 64 (3) of the Act, and we hold the view that the matter has become final and we are not competent under s. 66 to interfere with that decision.

Our powers are circumscribed by s. 66 of the Act and only a question of law arising out of the appellate order of the Assistant Commissioner can be referred to us. The Assistant Commissioner obtains his jurisdiction to decide an appeal against the decision of an Income-tax Officer under the provisions of s. 30 of the Act, and as was pointed out by one of us who delivered the principal judgment in the case of this very assessee against the Commissioner of Income-tax Kanhaivalal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P. & U. P. (1), at p. 744 it is not permissible to an assessee to create a question arising out of the appeal by putting it in the grounds of appeal when as a matter of fact the assessee is not competent to raise the plea and the Assistant Commissioner is not competent to decide the plea. It was said:

"There is, of course, nothing to prevent an assessee from putting any plea he may choose into his memorandum of appeal and in that way it can be said that a decision of any such point will create a "question arising out of the appeal;" but what is to be seen is whether the question is one that properly arises out of the appeal. In other words, was the assessee competent to raise this plea before the Assistant Commissioner?"

We think that we have said enough to show the circumstances under which an order under s. 64 (3) was passed and we have only got to say that under s. 30 an assessee has been given the right to appeal to the Assistant Commissioner against the Income-tax Officer's decision on certain points only and those points do not cover a decision under s. 64. The wisdom of the Legislature in not allowing an appeal under s. 64 is obvious because, as pointed out by the Assistant Commissioner in this very case, it could not be expected that a subordinate officer should have the right to question the decision of his superior officer.

Some arguments were then advanced before us as to the desirability of this Court interfering where there has been a manifestly wrong decision of the income-tax authorities or a patent usurpation of jurisdiction by them. It is said that it has been held by this Court in In the matter of Dina Nath Hem Raj (2), that where an Income-tax Officer proceeded to decide the question of the principal place of business, when a dispute on the point had arisen in flagrant disobedience of the provisions of s 64, he had no jurisdiction whatsoever to make the assessment and "to refuse to answer the questions on the ground that the procedure by which this stage has been reached is irregular would be a denial of justice." It is not necessary for the purpose of deciding this case to state in detail the complicated facts in In the matter of Dina Nath Hem Raj (2) and to elaborate the reasoning given by the learned Judges therein for deciding certain questions. It appears to us that their Lordships were very much impressed by the fundamental irregularity about the assessment by reason of lack of jurisdiction and then by the ex parte decision of the Income-tax Officer when, as a matter of fact, the assessee had committed no default and by the fact that the only proper inference which any Court of Law could draw from the circumstances was that the principal place of business was in Calcutta and not in Cawnpore (where the assessment was made). They thereto held that it would be denial of justice either; for their Lordships to refuse to answer the questions raised by the case or for the Commissioner to deal finally with the matter otherwise than in accordance with the answers which they then proceeded to give. The facts of the case were very different from the facts of the present case, but we wish to quote what was observed on a point which is strictly relevant to the present case. They said :

"Where such a question, as we have indicated arises as to the principal place of business, and such question has been determined by the Commissioner, or where the question is between places in more Provinces than one, by the Commissioners concerned, or by the Board of Inland Revenue, such decision is final. There is no right of appeal, and no power in the High Court to interfere with it, nor do the provisions of s. 66 which give the assessee a right to require the Commissioner to refer to the High Court any question of law or, in the event of his refusal, to apply to the High Court for a statement of the case, apply to a decision made under s. 64."

We are not called upon to say as to what we ourselves would have done on facts which arose in In the matter of Dina Nath Hem Raj (2) and we should not be deemed to agree with everything that was said in the case, but we agree that where the place of assessment has been decided under the provisions of s. 64 (3) and an Income-tax Officer accepting the final order of the Commissioner or Commissioners or the Central Board of Revenue proceeds to make an assessment, the plea of jurisdiction cannot be raised before the Asistant Commissioner on appeal and the High Court cannot deal with that question under s. 66 of the Act.

It was then contended that the final order of the Commissioners of this Province and Bengal was passed not in strict conformity with s. 64 (3) and was therefore an illegal and invalid order and could be questioned in this Court and the illegality that was pointed out was that the proviso to s. 64 (3) was ignored and the assessee was not given an opportunity of representing his views. The words occurring in the proviso are that the assessee should have had an opportunity of representing his views and not that the assessee should have been formally heard on his objection. This very Act draws a distinction between the two expressions. In s. 31 it is provided that the Assistant Commissioner shall fix a day and place for the hearing of the appeal and may from time to time adjourn the hearing. In s. 32 (2) it is provided that in disposing of the appeal the Commissioner may, after giving the appellant an opportunity of being heard, pass such orders thereon as he thinks fit. The Legislature used a different phraseology in s. 64 and we hold the view that the assessee had an opportunity in the present case of representing his views by stating them in the affidavit which was called for by the Commissioner. It was not necessary that the Commissioner, U. P., after he had consulted the Commissioner, Bengal, should have apprised the assessee of their joint decision and given him an opportunity of showing cause why that decision should not be given effect to.

It was also argued by the learned Counsel for the Department that even if such an opportunity of representing his views had not been given to the assessee, the order nonetheless would have been an order under s. 64 (3) and could not be challenged in the way in which it is attempted to be challenged by the assessee in the present application ; but it is not necessary for us to decide this point, because we have come to the conclusion that the formalities enjoined by the proviso were complied with in the present case.

The conclusion at which we have arrived is that the decision of the learned Commissioner that the questions formulated by the assessee on the point of jurisdiction cannot form the subject of a reference to the High Court is correct. We, therefore, reject this application with costs. The Counsel for the Department is entitled to a fee of Rs. 75.

Civil Revision Application No. 130 of 1938
and
Second Civil Appeal No. 274 of 1938
February 10, 1941
GHULAM HASAN, J.

SANWALEY RAI—DEFENDANT—APPLICANT
SANT RAI—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code Act V of 1908), ss. 151, 152, 153—Redemption suit—Misdescription of property in plaint, judgment and decree — Mortgage amount paid in full—Mistake held could be treated as clerical one and plaint, judgment and decree could be amended—Case decided and decree satisfied — Power of Court to allow amendment subsequently — Amendment — Lapse of time, if bar.

A mistake in the description of the mortgaged property, had crept into the plaint, judgment and decree of the redemption suit. The mortgagor, however, paid to the mortgagee the entire amount of the mortgage money, including the amount due on the further charge and obtained possession of the entire property. The mortgagee subsequently attempted to take advantage of the mistake. The mortgagor applied for amendment of the plaint, judgment and the decree under ss. 151, 152 and 153, Civil P. C.

Held, that under these circumstances the mistake could be treated as one of a clerical nature arising from an accidental slip or omission. The Court could therefore amend the plaint, judgment and the decree. 81 Ind. Cas 186 (1), 150 Ind. Cas 791 (2), 153 Ind. Cas. 378 (3) and 139 Ind. Cas 491 (4), relied on. 186 Ind. Cas. 667 (5), dissented from [p. 730, col 1.]

Although after the case has been decided and the decree has been satisfied the Court becomes functus officio, yet it does not debar the Court in appropriate cases, to rectify an error which has crept into its record either by accident or by design. The only limitation upon the exercise of such a power by Court may be found in cases where third parties have acquired rights under the erroneous judgment in the interval. Henry William Hatton v. Hugh Harris (6), 88 Ind. Cas. 396 (7) and 123 Ind. Cas. 355 (8), referred to. [p 731, col. 1.]

It is well-settled that lapse of time, however, considerable, is no bar to the correction of errors either under s. 151 or under s. 152 of the Civil P. C. [p. 731, col. 2.]

C. R. App. from the order of the Munsif of Ramsanehighat at Barabanki, dated February 26, 1938.

Mr. S. D. Misra, for the Applicant.

Mr. B. K. Dhaon, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision under s. 115 of the Civil P. C. directed against the order of the Munsif of Ramsanehighat at Barabanki, allowing the application of the opposite-party for amendment of the plaint, judgment and decree of the redemption suit No. 223 of 1911.

The facts are as follows:

One Ajudhia Rai executed in Aghan 1285 Fasli a possessory mortgage in favour of Ram Adhin Rai of the entire plot No. 1863 situate in village Hoalpur, Tahsil Hydergarh, District Barabanki for Rs. 48. The area of the plot was described in the mortgage-deed as 1 bigha 16 biswas and 18 dhurs. On May 26, 1911, Ajudhia Rai brought a suit for redemption against Sanwley Rai and Ram Lal, sons of Ram Adhin Rai, the mortgagee, in the Court of the Munsif of Ramsanehighat, District Barabanki. In the plaint (Ex. A-1) the plaintiff described himself as the owner of plot No. 1863 measuring two bighas and stated that he had mortgaged half the plot to Ram Adhin Rai, the deceased father of the defendants. In para. 2 of the plaint the date of the mortgage-deed was incorrectly stated as Bhadon 1285 and the amount of the mortgage money was similarly wrongly stated as Rs. 32. The mortgage property was also misdescribed as half of plot No. 1863 measuring two bighas.

In para. 5 the plaintiff claimed a relief for redemption of half the plot No. 1863 measuring two bighas.

Ram Lal and Sanwley Rai, the defendants, admitted in para. 1 of their written-statement that the plaintiff was the proprietor of the entire plot No. 1863 and further stated that the plaintiff had mortgaged half of plot No. 1863 measuring two bighas to Ram Adhin Rai, the father of the defendants. The defendants, however, in para. 2 gave the correct date of the mortgage as Miti Aghan Sudi Tij, 1285 Fasli and alleged that the amount of the mortgage money was Rs. 48 and not Rs. 32 and that the plaintiff had agreed to pay Rs. 60 at the time of the redemption. A deed of further charge dated December 30, 1882, was also set up. Along with this written-statement the defendants filed the original mortgage deed.

On July 21, 1911, an application for amendment of the plaint was filed by Ajudhia Rai bearing his thumb impression through Pandit Bisheshwar Nath pleader in which it was stated that the Plaintiff admitted that the mortgage deed, which was filed by the defendants along with their written statement, was the correct mortgage deed dated Miti Aghan Sudi Tij, 1285 Fasli. Accordingly he prayed that para. 1, letter (jim) and para 3 and the relief paragraph be so amended as to contain a prayer that the property mortgaged in the deed be redeemed on payment of Rs. 60.

It is quite clear from the application for amendment that it was carelessly drawn up and did not accurately point out what specific additions and delitions the plaintiff desired to make in each paragraph of the plaint. There is no doubt, however, that the real intention of the plaintiff was to obtain redemption of the entire plot No. 1863 mortgaged by him upon payment of the entire mortgage money. No amendment of the plaint was, however, made as desired by the plaintiff.

The learned Munsif decreed the suit of half the share in plot No. 1863 upon payment of Rs. 451-8-0 on July 22, 1911, (vide Ex. A-2). The order sheet shows that redemption was granted of the entire plot No. 1863 and not half. The order-sheet is initialled by the Munsif. A decree (Ex. A-3) was prepared in pursuance of the judgment. Exhibit A-4 is the warrant of dakhal dehani, which also states that possession was delivered over half the plot.

Ajudhia Rai died and was succeeded by his son Sant Rai. A suit was brought by Sanwley Rai alone—his brother Ram Lal having died—against Sant Rai under s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act on the ground that Sant Rai had taken unlawful possession in 1924 over half the plot No 1863, which had not been decreed to him. The suit was decreed on February 19, 1927, (Ex. A-5).

In 1936 Sant Rai brought a suit in Civil Court against Sanwley Rai claiming possession over half the plot No. 1863 of which he had been dispossessed on the allegation that his father had redeemed the entire plot and Sanwley Rai had taken wrongful possession of half the plot. The suit was dismissed on September 20, 1936 (Ex. 7) and a decree (Ex. A-6) followed. Sant Rai filed an appeal against the aforesaid dismissal of his suit but withdrew the suit on January 8, 1937, with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The ground of withdrawal was that Sant Rai had discovered a mistake in the description of the mortgaged property, which had crept into the plaint, judgment and decree of the redemption suit and which was repeated in the present suit which was, therefore, liable to dismissal for a formal defect.

Instead of filing a fresh suit Sant Rai filed an application on September 11, 1937, before the Munsif of Ramsanehighat, District Barabanki, under ss. 151 to 153 of the Civil P. C. praying for amendment of the plaint, judgment and decree (Exs. A-1, A-2 and A-3) of the redemption suit No. 223 of 1911. The application was strenuously opposed by Sanwley Rai on the ground that it was barred by time and by the principle of res judicata, that it was not entertainable as the Court had become functus officio after the satisfaction of the entire decree was recorded and that there was no mistake of any accidental or clerical nature which could be amended.

The learned Munsif framed issues and in an elaborate judgment held against Sanwley Rai on all the points.

Sanwley Rai preferred an appeal to the Additional Civil Judge of Barabanki, who dismissed it by an order dated August 16, 1938 holding that the appeal against an order under s. 152 was not maintainable.

Sanwley Rai filed a second civil appeal on October 7, 1938, in this Court against the order of the Additional Civil Judge. On the same date he filed the present revision application under s. 115 of the Civil P. C. against the order passed by the Munsif of Ramsanehighat, Barabanki. The second appeal and the revision application have, therefore, been connected as they arise out of the same facts.

Learned Counsel on behalf of the applicant Sanwley Rai has conceded that the second appeal is not maintainable and has, therefore, argued only the revision application.

Three points have been argued before me. In the first place it has been contended on behalf of the applicant that there was no clerical or arithmetical error and the learned Munsif had no jurisdiction to order amendment under s. 152 of the Civil P. C. It has also been contended that the decree for redemption of half the plot No. 1863 having been satisfied the Court had become functus officio and there was no further jurisdiction to correct the error, if any. Lastly it has been urged that the mistake arose through the negligence of the mortgagor and after a lapse of 26 years the learned Munsif should not have allowed amendment to the prejudice of the applicant.

Having heard parties at considerable length, I am satisfied that the order of the lower Court is perfectly correct and must be maintained.

It is obvious from a narration of facts given above that the equities of the case are admittedly on the side of the opposite party and in favour of the amendment being made. Learned Counsel on behalf of the applicant concedes that his client undoubtedly obtained the entire amount of the mortgage money including the amount due on the further charge. His argument, however, is that the application for amendment does not strictly fall within the purview of s. 152 of the Civil P. C. and consequently the Court had no jurisdiction to order the amendment. I do not agree with this contention. It seems to me clear that the intention of Ajudhia Rai was clearly to obtain redemption of the entire plot No. 1863 in the litigation of 1911 and not half of it. The mortgage deed was written in Kaithi, a language, with which both the mortgagee and the mortgagor were unacquainted. Ajudhia Rai admittedly was illeterate and the allegations in the plaint filed by him clearly showed that it was recklessly drawn up without any attempt to ascertain the accurate particulars of the mortgage deed. It is also clear that the mortgagee, while admitting the mortgagor to be the owner of the entire plot No. 1863, either deliberately or unconsciously asserted that only half the plot was mortgaged. The mortgagee filed the original mortgage deed, which had all along been in his possession. He definitely asked not only for the payment of the principal money secured by the mortgage but also the money due on the deed of further charge. In these circumstances it was the obvious duty of the mortgagee to have come to Court with clean hands and to point out the error in the description of the property mortgaged. If the mortgagor was careless in the drafting of the plaint which contained incorrect particulars of the mortgage deed, the mortgagee was equally to blame for not disclosing the true facts to the Court. In these circumstances it does not behove the mortgagee or his successor-in-interest now to take refuge behind technical pleas notwithstanding the fact that the mortgagee's claim against the entire mortgaged property had been fully satisfied by the decree for redemption. It appears that soon after the decree of redemption of 1911 the mortgagor mortgaged half of plot No. 1863 with possession with one Sukhpal for a sum of Rs. 200 and one-fourth of it with Lotan for a sum of Rs. 99 and the remaining ¼th with Jagannath for a sum of Rs. 100. These mortgages were subsequently redeemed on payment of the principal money. This shows that possession was with the mortgagees otherwise the redemption on payment of the principal only was not possible. The learned Munsif has held upon documentary and circumstantial evidence that the mortgagor after redemption decree got possession over the entire plot No. 1863, though on paper only half the plot stood apparently redeemed by the said decree, and as possession over the entire plot remained with him, the mistake about incorrect description, on paper, of the property redeemed did not come to his knowledge till he was dispossessed in 1927, and even later till 1926 when his suit for possession failed on the ground of a formal defect. I see no reason to dissent from this conclusion of the learned Munsif. Under these circumstances the learned Munsif was perfectly justified in treating the mistake as one of a clerical nature arising from an accidental slip or omission.

Reference has been made on behalf of both parties to Mata Din Singh v. Sheo Darshan Singh, (11 O. L. J. 347) (1). This was a case in which the pre-emptor brought a suit for pre-emption against a vendee and in describing the property in the plaint he did not exempt certain plots which had been expressly exempted from the sale deed. A decree was eventually passed in terms of the plaint and was confirmed on appeal by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. Subsequently an application was made that the plots which were not the subject-matter of the sale were by mistake treated throughout the trial of the suit for pre-emption as if they also were sold under the sale-deed on the basis of which the suit for pre-emption was brought. The error committed in the pleadings was repeated in the decree and the pre-emptor under the colour of the decree tried to dispossess the applicant from those plots. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner expressed the view that either the mistake arose from an accidental slip or omission or the pre-emptor deliberately but erroneously included such property within his suit for pre-emption as was not the subject-matter of the sale to which the suit related. He held that if the first alternative was correct, s. 152 would apply, and if the second alternative was the right one to adopt, then the pre-emptor was guilty of fraud on the Court and once the fraud was brought to the notice of the Court it could not be allowed to stand. Under s. 151 of the Civil P. C. the Court has the inherent power to act ex debito justitiae and to do that real and substantial justice for which it alone exists. The result was that the amendment was granted. It was also observed that the mere fact that the description of the property is erroneous will not attract the application of the provisions of s. 152 of the Civil P. C. and it must be shown that the error is a natural consequence of an accidental slip or omission. In my opinion this case lends full support to the case of the opposite party and does not help the applicant in any way.

In Shiam Lal v. Moona Kuar, (11 O. W. N. 550) (2), it was held that under ss. 151 and 152 of the Civil P. C. the Court can amend the plaint, judgment and the decree, where by a mistake the hadbast number of the village is shown as the khasra number of the plot mortgaged, and the mistake is repeated in the judgment of the Court and the preliminary and the final decrees.

A similar view was taken in Ram Charan Sahu v. Jamna Prasad, (1935 O. W. N. 31) (3), by a Bench of this Court, where it was held that where by a mistake of the plaintiff the property in dispute has been wrongly described in the plaint and the preliminary and final decrees, the Court has power to correct the mistake by amending the plaint and the decrees.

It was held in Aziz Ullah Khan v. Court of Wards, Shahjahanpur, (A. I. R. 1932 All. 587) (4), that the language of s. 152 was wide enough to cover the correction of mistakes made by the parties themselves. There is no doubt that s. 152 applies in terms to the amendment of the decrees and not to the amendment of the plaint, sale certificate and dakhalnama, but the power of the Court to make corrections necessary for the ends of justice is not confined only to powers exercisable under s. 152. Extensive powers may be exercised also under ss. 151 and 153.

The case of Sheo Narain v. Lachhman Prasad, (1940 O. W. N. 213) (5), relied upon by learned Counsel on behalf of the applicant is a converse case and has no application to the facts and circumstances of the present case. In that case the learned Judge of the lower Court had found in a long and careful judgment that there was no error arising from an accidental slip or omission in the judgment and decree and refused to allow the amendment. A Bench of this Court refused to interfere in revision with the discretion exercised by the lower Court.

As regards the second point, I agree with the lower Court that although after the case has been decided and the decree has been satisfied the Court becomes functus officio, yet it does not debar the Court in appropriate cases, to rectify an error which has crept into its record either by accident or be design. The only limitation upon the exercise of such a power by Court may be found in cases where third parties have acquired rights under the erroneous judgment in the interval as has been laid down by Lord Watson in the well-known case of Henry William Hatton v. Hugh Harris (1892 A-C. 547 at 560) (6).

Learned Counsel on behalf of the applicant relies upon a dictum of Mr. Justice Daniels in Pitam Lal v. Balwant Singh, (A. I. R. 1925 All. 556) (7), where he observed that when a decree for money had been finally satisfied and discharged, the Court is functus officio and can no longer entertain an application for amendment under s. 152 of the Civil P. C. This observation goes beyond the view taken by Mr. Justice Sulaiman, the other member of the Bench, who only observed that under s. 152 of the Civil P. C. the Court has power, under the peculiar circumstances of any case, to refuse the application for amendment of decree if it feels inclined to do so. The Court is not bound to grant the application in every case. This dictum of Mr. Justice Daniels was not approved in Munuswami v. Jagannadha, (A. I. R. 1929 Mad 830) (8).

I, therefore, hold that this contention has no force

As regards the third point, I have already referred at some length to the conduct of the mortgagee in contributing to the mistake. I am also satisfied that the mortgagor having obtained possession over the entire plot No. 1863 after the redemption decree of 1911 laboured all long under the impression that the decree for redemption obtained by him related to the entire plot and this impression continued till 1927 or even later till 1936, as appears from his conduct. In the circumstances it cannot be said that the mortgagor was guilty of such negligence as to debar him from claiming the relief to which he is equitably entitled. It is well-settled that lapse of time, however, considerable, is no bar to the correction of errors either under s. 151 or under s. 152 of the Civil P. C.

Having regard to all the circumstances of this case I am satisfied that the order of the lower Court directing amendment of the plaint, judgment and decree is eminently just and reasonable, and no interference with the decision of the lower Court in its exercise of discretion under s. 115 is called for.

The application fails and is dismissed with costs. The connected appeal stands dismissed, but without costs.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Miscellaneous Case No. 228 of 1939
October 15, 1940
COLLISTER AND BAJPAI, JJ.

BAHARI LAL BHARGAVA—ASSESSEE—APPLICANT
versus
COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, C. P. AND U. P.—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 6—Interest awarded under s. 28, Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), if chargeable with income-tax—Nature of such interest, stated—Interpretation of Statutes — Fiscal enactment—Doubt arising — Construction in subject's favour.

Under s. 28, Land Acquisition Act the awarding of interest is not mandatory but is discretionary with the Court; and so the claimant is not entitled to it as of right under any rule of law. Interest awarded under s. 28, is in the nature of compensation for the loss of the late owner's right to retain possession of the property acquired. In other words, it is damages assessed in terms of interest for loss of possession of property up to the date of receipt of its consideration. Such interest is not therefore, income within the meaning of s. 6, Income Tax Act, nor can this money be treated as profits when the assessee neither owns nor possesses what was, the only possible source of such profits. Nor can it very well be said that the money in question represents the interest which the assessee might have received by investing the principal sum. Consequently the interest awarded under s. 28, Land Acquisition Act, is not assessable to income-tax. [p. 737, col. 1; p. 736, col. 2.]

[English and Indian case-law discussed.]

Where the interpretation of a fiscal enactment is open to doubt, it should be construed favourably to the subject. [p. 737, col. 1.]

Collister, J.—This is a reference under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act (XI of 1922). The assessee is Behari Lal Bhargava, proprietor of the Central Book Depot at Allahabad. For the assessment year 1937-38 the Income-tax Officer assessed him to tax upon an income of Rs. 11,607. The account of profit and loss was as follows:

		Rs.
(1) Property	...	425.
(2) Interest	...	12,708.
(3) Dividends		24.
(4) Royalty	...	250.
		13,407.
(5) Business loss	...	1,800.
		11,607.

It will be observed that one of the items of profit is a sum of Rs. 12,708 under the head of "interest," and it is with this sum of money that the reference now before us is concerned. It appears that two houses belonging to the assessee's father, Ramji Das Bhargava, were acquired by the improvement trust under the Land Acquisition Act in 1927, and possession was taken on November 11, 1927. The amount awarded by the Land Acquisition Officer was Rs. 13,225; but Ramji Das Bhargava did not accept this as adequate and referred his claim to the tribunal which has seisin of such matters, and the tribunal on April 6, 1931, increased the amount of compensation to the high figure of Rs. 97,640. The tribunal also directed the improvement trust under the provisions of s. 28, Land Acquisition Act, to pay interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of taking possession of the property to the date of payment of Rs. 97,640. The improvement trust appealed against this order to the High Court, but the appeal was dismissed; and thereafter the sum of Rs 97,640, plus Rs 49,660 as interest, was paid to the four sons of Ramji Das Bhargava, who had meanwhile died. The assessee's share of the interest money was Rs. 12 415. The Income-tax Officer was of opinion that this money was taxable, and income was accordingly taxed upon it. The assessee appealed to the Assistant Commissioner, but his appeal was dismissed. The view taken by that officer is expressed in the following words:

"..... interest paid is the return on that money which was the appellant's, on the date the improvement trust took possession of the property The return on money being nothing but income is cleary liable to tax."

The Assistant Commissioner not only dismissed the appeal, but he enhanced the amount of income under the head of "business" and accordingly the assessee appealed to the Commissioner under s. 32 of the Act, but that appeal also was dismissed so far as the interest awarded under the Land Acquisition Act was concerned. In his order the Commissioner says:

"If the appellant has been left in the possession of his property till the question between the improvement trust and his father was decided by the tribunal, he would certainly have earned income in the shape of rent and it was to compensate him for this loss of income that the interest was awarded by the tribunal. The appellant's capital stood at the amount awarded by the tribunal and the amount of interest was certainly a thing quite apart from it and clearly represented the appellant's income on that capital for the period during which the appellant was kept out of its possession."

The assessee then applied to the Commissioner to refer certain questions of law to this Court under s. 66 (2) of the Act, and the Commissioner has stated a case and has referred to this Court the following question:

"Whether the sum of Rs. 12,415 received by the petitioner as interest from the improvement trust was part of his income, profits or gains within the meaning of the Act?"

Learned Counsel for the assessee contends thar this sum of Rs. 12,415 was compensation on account of his having been deprived of his property from November 11, 1927 to April 6, 1931, without receiving its monetary value, and the granting of interest under s. 28, Land Aquisition Act, was merely a convenient way of assessing such compensation. The interest so granted is part of the principal sum awarded as compensation. He pleads that the money in question is either no income at all, or if it is income, it is a "windfall" and is exempt from taxation under s. 4 (3) (vii), being of a casual and non-recurring nature. That clause provides that the Act shall not apply to "any receipts not being receipts arising from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation, which are of a casual and non-recurring nature, or are not by way of addition to the remuneration of an employee."

The decision on which the taxing authorities have relied is Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P. v. Jagmohan Das Rastogi (1). In that case one of the parties to a partition suit put his decree into execution. The other party applied for stay pending the hearing of an appeal which he had preferred in the Privy Council, and stay order was passed which was conditional upon his giving security to the extent of Rs. 95,000 and paying interest thereon into Court at 6 per cent. per annum at regular intervals. The interest was so paid and was received by the party who had taken out execution. The question before the Chief Court was whether this interest was income to which the Income Tax Act applied, and the learned Judges answered it in the affirmative. At p. 126*, col. 1. they say :

"Owing to Indar Prasad taking the case to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee the enjoyment of Jagmohan Das over the property was postponed; but in lieu of this enjoyment he obtained interest at 6 per cent. on the amount calculated as security. This was clearly his income."

Further on they say :

"He (Counsel for the assessee) asks us to apply the provisions of s. 4, cl. (3) (vii). The receipts in question were certainly not receipts arising from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation, nor were they by way of addition to the remuneration of an employee. But they were not of a casual and non-recurring nature. In these circumstances the exception does not apply and they are assessable to income-tax."

A few years later, the well-known decision of the Judicial Committee in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (2) was pronounced. This is one of the authorities on which learned Counsel for the assessee mainly relies. In that case the respondent had received a large sum of money as compensation for the termination of certain agencies of the Burma Oil Company, and the Anglo-Persian Oil Company. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the amount of compensation so given was not taxable under the Income Tax Act. At p. 590* their Lordships after discarding "the case-law which has been so painfully evolved in the construction of the English Income-tax Statutes—both the cases upon which the High Court relied and the flood of other decisions which has been left loose in this Board," observe :

"The object of the Indian Act is to tax 'income,' a term which it does not define. It is expanded, no doubt into 'income, profits and gains,' but the expansion is more a matter of words than of substance. Income, their Lordships think, in this Act connotes monetary return 'coming in' with some sort of regularity, or expected regularity from definite sources. The source is not necessarily one which is expected to be continuously productive, but it must be one whose object is the production of a definite return, excluding anything in the nature of a mere windfall. Thus, income has been likened pictorially to the fruit of a tree or the crop of a field."

The taxing officers claimed in that case that the compensation fell under the head of "business" within the meaning of s. 6 (iv) of the Act, but their Lordships say at p. 593* :

".... the sums which the appellant seeks to charge can, in their Lordships' opinion, only be taxable if they are the produce, or the result, of carrying on the agencies of the oil companies in the year in which they were received by the respondents. But when once it is admitted that they are sums received, not for carrying on this business, but as some sort of solatium for its compulsory cessation, the answer seems fairly plain."

Further on, we have this observation :

"Their Lordships will only add that the reasoning of this judgment would apply equally if the appellant based his claim on head (vi) 'other sources' and the corresponding provisions of s. 12."

The next authority to which we are referred is Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. B. J. Fletcher (3). In that case the question before their Lordships was whether a bonus which had been paid to the employee of a company on retirement from a fund which the company had constituted was liable to income-tax. Under the rules governing the constitution of the fund, allotments were made from time to time by the company to the credit of this fund and were invested and accumulated. Allotments so made were neither part of the employee's current salary, nor was it a part of his original contract of service that he should have benefit of this fund; on the other hand, unless the company chose to put an employee on the list he could have no interest whatever in it, and even when so listed he would have no rights until he had served continuously and satisfactorily for a prescribed period. At p. 1407* their Lordships, after setting out the constitution of the fund and the rules governing it, say:

"The consideration of these factors leads their Lordships to the conclusion that the allotments made to the fund in the name of an officer of the company were not in the nature of salary for current services, but were merely the measure of a sum which the company volunteered to pay to him on the termination of his service, and that this sum when paid was not 'income' and therefore not taxable."

Further on they say that they agree with Cornish, J. (one of the learned Judges from whose decision the appeal was preferred) in thinking that the payment of such a bonus is just as much a capital receipt in the hands of an employee as would be payment of lump sum from a provident fund on the employee's retirement. In this connection they refer to the Board's decision in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (2) already referred to. In Major A. U. John v. Commissioner of Income-tax, (4) a certain mill at Agra was put to auction by the debenture-holders. A gentleman named Major John held most of the debentures and he was appointed auctioneer by the Court. After the sale he moved the Court to be allowed to retain a percentage of 5 per cent. of the sale proceeds as commission, and this was granted. The income-tax authorities assessed this commission to income-tax but it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that it was not so assessable. At p. 741† the learned Judges say:

"In our opinion, it cannot be maintained that the auctioneer's commission in the present instance was a receipt arising from the business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation or that it was not of a casual and non-recurring nature, or was by way of addition to the remuneration of an employee. Major A. U. John who sold the debentures belonging to himself and his brother is not an auctioneer and the commission which was earned—if it can be said in the circumstances that he earned commission—did not arise out of the business in which he was engaged nor was it in any way connected therewith."

The learned Judges considered the decision of their Lordships in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (2) and they disagreed with the view which was taken by a Bench of this Court in Messrs. Gaya Prasad Chhotey Lal, In re (5). to the effect that

"the observations of the Privy Council .... should be taken in connection with the facts of a particular case and that the Board did not intend to lay down any general principle."

The Judges of the Full Bench say:

"In our opinion, the intention of the Board was to enunciate a working definition of income for the guidance of the Courts in India."

Learned Counsel for the assessee has next drawn our attention to some English decisions, and we shall proceed to consider them, while at the same time bearing in mind the warning which was issued by the Judicial Committee in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (2). The first of these cases is National Bank of Wales, In re (6). In that case in the winding up of a company it was found that an ex-director of the company had improperly paid out certain dividents. At p. 640* Lord Wright held that the respondent must be held liable to repay the amount of dividends plus interest "as in cases of fraud" at 5 per cent. from the dates on which the dividends were paid. Subsequently, the question arose as to whether from the amount payable by the respondent there should be deducted income-tax on the interest mentioned in the judgment, and Lord Wright at p. 650-651* said that he did not see his way to allowing such deduction. He observed:

"If the company has suffered those damages, I can see no reason why it should not get the whole of the damages back. It is called 'interest,' but it is really damages for withholding its capital from the company."

We are then referred to Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Ballantine (7), and Simpson v. Executors of Benner Maurice (8), in support of the contention that as regards the sum of money with which we are concerned in the present case it is really nothing more than compensation measured in terms of interest. We may also mention the case in Schulze v. S. W. Benstead (9), which is not before us, but from which certain observations have been cited in the judgment of a Full Bench of the Patna High Court to which we shall presently refer. One paragraph from those observations (made by Lord Johnston) may be usefully quoted here. It is as follows :

"The question is whether a sum paid under decree eo nomine as interest on a principal sum recovered by the pursuers in an action was interest in their hands which fell to be assessed to income-tax. Where a puruser recovers damages with interest from the date of decree I do not think that that interest is chargeable. It is part of the damages. But where a sum is due on a definite date with interest from the date of advance and decree goes out, the case is different. The interest ought to have been in the creditor's hand on the stipulated date and is nonetheless interest when it is recovered along with the principal under the decree. Between these two cases there may be many, some partaking more of the characteristics of the one, some more of those of the other."

In Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Ballantine (7), "additional costs, loss and damage incurred" by a firm of contractors against a railway company was referred to arbitration on March 1, 1916. On January 14, 1921 the arbitrator awarded the firm a certain sum, mainly as damages, together with interest thereon at 5 per cent. per annum from a certain date in 1918. At p. 611* the Lord President observes :

"Now, it is familiar that an assessment of the kind may contain as one of its constituent elements an allowance in respect that the claimant has lain for a long time out of his remedy. The propriety of such an allowance may depend on the character of the claim, and its amount may depend on many considerations of which time is only one. But an interest calculation is a natural and legitimate guide to be used by an arbitrator in arriving at what he thinks would be a fair amount. In most cases in which such an allowance is a constituent of an award it does not separately appear, but is slumped along with other elements in the gross sum decerned for : but there is nothing to prevent an arbitrator, if he thinks it just and reasonable in a particular case, to make the allowance in the form of an actual interest calculation from a past date until the sum fixed as at that date is paid. In all such cases, however—whether the allowance is wrapped up in a slum award or is separately stated in the decree—the interest calculation is used in modum æstimationis only. The interest is such merely in name, for, it truly constitutes that part of the compensation decerend for which is attributable to the fact that the claimant has been kept out of his due for a long period of time. It is not, therefore, 'interest of money' chargeable under Case III of Sch D."

In Simpson v. Executors of Banner Maurice (8). Mr. Kay, a naturalized British subject domiciled and ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, had at various dates deposited securities, stocks and shares in banks in Germany with instructions to collect interest thereon. Before the termination of the Great War, the interest and dividends in respect of the securities were collected by the bank, but owing to the legal position created by the war the owner or his representatives could not deal with his accounts in the German bank, but as a result of the Peace Treaty and by virtue of an award by the mixed arbitral tribunal the sums due to Mr. Kay—who had meanwhile died—were paid over to his representatives along with compensation, the compensation being the sum calculated upon the basis of interest in respect of that sum. At p. 593* Rowlatt, J. observes :

"The Treaty did not give Mr. Kay any right to interest nor did it declare the Treuhander a trustee so as to found any consequential claim for interest; it did not empower the tribunal to give interest as such, or to make any declaration as to the character of the purpose for which the Treuhander had held the money. The treaty gave compensation, and the tribunal which assessed the principal sum has assessed it on the basis of interest. I think this sum first came into existence by the award, and no previous history or anterior character can be attributed to it. It is exactly like damages for detention of a chattel and unless it cannot be said that damages for detention of a chattel can be called rent or hire for the chattel during the period of detention I do not think this compensation can be called interest."

In appeal Lord Hanworth, M. R. said :

"But is it interest ? Is that its quality, or is it compensation estimated and measured in terms of interest ?"

Further on he says :

"For withholding this sum, for preventing Mr. Kay, or his executors, exercising the power of disposition over his property, the Germans have been compelled to pay compensation The way to estimate that compensation or damages—the sensible way no doubt—would be by calculating a sum in terms of what interest it would have earned. That has been done, but the sum that was paid has not been turned into interest so as to attach income-tax to it."

In Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Barnato (10), Slesser, L J. observes that :

"Where on the consideration of the realities of the case, it emerges that the money is paid as interest and not paid merely as a means of measuring damages, there it can properly be said that it satisfies the requirement af Case 3, r. 1 of Sch. D that the tax shall extend to any interest of money."

These and other English authorities were considered by a Full Bench of the Patna High Court in Commissioner of Income-tax, B & O v. Prayag Kumari Debi (11), Manohar Lall, J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, classified the various decisions of the English Courts, the two main groups of his classification being (1) cases where interest is payable either under a contract or under a rule of law, and (2) cases where damages have been awarded. In that case a widow had instituted a suit for possession of moveable and immovable properties left by her husband. She claimed the properties as her husband's heir and pleaded wrongful possession on the part of the defendant. The latter claimed to be the rightful owner, but the suit was decreed in favour of the widow. She was awarded certain movable properties and also certain sums of money as damages for wrongful detention. It was held by the Full Bench of the Patna High Court that the sum received by the widow by way of the damages was not an income assessable to income tax. None of the authorities to which we have been referred is directly in point in the case with which we are now dealing, but some of the observations which have been made, afford material from which we may receive some guidance. The border line between a case where interest is chargeable to tax and a case where it is not so chargeable appears at times to be extremely fine, as has been recognized in Courts in England. In Renfrew Magistrates v Commissioner of Inland Revenue (12), the Lord President observed that :

".....the question is never more embarrassing than when it is concerned with payments in the nature of compensation or damages. The income-tax rules are of little assistance when it becomes necessary to distinguish between a capital receipt and a revenue one."

Learned Counsel for the assessee contends that there is no difference in principle between the case which is now before us and the case which was decided by the Full Bench at Patna ; and as we have already said, he strongly relies upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Commissioner of Income Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (2). In the last named case we do not know for certain how the compensation was assessed, but presumably it was assessed by capitalising the profits which the respondent might have been expected to receive over a period of years if the agencies had not been terminated ; and in the Patna case damages were awarded for wrongful detention of moveable belonging to the plaintiff. It cannot be said that the facts of either of these cases are on all fours with the facts of the case which is now before us, but from them and from the other authorities to which we have referred and certain authorities to which we shall now refer, as well as from a consideration of the principles applicable to the Income Tax Act, we think that we shall be able to arrive at a decision. In Revenue Divisional Officer, Trichinopoly v. Venkatarama Ayyar (13), it was held that where Govt. has taken urgent possession of certain lands before the award under the Land Acquisition Act was made, interest on the amount awarded can be given to the person entitled for the period between the date of taking possession by Govt. and the payment of compensation money, even in a case which does not exactly fall under ss. 16 and 17, Land Acquisition Act, on the principle that the right to receive interest takes the place of the right to retain possession. This view was in accordance with the decision in Inglewood Pulp & Paper Co. Ltd. v. New Brunswick Electric Power Commission (14), where their Lordships of the Privy Council at p. 290*, say :

"It is now well established that on a contract for sale and purchase of land it is the practice to require the purchaser to pay interest on his purchase money from the date when he took possession."

They go on to say that the law on the point has also been stated under the Land Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and they observe :

"It is true that the expropriation under the Act in question is not effected for private gain, but for the good of the public at large, but for all this, the owner is deprived of his property in this case as much as in the other and the rule has long been accepted in the interpretation of statutes that they are not to be held to deprive individuals of property without compensation unless the intention to do so is made quite clear. The statute in the present case contains nothing which indicates such an intention. The right to receive interest takes the place of the right to retain possession and is within the rule."

From these authorities it follows that interest awarded under s. 28, Land Acquisition Act, is in the nature of compensation for the loss of the late owner's right to retain possession of the property acquired. In other words, it is damages assessed in terms of interest for loss of possession of property up to the date of receipt of its consideration. From another point of view it might be said that the interest so calculated represents the profits which the ex-owner might have made if he had retained the property, and on this view of the matter Counsel for the department contends that profits so calculated are chargeable with income-tax. But the assessee had lost both possession and title on November 11, 1927 and so it is difficult to see how this money can be treated as profits when the assessee neither owned nor possessed what was, on this view of the matter, the only possible source of such profits. Nor can it very well be said that the money in question represents the interest which the assessee might have received by investing the principal sum, and this for two reasons. In the first place the principal sum which was ultimately found due as at November 11, 1927 as compensation for the acquisition was not determined and so did not exist until April 6, 1931, the date of the tribunal's order ; and in the second place, as we have already said, the interest awarded is compensation for the loss of the late owner's right to retain the property. If the interest awarded under s. 28, Land Acquisition Act, is income, it must have a source. It seems to us that there are only two possible sources, either the property or its equivalent in money, and as we have already said, we do not think that this interest can be said to have arisen from either of these. It is not the "fruit of a tree"—to borrow the simile used in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (2),—but was compensation or damages for loss of the right to retain possession; and it seems to us that s. 28 was designed as a convenient method of measuring such damages in terms of interest. Under s. 28, the awarding of interest is not mandatory but is discretionary with the Court ; and so the claimant is not entitled to it as of right under any rule of law.

Our conclusion is that this sum of Rs. 12,415 is not income and is not assessable as such to tax. It is not without considerable doubt and hesitation that we have arrived at this decision, for, there is much to be said ; but upon the whole matter we think that this is the correct view to take and we also bear in mind that where the interpretation of a fiscal enactment is open to doubt, it should be construed favourably to the subject. Our answer to the question referred to us is therefore in the negative. The assessee is entitled to the costs of this reference. Counsel for the department is entitled to a fee of Rs. 200. A copy of this order under the seal of the Court and the signature of the Registrar will be sent to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 872 of 1939

January 8, 1941

ROWLAND. J.

THE EQUITABLE COAL Co., LTD.—APPELLANT

versus

Rai Bahadur AMRITA NATH MITTER AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Deed—Construction — Deed of title — Area going against boundaries — Court should see what are operative provisions of document rather than descriptive schedule attached to it.

The proposition that where the area goes against the boundaries, the boundaries should prevail, cannot be accepted as a universal proposition. The question as to what had been demised turns upon the true construction of a lease or grant. What the Court will have to see is what are the operative provisions of the document of title and what was actually granted by those operative provisions. The effect of the document depends, on the operative portion rather than , on the descriptive schedule, attached to the document. 21 Ind. Cas. 750 (3) and 77 Ind. Cas. 403 (3), relied on:

Held, on construction that the operative portion of the lease was that which conveyed 3 bighas and that the boundaries given in the schedule did not control the operative portion in the body of the lease. They were merely description. [p. 740, col. 1.]

A. from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh, dated July 19, 1919.

Messrs. B. N. Mitter, Ajit Kumar Mitter and B. K. Ghose, for the Appellant.

Messrs G. N. Mukherji, Subhendu Sunder Sinha and A. N. Mitter, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The defendant who appeals is the landlord of the plaintiff. The latter, it is not disputed, has a house and compound surrounded by a pucca wall in Mauza Makatpur in Giridih Municipality as a tenant of the defendant, the Equitable Coal Co. This bungalow and compound bear survey plot No. 45. Outside the wall on the west is an irregular triangle of land plotted in survey Nos. 42, 43 and 44 and beyond these plots is a nala or Municipal drain running approximately north to south and bearing plot No. 41. The dispute between the parties put in the briefest terms is whether the lease granted by the defendant company to the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff included or excluded these three plots, and whether by the successive transfers of the lease hold property through which the title has devolved on the plaintiff, the latter has acquired a title to these plots in addition to plot No. 45 as claimed by the plaintiff or to plot No. 45 only as is the case of the defendant. The Munsif in a considered judgment was of opinion that the property to which the plaintiff was entitled did not include the land in suit. There was, he thought, discrepancy between the area and boundaries, but the grant did not extend right up to the western boundary mentioned in the document of lease. The Subordinate Judge who heard an appeal from this decision came to a different view. He considered that the central point in the case was as to the position of the nala referred to as the western boundary, and he found that this nala was at the time of the grant in the same position as at present. He says: "Where the area goes against the boundaries, the boundaries should prevail", and on this view he has allowed the appeal and decreed the suit.

The observation of the Subordinate Judge just quoted cannot be accepted as a universal proposition although there are observations in Raghunandan Thakur v. Babu Kishundeo Narain Mahta (1), which lend colour to the view taken by the Subordinate Judge. The legal position is more precisely stated in the decisions I shall now refer. In Durga Prasad Singh v. Rajendra Narayan Bagchi (2), the parties were in dispute as to the construction of a kabuliyat, the appellant's contention being that the respondents were entitled to the coal underneath such quantity of land only as was contained within the boundaries given in the schedule, the contention of the respondents, on the other hand, being that they were entitled to the coal underneath the full quantity of 400 bighas of land. The lease purported to grant 400 bighas within stated boundaries. Their Lordships observed that the question as to what had been demised turned upon the true construction of the kabuliyat. The other case to which I propose to refer is Linton Molesworth & Co. Ltd. v. Jaggannath Supakar (3), a case which turned on the construction of a lease or grant. The property had been described both by area and by boundaries, the area mentioned being 13 bighas. Actually it was found that the amount of land situated within the four boundaries mentioned in the schedule was a larger area. The grant was expressed to be of "the entire land known as East Swardih whose area is 13 bighas and whose boundaries are the following"

The question to be decided was whether the lease was of 13 bighas of land situate within certain boundaries mentioned in the lease or whether the lease was of the entire block of land within the boundaries given in the foot of the lease. Now in coming to the conclusion that the lease was of the entire block, it was emphasised that the operative part of the lease does not give the area of the demised land, but expressly that the lease is of the entire land. On the basis of these decisions what the Court will have to see is what are the operative provisions of the document of title and what was actually granted by those operative provisions. In the present instance the lease hold property has been the subject of more than one transaction. The earliest document exhibited is the kabuliyat dated July 9, 1909, executed by Rai Bahadur Jogendra Nath Ghose in favour of the Equitable Coal Co., Ltd. which recites that the lessee has proposed and the lessor has accepted the proposal for taking settlement of 3 bighas of land as detailed in schedule and demarcated by posts and as per map prepared. On its face the grant is not a grant of the entire area within the boundaries but of a specified area of land. There is a proviso that if in future at the time of survey the area of the land is found to be in excess of 3 bighas by standard measurement, the lessor will settle the said excess land with the lessee on the same terms provided that the lessee agrees to give proportionate excess salami and rent for the excess land. If the lessee does not take settlement then the lessor will be competent to take the said excess of land into his khas possession or to settle the same with others. A plain reading of this document conveys to my mind the impression that the grant was of an area believed to be 3 bighas which area was demarcated by posts and a map prepared. The map unfortunately is not available The plaintiff called for it from the defendant Company and the Company have replied that the map was taken away by the lessee Rai Bahadur Jagendra Nath Ghose. There is no evidence to show that this explanation is not true and in the circumstances no inference can be drawn for or against either party from the non-production of the map. We do know that Rai Bahadur Jogendra Nath Ghose the lessee put up a surrounding wall completely enclosing a quadrangular block. The disputed land was left outside of this enclosure. The area within the enclosure was found on survey to be three bighas 2 khatas and 4 dhoors. The lessee did not at any time apply to the lessor for settlement of the additional 2 khatas and 4 dhoors, nor does it appear that the lessor ever made any demand for additional rent or salami in respect of this small area. The lessee and his successors, however, have been continuously in undisputed possession of at any rate 3 bighas 2 kathas and 4 dhoors. As regards the area in excess of three bighas, the passages I have quoted from the kabuliyat Ex. 8 seem to contemplate that any area in excess of the 3 bighas was not by this kabuliyat settled with the lessee, but that he was given an option of taking settlement of it if it was found that the land in his possession at the time of survey was in excess of 3 bighas. If, therefore, the lessee at or after the time of the preparation of the Record of Rights had desired to include the additional 6 kathas now in suit being in excess of the area of 3 bighas granted to him, it was under the kabuliyat open to him to tender proportionate excess salami and to take settlement thereof; but no step was taken by Rai Bahadur Jogendra Nath Ghose for taking settlement of the excess of 2 kathas 4 dhoors, not to speak of any additional area beyond what was comprised within the four walls of his compound. On January 25, 1913, Rai Bahadur Jogendra Nath Ghose sold the leasehold premises by kobala Ex. 14 to Sushil Chandra Bandopadhya. The subject of the document is said to be darmokarrari jamai land bounded on all sides by pucca walls and the history of the property is recited. It is stated that Dr. V. Roy of Giridih, Munsif, had taken settlement of three standard bighas of land in the name of his brother Sarat Chandra Roy on whose death by arrangement the said land was settled with Rai Bahadur Jogendra Nath Ghose who took a darmokarrari lease of the said 3 bighas of land and at his own expense constructed pucca wall all round the same. The western boundary in the schedule to this document is nala as in the schedule to the kabuliyat Ex. 8; but the effect of the document depends, in my opinion, on the operative portion rather than on the descriptive schedule, and it does not operate to convey to Sushil Chandra Bandopadhya more than the compound enclosed by pucca wall, firstly, because on my view the original grant did not purport to convey more than this and Rai Bahadur Jogendra Nath Ghose could not transfer more than what had been granted to him; and secondly, because the deed of sale itself is expressed to convey land bounded on all sides by pucca wall and is not expressed to convey any other land outside the wall. Therefore, even if the original grant had been of more than survey plot No. 45 the conveyance was of survey plot No. 45 only.

This position in fact appears to have been recognised by Sushil Chandra Banerji himself. In 1914 he wished to get settlement of the land adjacent to his bungalow and compound and for this purpose wrote a letter Ex. A-1 dated September 11, 1914, to the Superintendent Equitable Coal Co., stating that he had applied to Mr. Fluker, for a settlement "of the land adjoining mine on the south and west side." In a post script he also referred to the "the narrow strip of land between the public municipal ditch and my boundary walls" and asked he might have this strip of land. He received a reply that the Company were agreeable to let him have that strip of land, but apparently no lease in respect of it was executed. The correspondence is relevant as containing an admission by Sushil Chandra Banerji the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff as to the extent of the land at the time held by him. In 1920 Sushil Chandra Banerji by a deed of gift Ex. B transferred the leasehold property to his son Achal Kumar Banerji. The property is described

"all the right, title and interest in the house known as 'Santi Nibas' including the land on which it stands as well as the land and appurtenances etc., attached thereto in the town of Giridih., Area of land 3 bighas more or less" and in the schedule of boundaries the western boundary is given as land of Equitable Coal Company. It is clear that at this time no claim of title or possession to the strip of land outside the enclosing wall was being put forward, and in my view, Ex. B did not purport to convey to the donee that strip of land.

The last of the plaintiff's documents of title is the conveyance by which he himself acquired the leasehold property. The property is described as a plot of land measuring 3 bighas more or less and more fully described in the schedule. In the schedule the property is described as the piece of parcel of land measuring 3 bighas more or less being holding No. 70, Wart No. 1 in the register of Giridih Municipality. Neither party, however, has produced this register showing the entry of holding No 70. The description by boundaries gives as the western boundary, nala, next to which is the play-ground of the Boys H. E. School.

It is on this description that the plaintiff relies for his contention that the premises transferred to him extend right up to the nala; but in the earlier recitals of the document after mentioning the lease in favour of Rai Bahadur Jogendra Nath Ghose, it is stated that the said Rai Bahadur being in peaceful possession of the said land by putting pucca compound walls around it and by sinking a well thereon transferred his rights to the late Babu Sushil Chandra Banerji. The recitals does not indicate any claim that Rai Bahadur Jogendra Nath Ghose had been in possession of more than the land, around which he put pucca compound walls.

On these documents of title, I am of opinion that the operative portion of the lease was that which conveyed 3 bighas and that the boundaries given in the schedule do not control the operative portion in the body of the lease. They are merely description. There is no doubt that the plaintiff's predecessor was put in possession of the full area of 3 bighas which the Company had agreed to let to him. It was within the contemplation of the parties that the area demarcated and made over to the lessee might possibly on scientific measurement prove to be in excess and as above stated an excess of 2 kathas 4 dhoors was found. That is a difference of about 3 or 3½ per cent. which is not an excessive discrepancy between an area arrived at by rough measurement and the same area measured by scientific measurement; but according to the plaintiff's case the area demised must have been nearly 3 bighas 10 kathas a discrepancy of about 16 per cent between the area said to have been let and the area actually made over to the lessee. When the documents show that there had been actual demarcation by pegs and a map prepared, it seems in the highest degree improbable that there would be so large a margin of error or difference between the contemporary estimate of the area made over to the lessee and the actual area as found by scientific measurement.

These matters of fact are not to be regarded as controlling the construction of the document for the true view is that the documents of title are to be construed in accordance with their own terms which are sufficient for the decision; but I have referred to these matters as they seem to me to lend some independent corroboration of the view that I have taken on a construction of the documents themselves. It must be held that the plaintiff has no title to the land in suit and, therefore, the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Leave to appeal under the Letters Patent is refused.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Letters Patent Appeal No. 52 of 1938

August 13, 1940

BROOMFIELD AND DIVATIA, JJ.

RAYCHAND JIVAJI—APPELLANT

BASAPPA VIRAPPA BELLARY—RESPONDENT

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (e)—Charge, creation of, by decree—Assignment of such decree, if falls under s. 17 (1) (e)—Decrees made prior to or simultaneously with assignment, whether covered by s. 17 (1) (e)—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 100—Principles underlying O. XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), applicability of, to charges created by decree—Charge created by act of parties—Rule applicable to—Held, right to proceed personally against judgment-debtor was not independent of charge and could only arise after exercising right against property charged.

An assignment of a decree creating a charge on immovable property falls within the purview of s. 17 (1) (e), Regis. Act, as a charge is a right to or in immovable property within the meaning of that Act, Govind Chandra v. Dwarka Nath (12), explained.

The principles underlying O. XXXIV, Civil P. C., although they may not strictly apply in the case of a charge, may be applied and ought to be applied by analogy to charges created by a decree, unless indeed the terms of the decree make it clear that the remedy of recovering the decretal amount from the property charged was not given in lieu of the personal remedy but in addition to it. In every case it must be essentially a question of construction of the decree, but unless the contrary appears, the ordinary rule should be that when a charge is created by act of parties the specification of the particular fund or property negatives a personal liability and the remedy of the holder of the charge is against the property charged only or at any rate against the property charged in the first instance [p. 745, col. 2; p. 746, col. 1]

Hence, where a decree creating a charge on the immovable property provides expressly that in case the defendant fails to pay the amount at the time fixed he would be entitled to recover the amount out of the property charged. The right to proceed against the judgment-debtor personally cannot be said to be independent of the charge but only arises, if at all, after the right against the charged property has been exercised. 58 Ind. Cas. 377 (7) and 15, Ind. Cas. 292 (15), relied on.

[Case-law discussed.]

Per N. J. Wadia, J.—There is nothing in the language of s. 17 (1) (e), Regis Act to indicate that only assignments of decrees which are simultaneous with the making of the decrees are covered by that section, and where the decree had already created the interest long before the assignment was made, the assignment would not be governed by cl. (e). The language of the clause is wide enough to cover all decrees whether made prior to the assignment or simultaneously with the assignment. [p. 741, col. 2; p. 742, col. 1.]

L. P. A from a decision of N. J. Wadia, J., in F. A. No. 141 of 1937.

First Appeal No. 141 of 1937

N. J. Wadia, J.—This is an appeal arising out of a execution proceedings. The appellant is an assignee of a decree obtained by one Kapurji Magniram in Suit No. 55 of 1931. The decree was for a sum of Rs. 22,900 with interest and it provided that the amount was to be paid by annual instalments of Rs. 4 000 each, the first instalment being paid before the end of July 1932. The decree then stated :

"As this amount is large, and as instalments are granted to defendant, for security of the plaintiff's amount a charge of the said amount has been placed on the property mentioned below. In case defendant fails to pay the amount of instalment at the time fixed, plaintiff do recover the amount of the said instalment out of the property over which a charge has been placed."

The decree was transferred to the appellant on March 12, 1935, for Rs. 15,000, and on April 6, 1935, the appellant filed Darkhast No. 43 of 1935, out of which this appeal arises. The judgment-debtor inter alia contended that the transfer of the decree is invalid as it was not made by a registered deed, and the learned Judge tried this issue as a preliminary issue and held that as the transfer had been made after the amendment of the Regis. Act by which cl. (e) of s. 17 (1) was enacted, it was compulsorily registrable, and as it has not been so registered the transferee could not enforce the decree in execution.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that this view is wrong. Section 17 (1) (e), Regis. Act, provides that non-testamentary instruments transferring or assigning any decree or order of a Court or any award when such decree or order or award purports or operates to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest whether vested or contingent, of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards to or in immovable property shall be registered. By the charge the property mentioned in the decree is made a security for the payment of the money to the decree-holder. Although by this charge no right in rem is created, nevertheless, the right created is something more than a mere personal obligation. It is a right to payment out of the property specified, and for the purposes of s. 17 (1) (e) there is, in my opinion, very little difference between a charge and a simple mortgage. It was held in Gopal Narain v. Trimbak Sadashiv (1) that where a mortgagee obtained a decree against his mortgagor for the payment of the mortgage moneys and in default for the sale of the mortgaged property, and his heirs afterwards executed an assignment of the decree, for valuable consideration, to the plaintiff who proceeded to execute the decree by sale of the mortgaged property, the assignment was a document compulsorily registrable under the Regis. Act. This view was followed in Heptulla v. Mahomed (2). A different view has been taken by the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts in Gous Mahomed v. Khowas Ali (3) and Abdul Majid v. Muhammad Faizullah (4) in which it was held that such an assignment did not require registration on the ground that the assignment is not of any interest in immovable property but of the decree itself, and the decree although it be a decree upon a mortgage bond, can in no sense be regarded as immovable property, and further on the ground that the assignment does not of itself create an interest in immovable property. Neither the Bombay ruling nor the Allahabad and Calcutta rulings are directly in point so far as the present appeal is concerned, since they relate to assignments of mortgage decrees and not to assignment of a decree creating a charge, but the principle of the Bombay decision applies, in my opinion, to the present case. The view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Gous Mahomed v. Khowas Ali (3), that the deed of assignment does not in itself operate to create any right, title or interest and that all that it assigns is the decree, is clearly in conflict with the view which the Bombay High Court took in Gopal Narain v. Trimbak Sadashiv (1). The assignment of a decree which creates a charge on the property is, in my opinion, clearly an assignment coming within the purview of s. 17 (1) (e). There is nothing in the language of that section which can support the contention urged on behalf of the appellant, that only assignments of decrees which are simultaneous with the making of the decrees are covered by that section, and that where the decree had already created the interest long before the assignment was made, the assignment would not be governed by cl. (e). The language of the clause is wide enough to cover all decrees whether made prior to the assignment or simultaneously with the assignment. The view taken by the learned trial Judge is, therefore, in my opinion, correct.

It was next contended that even if the assignment of the decree creating a charge is invalid for want of registration, it is open to the assignee to execute the decree purely as a money decree, and although he had not in the darkhast prayed that the decree should be executed as a money decree, he was entitled to all the reliefs which the law allows, and the trial Judge should therefore have allowed him to execute the decree purely as a money decree by arrest and detention of the judgment-debtor or by attachment of his property other than the property on which a charge had been created. In support of this contention, the decision in Durga Das Nandi v. Dewraj Agarwala (5) and Hargobind-Kishan Chand v. Hakim Singh & Co. (6), were relied on. In the latter case, the decree was a money decree and it was held that the latter confers upon the decree-holder the right to decide whether he should execute the decree for the payment of money by the arrest of the judgment-debtor or by attachment and sale of his property, or by both, and that while the Court has discretion to refuse execution against the person and property simultaneously, it has no authority to refuse execution against the person of the debtor on the ground that the decree-holder must, in the first instance, proceed against the property. In the Calcutta case the decree-holder had applied for demolition of a certain building, and it was held that he had rightly been allowed by the trial Court to execute the decree by attachment although he had not asked for that remedy. The fact in the present case, however, are different. The decree in the present case cannot be said to be purely a money decree. It is a decree which creates a charge on the property and it expressly provides that in case the defendant fails to pay the amount at the time fixed the plaintiff is to recover the amount out of the property over which a charge has been created. The case is analogous to that of a mortgage decree.

In Janardan v. Krishnaji (7), a decree was passed in a mortgage suit that the defendants should pay a certain amount to the plaintiff by fixed annual instalments; in default of payment of any two instalments the plaintiff was at liberty to recover the whole amount then due by sale of the mortgaged property; the defendants fell into arrears and the plaintiff applied to execute the decree not only by sale of the mortgaged property, but also by attaching other property of the defendants. It was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to proceed simultaneously against the other property of the defendants, since there must be a decree made personally against the defendants before the decree could be executed against property other than the mortgaged property. The grounds on which that case was decided are, in my opinion, applicable to the present case also. Before the decree-holder, the assignee, can proceed against the person of the judgment-debtor or against his property other than the property on which a charge has been created, he must first proceed against the property charged. It is not, therefore, in my opinion, open to him to execute the decree purely as a money decree. It may be noted that this contention has been raised for the first time in this Court and was never raised before the trial Court. The darkhast application has been rightly dismissed. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Messrs. S. A. Desai and B. Moropanth, for the Appellant.

Mr. G.P. Murdeshwar, for the Respondent.

Broomfield, J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from a decision of N. J. Wadia, J. The appeal arises out of execution proceedings. The appellant is the assignee of a decree obtained by one Kapurji Magniram in July 1931. The terms of the decree which was passed on an award were as follows:

"Defendant do pay to plaintiff Rs. 22,900. Defendant do pay to plaintiff the said amount by annual instalments of Rs. 4,000. And interest on the said amount of Rs. 22,900 at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum should be paid until the amount is paid off. The first instalment should be paid before the end of July 1932. Subsequently, before the same fixed time every year the instalments should be continued to be paid. As this amount is large, and as instalments are granted to defendant, for security of the plaintiff's amount a charge of the said amount has been placed on the property mentioned below. In case defendant fails to pay the amount of instalment at the time fixed, plaintiff do recover the amount of the said instalment out of the property over which a charge has been placed."

Then follows a description of the property and there is a further recital : "The charge of the amount has been placed on the property as above." This decree was transferred to the appellant on March 12, 1935, for Rs. 15,000, and on April 6, 1935, he filed the darkhast from which the appeal arises to recover Rs. 8,680 as the amount of the second and third instalments. The judgment-debtor contended that the transfer of the decree was invalid because it was not made by a registered deed. That was treated as a preliminary issue and the trial Judge having held that the transfer was compulsorily registrable dismissed the darkhast. In appeal before N. J. Wadia, J., two points were argued : (1) that registration of the deed of assignment was not necessary and (2) that the decree could in any case be executed against the judgment-debtor personally. This was a point not taken in the trial Court. On both the issues N. J. Wadia, J., decided against the appellant. As regards the first point ; the necessity for registration, the relevant provision of the Regis. Act is s. 17 (1) (e), which is as follows :

"Non-testamentary instruments transferring or assigning any decree or order of a Court or any award when such decree or order or award purports or operates to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, to or in immovable property."

This provision by which transfers and assignments of decrees are made compulsorily registrable was added by an amending Act in 1929. There was formely a conflict of authority as to whether an assignment of a decree creating or declaring rights to or in immovable property exceeding Rs. 100 in value was compulsorily registrable under s. 17 (1) (b). The Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts said registration was not necessary because the assignment was not of any immovable property but of the decree itself and the assignment did not of itself create an interest in the property. This High Court took a different view in Gopal Narain v. Trimbak Sadashiv (1) and Heptulla v. Mohammad (2). But we are concerned not with s. 17 (1) (b) but with the new provision in s. 17 (1) (e), which I have just read, and it is now quite clear that all that has to be considered is whether the decree or order or award as the case may be creates or declares, etc., a right to or in immovable property of a value exceeding Rs. 100. If it does, the assignment of it is compulsorily registrable. In Gopal Narain v. Trimbak Sadashiv (1), the facts were that a mortgagee had obtained a decree against his mortgagors for the payment of the mortgage moneys and in default for the sale of the mortgaged property, and his heir executed an assignment of the decree to the plaintiff who proceeded to execute it by sale of the mortgaged property. It was held that the assignment was a document of which the registration was compulsory. No judgment appears to have been delivered by this Court which merely expressed concurrence in the decision of the lower Courts. But in the report a passage is cited from the judgment of the District Judge, which was the Court of first appeal :

"The deed of sale, under which this decree was transferred from Damodar to Gopal, purported to assign to Gopal certain interest in immovable property; for it gave to him the liberty to sell by auction, by executing the decree against it, the defendant's house; and this liberty to sell was certainly an interest in immovable property and the decision of the Subordinate Judge was, I think, right and must therefore be confirmed."

We must take it, I think, that this Court in dismissing the appeal concurred in this reasoning. It is a very old case, but it does not appear to have been dissented from, and on the contrary it was followed in Heptulla v. Mahomed (2) as I have said. Apart from these Bombay cases there are several other authorities for the view that a charge is a right to or in immovable property within the meaning of the Regis. Act. One of these cases was cited by the learned Counsel far the appellant himself, Maina v. Bachchi (8). In his judgment in that case Richards, J., said (p. 659*) :

"It would appear that the provisions as to registration contained in the Regis. and T P. Acts apply to charges (when created by acts of parties) just as much as to mortgages ..."

In Imperial Bank of India v. Bengal National Bank, Ltd. (9), it was held by Rankin, C. J. that a mere charge on immovable property is within cl. (1) (b) of s. 17, Regis. Act, because, as he said, it is a right in immovable property—a right to have it brought to sale to realize a sum of money to be paid to the chargee. The decision in this case was reversed in Imperial Bank of India v. Bengal National Bank, Ltd., (10), but, on another point, unconnected with the question of registration. Then there is a very recent decision of the Calcutta High Court in Siv Narayan v. Basanta Kumar (11), in which the Court was concerned with a decree for arrears of rent which created a charge on immovable property. It was held that because it created a charge it came within the terms of s. 17, Regis. Act. Mr. Desai referred us to Govind Chandra v. Dwarka Nath (12), in which the question was whether a decree by which immovable property was hypothecated was void because there was no duly registered instrument as required by s. 17. The Court disallowed the argument but that was done by reason of a provision which was then contained in the Act by which decrees were exempted from the rule as to compulsory registration of documents. We think there can be no doubt that N. J. Wadia, J. was right in holding that this deed of assignment required registration.

The second point really includes two entirely different matters, viz., (1) whether this decree can be executed personally against the defendant and (2) whether, whatever the rights of the decree-holder may have been, the right to proceed against the judgment-debtor personally has been validly assigned. On the first of these questions Mr. Desai's argument is that this is a decree for the payment of money to which has been added a charge on certain property by way of additional security for the benefit of the decree-holder. He relies on O. XXI, r. 30, which provides that every decree for the payment of money, including a decree for the payment of money as the alternative to some other relief, may be executed by the detention in the civil prison of the judgment-debtor, or by the attachment and sale of his property, or by both. He also cites Hargobind Kishen Chand v. Hakim Singh & Co. (6), where it was held that the law confers upon the decree-holder the right to decide whether he should execute the decree for payment of money by the arrest of the judgment-debtor or by the attachment, and sale of his property, or by both, and that though the Court has a discretion to refuse execution against the person and property simultaneously, it has no authority to refuse execution against the person of the judgment-debtor on the ground that the decree-holder must in the first instance proceed against the property of the judgment debtor. In that case, however, the Court was concerned with an ordinary money decree and no charge was created by it. That being so, it cannot be said that these observations have much applicability in the case before us. We were also referred to Ambalal Bapubhai v. Narayan Tatyaba (13) and in particular to some observations of Shah, J. at p. 638* of the report:

"The decree contains a distinct direction that the defendant should pay the sum to the plaintiffs. This gives the plaintiffs the right to attach and sell the property of the judgment-debtor under the Civil P. C. and, in the exercise of this right, he can seek to realise the decretal amount or the balance thereof by the sale of the property in question. The declaration in the decree as to the charge on the property in favour of the decree-holder in order to secure re-payment of the amount of the decree has the effect of protecting them against any transfer of the property by the judgment-debtor and not of reducing or modifying the right which the plaintiffs have got in virtue of the direction that the defendant should pay the amount."

It is to be noted, however, that the only question before the Court there was whether the property charged could be sold in execution of the decree or whether a separate suit was necessary. It was held that no separate suit was necessary. The observations relied on by Mr. Desai cannot be said to support the view that the decree so far as it directed payment of money could be executed separately from the provision as to the charge. No such question came before the Court for determination. The case on which the learned Counsel mainly relies is a decision of Barlee, J. sitting alone in First Appeal No. 61 of 1934 decided by Barlee, J. on August 22, 1935, Automobile Sales Co. Ltd. v. Anant Subrao Yatgiri The decree which had to be construed in that case was a rather complicated one. It is thus summarised in the judgment:

"The decree, which is based on award, provides as follows:—Firstly that the defendant should pay a certain sum to the plaintiff; secondly that the amount so found due should be a charge on the immovable property of the defendant.....;

thirdly that some motor-buses then in the possession of the defendant were the properties of the plaintiff. Then there is a clause for instalments, and a default clause which gave the company a right to seize the buses and to sell the immovable properties which have been charged, and there is also a provision about a surety."

What Barlee, J. had to decide was whether this decree could be termed a decree for the payment of money within the terms of s. 73, Civil P. C., which deals with rateable distribution among decree-holders. There are no doubt observations in the jugdment of the learned Judge which may be used in support of the case put forward for the appellant here. But the point which we have to decide did not actually arise in the case decided by Barlee, J., and it is not therefore an authority on the present point. We note also that he has not in his judgment referred to r. 15 of O. XXXIV, Civil P. C., which provides that all the provisions in this order which apply to simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to a charge, within the meaning of s 100, T. P. Act, 1882.

N. J. Wadia J. in the judgment which is now under appeal has relied mainly on Janardan v. Krishanaji (7) in which the facts were these. A decree passad in a mortgage suit directed that the defendant should pay a certain amount to the plaintiff in fixed annual instalments: in default of the payment of any two instalments, the plaintiff was at liberty to recover the whole amount then due by sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant having fallen into arrears, the plaintiff applied to execute the decree not only by sale of the mortgaged property, but also by attaching other property belonging to the defendants. It was held that he was not entitled to proceed simultaneously against the other property, since there must be a decree made personally against the defendants before it could be executed against property other than the mortgaged property. In the course of his judgment Macleod, C. J. said (p. 958*):

"It seems clear to me that there must be a decree personally made against the mortgagor before it can be executed against property other than the mortgaged property. The decree in this case cannot be said to be a personal decree merely because it directs that the defendant should pay the amount. It directs specifically how the plaintiff shall recover the decretal amount if default is made in payment, and it says nothing about what shall happen supposing the mortgaged property when sold is insufficient to pay the mortgage debt."

It is quite true, as M. Dessai says, that that was a case of a mortgage to which the provisions of O. XXXIV specifically apply. But it has been recently followed and applied by Kania, J. in Gurupadappa Malappa v. Basappa Shiddappa (14) to the case of a charge created by a decree. It is true that the charge in that case was a statutory charge under s. 55 (4) (b), T. P. Act, and the decree was not in the same form as the one which we have to construe. But nevertheless the case is an authority for the view which N. J. Wadia J. adopted viz. that the principles laid down in Janardan v. Krishnaji (7) may reasonably be applied by analogy to decretal charges.

In the argument before us no case directly bearing on the point in issue has been cited, and so far as we are aware there is no decision in the authorized reports. But in Fatehchand v. Indian Cotton Co., Ltd. Bombay (15) it was held that where a charge is created in the decree over certain specified properties for the payment of the decretal amount the decree holder should first exhaust his remedy against charged property before proceeding against other property. In the event of the charge proving insufficient, there is nothing to prevent the decree-holder from proceeding against other property: "At the same time" it was stated in the judgment,

"by specially indicating this property the parties evidently intended it to be the primary remedy and the judgment-debtor was entitled to act on this belief with regard to the rest of his property. It therefore might be prejudicial to him if the decree-holder were allowed to desert his charge completely and suddenly pounce upon the other property. (p. 131*)."

The judgment seems to have been based therefore on general grounds of equity rather than on the application of the provisions of O. XXXIV, in particular r. 6. It is, however, a direct authority on the point before us, and we agree that the principles underlying O. XXXIV, although they may not strictly apply in the case of a charge, may be applied and ought to be applied by analogy to charges created by a decree, unless indeed the terms of the decree make it clear that the remedy of recovering the decretal amount from the property charged was not given in lieu of the personal remedy but in addition to it. In every case it must be essentially a question of construction of the decree, but unless the contrary appears, we think the ordinary rule should be that when a charge is created by act of parties the specification of the particulary fund or property negatives a personal liability and the remedy of the holder of the charge is against the property charged only or at any rate against the property charged in the first instance. In my opinion that is the way in which the decree in this case should be construed.

The question whether the right to proceed personally against the judgment-debtor has been validly assigned to the appellant therefore becomes academic because we hold that there was no such right, at any rate until recourse had been had to the sale of the charged property. Whether, if that right had existed, it could be taken to have been assigned, in view of the fact that the assignment deed is invalid so far as the charge is concerned for want of registration, would depend on the question whether the decree is indivisible or whether it can be split up into two parts, viz., the direction for payment of money and the direction as to the charge. In the view we take of the construction of the decree it must be held that the right to proceed against the judgment-debtor personally is not independant of the charge but only arises, if at all, after the right against the charged property has been exercised. In that view of the case Heptulla v. Mahomed (2) is an authority against the appellant.

For these reasons we hold that Wadia J.'s judgment is correct and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Electricity Act (IX of 1910), s. 44 (d)—Construction—Onus to show improper use of electrical energy—Latter part of s. 44 (d) relating to cl. (d), whether exonerates prosecution from discharging onus.

Section 44 (d), Electricity Act, inter alia imposes a penalty for improperly using the energy of a licensee The onus would, therefore, lie on the prosecution to show that there had actually been improper use of the energy. The latter part of s. 44 (d) in so far as it relates to cl. (d) does not exonerate the prosecution from discharging the onus which lies on it to show that there has been improper use of the energy of a licensee, but merely provides that in case there has been such improper use, the consumer himself as defined in s. 2 (c) of the Act will not be able to avoid the liability by saying that the energy was used by some person over whom he had no control

Messrs. Probodh Chandra Chatterjee and Bireswar Chatterjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Hamidul Huq, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner in this case has been convicted under s. 44 (d), Electricity Act. It is contended on his behalf that the judgment of the learned Magistrate contains no sufficient finding to warrant a conviction under this section. With this contention I must agree. The case for the prosecution appears to have been that the petitioner improperly used three points in his workshop for lighting purposes when he was under a contract with the electric supply company to use the energy supplied through these points for industrial purposes only. The learned Magistrate seems to have been of the opinion that it might be presumed that he had used the electrical energy improperly as alleged by the prosecution because he had made certain connection for the use of electrical energy without the consent of the licensee. In my opinion he has misread s. 44, Electricity Act. This section inter alsa imposes a penalty for improperly using the energy of a licensee. The onus would therefore lie on the prosecution to show that there had actually been improper use of the energy. For example, in the case with which we are now dealing, the onus would lie on the prosecution to show that three of the points in the petitioner's workshop had actually been used for lighting purposes and not for industrial purposes. The learned Advocate for the Crown places some reliance upon the latter part of the section in so far as it relates to cl. (d), which is to the effect that

"If it is proved that any artificial means exist ..... for facilitating such improper use as is referred to in cl. (d).....it shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved that such improper use..., has been knowingly and wilfully caused by a such consumer."

This provision does not exonerate the prosecution from discharging the onus which lies on it to show that there has been improper use of the energy of a licensee, but merely provides that in case there has been such improper use, the consumer himself as defined in s. 2 (c) of the Act will not be able to avoid the liability by saying that the energy was used by some person over whom he had no control. From the findings contained in the judgment it is clear that the requisite onus was not discharged in this case. In this view the conviction cannot be supported. It is therefore set aside and this rule is made absolute. The fine, if already paid, will be refunded.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870 as amended by U. P. Court Fees (Amending) Act (XIX of 1938), s. 7 (IV-B) and Proviso—Under Proviso, court-fee to be calculated upon market value at date of presentation of plaint—Suit for injunction filed before proviso came into force—Valuation of suit at Rs. 5 was proper—Court-fee on Rs. 5 is proper for purposes of appeal.

Under the proviso to s. 7 (IV-B) it is the amount mentioned in the plaint which is the basis of the valuation and, therefore, the Court must look back to the date of the institution of the suit and calculate the court-fee upon the market value at the date of presenting the plaint. Hence, a suit for injunction must be deemed to have been correctly valued at Rs. 5 when at the date of the presentation of the plaint s 7 (IV-B) proviso was not in force and court-fee paid on memorandum of appeal on such valuation is correct.

S. Ref. and S. A. from the decision of the Additional Civil Judge, Ballia, dated February 27, 1939.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for Appellant.

Judgment.—The question which is to be decided is what amount of court-fee should be charged on a memorandum of appeal against a decree passed in a suit to obtain an injunction. The law in force when the suit was instituted was that the court-fee charged on the plaint should be ad valorem according to the amount at which the relief sought was valued in the plaint, it being left to the plaintiff's discretion to place whatever valuation he wished upon his relief. The plaintiff valued his relief at Rs. 5 and paid the proper court-fee on that amount. At the time when the second appeal was filed in this Court, the law had been amended by a local Act, Act XIX of 1938. After the substitution of the words 'second appeals from decrees in suits' for the word 'suits' in accordance with the provisions of s. 2 (iv) and the omission of the portions which are irrelevant, s. 7 is now as follows:

"The amount of fee payable under this Act in the second appeals from decrees in suits next hereinafter mentioned shall be computed as follows:

In second appeals from decrees in suits..... ..to obtain an injunction .. . According to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint;

Provided that such amount shall be not less than one-tenth of the market-value of the property involved in or affected by the relief sought or Rs. 50, whichever it greater."

According to the Stamp Reporter we should look to the date upon which the memorandum of appeal was filed and assess the court-fee not upon the amount at which the relief was valued in the plaint but upon the amount at which it should have been valued at that date in accordance with the terms of the proviso. According to learned Counsel for the appellant we ought to look to the date of the plaint and assess the court-fee upon the amount at which the relief was in fact valued, and rightly valued, in the plaint. The question is not free from difficulty, but on the whole I think that the contention of learned Counsel must prevail. The Legislature has decided that it is the amount mentioned in the plaint which is the basis of the valuation and, therefore, I think, we must look back to the date of the institution of the suit as we would in suits for movable property other than money under s. 7 (iii) of the Act which mentions suits for movable property other than money where the subject-matter has a market value and lays down that the court-fee shall be calculated upon such market-value at the date of presenting the plaint. The proviso to section 7 (IV-B) also mentions market value and in some cases the fee payable would depend upon such market-value. It seems to me that the market value would be such value at the date of presenting the plaint. If we are to go back to the date of the presentation of the plaint, then, as the proviso was not in force on that date, the relief was rightly valued at Rs. 5 and the court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal was sufficient. I hold accordingly.

S. Order accordingly.

Mortgage—Substituted security — Amendment—Partition after mortgage of share in village—Mortgagor losing share in village mortgaged and obtaining share in another village—Mortgagee not proceeding against such substituted security in mortgage suit—Property originally mortgaged sold and purchased by decree-holder—Sale certificate issued—Subsequent application by decree-holder for amendment of description in mortgage decrees, execution petition, sale proclamation and sale certificate—Amendment held could be allowed upto stage of final decree and no more—Substituted security, ascertainment of—Method—Duty of Court—Amendment—Question involving identity of mortgaged property, if can be dealt with on application to amend relevant documents.

The mortgagors mortgaged their shares in village S while partition proceedings were proceeding in respect of the mahal which included the village S but before the partition was finally concluded and approved of by the Commissioner. By the partition the mortgagors lost all the property of any value in S but were given a separate takhta in village B. In a mortgage suit the mortgagee however did not take any steps to proceed against the substituted security but only prayed for sale of the original security. The preliminary and final decrees were for the sale of that share in S and such was the share mentioned in the execution petition, the sale proclamation and the sale certificate. After the whole proceedings were over and difficulties arose as to obtaining possession of the substituted security, the mortgagee decree-holder who had purchased the property himself applied to the Court for amendment of the description of the mortgaged properties in the preliminary and final decrees in the suit and in all the consequential papers of the execution proceedings, that is, in the execution petition, sale proclamation and sale certificate.

Held, that the partition must be deemed to have taken place after the mortgage. On the principle of substituted security the mortgagees could have proceeded against such part of the property allotted to the mortgagors in village B as represented their original share in S which had been mortgaged by the mortgage and could have brought to sale the substituted security and hence an amendment of the plaint, the preliminary decree and the final decree, could be allowed but no further amendment, could be justifiably made. Because if an amendment was made in the execution petition, sale proclamation and sale certificate, the result would be that property would have been bought and sold which had never been even put up for sale. No amendment could therefore be made in any of the relevant documents and proceedings following the final decree. [p. 749, col 2; p. 750, col. 1.]

In ascertaining what precisely is the substituted security out of a share allotted to the mortgagor in partition subsequent the mortgage the partition papers and the valuation of the properties made in the partition proceedings are no doubt of the utmost importance but it would be advisable that, before a finding is recorded as to what the substituted security is, the parties should be given an opportunity of placing their contentions before the Court and any evidence which they may seek to adduce and which the Court may consider to be properly admissible. After such inquiry the Court should come to the conclusion as to what is the substituted security and such should be inserted in all the relevant documents. [p. 750, col. 1.]

A question involving the identity of the property mortgaged cannot be dealt with on an application to amend the relevant documents after the mortgage decree is passed, sale held and a sale certificate is issued. [p. 750, col. 2.]

C. Rs. from an order of the Subordinate Judge Gaya, dated, April 26, 1940.

Messrs. Khurshaid Husnain, and Ray Paras Nath for the Petitioner in No. 233 and Messrs. Khurshaid Husnain, Ray Paras Nah, and P. Jha, for the Opposite Party, in No. 372.

Messrs. Baldeo Sahay and C. P. Sinha, for the Opposite Party in No. 233 and for the Petitioners in No. 372.

Harries, C. J.—These are two civil revisions preferred by the decree-holder and judgment-debtors praying for revision of an order of the learned Subordinate Judge passed in an execution matter. To appreciate the points at issue it will be necessary shortly to set out the facts of the case.

On September 9, 1929, Shyamakanta Lal and his brother Srikanta Lal executed a mortgage in favour of the decree-holder Ram Lal. The properties mortgaged were 5 annas 4 pies share in village Semaria and 6 annas 17 dams odd share in village Baralodhwe. It appears that at the date of this mortgage partition proceedings were proceeding in respect of the mahal which included the village of Semaria. On September 2, 1929, (that is, a week before this mortgage was executed) the partition was actually approved of by the Collector, but it did not receive the approval of the Commissioner until May 23, 1930 (that is, a considerable time after the mortgage was executed). In this Collectorate partition the mortgagors were given a separate takhta in village Basaria and their interest in village Semaria became negligible.

On April 27, 1935, the decree-holder brought a suit to enforce his mortgage by sale of the shares in these two villages. On December 23, 1936, he obtained a preliminary decree which was made final on July 23, 1937. On August 23, 1937, proceedings were taken to sell the mortgaged properties, and on December 18, 1937, the two properties were sold, the 5 annas 4 pies share in Semaria being sold for Rs. 2,000 and the share in Baralodhwe for Rs. 6,500, the purchaser in each case being the decree-holder. On April 11, 1939, the decree-holder took delivery of possession through Court. He, however, sought to take possession of the mortgagor's property in Basaria and of a share not in village Baralodhwe but in Mahal Baralodhwe. He was resisted and eventually the decree-holder applied to the Court for amendment of the description of the mortgaged properties in the preliminary and final decrees in the suit and in all the consequential papers of the execution proceedings, that is in the execution petition, sale proclamation and sale certificate.

The learned Subordinate Judge who heard this application for amendment allowed it in the case of Semaria property and permitted the Basaria property to be substituted in place of the share of Semaria stated in the documents throughout the proceedings. With regard to Baralodhwe, however, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the dispute related not to a misdescription of property but rather to the identity of the property actually mortgaged. In his view amendment was not the proper procedure with regard to Baralodhwe, and he refused that part of the application. The judgment-debtors being dissatisfied with the order relating to amendment and substituting the Basaria property for the share in Semaria have preferred Civil Revision No. 233 of 1940, whereas the decree-holder being dissatisfied with the order refusing to allow an amendment with regard to the Baralodhwe property has preferred Civil Revision No. 372 of 1940.

It will be convenient in the first place to deal with Civil Revision No. 233 of 1940. The Judgment-debtors argued in the Court below that this was not a case where the mortgage preceded the partition but on the contrary it was a case where the partition preceded the mortgage. However it is clear from the facts that the mortgage was entered into before this partition was finally concluded and approved of by the Commissioner, and it has not been argued before us that the Court below was wrong in treating the partition as taking place after the mortgage. By the partition the mortgagors lost all the property of any value in Semaria but were given a separate takhta in Basaria. It appears that the mortgagors owned a 5 anna 4 pies share in both Semaria and Basaria and they received a separate takhta in Basaria representing their previous shares in both the villages. There can be no doubt that on the principle of substituted security the mortgagees could have proceeded against such part of the property allotted to the mortgagors in Basaria as represented their original share in Semaria which had been mortgaged by the mortgage of September 9, 1929. However, the mortgagees, for reasons best known to themselves, took no steps when they instituted their suit on April 27, 1935, to proceed against the substituted security. The suit prayed for sale not of the substituted security but of the original security, namely 5 annas 4 pies share in village Semaria. The preliminary and final decrees were for the sale of that share in Semaria and such was the share mentioned in the execution petition, the sale proclamation and the sale certificate. After the whole proceedings were over and difficulties arose as to obtaining possession of the substituted security, this application for amendment was preferred.

The learned Subordinate Judge allowed the amendment, feeling that he was bound by a decision of the Privy Council in Muhammad Afzal v. Abdul Rahman (1). In my view that decision of their Lordships does not warrant the various amendments by the learned Subordinate Judge in this case. Their Lordships lay down that where a partition has followed a mortgage and other properties are allotted to the mortgagor in lieu of the mortgaged property then the mortgagee can proceed against the substituted security. The difficulty in this case is that the mortgagee did not proceed against the substituted security but ignored the fact of partition and proceeded against the property originally mortgaged. There can be no doubt that he could have brought for sale such part of the property in Basaria as represented the property originally mortgaged, and that being so the learned Subordinate Judge was right in my judgment in allowing an amendment of the plaint, the preliminary decree and the final decree, but no further amendment, in my view, could be justifiably made. It must be remembered that if an amendment is made in the execution petition, sale proclamation and sale certificate, the result will be that property will have been bought and sold which has never been even put up for sale. If a part of the Basaria property be substituted for the share in Semaria in the sale certificate, it will have the effect of a purchase by the decree-holder of property which has in fact never been offered for sale. That being so, it is clear that no amendment can be made in any of the relevant documents and proceedings following the final decree.

The question now arises what amendment should be made in the plaint, preliminary and final decree. The present takhta in Basaria given to the mortgagors by the partition represents not only their previous share in Semaria but also their share in Basaria. That being so, the whole of the takhta given in the partition cannot be treated as the substituted security. The learned Judge, after making a calculation based entirely upon the partition papers and valuations, has come to the conclusion that 6 annas 8 pies share of the Basaria takhta represents the old Semaria share which was the subject of the mortgage: in other words, the substituted security is now 6 annas 8 pies share in the takhta given to the mortgagors in Basaria on partition. Mr. Khurshaid Husnain on behalf of the judgment-debtors has urged that the method adopted by the learned Judge of ascertaining what precisely is the substituted security is not the true one. There is nothing in the judgment to suggest that the parties were given an opportunity of urging their respective points of view as to how the extent of the substituted security should be ascertained. The partition papers and the valuation of the properties made in the partition proceedings are clearly of the utmost importance in the case; but in my view it would be advisable that before a finding is recorded as to what the substituted security is, the parties should be given an opportunity of placing their contentions before the Court and any evidence which they may seek to adduce and which the Court may consider to be properly admissible. After such inquiry the Court should come to the conclusion as to what is the substituted security and such should be inserted in all the relevant documents up to and including the final decree in place of the share in Semaria which was the property originally mortgaged.

After such amendment is made fresh steps will have to be taken in bringing this property in Basaria to sale. It is needless to say that in view of the observations which I have made that the sale which has already taken place is in no sense a sale of the mortgaged property and cannot possibly affect the mortgagor's interest in the takhta granted to them in Basaria. Fresh proceedings will have to be taken to bring the substituted security to sale after amendment has been made.

The decree-holder preferred Civil Revision No. 372 of 1940 seeking revision of that part of the order which refused to allow any amendment with regard to Baralodhwe property. In my judgment the learned Subordinate Judge was right in refusing to make any amendment with regard to this property. The mortgaged property was certainly stated to be village Baralodhwe; but it was contended by the decree-holder that there was no such village and that the mortgaged property was in fact the Mahal Baralodhwe. Certain documents were adduced by the parties to support their respective cases, and eventually the learned Judge came to the conclusion that this was not a case of misdescription merely but involved a question of the identity of the property mortgaged. That being so, proceedings to amend the relevant documents in the case did not appear to him to be appropriate. In my view a question involving the identity of the property mortgaged cannot be dealt with on an application to amend. There is here a serious dispute as to what was the subject-matter of the mortgage. The mortgagors contend that it was a share in village Baralodhwe, whereas the mortgagees contend that it was a share in a mahal known as Baralodhwe. It appears to me that this dispute can never be decided by an application such as that preferred by the decree-holder, and in my view the lower Court was right in rejecting the application to amend.

The result, therefore, is that Civil Revision No. 372 of 1940 preferred by the decree-holder fails in its entirety. Civil Revision No. 233 of 1940 preferred by the judgment-debtors is allowed in part and so much of the order of the lower Court relating to amendment of the execution petition, proclamation of sale and sale certificate is set aside. The judgment-debtors are entitled to their costs in Civil Revision No. 372 of 1940, whereas I would make no order as to costs in Civil Revision No. 233 of 1940. I would assess the hearing fee in Civil Revision No. 372 of 1940 at three gold mohurs.

Contract — Sale of goods — Vendee paying earnest money but committing default — Earnest money, if can be recovered—Contract falling through vendee's default—If can claim balance of purchase money paid excluding earnest — Vendor's right to set-off claim for damages suffered by him — What vendor must prove.

Even in respect of sale of goods it is customary in India to receive sums of money by way of deposit or earnest and such sums are forfeited when default is committed by the vendee. 7 Ind. Cas. 794 (1), relied on.

Where a contract for sale of goods has failed through default of the vendee, he is entitled to recover the balance of the purchase money paid by him (excluding the earnest money) and the vendors can only resist the claim by seeking to set off against the said sum any damages which they might have incurred by reason of the vendee's non-performance of the contract. But before they substantiate their claim they should prove their readiness and willingness to perform their part of the contract and that they were in a position to perform the contract on the date fixed for its performance.

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge Ellore, in A. S. No. 20 of 1932.

Messrs. Ch. Raghava Rao and Ramamurthi, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the return of the purchase money paid by the plaintiff in respect of a contract for sale and delivery of 600 bags of paddy by the defendants to the plaintiff. The contract was entered into on October 28, 1929 and is evidenced by Ex. D. The price per bag was fixed at Rs. 8-1-6. An advance of Rs. 200 was paid on the said day and later a sum of Rs. 1,110 was advanced. In all, the plaintiff paid Rs. 1,310 towards the purchase money. The date of performance was November 8 1929. No delivery took place on that day. The case for the plaintiff is that the defendants committed default in the delivery of the bags and therefore he was entitled to sue for the return of the purchase mony. The case for the defendants is that though the contract Ex. D. does not mention what bags they were to deliver it was stipulated between them that those bags were the bags which the defendants had pledged with the Imperial Bank of India, that the plaintiff was to pay in advancee the amount which he had to pay towards the purchase money in order to enable them to redeem the pledge and deliver the bags to the plaintiff but the plaintiff committed default in paying the said money to them. They further stated that this attitude on the part of the plaintiff was due to the fact that there was a falling market. In answer to this the plaintiff stated that he did go with the money to Avatapalli where the bags were under pledge and offered the money but the defendants would not take it. Both the lower Courts have found that the plaintiff did not go to Avatapalli and offer the money as alleged by him and taking advantage of the falling market he was not prepared to abide by the contract. Therefore there is no doubt that the plaintiff committed default in performing his part of the contract, but the question is is, the plaintiff entitled to get a return of the purchase money. Out of this sum of Rs. 1,310 Rs. 200 was the sum paid on the date of the contract as and by way of earnest money.

Mr. Somasundaram on behalf of the plaintiff attempted to argue that that sum was not paid as earnest but as purchase money. do not think it is to him to so contend in the face of the distinct admission made by his client in his deposition wherein he states thus, "Defendant asked for Rs. 200 towards earnest money. I paid the amount." As the plaintiff has committed default, the defendants are entitled to forfeit the said sum of Rs. 200 and it is not open to the plaintiff to seek to recover it. Mr. Somasundaram argued that in mercantile contracts it is not usual to forfeit the said sum and the amount paid as advance or by way of earnest was never treated as security and in support thereof he relied on certain observations of Coutts Trotter, J. Whatever may be the practice with regard to mercantile contracts in England, so far as I am aware even in respect of sale of goods it has been customary in this country to receive sums of money by way of deposit or earnest and such sums were forfeited when default is committed by the vendee and Courts have given effect to such forfeiture. As an instance in point I may mention the case reported in Roshan Lal v. Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd Delhi (1). It was a case relating to a contract for the purchase of 500 bales af cotton. Sir John Stanley C. J., and Banerji, J. non-suited the plaintiff who sued to recover the earnest money paid by him on the ground that he committed default in the performance of his part of the contract. Mr. Somasundaram argued that even assuming that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the earnest money paid by him when he committed default, at any rate the Court could not non-suit him in a case where the defendants were equally at fault in performing their part of the contract, but he was not able to cite any authority in support of this contention except relying for the purpose of argument on the case reported in 9 Mysore L. J. 35. No doubt there are observations therein in support of his contention but the learned Judges who decided that case did not give any authority in support of the view they have taken. The question is not whether the defendants committed default or not but whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the purchase money.

The next question is as regards the balance of the money claimed (excluding the said earnest) which is a sum of Rs. 1,110. As the contract fell through the plaintiff is entitled to recover the said sum of money and the defendants can only resist the claim by seeking to set off against the said sum any damages which they might have incurred by reason of the plaintiff's non-performance of the contract. The defendants did make this claim in the written statement but before they could substantiate their claim they should prove their readness and willingness to perform their part of the contract and were in a position to perform the contract on the date fixed for its performance. As the learned Subordinate Judge did not give any finding in regard thereto I called for a finding on the said question. The learned Subordinate Judge has now submitted a finding to the effect that the defendants must be held to have been ready and willing to deliver the paddy on the date fixed for the performance of the contract. This finding was canvassed by Mr. Somasundaram on the ground that the learned Judge made out a new case for the defendants in arriving at his conclusion. It is this. According to Ex. D, there was nothing to indicate that the goods the defendants contracted to deliver were the goods pledged to the Imperial Bank of India and therefore it must be taken that the defendants might have delivered the goods having regard to the falling market. The learned Judge, in my opinion, in arriving at the said conclusion failed to give due weight to the admissions made by the defendants in the written statement and further it was throughout their case that what was contracted to be delivered was the goods pledged to the Imperial Bank of India. So far as these goods are concerned, it is clear that the defendants were not in a position to redeem the pledge and deliver them. At any rate they have not shown that they were in a position to do so. Their case throughout was that with the money to be paid by the plaintiff they should redeem the pledge and deliver the goods. I must therefore set aside this finding and hold that the defendants were not ready and willing to deliver the goods on the date of performance and therefore they are not entitled to claim any damages or set off any damages against the sum claimed by the plaintiff.

In the result the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree for the sum of Rs. 1,110 with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of plaint. The decrees therefore of both the lower Courts will have to be modified accordingly. The appellants and the respondents will receive and pay proportionate costs in this appeal. Leave to appeal refused.

DR. GIRISH CHANDRA GHOSE AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS
SUDHIR CHANDRA ROY CHOUDHURI —RESPONDENT

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1923), Sch. II, Part I, ss. 46 (1), 47—Personation—Candidate must be shown to have knowingly persuaded impostor to obtain voting paper—Charge, contents of—Ballot paper already delivered to elector—Elector's right to vote challenged on ground of being impostor—Candidate not proved to have abetted procuring of ballot paper—No offence under Sch. II, Para. 1—S. 46 (1), construction of—Two candidates to be elected to constituancy—Election of either challenged—Entire election must be held afresh—Both candidates, if necessary parties—Failure to implead one, if fatal.

Schedule II, Part I, Para. 3, Cal. Municipal Act, makes the offence of impersonation the procuring of an application by a person for a voting paper in the name of some other person. The offence of personation is complete when the person applies for a ballot paper. It must be established that the candidate knowingly persuaded the impostor to obtain a voting paper, that is the knowledge of the candidate is essential in order that a corrupt practice be proved against him. [p 754, col 2.]

When the candidate charged with offence under Sch II, Para. 1, was absent when the elector applied for the ballot paper, and when the ballot paper had already been delivered to the elector under Para. 31 of the Govt. order, his right to vote was challenged on the ground of his being an impostor :

Held, that the candidate could not be said to have abetted the procuring of the ballot paper and hence no offence under Sch. II, Para. 1, was committed in the absence of proof that the candidate was aware that the alleged impostor was not the real person.

Section 46 (1) must contemplate the challenge of the validity of an election whether it is an election of one person or of two persons, and where there are two candidates who would be elected to the constituency, if the challenge is made to either of the candidates, the result would be that the entire election in that constituency would have to be held afresh If that is so, it is obvious that both the candidates who may be affected by an election petition should be parties to it. Failure to implead one of them is a fatal omission. [p. 755, col. 2.]

Messrs. N. N. Bose, and A. C. Sircar, for Petitioner No. 1.

Messrs. B. S. Ghose, S. R. Das and P. B. Mukherji, for the Respondent.

Order.—This is an application by three voters in Ward No. 3 of the Calcutta Municipality for an order that the election of Sudhir Chandra Roy Choudhuri as a councillor for Ward No. 3 be declared null and void and that such election be set aside, and for costs. One of the petitioners, Dr. Ghose, was a candidate at this election. Ward No. 3 is Bartola, a general constituency which elects two councillors and one of the seats is reserved for a member of the scheduled castes. The five candidates polled votes as follows: The respondent Sudhir Chandra Roy Choudhuri 1945, Jogendra Nath Mandal who is a member of a scheduled caste 1039, Radha Nath Das, also a member of a scheduled caste 717 Dr. Girish Chandra Ghose 589 and Mr. Haridat Saha 418.

The election is called in question on the ground of a corrupt practice within the meaning of Sch. II, Part 1, Cal. Municipal Act. It is alleged in the petition that amongst voters on the electoral roll was one Chunilal Bhattacharjee, that on March 28, 1940, the polling day, a fictitious person alleging himself to be Chunilal Bhattacharjee appeared and attempted to vote as Chunilal Bhattacharjee. He was challenged by Banku Behari Ghose polling agent of Dr. G. C. Ghose and then by Dr. Ghose himself. Mr. Sudhir Chandra Roy Choudhuri then entered the polling booth and identified the alleged impostor who was allowed to vote after filling up the requisite form in which Dr. Ghose undertook to prove the offence of personation and Mr. Choudhury signed as the identifier of the alleged impostor of Chunilal Bhattacharjee. Paragraph 6 of the petition alleges that in the premises a corrupt practice under Sch. II, Part. 1, Cal. Municipal Act, was effected by the successful candidate Sudhir Chandra Roy Choudhuri in

'abetting the presonator of the said Chunilal Bhattacharjee to procure and in procuring and in abetting by such corrupt practice the procurement of a voting paper for the said impersonator."

The alleged impostor recorded his vote. The respondent has taken two preliminary objections. He alleges that the petition is incompetent because the proper and necessary parties have not been joined. He also contends that the petition does not disclose any cause of action and that it has failed to set out any corrupt practice which has been committed by the respondent. It is noteworthy that the petition has been signed by Dr. Ghose who has verified all the facts stated in the petition as true to his knowledge. In that petition he states that he also relies on the affidavit of Banku Behary Ghose who is his polling agent. In para. 4 of the petition it is stated that Chunilal Bhattacharjee, the voter, had been residing for the past five months and was actually residing on March 28, 1940 at Kunda in Deoghar in the Santal Pergannas and never attended the polling booth. In para. 6 of Dr. Ghose's affidavit he states, "I learnt on enquiry that Chunilal Bhattacharjee left Calcutta about five months back and was staying at Deoghar." So that apparently what has been stated in the petition as true to Dr. Ghose's knowledge is in fact derived from information, without any statement as to who was the informant. In paras. 9, 10 and 11 of Dr. Ghose's affidavit he sets out at considerable lenght a long conversation which he had with Chunilal Bhattacharjee and with a sircar named Jugal, neither of whom has made an affidavit. These allegations in the absence of any affidavit by the informants cannot be accepted. The offence of personation is defined in Sch. II, Part 1, Cal. Municipal Act as,

"the procuring or abetting or attempting to procure by a candidate or his agent or by any other person with the connivance of a candidate or his agent, the application by a person for a voting paper in the name of any other person, whether living or dead, or in a fictitious name or by a person who has voted once at an election for a voting paper in his own name at the same election."

Nowhere in the petition or in the relevant portion of the affidavit in support is it stated that the respondent knowingly persuaded the impostor to obtain a voting paper. It is contended that the knowledge of the respondent is essential in order that a corrupt practice be proved. This view is supported by authority which I see no reason to disregard. It is also contended that knowledge should be alleged in the petition or affidavits in which the charge is made. It is true that the charge is not a criminal charge though it is possible that the facts if established might result in criminal proceedings. But it is in my opinion desirable that the charge should be set out with all possible particularity specifying the elements which the petitioner undertakes to prove. It must be remembered however that the petition must be drafted and presented within 8 days and if the nature of the charge is set out with sufficient clarity to enable the respondent to meet it, the Court would have a discretion considering the circumstances of each case to decide whether or not the plea should be allowed. Neither in the facts contained in this petition nor in those facts which are admissible in the affidavit in support is there any suggestion that the respondent knew that the impersonator was not in fact Chunilal Bhattacharjee. There is a general allegation in para. 6 of the petition charging abetment of corrupt practice. I find the greatest difficulty in construing that paragraph. The corrupt practice in one place is stated to be abetting an impersonator to procure and in procuring and in abetting by such corrupt practice the procurement of a voting paper for the impersonator. So far as I can construe this paragraph the charge is that the respondent abetted the impersonator in procuring a voting paper. Looking then at the facts as set out by the petitioner it is quite clear that he did not allege that the respondent abetted the procurement of a voting paper. Paragraph 31 of the Govt. order for the conduct of elections under the Act sets out the procedure when an elector whose identity is in doubt asks for a voting paper. The presiding officer or the polling officer may, and if so required by the candidate or his election agent or polling agent must put certain questions to the elector so as if possible to establish his identity. If the elector gives the correct answer he is supplied with a ballot paper. Now, in the affidavit, Dr. Ghose states that he entered the polling booth when his agent was challenging the identity of the alleged impersonator. Dr. Ghose also challenged his identity and the respondent entered the polling booth "at or about that time." Mr. Banku Behari Ghose, Dr. Ghose's agent, in his affidavit says that he challenged the alleged impersonator, that Dr. Ghose came in and challenged his right to vote as Chunilal Bhattacharjee. Immediately thereafter, says Mr. Ghose, the candidate, Sudhir Chandra Roy Choudhury, entered and insisted on the presiding officer handing over the ballot paper stating that he was ready to identify the alleged impersonator.

It would appear that the ballot paper had already been delivered to the elector under para. 31 of the Govt. order but that his right to vote was challenged. If that is so it cannot be stated that the respondent abetted procuring the ballot paper and if he did not abet the procuring of the ballot paper, in my opinion, there was no offence under Sch. II, Part 1. Schedule, II, Part 1, para. 3 makes the offence of impersonation the procuring of an application by a person for a voting paper in the name of some other person. In Hammond's Indian Candidate and Returning Officer on p. 148, it is pointed out that the offence of personation is complete when the person applies for a ballot paper. At the time when the person applied for the ballot paper the respondent was apparently absent. Learned Counsel for the petitioner has suggested that it is not clear from the affidavits that the ballot paper had been handed over to the voter prior to the entrance of the respondent. But on the facts as set out in the petition and in the affidavit of the petitioner, Dr. Girish Chandra Ghose, that appears to me to be the fact. In any event I am quite satisfied that the manner in which the charge has been set out in para. 6 of the petition is a charge which no respondent could or should be called upon to answer. As I have already stated, there is no statement that the respondent had any knowledge that the alleged personator was not Chunilal Bhattacharjya nor is there any suggestion or statement that the respondent was instrumental in getting the alleged personator to apply for a voting paper in the name of some other person. On these grounds I am satisfied that the petition should be dismissed.

The second ground which has been argued at some length is that the petition is bad for want of parties. The petition has to be filed within eight days of the publication in the Gazette. No amendment to the petition could now be allowed and it is argued that the petitioner must in a constituency of this description apply for the entire election to be set aside, that is to say for the election of both the candidates and not merely of one candidate. If he applies for the election to be set aside the elected candidates should both be parties and one of those elected candidates is not a party to this petition. Reliance is placed in this connexion on the decision of an Appellate Bench of this Court Rathis Chandra v. Amulya Charan (1). In that case both the candidates had been joined as parties, and the question arose as to whether the election of the successful candidate No. 2 should be set aside although no fault had been found against him. In the course of his judgment Suhrawardy, J. said at p. 744* of the report:

"There is no doubt that defendant No. 2 is not concerned in any irregularity or illegality connected with the election. His nomination paper was submitted in time and he was duly elected. The learned District Judge, however, thinks that it would be in the interest of all parties that the whole election should be set aside and he ordered accordingly. I gave my anxious consideration to this matter, because I find that defendant No 2 is not guilty of any omission or commission and has been penalized for the irregularity committed by defendant No. 1. But it seems to me that an order to be passed in a joint election must be based on some principle. There is no doubt that if the election of defendant No. 1 alone is set aside there will be one vacancy in the constituency But the intention of the Legislature is that two persons out of the total number of candidates should be elected from a particular ward at one election. It did not contemplate that an election may be held piecemeal.

Another difficulty suggests itself to me. If a fresh election is held in place of defendant No. 1 only, the voters who had voted for him will vote for one candidate only though under the law they are entitled to vote for two. In cases in which one candidate has to be elected and the rival candidate who has secured the next largest number of votes got the election set aside, it has been held that the latter is not entitled to be declared elected and a fresh election has always been ordered."

Costello, J., who delivered a separate judgment on another point which is not relevant to this enquiry agreed with Suhrawardy, J., on this point, and in the result the entire election was set aside. Learned Counsel for the respondent has pointed out that in this case Ward No. 3 is a constituency for which two persons must be elected and one of them must be from the scheduled caste, and he argues, in my opinion with considerable justification, that if one of the elected candidates were to be unseated that there should be fresh election so that the electors might have an opportunity of deciding who were the two councillors whom they wished to represent them and the way in which they would give their votes.

An argument was also based on ss. 46 and 47, Cal. Municipal Act, which have been the subject of much perplexity and some comment in the cases which have come before this Court in the past. Many Judges have found the same difficulty, which I find, in trying to place a construction upon these two sections which is consistent with the clauses of both. Section 45 (1) provides the occasions on which an application may be made to the High Court for hearing an election petition. One of those occasions is 'if the validity of any election is questioned." Another is "for any other cause." The section provides that an application may be made to the High Court within eight days, and there follows a proviso which gives certain grounds on which no election may be called in question. Section 47 provides that if in any proceeding duly instituted under s. 46 the High Court is of a certain opinion, then "the election of returned candidate shall be void." Various grounds are given in sub-cls. (a), (b) and (c) of s. 47 (1). Returning then to s. 46 (2). This sub-section provides "if the Court sets aside an election or declares an election to be null and void, a fresh election shall be held." There is a curious lacuna, here, because s. 47 (1) merely provides that if the High Court is of a certain opinion the election of the returned candidate shall be void. It does not provide that the Court shall set aside the election, but s. 46 (2) assumes that the Court may set aside an election or declare an election to be null and void and provides that in that event a fresh election shall be held.

It is argued that s. 46 (1) contemplates the challenge of the validity of an election as an entire election to a constituency, that is to say in Ward No. 3, with which we are concerned, the election of two persons. It is then argued that if under s. 47 (1) the Court is of an opinion adverse to the elected candidate, the election of that candidate must be void, and as a consequence set aside. Reliance is then placed on the decision in Rathis Chandra v. Amulya Charan (1), for saying that if the election of one candidate is void then there must be a fresh election in the constituency. In my opinion s. 46 (1) must contemplate the challenge of the validity of an election whether it is an election of one person or of two persons, and where as in the present instance there are two candidates who would be elected to the constituency, if the challenge is made to either of the candidates, the result would be that the entire election in that constituency would have to be held afresh. If that is so, it is obvious that both the candidates who may be affected by an election petition should be parties to it. That has not been done in this case, and that is, in my opinion, a fatal omission. The petition is, therefore, dismissed with costs. Costs as of a hearing. Certified for two Counsels.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 5, 17—Agreement for reference to arbitration—Persons to be arbitrators specified—Some of them refusing to act—Court, if can substitute other persons.

There is some difference between the procedure that is to be followed where the reference to arbitration is made in a pending suit and where there is a mere agreement for reference to arbitration which is sought to be filed in Court. In the latter case, the Court obviously cannot go beyond the terms of the agreement, and if it specifies the persons who are to be appointed arbitrators and makes no provision for the case where the arbitrators refuse to act, the Court cannot under para. 5, Sch II, Civil P. C., substitute in the place of the named arbitrators certain other persons. 64 Ind. Cas 459 (1) and 67 Ind. Cas 739 (2), dissented from, 89 Ind. Cas. 404 (3), explained. 129 Ind. A. from the original order of the Sub-Judge, Deoghar, dated August 9, 1939.

Dr. D. N. Mitter and Mr. Girendra C. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. B. C. De and D. N. Varma, for the Respondents.

Chatterji, J.—This is an appeal from an order refusing to make a reference to arbitration on the appellants' application under para. 17, Sch. II, Civil P. C. Appellant No. 1, who is the father of the other appellants, is the elder brother of respondent No. 1 of whom the other respondents are the sons. The parties are members of a joint Mitakshara family. The application under para. 17 was to the effect that there was an agreement, dated May 11, 1937, between appellant No. 1 and respondent No. 1 to refer their disputes regarding the division of their joint family properties to the arbitration of four gentlemen named in the agreement. There was some attempt by the arbitrators to carry on the arbitration, but owing to the laches of the parties they could not proceed in the matter. Afterwards the respondents filed a partition suit (No. 1 of 1938) against the appellants. Thereupon the appellants presented their application under para. 17 praying that the agreement, dated May 11, 1937, be filed in Court. The application was opposed on various grounds, the most important of which is that the arbitrators refused to act and give their award. At the hearing three of the arbitrators gave evidence in support of the respondents' version. The learned Subordinate Judge, accepting their version, dismissed the application. Dr. D. N. Mitter on behalf of the appellants contends that the grounds on which the Court below has refused to make the order of reference was not sufficient within the meaning of para. 17 of Sch. II, Civil P. C. The relevant portion of that paragraph is cl. (4), which is as follows:

"Where no sufficient cause is shown, the Court shall order the agreement to be filed and shall make an order of reference to the arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement or, if there is no such provision and the parties cannot agree, the Court may appoint an arbitrator."

Dr. Mitter's contention is that "sufficient cause" under this clause does not contemplate the position that has arisen in the present case. According to him, the Court, when it found that there was a valid agreement, was bound to make a reference and he suggests that, although some of the arbitrators are not willing to proceed with the arbitration, the Court may, in exercise of its powers under para. 5 of the same schedule of the Civil P. C. appoint new arbitrators in their place. It will be necessary here to refer to para. 5 which provides, among other things, that where an arbitrator refuses or neglects to act or becomes incapable of acting any party may serve the other party or the arbitrators, as the case may be, with a written notice to appoint an arbitrator and then if, within seven clear days after such notice has been served or such further time as the Court may in each case allow, no arbitrator is appointed, the Court may, on application by the party who gave the notice, and after giving the other party an opportunity of being heard, appoint an arbitrator.

It is however, to be observed that paras. 1 to 16 of Sch. II relate to "arbitration in suits," whereas paras. 17 to 19 relate to "order of reference on agreements to refer." It cannot be seriously disputed that there is some difference between the procedure that is to be followed where the reference to arbitration is made in a pending suit and where there is a mere agreement for reference to arbitration which is sought to be filed in Court. In the latter case, the Court obviously cannot go beyond the terms of the agreement, and if it specifies the persons who are to be appointed arbitrators and makes no provision for the case where the arbitrators refuse to act, the Court cannot substitute in the place of the named arbitrators certain other persons. Clause (4) of para. 17, which I have already quoted, makes it clear that the reference should be made "to the arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement." In the present case, four persons were specifically named as arbitrators in the agreement. That being so, I do not see how in the face of the clear provision of cl. (4) of para. 17, a Court can substitute anybody else in their place. Dr. Mitter invites our attention to para. 19 of the same schedule of the Civil P. C. which runs as follows :

"The foregoing provisions, so far as they are consistent with any agreement filed under para. 17 shall be applicable to all proceedings under the order of reference made by the Court under that paragraph, and to the award and to the decree following thereon"

It is contended that by the operation of this paragraph the provisions of para. 5 will apply to the present case. This contention, to my mind, is quite untenable. What is actually meant by para. 19 is that where there is an order of reference made by the Court under para. 17 "the foregoing provisions" shall be applicable to all proceedings under the order of reference. It by no means follows that the Court, before it is competent to make an order of reference, can exercise the powers conferred under para. 5. Otherwise, it would be stultifying the very provisions of para. 19. Dr. Mitter in support of his contention relies upon Bhagwan Das v. Gurdayal (1), Fazal Ilahi v. Prag Narain (2) and Zahur Ahmad v. Taslim-un nissa (3). In Bhagwan Das v. Gurdayal (1), the facts were that it was not known whether the arbitrators named in the agreement were actually willing to proceed with the arbitration. The trial Court dismissed the application on the ground that the plaintiff had no cause of action. On appeal, it was held that before the application could be dismissed it should be ascertained whether in fact the arbitrators were unwilling to act. The case was therefore remanded to ascertain the real facts. In the course of the judgment, however, Walsh, J. observed that if any of the arbitrators was unwilling to act, the Court in exercise of its powers under para. 5 can appoint somebody else in his place and then refer the matter to arbitration. With all respect to the learned Judge, I am unable to agree with his view. As I have already pointed out, para. 5 can come into play only after there has been an order of reference made by the Court. The same view was followed in Fazal Ilahi v. Prag Narain (2) where Walsh, J. was one of the Judges who decided it. In this case the learned Judges go further and state :

"If it were necessary, we should be prepared to hold that the words in para. 17, sub-cl. (4) (which enables a Court to make an order of reference to a particular arbitrator at the time of filing the reference) if there is no such provision and the parties cannot agree, cover a case where there has been a provision for a particular arbitrator who is either dead or retired. If he has died or refused to act, it is as though there was no provision."

With all respect I must say this is an extreme view which is not justified by the clear provisions of cl. (4) of para. 17. The decision in Zahur Ahmad v. Taslimannissa (3), does not really support the contention of Dr. Mitter. There the question was whether an order revoking a reference under para. 17 was appealable. In the course of the judgment Sulaiman, C. J. referred to the decision in Bhagwan Das v. Gurdayal (1) and Fazal Ilahi v. Prag Narain (2), but it does not appear that he approved of those cases. On the other hand, Mr. B. C. De for the respondents has referred to the cases in Narayanappa v. Ramachandrappa (4), Abdul Hamid v. Abdul Aziz (5) and Rajani Kanta v. Panchanan Karati (6). These cases support the view which I have already expressed. In Narayanappa v. Ramachandrappa (4) the parties privately agreed to refer their disputes to certain named arbitrators, but the agreement did not contain any provision as to what should be done in case any of the arbitrators died in the course of the arbitration proceedings, and one of them died in the course of such proceedings. It was held that the agreement became inoperative and came to an end on the death of the arbitrators and that it could not therefore, be filed in Court under para. 17 of Sch. II, Civil P. C.

In Abdul Hamid v. Abdul Aziz (5) it was held that an agreement to refer a matter to certain specified arbitrators becomes void and of no effect if one or more of the arbitrators dies or refuses to act and thus makes the agreement incapable of performance, and in such a case the Court has no jurisdiction under cl. (4) of para. 17 of Sch. II, Civil P. C. to make a reference to the arbitrators who are willing to act. In this case it was pointed out that para. 5 can come into operation only when an order of reference has already been made under para 17. This, to my mind, is the correct view of the law. In Rajani Kanta v. Panchanan Karati (6), it was held that:

"an agreement to have a dispute settled by one or more individuals is one thing, and an agreement to go to arbitration rather than to litigation in the Court is another. Where by an agreement, parties decide to settle disputes by the arbitration of ascertained persons without the intervention of the Court, in a proceeding following the filing of the award under para. 20, of Sch. II Civil P. C. the Court has no power under para. 5 to direct the appointment of a new arbitrator in the place of one declining to act."

No doubt it was held in this case that para. 5 will have no application even after the order of reference is made under para. 17. It is unnecessary for the purposes of this case, to decide whether that view is correct or not. The case however, is an authority for the proposition that the Court cannot substitute any arbitrator in the place of the arbitrator named by the parties themselves in their agreement. Dr. Mitter also referred to the case in Pestonji Nussurwanjee v. Manockjee & Co. (7), but that case merely decided that where certain persons agreed to submit their differences to the arbitration of one or more specified persons, no party to such an agreement could revoke the submission to arbitration unless for good cause, and that a mere arbitrary revocation of the authority could not be permitted. This case is therefore of no assistance to the appellants. There is another serious objection to the filing of the agreement. The agreement was between the two brothers, and the parties to the partition suit include their minor sons also. In fact, the minor sons also are parties to the present proceeding under para. 17 of Sch. II, Civil P. C. From the agreement it appears that the elder brother is to get more than ten annas in the joint family properties. A serious question may arise as to whether this agreement would be binding on the minor sons of the younger brother who agreed to take a little over five annas in the place of eight annas which would be his normal share. For the reasons which I have given above, I am of opinion that the Court below was quite right in refusing to make an order of reference. I would accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Harries, C. J.—I agree.

Second Appeal No. 801 of 1938

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 12 (2)—Applies to all parties to appeal where deficient court-fee is paid whether by appellant or by any other party—Interpretation of Statutes—Section primarily intended to apply to suits—Principle of construction in applying it to appeals.

Section 12 (2), Court Fees Act, applies to all the parties to the appeal Its provisions are very wide and it definitely refers to the party by whom the fee has been paid. It cannot be intended to apply only to a case where the deficiency was by the appellant.

Where a section primarily intended to apply to suits is also to be applied to appeals, the ordinary canon of construction is that the necessary changes in wording should be made so as to make the section good sense.

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Vellore, in A. S. No. 94 of 1937.

Messrs. V. Govindarajachari and V. V. Raghavan, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Viswanath Aiyer, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff, who is the appellant in this Court brought a suit on insufficient court-fee and he was granted a decree. The defect was not noticed during the course of the trial. In appeal to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Vellore, he was called upon to pay the deficient court-fee under s. 12, Court Fees Act, and as he did not do so within the time allowed, s. 10 (2) was applied and his suit dismissed. This second appeal has therefore been preferred, the plaintiff contending that s. 12, Court Fees Act, does not apply to his case. The argument of the learned Advocate for the plaintiff in this Court is that s. 12 (2) only applies to cases where the plaintiff is the appellant. This sub-section runs :

"But whenever any such suit comes before a Court of Appeal .....if such Court considers that the said question has been wrongly decided to the detriment of the revenue, it shall require the party by whom such fee has been paid to pay so much additional fee as would have been payable had the question been rightly decided."

If this sub-section had ended with the word "decided" I am quite sure there would never have been any doubt at all that it applies to all the parties to the appeal. Its provisions are very wide and it definitly refers to the party by whom the fee has been paid. If this sub-section had been intended to apply only to a caste where the deficiency was by the appellant, it would not have been necessary to say "the party by whom such fee had been paid." The simple word "appellant" would have been sufficient. A doubt has however arisen because of the last few words of the sub-section "and the provisions of s. 10, para. 2 shall apply." S. 10, para 2 applies only to suits. It is argued that if the word "appeal" replaces the word "suit" in s. 10 (2), then the appeal would have to be dismissed, which would work a grave injustice on the appellant when the respondent is the defaulter. That was the reasoning that impressed the learned Judge who decided Narain Singh v. Chaturbhuj Singh (1). The matter came before a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Mohan Lal v. Nand Kishore (2), where the argument of Narain Singh v. Chaturbhuj Singh (1), was adopted. It was therefore held that s. 12 (2) could not apply to cases where the plaintiff was not the appellant and that there was therefore no provision in the Court Fees Act for the recovery of deficient court-fee from a plaintiff-respondent. What a Court could do, the learned Judges, said, was to suspend the execution of the decree until the deficit court-fee was paid. The difficulty of that course is that it would be in the interests of a plaintiff who has made default in the payment of proper court-fee to await the result of the appeal. If he was unsuccessful in the appeal, then obviously he would certainly not pay court-fee. This difficulty was seen in Baijnath v. Dhani Ram (3), and the learned Judges there held that the course suggested in the earlier Allahabad cases was not the only one. If the plaintiff did not pay the deficit court fee when called upon to do so by the Appellate Court, a contempt of Court was committed and the Appellate Court could therefore refuse to hear the respondent or his Advocate and dispose of the appeal in his absence.

There is no authority in any of the Codes (or previously reported decisions as far as I know) for the adoption of the procedure suggested in these cases. Section 12 (2), except for the last few words, provides no difficulty at all; and the sub-section clearly enough applies to all cases where a deficient court-fee has been paid in the first Court, whether by the appellant or by any other party. Is it possible that because of some little difficulty in applying the wording of s. 10 (2) to appeals by a defendant, the rest of the section is nullified and can have no application at all to cases where the plaintiff is not the appellant? Where a section primarily intended to apply to suits is also to be applied to appeals, the ordinary canon of construction is that the necessary changes in wording should be made so as to make the section good sense. If that is done, I do not think there is any difficulty in understanding s. 10 (2). Several decisions of other High Courts have been quoted in which the Allahabad decisions have been dissented from: Brij Krishna Das v. Murli Rai 56 Ind. Cas. 316 (4), was a Bench decision of the Patna High Court. Dayal Singh v. Ram Rakha, 15 Ind. Cas. 463 (5) is a Full Bench decision of the Punjab Chief Court. Shama Soondery v. Hurro Soondary (6), is a Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court. Ram Nidh v. Balkaran Singh, 60 Ind. Cas. 654 (7), is a decision of a Single Judge of the Oudh Chief Court. In all these cases the Allahabad decisions have been dissented from; and it was held that in applying s. 10

(2) to appeals and reading it with s. 12 (2) the word "suit" should be deemed to include "appeals." If this is done, there is no difficulty in interpreting the section. It has been pointed out that in Subbaiya Pandaram v. Mahomed Mustapha Maracayar, 40 Ind. Cas. 50 (8), a Single Judge of the Patna High Court followed the Allahabad decisions. He did so, however, without discussing the matter in question here and that decision cannot be good law in Patna in view of the Bench decision Brij Krishna Dass v. Murli Rai, 56 Ind. Cas. 316 (4). It has been moreover pointed out by Mr. Viswanatha Ayyar for the respondents that the actual wording of s. 12 (2) shows that the appeal is considered as an extension of the suit for the subsection begins, "But whenever any such suit comes before the Court on appeal." If we remember this, there is really no necessity for altering the word "suit" to "appeal" in s. 10 (2) when we apply it to cases where the court fee has not been paid by a plaintiff-respondent. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 108 (o)—Property leased for cultivation and settling tenants thereon—Right of lessee to collect and sell surface stones.

Where property is leased for the purpose of cultivation and settling tenants thereon, the lessee is only entitled to a reasonable right to user in the soil but he has no right to dig or quarry stone or to collect and sell surface stones. Right to collect and sell surface stones can be established only by custom. Gandoo Mahata v. Nilmones Singh (3), explained 111 Ind. Cas. 345 (1), relied on, 160 Ind. Cas. 114 (4) not approved.

L. P. A. from the decision of Wort, J. dated February 14, 1939.

Sir Manmatha Nath Mukerji and Mr. S. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, B. C. De and Ravneshwar, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from a judgment of Wort, J., reversing concurrent decrees of the Courts below dismissing the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff was a zamindar and proprietor of the Dhalbhum estate of which Mauza Gopalpur forms a part. By a patta dated Ashar 3, 1290, B. S., the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest leased Mauza Gopalpur to the father of defendant No. 2. The lease provided for the payment of rent and appears to have been a permanent one. According to the plaintiff, defendant No. 2 had permitted defendant No. 1 to dig quartz stone from the land in Gopalpur, and after breaking up the stone to sell the same as ballast. The plaintiff contended that neither defendant No. 2 nor defendant No. 1 had any right to this stone, which was the property of the plaintiff. Accordingly he brought the suit out of which this appeal arises, claiming a declaration that the defendants were not entitled to the stone in question, an injunction restraining them from digging, collecting or disposing of the stone and damages in respect of the stone already disposed of. The defendants by their written statement claimed the right to dig, collect and dispose of this stone and contended that their acts were not in contravention of the terms of lease but were in accordance with the rights created thereby.

The learned Munsif came to the conclusion that no quartz had actually been quarried and that all that had been done was the collection of quartz lying on the surface of the land and disposal of the same. The learned Munsif also came to the conclusion that this quartz was not a mineral and that defendant No. 2 as the lessee had a right to collect all quartz lying on the surface and dispose of the same. He therefore dismissed the plaintiff's suit in its entirety. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge did not think it necessary to decide whether quartz was or was not a mineral. In his view the defendants were entitled to collect the surface quartz and dispose of the same. In second appeal to this Court, Wort, J., held that the defendants were only entitled to the user of the surface of this land and that the lease gave the lessee no property whatsoever in the soil or in stones lying on the surface. He though it unnecessary to find whether the quartz were minerals. He held that the defendants had no right whatsoever to dispose of these quartz stones even if they were not minerals and he accordingly reversed the decisions of the Courts below and decreed the plaintiff's claim.

It has been strongly urged before this Court in this Letters Patent appeal that the decision of Wort, J., is erroneous and contrary to authorities of this and other Courts. All the Courts below have held that the lease in question was not an agricultural lease but was a lease governed by the T. P. Act. This was conceded by the plaintiff in the Court of the learned Munsif but in the Court of the Subordinate Judge an attempt was made to show that the lease was a purely agricultural one. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have thought that the terms of the lease were somewhat ambiguous and therefore that he was entitled to look to the conduct of the parties to assist him in construing the lease. He came to the same conclusion as the learned Munsif that the lease was not a purely agricultural one but one governed by the T. P. Act The same view was taken by Wort, J., and having regard to the course of these proceedings in the Courts below I do not think that the decision of the three Courts can now be questioned in this appeal. The decisions on this point were never seriously challenged and therefore this case must be decided upon the assumption that the lease in question is one governed by the T P. Act.

At one time the Courts in India were inclined to hold that lessees under certain leases not governed by the T. P. Act were entitled to minerals. In short, the view appears to have been that these lessees had some proprietary interest in the land actually leased to them. However, the matter has now been set at rest by two decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council. In Bejoy Singh v. Surendra Narain (1), a zamindari granted a patni lease of his zamindar lands including all interest therein, and jalkar, bankar, falkar, beels and jhils at an annual jama. The document was described therein as a mofussil patni taluk lease according to Reg. 8 of 1819," and contained stipulations that the grantee should not cut trees or excavate a tank. Their Lordships held, reversing the decision of the Calcutta High Court, that the terms of the grant showed that there was no transfer of the property in the soil, the intention being that that patnidar should be a leaseholder only; consequently that he and those claiming under him were not entitled to excavate the soil for the purpose of making bricks. A similar decision is the case in Bhupendranarayan Sinha v. Rajeswar Prasad (2). In that case a zamindar sued for a declaration of his subsoil rights in land held from him under patni grants and for damages; the patni grants did not convey the subsoil rights. Beneath a stratum of stones and gravel used for road making the land contained a fairly well defined stratum of valuable ochre. For over twelve years before suit, the defendant darpatnidars had been removing the stones and gravel by pits sunk all over the land; some ochreous earth was removed with the stones and gravel but merely as a waste product. The ochre had first been worked within twelve years under leases granted by the darpatnidars, the right to the stones and gravel being thereby reserved. It was held that patni tenures, generally, were on the same footing as regards subsoil rights as other permanent, heritable and transferable tenures created by a zamindar, that is to say, the subsoil rights pass to the patnidar only when granted in express terms; general vernacular words signifying "with all rights" were insufficient for that purpose.

From these two cases it is clear that apart from statute a lease which does not in terms give to the lessee rights in the subsoil gives the latter no proprietary right in the soil. The present lease however is governed by the T. P. Act, but in my view that Act does not give the tenant any proprietary right in the subsoil. The rights of the tenant under a lease governed by the T. P. Act are laid down in s. 108 (o) of that Act, which is in these terms:

> "The lessee may use the property and its products (if any) as a person of ordinary prudence would use them if they were his own; but he must not use, or permit another to use, the property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased, or fell or sell timber, pull down or damage buildings belonging to the lessor, or work mines or quarries not open when the lease was granted, or commit any other act which is destructive or permanently injurious thereto."

This sub-section makes it clear that the lessee can use the property and its produts as a person of ordinary prudence would use them if they were his own; but he cannot use or permit any other person to use the property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased. The sub-section then goes on to provide that he cannot cut down or sell timber, work mines or quarries not open when the lease was granted, pull down buildings or do any act which would be destructive or permanently injurious to the property. He has no rights in minerals underlying the soil and his rights are confined to a reasonable user of the soil for the purposes for which the property was leased. It has been held in the present case that the property was leased for the purposes of cultivation and settling tenants thereon. Is the digging of quartz or the collection of surface stones, whether minerals or not, and disposal thereof a purpose other than that for which the property was leased? In my view it is unnecessary to decide whether surface quartz is a mineral.

In my view there is nothing in the present lease to suggest that the lessee was to have any proprietary right in the soil. He could use the soil for the purposes of cultivation or for settling tenants thereon. If the lease gave him no proprietary interest in the soil, then in my view he could not dispose of the soil or anything which could be legitimately considered as part of the soil. Clearly he could not dig or quarry these quartz stones, because no quarries or mines were opened on this land when it was originally leased. The defendants have claimed such a right in their written statements, and in my view they can have no such right.

The two Courts of fact, however, have held that no quartz were quarried or dug on the soil but only quartz lying on the surface was collected and sold. Does the lease give the tenant such rights? The surface stones really form part of the surface soil. Stones lying loose on the surface have either been turned up by ploughing or other agricultural activities or have been left exposed as the result of the elements. When they are left loose and exposed on the surface they must still, in my view, be regarded as part of the subsoil. They form part of the property leased and unless the lease gives the tenant proprietary rights in the subject-matter of the lease the property in the surface stones cannot possibly pass to him. All that s. 108 (o), T. P. Act, gives to the lessee is a right to use the soil and its products as a person of ordinary prudence would use them if they were his own. The lessee could use these stones or the soil on the surface as a person of ordinary prudence would use them; but collecting them and selling them to others is something more than user. It is an act which can only be done by a person who has rights greater than mere rights of user. Collecting and selling these stones is an act of a person entitled to the property in the stones. In my judgment the present lessees had no such property in these stones and therefore had no right to sell them. They could, however, use the stones and use the property for the purpose for which the property was left. If the presence of these stones interfered with good husbandry, the tenant could, in my view, collect the stones and remove them to some place on the land where they did not so interfere with agricultural operations. He could use the stones for purposes for which the land was leased; but he could not use them for any purpose other than that for which the land was leased. At most his only right in these stones was a right of user. He had no right to sell them as an owner. This was the view of Wort, J., and in my judgment it is the correct view.

A different view was taken by the Calcutta High Court in Gandoo Mahata v. Nilmonee Singh (3). It is to be observed, however, that this was a decision given previous to the Privy Council cases to which I have referred. Further, the point now under consideration was not the main point in the case. It was only incidentally that the question of the right to the ghooting or inferior lime stone found on the surface came to be considered. In that case it appears to have been admitted that this ghooting or inferior lime stone could not be regarded as a mineral within the reservation of mines etc., and that the reservation did not prevent the tenant from removing this material from the surface of the land. In fact the point which now falls for decision was practically conceded in that case. There is also a Single Judge decision of this Court in Ras Behari v. Jagadish Chandra Deb (4), to the same effect. In that case it was held that a lessee is entitled to use the surface and to take what he finds on the surface. It was a case of an agricultural lease, and, Rowland, J., held that the lessee was entitled to collect and remove ghooting stone found on the surface although he was not entitled to dig and quarry for it. Rowland, J., appears to have thought that this ghooting and lime stone lying on the surface could not properly be regarded as a mineral and therefore the property in it passed to the tenant under the lease. He, however, did not consider the general question whether a proprietary interest of any kind in the property leased passed to the tenant unless the terms of the lease so provided In my view the decision of Rowland, J., cannot be reconciled with the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the earlier cases to which I have referred. Those cases were not referred to or considered by the learned Judge.

The rights of a tenant in England under a lease in which mines and minerals have been excepted admit of no doubt. The tenant has the right to use the subsoil, but he has no right to dig and dispose of it. This has been the law from early times, and in Co. Lit. 53 (b) it is laid down :

"Digging for gravel, lime, clay, brick, earth, stone, or the like, or for mines of mettall, coale, or the like, hidden in the earth, and were not open when the tenant came in, is wast; but the tenant may dig for gravel or clay of the reparation of the house, as well as he may take convenient timber trees."

In In re Purmanandas Jeewandas (5), Latham, J. held that the rule as enunciated in Co. Lit. 53 (b) was also the law in India. In that case a lease did not expressly give the tenant the right to remove the soil, and the learned Judge held that the tenant had no right to remove soil and stones from the land.

In Tucker v. Linger (6), a point very similar to the one now under consideration fell to be decided by the English Courts. In that case a tenant by an agreement for a lease agreed to cultivate the land according to the most approved system of husbandry and to use it for agricultural purposes only, and to commit no waste. The lessor reserved "all mines and minerals, sand, quarries of stone, brick-earth and gravel pits." The farm was in a district where large numbers of flints came to the surface in the ordinary course of ploughing, and it was necessary to remove them in order to cultivate the land effectually. The tenant removed the flints which came to the surface in the ordinary course of agricultural operations and sold them, and there was evidence that it was the custom of the country for tenants to do so, when not prohibited by their leases. It was held by Kay, J., that such a custom was reasonable and good and that the reservation of minerals in the agreement did not indicate an intention to exclude the custom so as to deprive the tenant of the right of collecting and selling these flints. The decision of Kay, J., was upheld by the Court of Appeal and by the House of Lords in Tucker v. Linger (7). The decision of that case turned upon whether a custom entitling the tenants to collect and sell these flints was a reasonable one and whether it conflicted with the express terms of the agreement to lease. All the Courts were of opinion that the custom was a reasonable one, and that it was not in any way in conflict with the term "reserved to the landlord all mines and minerals, sand quarries of stone, etc." It is to be observed that in this case the tenant's right was based entirely on custom and nowhere in the judgments of the trial Court, Court of Appeal or the House of Lords is it even faintly suggested that quite apart from custom a tenant had a proprietary right in surface stones and could dispose of the same. The decisions of all the Courts proceed upon the basis that proof of a custom was necessary to entitle the tenant to sell these stones. From this case it is clear that in England at least, apart from custom, a tenant who is not entitled to mines, minerals, quarries, etc., has no proprietary right in surface stones and is not entitled to sell them.

Another English case was referred to in argument, Elwes v. Brigg Gas Co (8) and it was suggested that certain observations of Chitty, J. in that case suggested that a lessee did have a proprietary interest in the soil. In that case a small plot of land was demised to a Gas Company for ninety-nine years, with a reservation to the lessor of all mines and minerals, and covenants under which the lessees were authourized, under the inspection of the lessor's surveyor and according to plans to be previously approved, to erect a gas-holder and other buildings. In the course of excavation a pre-historic boat was discovered embedded in the soil six feet below the surface, and the lessors claimed this boat. It was held that whether the boat was regarded as a mineral, or as part of the soil in which it was embedded when discovered, or as a chattel, it did not pass to the lessees by the demise, but was the property of the lessor though he was ignorant of its existence at the time of granting the lease. In that case Chitty, J. was of opinion that the lessees had certain rights to remove and dispose of the soil, though he does not hold that the lessees had any right to sell the soil. He so held because to give effect to the terms of the lease some such permission had to be implied. At p. 569* he observed:

"The defendants discovered the boat in making these excavations, pursuant to the plans. The lease did not give any license to make the excavations, but the approval of the plains was equivalent in law to a license to make the excavations. The plans however are silent as to what is to be done with the soil excavated. In the circumstances some permission ought to be implied as to the removal and disposal of what might be excavated. The question is as to the extent of this implied permission. As against the lessors the permission ought not to be carried beyond what may be reasonably inferred to have been the intention of the parties. The excavations were to be made to a depth of fifteen feet; obviously it was not the intention of the parties that the soil excavated should be piled up on other parts of the small plot of ground comprised in the lease. The implied permission to remove and dispose ought then to extend to what the parties might fairly deemed to have contemplated would be found in making the excavations; but beyond this point it ought not to be carried."

It has been urged that this case is authority for the proposition that a tenant has an interest in the soil; but it appears to me that Chitty, J.'s observations are authority to the contrary. On the particular facts of that case the learned Judge held that some permission to remove and dispose of the soil should be implied. If a tenant had a common law right to dispose of soil, it would have been wholly unnecessary for the learned Judge to consider the terms of the lease in order to ascertain whether some permission to remove and dispose of soil could be inferred. The rights and obligations of the lessor and lessee created by s. 108, T. P. Act, are in many ways similar to those of a lessor and lessee under the usual form of English lease, and it is for that reason and that reason only that I have referred to these English cases. They can in no way be regarded as authorities, but they are of some assistance in arriving at a conclusion as to the rights of a tenant in India in the soil of land leased to him.

In my judgment having regard to the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council and the provisions of s. 108, T. P. Act, I am bound to hold that the lessee under a lease such as the one existing in this case, has only a reasonable right of user in the soil and has no proprietary interest therein or in anything which forms part of the soil. These surface stones did, in my view, form part of the soil, and that being so, they could not be sold to third parties. It may be that a right of collection and disposal of surface stones can be established by custom. Custom however was not pleaded in this case, and therefore the point does not arise. If tenants could show that for a long period of time they had been accustomed to collect and sell surface stones for ballast, it might well be that they could establish a right so to do. For the reasons which I have given I am satisfied that the decision of Wort, J., was right and must be upheld. As the defendants in their written statement had asserted that they had a right not only to collect and sell surface stones but also to dig and dispose of quartz embedded in the ground the plaintiff was in my view entitled to the declaration, injunction and damages as claimed. His suit was decreed by Wort, J. in its entirety and, in my view, rightly. This appeal therefore fails and I would dismiss it with costs.

Presidency Towns (Rangoon) Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 39 (2), cls. (a), (d) and (e)—Case falling under—Court's order should be one suspending discharge for specific time.

The object of the order of the discharge is to enable a person to recommence with a clean slate, and it is desirable that he should be given the opportunity of making a fresh start. But, on the other hand, it is undesirable that a man who has brought himself within the ambit of the Insolvency Act, should as it were, walk through the Bankruptcy Court without some period during which his discharge shall be suspended. Consequently, in a case falling under s. 39 (2), cls. (a), (d) and (e), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, Court's order should be an order, suspending the discharge for a specific time.

C. Misc. A. against the order of the High Court, in Insolvency Case No. 66 of 1935, dated November 8, 1939.

Dr. M. A. Rauf, for the Appellant.

Mr. Paget, for the Official Assignee.

Roberts, C. J.—This is an appeal against the order of the learned Judge in Insolvency in reference to Mr. Lobo, who became insolvent on March 26, 1935. He had been employed as the chief agent of the Vulcan Insurance Co., of Bombay for over eight years subsequent to 1925; and it appears that his method of doing business with them was to canvass for policies and, when he had obtained a promise to pay the premium, to issue them and debit the company with the commission to which he would become entitled. This was a somewhat hazardous method of doing business, since it meant that he was in effect guaranteeing to the Vulcan Insurance Co., whose agent he was, that the policy-holders would ultimately pay the premiums which were due on their policies. And, once having issued the policy and debited the company with the commission, he became from time to time responsible under each policy, for the amount of the premiums to the company. And over a period beginning about 1927 it appears that Mr. Lobo, in addition to his insurance business, had been spending a good deal of time in connection with racing matters he says, in order to advertise his insurance connections. Those racing matters were on the whole fortunate and, according to him, he made a profit altogether in a few years of some Rs. 30,000 upon the turf, not by gambling, but having prizes and award as result of his successful racing. Some of the money he spent on stabling and accommodation in connection with that, but it appears that all his landed properties were mortgaged and on their sale the sums realized were insufficient to pay the unsecured creditors. But it does appear from all the information at our disposal that the ventures of Mr. Lobo on the turf did not in any way contribute to his insolvency. On the contrary, he prospered on the turf and owed less to the company at the time of giving up racing than at the time he started it.

It must be remembered that the nature of his business was fire, marine and accident insurance, and not life insurance, and the view taken by the learned Judge in insolvency may have been due to some misconception on his part. What the learned Judge found was that the insolvent used the premiums paid by the policy holders in some other venture, and it is evident from his order that he was under the impression that Mr. Lobo speculated with money which was not his own. It is not now contended on behalf of the Official Assignee, and it does not appear anywhere, that there is the slightest ground for any imputation of criminality against Mr. Lobo; what he did may have been hazardous, but there is no kind of evidence that it was in the least degree criminal. The learned Judge has found that the insolvent brought on, or contributed to his insolvency by rash or hazardous speculations or by unjustifiable extravagance in living, or by gambling, or by culpable neglect of his business affairs. This brings the case under s. 39 (2) (f) Rangoon Insolvency Act, and accordingly, acting under its provisions the learned Judge suspended the discharge of the insolvent until he paid at the rate of four annas in the rupee. We are obliged to reach the conclusion, after very carefully examining the evidence, that it was owing to a misconception that the learned Judge brought this case at all within the ambit of s. 39 (2) (f). The Official Assignee's report does not in any part suggest that the insolvency was brought about by gambling or hazardous speculation and merely states in its concluding words that the debts were contracted recklessly and without any reasonable prospect of repayment. The fifth creditor's objection to the insolvent's discharge did make an allegation under s. 39 (2) (f), and in the grounds of opposition by the Vulcan Insurance Company to the application of the insolvent for his discharge it is alleged that he has failed to account satisfactorily for the deficiency in his assets, which would bring the matter within s. 39 (2) (e).

Now, it seems clear that the insolvent made his application for discharge very soon after his public examination, and at his public examination he was asked a number of questions from which the learned Judge came to the conclusion that he had been speculatively engaged on the turf but which we think, really go to show that he failed to account satisfactorily for the loss of his assets, and certainly there were grounds upon which it could also be said under cl. (d), that at the time of contracting his debts he had not shown that he had any reasonable or probable expectation that he would be able to repay them. These debts were not all contracted in one fell swoop; from time to time as policy-holders failed to meet their obligations the insolvent must have known that he was going into deeper and deeper water and at no time does he appear to have made any substantial effort to cut his loss, and he has not shown in his public examination what income he was in receipt of and how he spent it. We have been referred to a number of questions and answers, as the result of which it is impossible to say whether he paid income tax on an income of Rs. 14,000 or whether that sum represents the income tax he paid, or whether his later suggestion that Rs. 5,0 0 a year was his income is correct; and it is also very difficult to say what he did with such money as he possessed or how he got into the chaotic condition in which he finds himself.

Accordingly, in our opinion this appeal must be allowed and the order of the learned Judge must be varied upon the basis that it should have been made under s. 39 (2) cls. (a), (d) and (e). The principle which we have to bear in mind is a straightforward one. Dr. Rauf referred to the dicta of the learned Judges in Bankruptcy Courts in England (which have always been followed in this Court) which are to the effect that the object of the order of the discharge is to enable a person to recommence with a clean slate, and that it is desirable that he should be given the opportunity of making a fresh start. But, on the other hand, it is undesirable that a man who has brought himself within the ambit of the Act should as it were, walk through the Bankruptcy Court without some period during which his discharge shall be suspended. And, we think, in all the circumstances, that our order ought only to be an order suspending the discharge for a specific time and we suspend the discharge of the insolvent for a period of six months.

YOUNG, C J. AND ABDUL RASHID, J.
EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR
versus
ABDUL QAYYUM—ACCUSED
—RESPONDENT

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 304-A.—Heavy traffic—Road invisible due to dust raised—Duty of motor car driver pointed out—Rash and negligent driving

When there is heavy vehicular traffic on the road and the road is invisible in a cloud of dust, it is the duty of all motorists under these conditions to stop the car. To continue driving must obviously be dangerous when it is impossible to see anything at all in the neighbourhood, particularly when the driver continues driving the car and manages to get on the wrong side of the road blocking the right of way of a car in the act of proceeding in the opposite direction and the act of driving amounts to undoubtedly a rash and negligent act.

Mr. Mohammad Monir, Assistant to the Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din Khan, for the Respondent.

Young, C. J.—Abdul Qayyum was found guilty by a First Class Magistrate at Montgomery for the rash and negligent driving of a motor lorry and for an offence under s. 304 A, as a result whereof one man was killed and several persons received grievous hurts. He was given one year's rigorous imprisonment under s. 338 and one year under s. 304-A and four months under s. 337, I. P. C. the sentences to run concurrently. His license was suspended also for one year. On appeal the convictions and sentences were set aside by the learned Sessions Judge. The Local Govt. appeals against this acquittal. Abdul Qayyum was driving a lorry from Montgomery in the direction of Lahore. He was proceeding about 20 miles an hour when he was passed on his right side by another lorry going fast which went on to the kacha part of the road and raised a great cloud of dust which completely blinded the driver and hid the road from him. Abdul Qayyum, however, instead of stopping proceeded. The result was that as he could not see the road he drove his lory on the right side of the road instead of the left and either bumped into a stationary lorry which was on its correct side going in the opposite direction, or while driving on the right side of the road collided with the other lorry which might have been travelling—the evidence is conflicting on this point—with the result that several persons were injured and received grievous hurt, and one died.

The whole point is whether under the circumstances we have related, the respondent can be said to be guilty of a rash and negligent act. In the first place, we think that when there is heavy vehicular traffic on the road and the road is invi ible in a cloud of dust, as so frequently happens in this province in dry weather, when a car passes which goes in the kacha part of the road, it ought to be clearly recognized that it is the duty of all motorists under these conditions to stop the car. To continue driving must obviously be dangerous when it is impossible to see anything at all in the neighbourhood. In this case the position is even aggravated: the respondent continued driving the lorry and managed to get on the wrong side of the road. It is suggested by some witnesses that the fact that Abdul Qayyum was driving on the wrong side of the road was due to the fact that while the dust was obscuring his vision he passed some carts If he did so he was clea ly guilty also of another rash and negligent act. When it is impossible to see, for a car whether going too fast or not to pass another so that it would be blocking the right of way of a car in the act of proceeding in the opposite direction is undoubtedly a rash and negligent act. It is clear even according to the defence version that the respondent drove at least 50 yards after the dust obscured his vision. It is probable, however, according to the prosecution evidence, that the respondent drove a good deal further, but even putting it at 50 yards he should and ought to have completely stopped his lorry within that distance.

We therefore must find that the respondent was guilty of a rash and negligent act. We therefore set aside his acquittal and convict him of the offences with which he was charged. We would have given the respondent under all the circumstances of this case three months' rigorous imprisonment. He had however served six weeks and came out of jail last April. We think that instead of sending him back to jail he should pay a fine of Rs 100 or in default undergo one month's rigorous imprisonment. His license will also be suspended for one year commencing from March 13, 1939.

Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 8 of 1939

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BIHAR AND ORISSA—PETITIONER

DHANESHWARDHAR MISRA—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 2 (1)—Agricultural income — Determination of — Income held not agricultural.

In order to determine whether the income is agricultural income or not regard must be had to the source of such income.

An ancestor of the assessee had in the past rendered some service to the Bettiah Raj. In consideration of these services the Raj had for many years given a thikadari lease of certain villages at a comparatively favourable rent to this ancestor and afterwards to his descendants. On the expiry of the term of the lease the Raj declined to grant a new lease and the sum of Rs 4,500 per annum was granted to the then lessee in lieu of the profits which he would have made if he had continued as lessee. The question was whether this allowance was agricultural income within the meaning of s. 2 (1), Income Tax Act:

Held, that this annual payment made to the assessee could not be regarded as agricultural income as it was not derived from any lands. It was in fact an annual ex gratia payment made by the Raj to the assessee in consideration of some services rendered by an ancestor of his in the remote past.

Mr. S. M. Gupta, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. K. Majumdar, for the Opposite Party.

Harries, C. J.—This is a reference under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act, made by the Commissioner of Income-tax. The question propounded by the Commissioner is as follows:

"Whether the allowance made to the assessee in accordance with the order Ex. B and transfer to him in accordance with the letter Ex. C, is agricultural income within the terms of s. 2 (1), Income Tax Act."

The assessee is the adopted son of the late Mst. Moharmani Kaur. It appears that an ancestor of the assessee had in the past rendered some service to the Bettiah Raj. In consideration of these services the Raj had for many years given a thikadari lease of certain villages at a comparatively favourable rent to this ancestor and afterwards to his descendants. It appears that from time to time the lands had been temporarily resumed by the Raj and the rent had on occasions been slightly increased; but throughout a long period of years the Raj had recognized the claims of the descendants of the original lessee to favourable consideration. Mst. Moharmani Kuar as a widow succeeded to the thikadari lease then in existence in the year 1906 and that lease expired in the year 1919. In that latter year the Bettiah Estate was under the management of the Court of Wards, and the Court of Wards conceded that the widow as a member of this family had some indeterminate claim to consideration from the Raj. The Court of Wards however were firmly of opinion that the widow was an undesirable lessee and at that time the present assessee was minor. In those circumstances the Court of Wards decided that they would resume the lands and declined to give the widow a new lease; but in recognition of her claim to "consideration" the Court of Wards gave to the widow an annual allowance of Rs. 4,500 which the Court thought to be the probable amount of profit which she would have derived had she been given a renewal of the lease at the past rental levels. The order included an expression of opinion that when the widow's adopted son came of age he would be offered a renewal of the lease on similar favourable terms to those enjoyed hitherto. No application was ever made by the assessee for a new lease and in the year 1936 the widow died. Application was made by the assessee for payment of this allowance to him, and this was sanctioned. The income-tax authorities now claim to tax this annual sum of Rs. 4,500, but the assessee claims that such sum is not liable to income-tax as it is in fact and in law agricultural income within the meaning of s. 2 (1), Income Tax Act.

In my judgment this annual payment of Rs. 4,500 made to the assessee cannot possibly be regarded as agricultural income. It is not derived from any lands. It is in fact an annual ex gratia payment made by the Bettiah Raj to the assessee in consideration of some services rendered by an ancestor of his in the remote past. In order to determine whether the income is agricultural income or not regard must be had to the source of such income. Mr. Majumdar, who has said all that can be said on behalf of the assessee, has urged that the source of this income is the land which had previously been the subject of thikadari leases. He has contended that though the last lease came to an end in 1919 the Court of Wards never resumed possession but only resumed management. It is clear from Ex. B which is the order granting this allowance that the Court of Wards declined to grant a new lease and entered into possession of the property and the sum of Rs. 4,500 per annum is granted to the widow in lieu of the profits which she would have made if she had continued as lessee. In the order of the Board of Revenue it is true that it is stated that the Court would resume khas management but what is meant is that the Court was resuming possession on the expiry of the lease. Mr. Majumdar has referred the Court to a letter from the Manager of the Bettiah Estate to the Collector of Champaran, dated July 30 1919, and that letter makes it clear that the intention of the Court of Wards was to resume possession and to give the lady a personal allowance as she was no longer a lessee. The source of the income in this order of the Board of Revenue, and in my view this annual sum is in the nature of an ex gratia payment and is not derived from land. In my view the annual sum is not agricultural income and I would answer the question referred to this Court by the Commissioner of Income-tax in the negative. The assessee must pay the costs of this reference which we assess at Rs. 200. The sum of Rs. 100 already deposited in Court will go towards the sum of Rs. 200 awarded as costs.

Manohar Lall, J.—I agree.

SHANKARGOUDA BASANGOUDA LAKHYAL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVII, rr. 2, 3, O XV, r. 2, O. IX — Discretion conferred by O. XVII, r. 2 to be exercised judicially — Court, when can pass order on merits under O. XVII, r. 2 or r. 3 —Case adjourned for production of evidence under O. XV, r. 3—Plaintiff not appearing on adjourned date—Order on merits cannot be passed—Case falls under O. XVII, r. 2 and not r. 3—Court must proceed under O. IX, r. 8 or grant adjournment.

The last words of r. 2 of O. XVII, Civil P. C., confer a discretion, but it is a discretion which must be exercised judicially. A Judge, in exercising such discretion, may grant a further adjournment, or, if the circumstances justify such a course, he can pass an order on merits, but he must have material before him to justify that course. If there is no evidence before him, he cannot in the exercise of judicial discretion proceed to deal with the case on merits. Hence where a case is adjourned under O XV, r. 3 for the production of evidence and the plaintiff fails to appear on the adjourned date, the Court is under O. XVII, r. 2 bound to dispose of the matter under O. IX, r. 8, or else to grant an adjournment. The Court cannot dispose of the case on merits as in such a case there is no evidence before the Court to do so. Order XVII, r. 3, does not apply to such a case :

Held, that the case was dealt with on merits and appeal therefore lay.

Held, further that the case fell under r. 2 and not under r. 3 of O. XVII and as the Court had no material before it to justify a disposal on merits the order passed by it should be modified so as to fall under O. IX.

F. A. from the decision of the First Class Sub-Judge, Bijapur, in C. S. No. 205 of 1938.

Mr. N. M. Hungund, for the Appellant.
Mr. S. B. Jathar, for the Respondents.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal against a decree passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Bijapur. The plaintiff sued for a sum of approximately Rs. 11,000. The defendants admitted that a sum of Rs. 5,976 and certain interest was due. At the first hearing the Court framed issues under O. XV, r. 3, sub-r. (1), Civil

P. C., and then adjourned the further hearing, under sub-r. (2), to February 15, 1939. On that date the plaintiff alleged through his Pleader that he was ill, and asked for an adjournment. The adjournment was refused, and the Pleader thereupon withdrew, saying that he had no instructions to proceed. The learned Judge then dealt with the case on merits and answered the issues. He came to the conclusion that the defendants proved that only the amount admitted by them was due; in effect therefore he rejected the balance of the plaintiff's claim, and passed a decree against the defendants for the amount admitted to be due, and directed payment by certain instalments. The plaintiff contends on this appeal that the order ought to have been made under O. IX, r. 8, decreeing the amount of the claim admitted by the defendants, but dismissing the balance of the claim for want of appearance. An order in that form would entile the plaintiff to apply to get the dismissal set aside under O. IX, r. 9. Mr. Jathar for the respondents contends that in effect the order is one decreeing part of the claim and dismissing the rest for want of appearance; and that there is no substance in the appeal; but I do not think that that contention can be supported. In my opinion the case was dealt with on merits, and the balance of the plaintiff's claim was dismissed on merits. If that is so, plaintiff can only appeal on merits, and he has no evidence.

It is then argued that the course was justified under O. XVII, r. 2, or r. 3. Order XVII, deals with adjournments, and r. 2 provides that where, on any day to which the hearing of the suit is adjourned, the parties or any of them fail to appear, the Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by O. IX, or make such other order as it thinks fit. This was an adjourned hearing, and therefore that rule applied, and the learned Judge could either have disposed of the matter by making an order under O. IX, r. 8 or by making such other order as he thought fit. Now, it is clear that those last words of the rule confer a discretion, but it is discretion which must be exercised judicially. A Judge, in exercising such discretion, may grant a further adjournment, or, if the circumstances justify such a course, I think that he can pass an order on merits, but he must have material before him to justify that course. If there is no evidence before him, he cannot in the exercise of judicial discretion proceed to deal with the case on merits. In this case he had no material enabling him to do so, since there was no evidence as to the balance of the plaintiff's claim. Therefore the learned Judge was bound, either to dispose of the matter under O. IX, or else to grant an adjournment. It was not, in my opinion, open to him on the material before him to dispose of the case on merits.

Then O. XVII, r. 3 is relied on. The difference in phraseology between r. 2 and r. 3 has been discussed on a good many occasions by this Court and other High Courts. Rule 3 is not in terms confined to default of appearance as is r. 2, though r. 3 may be brought into operation by default of appearance. Rule 3 provides that where any party to a suit to whom time has been granted fails to produce his evidence, or to cause the attendance of his witnesses, or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit, for which time has been allowed, the Court may, notwithstanding such default, proceed to decide the suit forthwith. That rule is directed to the failure by one of the parties to do an act for which he has been allowed time, and on that failure the Court may proceed to decide the suit forthwith. But even under r. 3 the Court must have material to enable it to exercise its proper discretion by deciding the case on merits. In this particular case I do not think that r. 3 applied. The hearing of the suit had been adjourned under O. XV, r. 3, for the production of evidence by the parties, and I do not think a general adjournment of that kind can be said to be an order bringing into operation O. XVII, r. 3. Even if the rule did apply, there was no material for deciding the case on merits. In my view this case fell within r. 2 only, and the learned Judge had no material before him to justify him in disposing of the plaintiff's case on merits by dismissing that part of the claim which was not admitted. I think therefore that the appeal must be allowed, and the order of the lower Court must be varied by adding thereto the words: "And the balance of the plaintiff's claim is dismissed for want of appearance." No order as to costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 162, 509 (1)—Statement of witness to which his thumb-mark was taken by Police during investigation is inadmissible—S. 509 (1), applicability of, to evidence relating to facts tendered by person who also happened to be medical man—Criminal trial—Evidence—First information report—Value—Evidence—Trial Court's opinion as to credibility of witnesses—Value of.

A statement of a witness to which his thumb-mark was taken by the Police Sub-Inspector during investigation of the case, is inadmissible. 132 Ind. Cas 234 (1), relied on.

Section 509 (1), Criminal P. C., confines itself to expert evidence tendered by a medical witness as such. It has no application to evidence relating to facts tendered by a person who also happens to be a medical man. It is therefore necessary to prove a dying declaration by producing the doctor who had recorded it if in recording the statement of the deceased the doctor was not acting as a medical man. The first information report, is really not a substantive piece of evidence but can be used only for corroborative purposes.

The trial Court has the opportunity of watching the demeanour of the witnesses when they are in the witness box and its opinion as to their credibility is of great value.

Cr. A. against the order of the Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, dated September 18, 1939.

Messrs. H. G. Walford and R. N. Shanglu, for the Appellant.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment—The appellants in these appeals, Waris Khan, Janab Khan and Inamullah Khan, were charged before the learned Sessions Judge of Fyzabad for an offence under s. 302, I. P. C., for the murder of one Nagai dhobi at midnight between May 4 and 5, 1939, at his house in Din Bhayun. All of them were found guilty of an offence under s. 304, I. P. C., and sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment each. The prosecution case was that there was a criminal case pending between Aulad Ali on one side and the three accused on the other, in which Nagai was a witness for Aulad Ali. Nagai attended the Court wherein the case was pending but the case was put off. Since then the appellants had been threatening to put him to death if he gave evidence against them. On the date of the occurrence the appellants went to the house of the deceased Nagai, who was out, and told his wife to stop him from giving evidence for Aulad Ali otherwise he would be murdered. The same day, it was alleged, the appellants came at midnight armed with spears and lathis and assaulted Nagai. Nagai died at 3-30 A. M. on May 7, 1939, in the hospital at Jamalpur as an effect of injuries received by him. Nagai made a report at the thana at 8 A. M. on May 5, 1939. It is Ex. 2, and the Police Station is situated at a distance of six miles from the place of the occurrence. In this information report the names of P. W.s Nos. 1 to 4 were mentioned and the accused were implicated.

The accused persons set up a counter story in defence to the effect that Nagai's daughter Sugri's marriage had been settled with the son of one Sheo Darshan of village Tanda, that Nagai broke off this engagement and settled the marriage with the son of another dhobi of Azamgarh, which was to come off on the day following the occurrence. In order to have his revenge and to frustrate the completion of alliance with the Azamgarh dhobi, Sheo Darshan assaulted Nagai either singly or with the help of others. On hearing this assault the accused went to the house of Nagai in the early morning where Nagai was freely mentioning the name of Sheo Darshan as his assailant. Soon after this, Aulad Ali, who has great influence in the village, reached the spot and took Nagai away to the Police Station and there to nurse his own grudge with the appellants induced Nagai to implicate them. Aulad Ali used to attend the deceased while he was at the hospital at Jamalpur. It may be mentioned that out of the three appellants the first two are own brothers and the third is their nephew. They are cousins of Aulad Ali, who is their pattidar. It is admitted that great enmity existed between the appellants on one side and Aulad Ali on the other side.

In support of the prosecution the evidence on the record is (1) the evidence of eye-witnesses, P. W. No. 1, Oudhu, the son of Nagai, and P. W. No. 2 Ram Lal, (2) the evidence of Jhanghai (P. W. No. 3), Lokai (P. W. No. 4) and Balai (P. W. No. 7) and the statement of one Kalpu (Ex. 7) in the Court of the committing Magistrate. Kalpu had died when the case came up before the Sessions Court. (3) The first information report (Ex. 2) and the dying declaration (Ex. 10). The motive for assault is as stated by the prosecution and is borne out by the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 8.

The learned Sessions Judge disbelieved the statement of P. W. No. 2 Ram Lal, one of the eye-witnesses, on the ground that he was easily amenable to external influences and could be made to perjure himself. On the first hearing before the committing Magistrate he stated that he could not identify any of the assailants, but when he came into the witness box a few days later he readily identified all of them. This witness also admitted that the Sub-Inspector took his thumb-mark to the statement taken during the Police investigation and so his statement was not admissible as held in Bhuneshwari Pershad v. Emperor (1) at p. 509. The learned Judge also disbelieved the evidence of Jhanghai (P. W. No. 3), Lokai (P. W. No. 4), Balai (P. W. No. 7) and that of Kalpu made in the committing Magistrate's Court. These witnesses had stated that they had seen the accused running away immediately after the occurrence. It is not necessary for me to give any detail of their statements and the reason given by the learned Sessions Judge for discarding their testimony. The learned Assistant Govt Advocate has strenuously maintained before me that the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 3, 4 and 7 as well as the statement of Kalpu should not have been discarded by the learned Sessions Judge. The evidence of P. W. No. 3 was discarded on the ground that he was not in a position to identify the assailants. Lokai (P. W. No. 3) was treated by the prosecution as a hostile witness. P. W. No. 7 Balai and Kalpu were not mentioned in the first information report. The signatures of P. W. No. 7 were taken by the Sub-Inspector on his statement made during investigation I am not prepared to disagree with the view of the learned Sessions Judge in treating the evidence of these witnesses as unreliable. That Court had the opportunity of watching the demeanour of these witnesses when they were in the witness box and its opinion as to their credibility is of great value.

Thus, the only evidence upon which the conviction is based is that of P. W. No. 1 Oudhu, a boy of 14 years of age and the son of the deceased Nagai, Ex. 2, the first information report, which is really not a substantive piece of evidence but can be used only for corroborative purposes, and Ex. 10, the alleged dying declaration of the deceased. The alleged dying declaration was recorded by the medical officer of Jamalpur hospital. It was produced in the Court of the committing Magistrate and proved by the doctor. This dying declaration and the statement of the doctor in proof of it made in the committing Magistrate's Court were produced before the learned Sessions Judge as Exs. 10 and 9. The learned Counsel for the appellants has contended that Ex. 10 is not admissible in evidence as it was not proved in the Sessions Court by producing the doctor, who is alleged to have recorded it, the learned Assistant Govt. Advocate argued that it was not necessary to examine the doctor for proving Ex. 10 in the Sessions Court in view of the provisions contained in s. 509 (1), Criminal P. C. In my opinion the section confines itself to expert evidence tendered by a medical witness as such. It has no application to evidence relating to facts tendered by a person who also happens to be a medical man. In my opinion it was necessary to prove Ex. 10 by producing the doctor who had recorded it. In recording the statement of the deceased the doctor was not acting as a medical man and he was not produced in the committing Magistrate's Court as a medical witness. Exhibit 10, therefore, goes out of consideration for want of proof.

There remains the only substantive piece of evidence consisting of the evidence of P. W. No. 1 Oudhu. About this witness it was contended on behalf of the appellants that he is a most unreliable witness because he made conflicting statements on certain matters in the two Courts below and further that he admitted that he had covered himself on account of the fear when his father was assaulted and, therefore, he was not in a position to identify the assailants. The learned Sessions Judge has discarded this criticism made by the appellants on the ground that this witness was lying close to his father and could have no difficulty in identifying the accused before he covered himself. In view of the circumstances of the case I am not prepared to put great reliance upon the evidence of this witness. He admitted in the committing Magistrate's Court that Aulad Ali came to his house early morning next after the night of the occurrence. He changed his statement on this point in the Court of Session. The change is in respect of a very material matter. As stated above, the accused had stated in their defence that Aulad Ali was the person responsible for the implication of the accused persons. Aulad Ali was examined in the trial Court to prove motive for the assault but when the accused persons disclosed their defence Aulad Ali was kept back and not produced in the Court of Session. Then with regard to the story that Nagai had broken off the engagement for the marriage of his daughter with Sheo Darshan's son, this witness made a contradictory statement in the Court of Session. In the committing Magistrate's Court he had admitted that his sister's marriage had first been settled with Sheo Darshan's son and was broken off by his father. This question was also a material fact in support of the defence. I have read the statement of P. W. No. 1 carefully. He is a boy of 14 years. His statement before the learned Sessions Judge does not appear to me to be reliable. In the Sessions Court he made certain statements contrary to his statements in the committing Magistrate's Court in his anxiety to support the prosecution and to eliminate the proof of facts which must have been considered by the prosecution to be favourable to the accused.

In respect of the counter story it has been made probable by the witnesses for the prosecution themselves. Sheo Dharshan must have been greatly annoyed with the deceased for having broken off the engagement for the marriage of his son with Sugri and that he was interested in frustrating the completion of marriage of Sugri with the dhobi of Azamgarh. The marriage party from Azamgarh was to come to the house of the deceased on May 5, i. e., next after the night of the assault. The marriage did really take place in a couple of days after the date of the assault which shows that the deceased was so utterly opposed to the marriage of his daughter with the son of Sheo Darshan that he had it completed in spite of the fact that he was on the brink of death himself with the Azamgarh boy. Further, there is evidence on the record which I believe that Aulad Ali accompanied Nagai to the Police Station where a report was made by Nagai. He further accompanied Nagai to the hospital at Jamalpur. He was a deadly enemy of the three appellants There is nothing improbable in the suggestion made by the appellants that the first information report made by Nagai was made at the instance of this Aulad Ali. The statement of Nagai in the first information report implicating the appellants as the persons who assaulted him is open to great suspicion.

In my opinion the guilt of the appellants is not established by evidence, which can be said to be free from all reasonable doubt. After hearing the learned Counsel for the appellants and the Assistant Govt. Advocate I hold that the case is not free from suspicion. I give the appellants the benefit of the doubt and acquit them of the offence of which they have been convicted. I, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the appellants, acquit them of the offence charged and direct that they be released at once. All the three appeals are allowed.

Partnership Act (IX of 1932), s. 4—Single transaction or venture—Whether business.

A single transaction or venture does not amount to business and consequently it does not come under "business" as mentioned in s. 4, Partnership Act. 126 Ind. Cas 429 (1), relied on.

C. R. against the order of Small Cause Court Judge, Agra, dated November 15, 1938.

Mr. J. Swarup, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. B. L. Gour, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in revision by the plaintiff against the decree of the learned Judge, Samall Cause Court, Agra, dismissing a suit. The applicant brought a suit against the defendants for contribution of the loss sustained by the parties in a single transaction of purchase of 25 tons of linseed. The learned Judge, Small Cause Court, has dismissed the suit as barred by s. 69, Partnership Act, on the ground that there was no registered partnership. It is contended for the applicant that a single transaction does not amount to "business". The "partnership" is defined in the Partnership Act as :

"Partnership is the relation between persons who have agreed to share the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them acting for all."

A single transaction or venture does not amount to "business". In Firm of Senaji Kapurchand v. Firm of Pannaji Dev Chana (1) their Lordships observed :

(1) A I R 1930 P C 300; 126 Ind. Cas. 429; Ind. Rul. (1930) P C 333; 59 M L J 435; 34 C W N 1107; 32 L W 646; 32 Bom. L R 1607; 52 C L J 5. (P C).

"No doubt a single venture, where a single article or a number of articles on the single contract are purchased and sold, may not amount to a business. But where a number of bales are purchased at one time, sales are to go on profits are to be realized and those profits are to be divided among the partners, it is not a single venture and amounts to partnership within s. 4."

In this case there was a single venture and consequently it does not come under "business" as mentioned in s. 4, Patnership Act. The suit was, therefore, maintainable. It is therefore ordered that the application be allowed, the order of the learned Judge, Small Cause Court, be set aside and the case be sent back to the lower Court to be re-admitted under its original number and to be disposed of in accordance with law. No order is made as to costs, as the chief defendant (defendant No. 1) is absent.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Election Petition

SHAMSUL HUQ—RESPONDENT

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1923), ss. 46, 47—High Court's special jurisdiction as Election Court—Right of parties must be found within statute—Right to recount is inseparately linked to claim to seat—Recount, when can be granted.

High Court, sitting as an Election Court, exercises a special jurisdiction which is the creature of statute, and the rights of the parties must be found within the four corners of the statute and no right which is not so found can be imported. [p. 774, col. 2.]

There is no doubt that the Calcutta Municipal Act does not contain any provision which enables an unsuccessful candidate to claim the seat. The procedure of scrutiny and recount is inseparably linked to the claim to the seat. It enables a Court to review the decision of the revising officer as to the admissibility of the ballot papers with the object of further enabling the Court, (as for instance under the provisions of s. 39, Ben. Municipal Act) to declare the candidate who is found to have the greatest number of valid votes in his favour, to have been duly elected. Hence when the Legislature excluded from Cal. Municipal Act the right to claim the seat, it also excluded the right to a recount. Halifax case (3), relied on, Madura case (1924) Hammond's "Election cases" 501 (1) and Tanjore case, (1921) Hammond's "Election cases" 673 (2), distinguished. [p. 774, col. 1; p. 775, col. 1.]

A recount, however, can only be granted in cases which are substantiated by specific instances and by reliable prima facie evidence and must be disallowed where it is claimed merely as a method of obtaining evidence in support of a number of serious charges of which no particulars have been given. Tanjore case (1921), Hammond's "Election cases" 673 (2), relied on, 124 Ind. Cas. 216 (5), explained.

Messrs. Sarat C. Bose, N. Barwell and J. P. Mitter for the Applicant.

Messrs. B. C. Ghose and P. B. Mukherji, for the Respondent.

Order—This is a petition by the defeated candidate in Muhammadan constituency Taltolla, Ward No. 14, who polled 304 votes. The respondent who was elected, polled 312 votes, and his election was published in the Calcutta Gazettee on April 4.

A preliminary question has been argued by way of demurrer, namely whether the petitioner is entitled to a recount and by a recount is meant not merely the counting of votes to check the arithmetic of the returning officer, but a scrutiny as well to review his finding as to the validity of the ballot papers. In the earlier paragraphs of the petition it is alleged that the appointment of the returning officer was open to objection and that he was guilty of malpractices. The first three grounds have been abandoned, but Mr. Bose for the petitioner states that he abandoned ground 3 so far as it related to the appointment of the returning officer, but did not intend to abandon his contention that the returning officer had been a party to divers malpractices and breaches of the relative rules. In ground 11 further charges have been made against the returning officer that he improperly refused certain votes. Ground 11, sub-para. 2 has been abandoned. Sub-paras. 3 and 4 purport to be particulars of improper refusal of votes. They are in fact vague allegations that the returning officer did not allow the inspection contemplated by the rules and that the returning officer did not observe what the petitioner alleges to be the established practice of placing the ballot papers face upwards on the table. The petition is supported by an affidavit of Syed Mohammad Yusuf who states that six ballot papers, (presumably those referred to in ground 11, sub-para. 1 of the petition) which were valid and in favour of the petitioner, were improperly rejected and that the returning officer refused to give the petitioner or his representative reasonable opportunity to inspect the ballot papers and refused to recount them when requested to do so. These apparently constitute the alleged malpractices and the breaches of the rules on which the petitioner still seeks to rely.

Two questions have been argued: (1) whether relief by way of a recount is contemplated by the Cal. Municipal Act and (2) if such relief is permissible, do the facts alleged justify a recount? There is no doubt that the Cal. Municipal Act does not contain any provision which enables an unsuccessful candidate to claim the seat and so far as I have been able to discover from the decided cases both in England and in India, a recount is always coupled with scrutiny and the right to recrimination, on the result of which the unsuccessful candidate may be declared duly elected. It is equally clear that the English Acts and Rules dealing with elections, and the various Indian Acts of a similar nature to which my attention has been directed other than the Cal. Municipal Act give the unsuccessful candidate the right to claim the seat if the circumstances justify it.

Mr. S. C. Bose relies on s. 47 (1) (c) Cal. Municipal Act, which provides so far as is material, for the avoidance of the election if there has been improper reception or refusal of a vote, and the question arises whether that provision contains the same principle and by implication empowers the Court to embark on the procedure of a recount. The provisions of the Cal. Municipal Act relating to elections have been drafted somewhat differently to the provisions of other Acts dealing with the same subject, and the difficulty of construing ss. 46 and 47 has been referred to in previous decisions of this Court. Section 46 provides that if the validity of an election is questioned by reason of a corrupt practice, or the improper rejection of a nomination or the improper reception or refusal of a vote or for any other cause, an application may be made to the High Court. Section 47 provides that if the High Court is satisfied on certain specified points the election is null and void. Some difficulty has been experienced in ascertaining what are those points owing to exceptions imported by reference to s. 46. Provisions of a somewhat similar nature are contained in the English and Indian Acts and Rules but in every case they contain a further provision entitling the defeated candidate to claim the seat. This additional provision is of importance for all the decided cases and the extracts from the text books to which I have been referred are dealing with Acts and rules which enable the seat to be claimed, and the claim to the seat can be confined to a recount.

The question then resolves itself into the following: Is the right to a recount a right which is so closely linked to the claim to the seat, that when the Legislature excluded from the Cal. Municipal Act the right to claim the seat, it also excluded the right to a recount? Admittedly, this Court sitting as an Election Court exercises a special jurisdiction which is the creature of statute, and the rights of the parties must be found within the four corners of the statute and no right which is not so found can be imported. By s 47 (1) (c) Cal. Municipal Act, the election is void if it has been materially affected by improper reception or a refusal of a vote, and it is argued that the Court cannot for an opinion as contemplated by the section unless it investigates the charges under this head and one of the most expeditious ways of investigating the charge is by a recount. True, that method is a convenient form of procedure which might be adopted, if permitted, but it is not the only form of procedure by which the result can be obtained and the question for determination is whether the Calcutta Act empowers the Court to adopt it. Mr. Bose for the petitioner argues that the right to a recount is a right entirely separable from the claim to the seat and a form of procedure to which every petitioner in an election dispute is entitled. In support of this argument he refers to "The Indian Candidate and Returning Officer" by Sir Laurie Hammond which was published in 1923. On p. 174 the learned author says:

"From the above and a perusal of the rules quoted it will be seen that there are five kinds of election petitions. The third kind, under heading "C" which the learned author mentions is "A" petition for recount of votes where it is believed that the recounting has been carelessly done."

Rule 34 of the Electoral Rules referred to in Hammond's "The Indian Candidate and Returning Officer" gives the specific right to the candidate to claim the seat, and the extract from Sir Laurie Hammond's book on which Mr. Bose relies is dealing entirely with election petitions in which the petitioner has the right to claim the seat. Reliance is placed on the Madura case, (1924) Hammond's "Election cases" 501 (1) where a recount was allowed. Reliance is also placed on the Tanjore case (1921), Hammond's "Election cases" 673 (2) where a recount was refused. It is argued that in neither of these cases is it apparent that the seat was claimed. The reports are only fragmentary and in neither case do they state fully the relief sought. In the circumstance that question remains at large, and to that extent the reports cannot be said to support

(1) (1924) Hammond's "Election cases" 501.
(2) (1921) Hammond's "Election cases" 673.

Mr. Bose's argument. And again, it must be remembered that in each of these cases the petitioner had a right under the relevant act to claim the seat.

Mr. B. C. Ghose, for the respondent, in support of the argument that the Legislature has withheld in the Calcutta Act the right to a recount, has contrasted the provisions of the Ben. Municipal Act of 1932 with the similar provisions of the Cal. Municipal Act as amended up to 1939. Sections 46 and 47, Calcutta Act, he argues, correspond to ss. 36 and 38, Bengal Act, but the Bengal Act by s. 38 entitles the Court, in addition, to hold a scrutiny and computation of votes and to declare as a result of such scrutiny, the candidate who has been duly elected.

Although Mr. Bose has nominally confined his argument to a recount, he admits that by a recount he does not mean to confine the procedure to a mere arithmetical check of the returning officer's figures. It implies, in addition, the careful checking of ballot papers and all the complicated procedure of a scrutiny and recrimination. In my view no such procedure can be allowed unless it is clear from the Act itself that such was the intention of the Legislature, and I can find no such provision in the Cal. Municipal Act which even suggests that such was the intention. If a recount were to be ordered each party would be entitled to check the ballot papers and to have deducted from his opponent the votes which were held to be improperly admitted or rejected. Pandit Nanak Chand, in his recent text book on the Law and Practice of Elections and Election Petitions, at p. 553, observes on the authority of the Halifax case (3)" A petition which claims a seat for a defeated candidate may be presented solely on the ground of scrutiny and recount," and he continues:

"It is obvious that unless the petitioner claims to be duly elected, there can be no petition for scrutiny or recount. A right to ask for this relief only arises when the seat is claimed. Therefore, where the petitioner claims to have received a majority of lawful votes, a scrutiny of votes must take place in order to ascertain the truth of the allegation made."

The procedure of scrutiny and recount appears to me to be inseparably linked to the claim to the seat. It enables a Court to review the decision of the revising officer as to the admissibility of the ballot papers with the object of further enabling the Court, (as for instance under the provisions of s. 39, Ben. Municipal Act) to declare the candidate who is found to have the greatest number of valid votes in his favour, to have been duly elected. That power is not granted by the Cal. Municipal Act, and in my opinion the right to a recount is also withheld. This by no means deprives the Court of the power under s. 47 to investigate the proper reception or refusal of a vote. That is part of the investigation in every case of personation or plural voting.

The second question is whether, assuming that a recount could be ordered, there were circumstances present which would justify such an order in the present case. In my opinion there are not. I have already referred to the manner in which the alleged malpractices of the returning officer have been set out in the petition. According to the English practice as outlined in Fraser's "Law of Parliamentary Elections & Election Petitions," the petitioner in order to obtain a scrutiny must claim the seat and must also give particulars. The rule in regard to particulars was set out in the Taujore case (2) and has been followed in a number of subsequent election cases. In the Tanjore case (2) although the election was declared void, the prayer for a recount was refused. The Commissioners in dismissing the application for a recount said:

"It rested on the nebulous allegation of the agents about the counting of batches of votes twice over and we therefore refused to grant an application of that nature on such slender materials. It is well established law that a recount will only be granted in cases which are substantiated by specific instances and by reliable prima facie evidence."

Now what are the particulars given here? If ever there were nebulous allegations, they appear in this petition. In ground 3 there is a general charge of malpractices introduced in what was apparently particulars of a charge of illegal appointment of the returning officer. Ground 11 refers to the improper rejection or refusal of a vote and Mr. Bose for the petitioner now seeks to link it with the vague charge of malpractice alleged in the abandoned ground 2. Particulars in sub-paras. 3 and 4 of ground 11 have not been given and I am not prepared to allow this matter to be agitated in the absence of specific grounds and, as stated in the Tanjore casse (2), reliable prima facie evidence. The majority is admittedly a narrow one, namely eight votes, but that is only one of the fences which the petitioner would have to negotiate. Sub-paras. 3 and 4 of ground 11 are far too vague to justify a serious inquiry and they are deleted. Sub-para. 1 alleges the illegal rejection of six votes. Again, no particulars are given other than those contained in the affidavit of Mohammed Yusuf.

Mr Bose has argued on the authority of the Punjab North case (Hammond Election cases 567) (4) that in India the practice differs from that prevailing in England, and that the petitioner cannot be expected to furnish any definite particulars until he has scrutinized the ballot papers. The Commissioners in the case of Punjab North (4) sought to distinguish the Tanjore case (5) on the ground that there the recount was only asked for in the course of the inquiry whereas in the case they were considering the petition itself was chiefly for a scrutiny and recount. The recount claimed here is merely a method of obtaining evidence in support of a number of serious charges of which the petitioner has not given particulars. Reference has also been made to a decision by a Judge of the Madras High Court on a revision petition from the decision of a Subordinate Judge. The learned Judge points out that in revision his sole duty was to see that the lower Court had not acted without jurisdiction and that there was no material irregularity. In the course of his judgment he does however consider the principles and the evidence on which the lower Court came to its decision, and he states, as reported in Lakshumanayya v. Rajam Ayyar (5) at p. 196:

"An overstrict insistence that an application should be supported by evidence of miscounting is therefore unwarrantable."

That remark is undoubtely obiter, but it comes to no more than this, that in each case the Court must consider the facts alleged and decide whether in the circumstances there are grounds for thinking that a miscount took place.

It is obviously undesirable that what have been termed "nebulous allegations" should be made for the sole purpose of obtaining a general scrutiny of the ballot papers. It is true that the petitioner is not entitled in India to inspect the ballot papers without an order of Court, but he has some power of inspection while the votes are being counted. While it is not expected that the precise particulars required by the English procedure should be given before a scrutiny, it is expected that there should be some specific instances and the Court in each case must decide whether the instances given would justify further consideration of the matter by way of scrutiny or recounting. In the present instance, the petitioner had sufficient inspection to know that the votes alleged to have been improperly rejected were valid and were in favour of the petitioner, but he does not state whether the ballot papers to which he refers were marked "rejected" as provided in para. 42 (c) of the Govt. order; nor does he state whether the correctness of the rejection was questioned at the time or whether the grounds for rejection were recorded. Were I of opinion that a recount was permissible under the Act, I should still hold that no recount should be ordered in this case for, in my opinion, the vagueness of the allegation would not in any event justify such an order. The preliminary question is answered accordingly and a recount is refused.

D. Order accordingly.

Provincial Insolvency Application No. 1 of 1938

MR ABDUL RAHMAN, THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER, S. C. CT.—OPPOSITE PARTY

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 43, 27—Insolvency Court specifying period of one year within which to apply for discharge—Order challenged by way of appeal and revision to High Court—High Court's order and that of Insolvency Court, is final—Limitation for application of discharge runs from such final order—Time originally fixed under s. 27 for application for discharge—If can be extended after its expiry but before order of annulment.

The order of the Insolvency Court specifying the period of one year within which an application for discharge was to be made is not a final order when the same was challenged originally by way of an appeal to the District Judge and later by a revision petition to the High Court. In such a case the order passed by the High Court in revision must be deemed in law to be the final order, furnishing the starting point of the limitation for an application of discharge. In this respect no distinction can be drawn between orders and decrees passed under the Civil P. C., and an order passed under the provisions of the Prov. Insol. Act specifying the time within which an insolvent must apply for discharge.

[Case-law referred to.]

A Court has jurisdiction to extend the time originally fixed under s. 27 of the Prov. Insol Act for an application by the debtor for discharge, after the expiry of that time but before an order of annulment is passed under s. 43 of the Act. 174

Ind. Cas. 607 (6), followed. 105 Ind. Cas. 912 (1), held Overruled.

Prov. Insol. App. of the order of the District Judge of Lucknow, dated April 9, 1938.

Mr. Habib Ali Khan, for the Applicant.

Order.—This is an application made under the first proviso to s. 75 of the Prov. Insol. Act and arises out of an appellate order passed by the District Judge of Lucknow upholding the order of the Small Cause Court Judge sitting on the Insolvency side. The order in question was one of annulment of an order of adjudication on account of the insolvent's failure to file an application for discharge within the time fixed by the Court.

The facts are that the applicant applied for insolvency on April 18, 1933, and was adjudged an insolvent on February 7, 1935. The debts in the application were shown to be Rs. 12,069. The learned Judge on the Insolvency side ordered that the applicant should pay Rs. 100 per mensem towards his debt. None of the creditors came forward to prove his debt except one, who tendered proof of a debt of Rs. 136 due to him from the insolvent on March 7, 1935. The applicant appealed against the order directing him to pay Rs. 100 per mensem to the District Judge but his appeal was dismissed. The matter was carried further in revision to this Court and a Bench of this Court set aside the order about the payment of Rs. 100 per mensem by the insolvent on February 19, 1937. The time for filing an application for discharge expired on February 7, 1936, when the insolvent's revision application was pending in this Court. The applicant applied for discharge on February 27, 1937, in which he stated that the unpaid debts amounted to Rs. 2,465 only out of the original debts of Rs. 12,069 shown in the application. On the same date the applicant also applied under s. 27 of the Prov. Insol. Act for an extension of time on the ground that the applicant had been busy in conducting his appeal to the District Judge and the revision in this Court against the order directing him to pay Rs. 100 per mensem. The applicant further stated that he was under a bona fide impression that the application for discharge would be premature till the Appellate Courts had passed order upon his appeal and the revision application. The learned Judge on the Insolvency side disposed of both the applications by a single order, refused the application for extension of time and passed an order annulling the adjudication under s. 43 of the Prov. Insol Act. Reliance was placed in support of its decision on Amjad Ali v. Muhammad Ali (4 O. W. N. 993) (1), where it was held that the provisions of s. 43 are mandatory and a Court is not free to enlarge the time fixed after the expiry of the period.

The learned District Judge in appeal held that the time of one year limited for discharge must be reckoned from the date of the original order of adjudication and cannot be reckoned from February 19, 1937, the date of the order passed by a Bench of this Court in revision. As regards the power to extend time under s. 27 of the Prov. Insol. Act the learned District Judge held that although a Court had the power to extend the time even after the expiry of the period fixed in the order of discharge, yet upon the merits of the matter he did not wish to interfere with the order of the Insolvency Judge refusing to extend the time and passed an order of annulment of adjudication as the insolvent, although possessed of sufficient means, had not paid anything to the creditors since he was declared insolvent.

The insolvent has now come up to this Court and it has been argued on behalf of the applicant that the order passed by the lower Courts is not according to law The Official Receiver has not appeared in this Court to support the order of the lower Appellate Court.

The first point that arises for determination is whether the period of one year specified in the order of discharge should be reckoned from February 7 1935, the date of the order, or from February 19, 1937, the final order, of the Bench in revision. We are of opinion that the order of the Insolvency Court specifying the period of one year within which an application for discharge was to be made was not a final order as the same was challenged originally by way of an appeal to the District Judge and later by a revision petition to this Court. In the circumstances it is the final order passed by the Bench on February 19, 1937, which should be deemed in law to furnish the starting point of the limitation for an application of discharge. In Muhammad Sulaiman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (I. L. R. 11 All., 267) (2) it was held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court that the effect of s. 579—O. XLI, r. 35 of the present Civil P. C., is to cause the decree of the Appellate Court to supersede the decree of the first Court, even where the appellate decree merely affirms the original decree and does not reverse or modify it. Order XLII, r. 1 of the Civil P. C. makes the provisions of O. XLI applicable to appeals from appellate decrees. In Raja Sashikanta Acharyya v. Raja Sarat Chandra Rai Chaudhuri (34 Cal. L. J. 415) (3) the learned Judges observed:—

"If the decree of the lower Court is reversed by the Appellate Court, it is absolutely dead and gone; if, on the other hand, it is affirmed by the Appellate Court, it is equally dead and gone, though in a different way, namely, by being merged in the decree of the superior Court which takes its place for all intents and purposes, both the decrees cannot exist simultaneously. The balance of judicial opinion is in favour of the view that when time is fixed by the lower Court for payment of money and the decree of the lower Court is confirmed on appeal, the time for payment runs from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court, though the latter decree does not expressly provide that the time for payment should be calculated from the date of the appellate decree."

Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Jowad Husain v. Gendan Singh (L. R. 53 I. A., 197) (4) in a case of mortgage held that where there has been an appeal from a preliminary mortgage-decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4, sub-r. 1, and the Appellate Court has not extended the time for payment, the period of three years within which, under the Indian Lim. Act, 1908, Sch I, Art. 181, an application for a final decree under O. XXXIV, r. 5, sub-r. 2, must be made runs from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court, and not from the expiry of the time for payment fixed by the preliminary decree.

This view was confirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in another case, Fitzholmes v. Bank of Upper India, Ltd. (L. R. 54 I. A. 52) (5). It was held in the latter case that the jurisdiction of the Appellate Court in the appeal is not affected by the Lim. Act.

The learned District Judge has sought to draw a distinction between orders and decrees passed under the Civil P. C. and an order passed under the provisions of the Provi. Insol. Act specifying the time within which an insolvent must apply for discharge. We are of opinion that the principle enunciated in the above decisions is one of universal application and cannot be held to exclude from its purview orders passed under the Provi. Insol. Act. In this view of the matter the application for discharge was perfectly within time and the order passed by the Court below must therefore be set aside.

As regards the second point whether the Insolvency Court had the jurisdiction to extend time under s. 27 of the Provi. Insol. Act even after the expiry of the period originally fixed in the order of discharge the matter is now concluded by a Full Bench decision of this Court in Sheikh Fazal Azim v. Rana Umanath Bakhsh Singh, (1938 O. A. 263, F. B.) (6) where it was held, overruling the decision in 4 O. W. N., 993 (1) relied upon by the Insolvency Court, that a Court has jurisdiction to extend the time originally under s. 27 of the Provi. Insol. Act for an application by the debtor for discharge, after expiry of that time but before an order of annulment is passed under s. 43 of the Provi. Insol. Act. This point appears to have been conceded by the learned District Judge. In the view which we have taken no question of extension of time to the applicant for applying for discharge really arises, though we have no doubt whatever that we should be perfectly prepared to extend the time to the applicant upon the facts of this case. The applicant has filed an affidavit, which has not been rebutted by the Official Receiver, that a substantial portion of his debts has been paid off by the sale of certain property and that only a debt of Rs. 2,465 remains unpaid. We further find that only one creditor came forward to prove a debt of Rs. 136 only and this debt we understand has not yet been paid.

We allow the application, reverse the order of the learned District Judge and grant an order of discharge to the applicant subject to the condition that he shall pay up the debt of Rs. 136 due to the creditor concerned within two months from to-day. No order as to costs.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Notice of Motion in Suit No. 1126 of 1940

August 27, 1940

KANIA, J.

SUKHANANDAN RAMDHIN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS

MANIKLAL KANHIALAL FIRM—DEFENDANTS

Contract—Pakka adatya—Forward contract—Held, that suit by constituent against pakka adatya was for unpaid claim and fell within bye-law 38 of the East India Cotton Association

There was an initial sale of 200 bales of cotton by the defendant who was pakka adatya, for the plaintiff and a contract note dated November 6, 1939, was sent by the defendant to the plaintiff and signed by the plaintiff. Thereafter, owing to fluctuations in the market, the defendant demanded margin money but the plaintiff failed to pay the same. Thereupon the defendant closed the transaction on February 3, 1940 On receipt of intimation thereof the plaintiff repudiated this closing transaction. The defendant thereupon offered to resell, if the margin, as demanded, was paid. To that there was no reply. The defendant thereupon sent a contract note with his letter of February 6, 1940, to the plaintiff. The plaintiff retained the same. On March 19, 1940, the plaintiff sent a telegram to the defendant as follows: "Kindly settle 200 bales cotton; vide your contract note C. 694 purchasing market price to-day wire settlement." The defendants sent a reply intimating that the purchase had already been effected on February 3, under contract No. 1553 which was already sent and there was no outstanding business. Contract note No. C. 694 was the contract dated November 6, 1939. The plaintiff then filed a suit to recover the amount due to them on the footing of the difference between the price noted in the contract, dated November 6, 1939, and the current price in the market on March 19, 1940:

Held, that the suit was in respect of an unpaid claim in relation to the contract dated November 6, 1939, and clearly fell within the words of bye-law 38 as of the East India Cotton Association, Ltd, subject to which the contract note dated November 6, 1939, was accepted by the plaintiff.

Mr. M. C. Setalvad, Advocate-General, for the Plaintiffs.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, for the Defendants.

Order.—This is a motion for the stay of this suit on the ground that the matter should be referred to arbitration. The dispute between the parties arises out of a transaction in cotton. It is admitted that there was an initial sale of 200 bales of cotton and a contract note dated November 6, 1939, was sent by the defendants to the plaintiffs and signed by the plaintiffs. Thereafter, owing to fluctuations in the market, the defendants demanded margin money but the plaintiffs failed to pay the same. Thereupon the defendants closed the transaction on February 3, 1940. On receipt of intimation thereof the plaintiffs repudiated this closing transaction. The defendants thereupon offered to resell, if the margin, as demanded, was paid. To that there was no reply. The defendants thereupon sent a contract note with their letter of February 6, 1940, to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs retained the same with them. On February 20, 1940, the defendants sent a statement of account showing the balance due by them to the plaintiffs, and requested the plaintiffs to draw up a hundi for that balance. No reply was sent by the plaintiffs to that letter and no dispute was raised at that stage. On March 19, 1940, the plaintiffs sent a telegram to the defendants as follows: "Kindly settle 200 bales cotton; vide your contract note C. 694 purchasing market price to-day wire settlement."

The defendants sent a reply intimating that the purchase had already been effected on February 3, under contract No. 1553 which was already sent and there was no outstanding business. It is common ground that contract note No. C. 694 is the contract dated November 6, 1939. The plaintiffs then filed this suit to recover the amount due to them on the footing of the difference between the price noted in the contract, dated November 6, 1939, and the current price in the market on March 19, 1940. The defendants have appeared under protest and now apply for a stay of the suit. In the affidavit in reply the plaintiffs took a point about the defendants submitting to the jurisdiction of the Court. That is given up. The only point which is argued is that the dispute between the parties is in respect of the closing contract which is not signed and therefore there is no written submission to arbitration. In my opinion that is a misstatement of the true facts. The plaintiffs' contention is that by the contract dated November 6, 1939, they had sold through the defendants 200 bales. When they instructed the defendants to purchase those bales they wrongfully refused to do so. They therefore claim damages between the contract price mentioned in the contract note dated November 6, 1939, and the prevailing market rate on March 19, 1940. This claim in my opinion clearly falls within the words of bye law 38 of the East India Cotton Association Ltd., subject to which the contract note dated November 6, 1939, was accepted by the plaintiffs. The words "all unpaid claims whether admitted or not .... arising out of or in relation to contracts made subject to these bye-laws", etc. of Bye-law 38 are wide enough to cover the dispute in suit. It is nobody's case that instructions were given for the closing of this transaction which were carried out and the dispute is in respect of such closing. The defendants purported to close the transaction on the footing of the plaintiffs' failure to pay the margin money as they were bound to do. The plaintiff's case is that the defendants wrongfully refused to purchase and close the outstanding transaction. In either view of the matter therefore the case is in respect of an unpaid claim in relation to the contract dated November 6, 1939. The notice of motion is therefore made absolute with costs and the suit is stayed as prayed.

S. Order accordingly.

Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 420 of 1940

February 11, 1941

MANOHAR LALL, J.

RAMGOBIND SAHU—APPELLANT

MOSO DHOBI AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Second appeal—Rent suit—Finding of lower Courts that plaintiff was unable to prove rate of rent—No interference in second appeal—Landlord and tenant—Rent—Suit for, on ground that rent was settled—No declaration that land was liable to assessment sought—Failure to prove settlement—Suit cannot be tried as for declaration.

The High Court cannot interfere in second appeal with the conclusion which has been arrived at by the Courts of fact, that the plaintiff in the rent suit has been unable to prove the rate of rent which is payable by the defendants, although the reasoning of such Courts in rejecting the documents filed by the plaintiff are not quite satisfactory

Where in a suit for rent the plaintiff has not sought for a declaration that the land was liable to fair and equitable assessment, but on the other hand it is asserted that the land has been settled at certain amount per annum, with the defendants, on the story of that settlement having failed the suit cannot be allowed to be tried as a suit for declaration that the land was liable to be assessed for rent.
